Where a case made recites that the same contains a substantial synopsis of the evidence only; and it is claimed that the evidence does not sustain the findings of fact by the court, it has been held that the record was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to have the evidence reviewed in the supreme court. Barker v. Barker, 43 Kan. 91. See Walker v. Braden, 34 Kan. 660, where the court said: "We are disposed to encourage a reduction of the record, and the omission from the case made of all matter not necessary to the review of the questions raised. If the questions which it was desired should be decided here had been briefly and clearly stated, and the judge had certified that all, or substantially all, the testimony relative to those questions was contained in the case made, it would be sufficient."

When it is claimed that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict, the statement on appeal should specify the particulars in which such evidence is insufficient, and the testimony introduced should be confined to those points alone. All evidence not bearing upon the objection specified is irrelevant. Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.

Documentary evidence used at the trial, and referred to in the statement, is deemed a part thereof. Carman v. Pultz, 21 N. Y. 547. Such documentary evidence should be inserted in, attached to or so referred to as to be made a part of, such case; if they are included in the return on appeal, they will be stricken out on motion. Acker Post No. 21 v. Carver, 23 Minn. 567. See Robinson v. Bartlett, 11 Minn. 410; Thompson v. Howe, 21 Minn. 98.

In the statement of a case on appeal, it is not necessary to copy in full, deeds and other documentary evidence introduced to show title, and not objected to at the time as insufficient. If the substance of such documents is stated, it is sufficient. Albion Consolidated Min. Co. v. Richmond Min. Co., 19 Nev. 225.

Exhibits used in evidence should not be inserted in the settled case when it is clear that they are not material to

If the case made is to contain all the evidence introduced upon the trial, as when it is intended to move for a new trial on the facts, or to raise the question that the findings are contrary to the evidence, a statement to that effect must be contained in the case itself, and not in the certificate of the judge who settled it.¹

ment or to render himself in execution." Archbold Cr. Pr. & Pl. (8th ed.) 611.

By South Carolina Sup. Ct. Rule No. 5, it is provided that if the case is voluminous, an index to the pleadings, exhibits, depositions, and other matters shall be added. It is held that such index is simply a matter of convenience, and its absence is not ground for dismissal of the appeal. Neither is the fact that the case was served in several distinct parts ground for such dismissal. Archer v. Long (S. Car. 1891), 14 S. E. Rep. 24.

The order of the circuit judge settling the case, is not made a part thereof by South Carolina Rule of Court No. 5, and the court cannot direct such order to be printed in the case. Watson v. Neal (S. Car. 1891), 14 S. E. Rep. 289. See Archer v. Long (S. Car. 1891), 14 S. E. Rep. 24.

The South Carolina Code, § 345, provides that where counsel for the respective parties agree on a statement of the case for the supreme court, no return or other paper from the lower court is necessary; and rule 2 of the supreme court declares that such agreed statement with the returns shall constitute the "return." Therefore the mere fact that such statement does not specifically purport to be the return will not deprive it of that character. McNair v. Craig, 34 S. Car. 9. See Nabors v. Latimer, 30 S. Car. 607, which, if apparently, is not really, in conflict with the foregoing case.

If the charge of a judge to the jury is not excepted to, it should not be inserted in the case. Shook v. O'Neil, 1 Month. L. Bul. 38; Bulkeley v. Keteltas, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 450.

1. Eddy v. Weaver, 37 Kan. 540; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Grimes, 38 Kan. 241; Hill v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Kan. 364; State v. Harper Co., 43 Kan. 195; Western Home Ins. Co. v. Hogue, 41 Kan. 524; Hoopes v. Buford, etc., Implement Co., 45 Kan. 549; Newby v. Myers, 44 Kan. 477; Cox v. James, 45 N. Y. 557; Spence v. Chambers, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 193; Cheney v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 16 Hun (N. Y.) 415; People v. Bradner, 44 Hun

(N. Y.) 233; Graff v. Ross, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 152; Jeffers v. Bantley, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 90; Murphy v. Board of Education, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 171; Henry v. Hinman, 21 Minn. 378; Downer v. Foulhuber, 19 Minn. 179; White Pine Co. v. Herrick, 19 Nev. 34.

The case made must, upon its face, affirmatively show that it contains all the evidence, or the questions presented will not be reviewed. Limerick v. Gwinn, 44 Kan. 694. Or, at least, it should be shown by something which has received the approval of the judges as to its correctness. Winstead v. Standeford, 21 Kan. 270. See Home Ins. Co. v. Wood, 47 Kan. 521. And unless the fact appears affirmatively, it will be presumed by the court that additional evidence sufficient to sustain the findings was given, which does not appear. Griffiths v. Phelps, 21 N. Y. W'kly Dig. 390; Porter v. Smith, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 118; 7 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 195; Howland v. Howland, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 472; Perrine v. Hotchkiss, 59 N. Y. 649. See Porter v. Smith, 107 N. Y. 531; Aldredge v. Aldredge, 120 N. Y. 616.

But where a party claims that a particular finding of fact is without any evidence to support it, and has excepted thereto, presenting thereby only a question of law for review, it need not be stated in the case that all the evidence bearing on such finding is set forth therein. In that case, the distinction is thus put: "First, in a case where the appellant intends to raise the question on appeal that any finding of fact is against the weight of evidence, then it must appear by the case that all the evidence bearing on the finding of fact sought to be reviewed is set forth therein. Second, if it is claimed by the appellant that a particular finding is without any evidence to support it and is excepted to as is provided in § 993 of the Code Civ. Proc., and thus presenting a question of law only, then it is unnecessary that any statement that all the evidence bearing on the finding is set forth in the case." This distinction rests upon the ground that in the first case exceptions cannot be taken,

V. AMENDMENTS BY ADVERSE PARTY.—The first step towards a final settlement of the case, as proposed by the party appealing, after it has been served upon his opponent, is the suggestion by the latter of amendments to such parts thereof as are defective by reason of a failure to set forth correctly and truly the evidence, or other matters necessary; or because it contains what it should not, or omits what it should contain;¹ and this must be while in the latter an exception may be taken. Under the old practice in New York, this distinction was not made. Perkins v. Hill, 56 N. Y. 89.

When the first recital in the case made was to the effect that the case included all the evidence offered by each party before they rested the case, necessarily excluding that which was afterwards introduced; and the plaintiff in error, evidently deeming this insufficient, attempted to supplement it by the certificate of the official stenographer, and later by another certificate of the judge who tried the cause, it was held that the record failed to properly show that all the evidence was preserved; and therefore the supreme court could not say that the verdict was without support. Ryan v. Madden, 46 Kan. 245.

When a settled case does not purport to contain all the evidence, an exception is not available because a question asked was allowed to be answered when the question assumes certain facts that have not been proved. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Murphy, 19 Minn. 500.

In Clark v. House, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 624, it was held that where the case contained the following statement: "The foregoing is all the evidence and other proceedings had upon the trial of this action, which are in any way material to the questions to be raised by this appeal," such statement was sufficient to bring up questions of fact for review. In delivering the opinion of the court, Lewis, J., said: "It has been held in a number of cases, that a certificate that all the evidence is in, that bears upon the questions to be raised, is sufficient to raise questions of fact for the appellate court. It is claimed by the respondent, that the statement that it contains all the material evidence, leaves it with the appellant to say what is, or what is not, material evidence. It is difficult to distinguish between a statement that a case contains all the evidence bearing upon the questions to be reviewed, and one that it contains all the material evidence. The appellant, in proposing his case, stated that it contained all the testimony in any way material to the questions he wished to raise. If he omitted any testimony which the respondent thought should go into the case, he was at liberty to ask its insertion; and when the case was settled, if it contained all the testimony in any way material to the questions to be raised, it must be held, we think, that the questions of fact are before the appellate court for review."

It is sufficiently shown that the case contains all of the evidence, if a certificate of the official reporter to that effect is made a part of the settled case by being left in it when settled. Coleman v. Reiersen, 36 Minn. 222.

1. If no proceedings are taken for settlement, but the appellant, without notice to the other party, files with the appeal papers a certified copy of the judge's minutes of the evidence taken on the trial, such copy cannot be treated as a case made under the statute. Wright v. Dudley, 8 Mich. 74.

So in Weeks v. Medler, 18 Kan. 425, it was held that if there was no notice to, or suggestion of amendments or appearance by, the opposite party, before the settling and signing by the trial judge, the case made is improperly settled, and presents no questions for review to the supreme court.

If a proposed case is so inaccurate as to render it practically impossible to correct it, without striking out the whole or nearly the whole of it, the court may allow a new case to be substituted instead of specified amendments. Tyng v. Marsh, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 465. But ordinarily such practice is irregular and will not be allowed. Stuart v. Binsse, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 616.

In Morse v. Smith, 105 N. Car. 322; 18 Am. St. Rep. 983, it was held a sufficient compliance with the North Carolina Code, § 550, which provides that the appellee shall return the case served on him "with his approval or amendments endorsed or attached," if he makes his objections to the case by asking that a statement prepared by done within the time prescribed by statute, or by a rule or order of court, else he will be presumed to have agreed to the case as proposed.¹

VI. SETTLEMENT—1. In General.—The case having been made by the appellant, and served upon his opponent, and amendments suggested by the latter, must be settled by the trial judge, if the appellant cannot agree to the proposed amendments.²

him be substituted. See State v. Gooch, 94 N. Car. 982.

When the judge sustains exceptions filed by the appellee to the appellant's statement of case on appeal, and directs the case thus modified to be redrafted and sent up, it is the duty of the appellant to have this done. When he fails to do this, and merely sends up his statement of case, together with appellee's exceptions and the order of the judge, there is no "case settled on appeal;" and the court in its discretion (if there are no errors on the face of the record proper) may on motion of the appellee, or ex mero motu, either affirm the judgment or remand the case. Mitchell v. Tedder, 107 N. Car. 358.

Before the expiration of the time allowed by statute for proposing amendments to a case, an order to show cause why such case should not be settled does not deprive the party upon whom it is served of the right to propose his amendments thereto. Phoenix v. Gardner, 13 Minn. 294.

If the case of the appellant only is sent up to the supreme court, but it appears that such case was served on the appellee within the time prescribed, and that he offered no amendments, it will be considered the case on appeal. Booth v. Ratcliffe, 107 N. Car. 6. See State v. Carlton, 107 N. Car. 956. But if the case does not show that it has been served on the appellee or his counsel, the supreme court will not consider it. Peebles v. Braswell, 107 N. Car. 68.

How Made.—The settled practice in New York requires that the lines of the proposed case be numbered, and that the amendments be proposed in detail; they should be written on the proposed case, or on a separate paper, with reference to the line and page of the original; and if on separate paper, each place and passage to which amendments are proposed should be distinctly marked on the original case before being submitted for settlement. And further, the party proposing a case shall himself examine the amendments and mark upon each his assent or objection. Stuart v. Binsse, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 616. See Milward v. Hallett, Col. & C. Cas. (N. Y.) 261.

Where the amendments are not put in at their proper places, but are attached to the end of the statement, with reference to the pages and lines of the original draft, which has been changed in preparing the copy for the appellate court, they will not be considered. Gallatin Canal Co. v. Lay, 10 Mont. 528.

1. Connor v. Morris, 23 Cal. 447.

Where a statute allows three days for the suggestion of amendments, after the time fixed for making and serving a case, an extension of the time prescribed for making and serving does not deprive the party of the right to three days for suggesting amendments; and the three days do not commence to run from the date of the actual service of the case, but from the expiration of the period of extension. Thus, where thirty days were allowed to make and serve a case, the amendments could be suggested within thirty-three days. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Fort Scott, 15 Kan. 435.

2. To the point that there must be a settlement, see Becker v. Yellowstone Co., 10 Mont. 87.

In New York, an omission to have the case settled and signed cannot be complained of in the court of appeals, if the general term received and acted upon it. Reese v. Boese, 92 N. Y. 632.

A case made after judgment for review by the supreme court must show upon its face that it is settled and signed by the trial judge for that purpose. Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 9.

Where the appellants served their case on appeal, and the appellee his counter-case or amendments, in the proper time, but before the case was settled the judge died, for which reason the appellants moved for a new trial, a motion of the appellee to withdraw his counter-case, and leave the appellant's statement as the case on appeal, was allowed. Drake v. Connelly, 107 N. Car. 463.

2. Time.—The time for settling and signing a case, or statement on appeal, is usually fixed by a statute, or by a rule or order of the court; and is subject to an extension for good cause shown.¹

Where a case is made for the supreme court, and served upon the defendant within the proper time, and properly settled and signed by the judge, bearing the attestation of the clerk and filed by him, the presumption is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that all the requirements of the law were complied with upon the settlement. Douglass v. Parker, 32 Kan. 593.

An allegation upon appeal, that the court omitted to settle a statement which was submitted to it, cannot be taken as a substitute for the statement, nor does it constitute a reason for reversing the judgment. Hoadley v. Crow, 22 Cal. 265.

Where a statement which was filed in the lower court, on motion for a new trial, was neither agreed to by counsel nor settled by the judge who tried the cause, it has not sufficient authentication to constitute any part of the record which the supreme court can notice. Doyle v. Seawall, 12 Cal. 425.

In Johnson v. Whitlock, 13 N. Y. 344, is found the following brief summary of proceedings on review as stated by Comstock, J.: "The procedure for a review will be simple, and entirely homogeneous in both trials by the court and by referees, and this is what the code evidently intended. For the sake of greater distinctness, it may be summed up thus: After trial the first step will be to except, within the time limited, upon the legal points and propositions involved in the final decision ruled against the party intending to appeal. The next proceeding will be to prepare a case and have it settled by the judge or referees, if not agreed on. This will contain the evidence bearing upon any conclusion of fact intended to be reviewed; also the exceptions taken during the trial, and those made after the trial, to the final decision. The facts found and conclusions of law must be separately stated. This statement, like the other parts of the case, must be prepared by the party who appeals, and of course it will be subject to amendment and settlement. On the case so prepared and settled, the review is to be had at the general term. The exceptions separately served after judgment should not appear at all, except as they are settled and stated in the case."

In Mower v. Hanford, 6 Minn. 535, it was held that if a case not properly settled was made part of the record on appeal to the supreme court, the appeal would not, for that cause, be dismissed; but the court would strike the case from the record.

Where a case filed in the supreme court did not conclusively show on its face that it was intended for a case made after judgment, and the trial judge certified that in signing it he did not suppose he was settling a case under the statute, and that the one signed did not set forth the whole facts as they existed, it was held that the papers should be sent back to the trial court for such action as that court should deem proper. Farrand v. Bentley, 6 Mich. 281.

Where an order was made below for taking proof, and the evidence put in at the hearing was documentary by stipulation, no settlement of the case is necessary to enable the supreme court to consider the evidence. Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

Exceptions to the refusal of the court to find certain facts, at the request of one of the attorneys, were served and incorporated in the case on appeal, but no notice of such exceptions was filed in the clerk's office. It was held proper for the judge who settled the case to strike out the exceptions, together with the requests to which they referred. Young v. Young, 18 N. Y. Supp. 116; reversed in 30 N. E. Rep. 1012.

1. Minnesota Laws, 1870, ch. 74, provide for the serving of a proposed case within twenty days after trial, for amendments thereto within ten days thereafter, and for settlement within fifteen days after service of amendments; and further, that "if not presented within the time aforesaid, or such further time as may be stipulated or granted, the same shall be deemed abandoned." Where the case and amendments were served within the proper time, but nothing more was done for three or four months, when an order was made to show cause why the case should not be settled, it was held that the effect of such order was to grant the

3. Notice.—The proposed amendments having been served upon the party making the case, it becomes his duty to notify the adverse party that the case and amendments will be submitted at a certain time and place for settlement;¹ a failure to give such notice may be deemed an acceptance of the amendments as proposed, and the case may become settled by lapse of time.²

4. Before Whom Made.—The case must be settled before the judge before whom the cause was heard;³ and this even though

"further" time as mentioned in the statute; and the case was not to be deemed abandoned. Cook v. Finch, 19 Minn. 407.

In Minnesota, the time for settling a case may be extended by stipulation of counsel. State v. Baxter, 38 Minn. 137.

The district court of Kansas may make a rule as to the time at which cases made must be noticed for settlement by the court, and failure to comply therewith, if reasonable, is sufficient ground for refusal by the court to settle and sign. And where such rule provides for ten days after the service of amendments, and that, if the case is not noticed for settlement in that time, the party preparing it "shall be deemed to have abandoned his case, and the same shall not thereafter be settled or allowed," it is held to apply to all cases made, whether any extension of time has been granted for making or not. Jones v. Menefee, 28 Kan. 437.

The ruling in the case of Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Koons, 26 Kan. 215, that if the case is not made within the time prescribed by statute, and no extension is granted, the court is powerless to act, is based on the ground that the statute limits the time for making and serving. No such limitation exists in regard to settling and signing, and hence the court may postpone such action, and cause it to be done upon reasonable notice at a later time. Hammerslough v. Hackett, 30 Kan. 57. But still, the party making a case, who ignores an order fixing a time for settling and signing, does so at the peril of a refusal of the court to do so at a later time. Hill v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Kan. 364.

The North Carolina code, § 550, provides that after the appellee has duly filed his objections to the appellant's case, the latter shall "immediately" request the judge to determine upon a time for settling the case. Under this statute it was held that where, because of an unexplained delay of seven months on the part of the appellant in applying to the judge to settle the case, the latter could not remember what had happened at the trial, the supreme court, on appeal, will take the appellee's case. Simmons v. Andrews, 106 N. Car. 201.

Where no amendments are offered to a statement on appeal, it may be settled without notice to the respondent, but it must be authenticated, either by the judge or by the parties. Kavanagh v. Maus, 28 Cal. 261.

In Kenyon v. Knipe, 3 Wash. Ter. 243, it was held that the trial court had no power to extend the time for the service of notice for the settlement required by the Washington Appeal Act of 1883. See Snyder v. Kelso (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 335.

A notice to the appellee fixing Sunday as the day for settling the statement was void, and the judge had no authority to order an extension of the time for settling, by reason of such notice. Cadwell v. First Nat. Bank (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 365.

A case made for the supreme court was held valid, although showing upon its face that it was settled and signed five days before the time therefor, and not showing notice to the opposite party—there being satisfactory evidence that his attorney of record was present when it was settled and signed, and made no objection thereto. Russell v. Anthony, 21 Kan. 450; 30 Am. Rep. 436.

his term of office may have expired before the time fixed for settlement.¹ Mandamus may issue to compel such settlement.²

5. Proceedings.—The proceedings, upon the settlement of a case, depend largely on the rules of court where such settlement is made. The general duty of the judge or other officer is to determine between the proposed case and amendments, striking

People v. Bradner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 233; Johnson v. Whitlock, 13 N. Y. 344. See Fielden v. Lahens, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 48, where it was held that the act of settling a case is judicial and not ministerial, and that a party has a right to require the presence of all the referees, a settlement by two only out of three being irregular.

The case must be settled by the judge who tried the cause, although the county in the meantime has been changed to another judicial district. Thurber v. Ryan, 12 Kan. 453.

An official stenographer has no power to determine whether a case made contains all the evidence, or to settle the truthfulness of the statements made therein. Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Grimes, 38 Kan. 241. See Ryan v. Madden, 46 Kan. 245.

In Louisiana, it is held that it is only when the opposite party refuses to join in making out a statement, or when the parties cannot agree, that the party appealing can call upon the court for a statement. Castaing v. Stone, 4 La. Ann. 18; Lucas v. Bell, 10 La. Ann. 150.

Interest.—Where after the making of a report by a referee, in favor of the plaintiff, the latter executed an agreement, as a consideration of its delivery, giving to the referee a first lien, for his fees, "upon the judgment and claim of the plaintiff," which was to be paid out of the first moneys collected upon such judgment, and both plaintiff and referee knew that an appeal would be taken, it was held that the referee was disqualified from settling the case. Leonard v. Mulry, 93 N. Y. 392.

Judge Pro Tem.—A judge pro tem. may settle a case after the expiration of the term of court at which the cause was tried, and over which he presided, if it is within the time prescribed by law, or by a rule or order of the court. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Fort Scott, 15 Kan. 435; Garven v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371.

v. Morange, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 221; Harris v. Whitney, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 175; People v. Peabody, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 228; Conover v. Devlin, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 472. See Taylor v. Mason, 28 Kan. 381. But in Washington, under Acts 1890, p. 324, which provides for a settlement by "the court or judge who tried the cause," it has been held that the trial judge cannot settle a case after the expiration of his term of office. Faulconer v. Warner, 2 Wash. 525; Enos v. Wilcox (Wash. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 364; Gunderson v. Cochrane (Wash. 1892), 28 Pac. Rep. 1105.

Kansas Code, § 449, provides that "in all cases heretofore or hereafter tried, when the term of office of a trial judge shall have expired, or may hereafter expire during the time fixed for making or settling and signing a case, it shall be his duty to certify, sign, and settle the case in all respects as if his term had not expired." Under this statute, when an action is tried before a district judge and time is given to make a case, which time expires before the expiration of the term of office of the judge, and no time is fixed by him for settling and signing, such judge cannot, after the expiration of his term of office, settle and sign the case. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Corser, 31 Kan. 705.

If the trial judge die before settlement, the case may be settled by any other judge of the court. Hasard v. Conklin, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 220; Morse v. Evans, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 445; Ireland v. Grant, 34 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 132.

2. In re Tweed, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 162. See Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Chambers (Mich. 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 741. In People v. Baker, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 19, it is said: "It [a mandamus] has been held to be the proper remedy to compel the settlement of a case or bill of exceptions, also to amend the same according to facts. So a referee may be compelled by mandamus to settle a case and exceptions, and to settle it correctly. But before the out all unnecessary matter, and adding what has been improperly omitted.¹ Where there is any dispute as to the testimony, the notes of the official stenographer will be referred to;² and after the whole has been adjusted, the judge's signature must be affixed to the case.³ In addition, there must be annexed the certificate of the judge, to the effect that it is a true and correct statement of the evidence and such other proceedings as have been incorporated in the case;⁴ and the whole must bear the attestation writ will be issued to compel the settlement in a particular way, it must be made to appear that it will then be according to the facts."

1. Missouri River, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 10 Kan. 105.

In Canzi v. Conner, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 148, it is said: "The settlement of a case is left very much to the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial." Where an exhibit forms a part of the case, the trial judge cannot arbitrarily strike out words which form a part thereof. Healey v. Terry, 7 N. Y. Supp. 321.

In Salina Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 363, it was held that the same rules must necessarily apply to the power and duty of the trial judge in settling and signing a case made, so far as accuracy is concerned, as to bills of exception. And where a petition asks that a new trial be granted, or that the original case made be reformed, because it was settled and signed by the trial judge, under a mistake and misapprehension of the testimony given on the trial, such petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

On the settlement of a case, the appellant's counsel made affidavit that a certain exception was taken at the trial, but it did not appear on the judge's minutes or the stenographer's notes. It was held that an amendment by the appellee, striking it out, was properly allowed. Canzi v. Conner, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 148.

2. Nelson v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 1 Monthly L. Bul. 15.

In Petrie v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 27 S. Car. 63, it was held that the judge, in settling the case for appeal, may state his rulings and the facts bearing upon the exceptions taken, even as to matters not disputed by the opposing counsel; notwithstanding that such statement appears to conflict with the stenographer's notes taken on the trial.

3. McNish v. Bowers, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 214; Reese v. Boese, 92 N. Y. 632; Harris v. Van Wart, 96 N. Y. 642; Snead v. Tietjen (Arizona 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 324; Stuefen v. Jefferis, 9 Mont. 66. But where an order, signed by the judge who tried the cause, provided that the case as amended stand as the settled case in the action, such settlement and allowance of the case was held sufficient, although the case itself was not signed. Volmer v. Stagerman, 25 Minn. 234.

Where the case is signed by the judge, and purports to have been settled before him, it will be presumed to have been properly settled. Sallee v. Ireland, 9 Mich. 154.

4. Hanson v. Tompkins, 2 Wash. 508; Madigan v. West Coast F. & M. Ins. Co. (Wash. 1892), 28 Pac. Rep. 1027; Zeukner v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 3 Wash. Ter. 60; McClesky v. State (Tex. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 997; Lynn v. State, 28 Tex. App. 515; Guyon v. Rooney, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 633.

A stipulation of counsel will not do away with the necessity for such authentication. Hodgden v. Ellsworth Co., 10 Kan. 637.

But the statement on appeal will not be stricken out where the authentication of the judge was omitted by mistake, if the clerk obtained such authentication a short time afterwards, but failed to attach it to the statement for several months, neither party having been prejudiced by the omission. Marks v. Culmer (Utah 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 757.

Where a case made was settled and signed by the judge of the district court, with his certificate, to the effect that it contained a true and correct statement of all the pleadings, motions, orders, evidence, findings, etc., had in the cause, but no evidence appeared in the case made preceding his certificate and the attestation of the clerk, although attached to the case was a paper purporting to contain the of the clerk and the seal of the court. But the certificate of the clerk is not necessary.¹

VII. CORRECTING; SUPPLEMENTING; RESETTLING.—While the judge before whom the cause was tried, may, on his own motion, before signing the case, make such alterations, additions, and erasures as he thinks necessary,² neither he nor the appellate court has the power, as a general rule, to amend or supplement evidence produced on the trial, which paper was certified by the official stenographer, and not otherwise identified or authenticated, it was held that such evidence was no part of the case made, and that the alleged errors could not be reviewed. Mullony v. Humes, 47 Kan. 99.

The authentication of a referee of a case made is conclusive upon the court, which has no authority to change his certificate. But if a mistake in engrossment is shown, it should be sent back to such referee for correction. Taylor v. Parker, 18 Minn. 79.

The certificate of a judge that "the foregoing statement on motion for a new trial has been settled and allowed by me," includes and properly authenticates certain exhibits used in evidence and referred to in the body of the statement, although the certificate is attached to the body thereof, and precedes the exhibits, which are set out in the appendix of such statement. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633.

Where the certificate of the trial judge commenced as follows, "I don't think as it would be just to say that this paper is settled and signed for what appears on its face," and then proceeds to state certain facts that transpired in the case; says that the testimony as prepared and presented to him is not true and nowhere allows the record as presented as a case made, it was held that it was not properly authenticated; nor did the addition by the clerk of what is certified by him to be the testimony, make it a case. The certificate of the judge must show affirmatively that he has settled it. Allen v. Krueger, 25 Kan. 75.

Where a judge certifies that a statement on appeal is correct according to his recollection, the statement is not sufficiently authenticated. Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194. But a certificate that it is substantially correct is sufficient. Battersby v. Abbott, 9 Cal. 566.

Washington Laws 1883, p. 59, § 4, provides that the statement on appeal shall contain the "material facts of the case." Under this act, where the certificate of the judge set forth that the statement on appeal contained all the material facts relative to the execution of the bond sued on, such certificate was held not sufficient. King Co. v. Hill, 1 Wash. 63.

Certificate of Trial Judge Impeachable Only for Fraud.—If the certificate of the trial judge to a case made is shown to be intentionally false and fraudulently prepared, the supreme court should wholly disregard it and order a new trial. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Fort Scott, 15 Kan. 435.

Unless the certificate is shown to be false and fraudulently made, the decision of the trial judge that a case made for his signature is untrue, is conclusive and final. Salina Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 363.

1. No certificate of the clerk of the court is required to a case made; his attestation and the seal of the court are sufficient. Muscott v. Hanna, 26 Kan. 770.

When what purports to be a case made is signed by the judge who tried the cause, but is not attested by the clerk, and has not the seal of the court attached, the same is not properly authenticated and the case should be dismissed. Karr v. Hudson, 19 Kan. 474. See Limerick v. Gwinn, 44 Kan. 694; Limerick v. Haun, 44 Kan. 696; Linton v. Frazier, 29 Kan. 20. But when, under such circumstances, a motion is made in the supreme court to dismiss the case and petition in error for that reason, and then the plaintiff in error, on leave, withdraws the case temporarily and presents it to the clerk of the district court, who duly attests and authenticates it with his signature and the seal of the court, it is held that the motion to dismiss the case should be overruled. Pierce v. Meyers, 28 Kan. 364.

2. Sloan v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 343; Salina Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 363; and see supra, this title, Amendments; Settlement.

a case made after it has been signed and certified.¹ If the case as sent up appears not to be properly settled, or is defective by reason of the omission of material parts of the proceedings, it may, on motion, be sent back for resettlement to the court below.²

1. Snively v. Abbott Buggy Co., 36 Kan. 106; Lewis v. Linscott, 38 Kan. 379; Graham v. Shaw, 37 Kan. 734; Carter v. Beckwith, 82 N. Y. 83; Porter v. Parks, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 654.

The case made, after being settled and signed by the judge as required by statute, cannot be perfected and supplemented in the supreme court by attaching to it certified copies of the pleadings and other proceedings had in the lower court which are neither referred to nor incorporated in the case. Missouri, etc., Transp. Co. v. Palmer, 19 Kan. 471; Coin v. Trowbridge, 6 Kan. 338; Hodgden v. Comrs., 10 Kan. 638; Sullivan v. Leavenworth, etc., R. Co., 17 Kan. 503; Thompson v. Williams, 30 Kan. 114; Fort Scott v. Deeds, 36 Kan. 621.

More than six months after the case made had been settled and signed by the judge, and attested and filed by the clerk, it was opened, and what purported to be the copy of a deed was inserted and attached to the plaintiff's petition. It was claimed by the plaintiff that at the time the case was made, the exhibit in some manner had become detached from the petition and could not be found, and it was therefore not copied; but that it being afterwards found, it was copied and attached to the record. It was held that such action was unauthorized and improper, that after the settling, signing, attesting, and filing, even the judge of the court is powerless to amend or change the case, much less any other officer or party; and that having been materially changed, it was not entitled to consideration. Hill v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Kan. 364.

Where a motion is filed in the supreme court to have a case made returned for correction, so that certain words may be stricken out if it appears that the words are wholly immaterial for the purposes of the case, they will be considered as stricken out, and the motion denied. Edwards v. Porter, 28 Kan. 700.

"The case stated or settled on appeal passes into and becomes a part of the case in the court below, and comes to this [the supreme] court as part of the record. This court has no authority to make, alter or modify it in any material respect, or to determine that it was or was not duly filed. It is therefore appropriate and proper, indeed necessary, that the court below should hear all motions and make all proper orders in respect to it." Walker v. Scott, 102 N. Car. 487.

In Taylor v. Mason, 28 Kan. 381, it was held, where sixty days were given to make a case after trial and judgment entered, and within that time the case was made and served, and amendments proposed, that after the sixty days, supplementary proceedings could not be incorporated into that case, but should be embodied in a new case made, or in a bill of exceptions.

But the supreme court will not necessarily dismiss a case made, simply because it was changed by the judge below after it had passed, strictly speaking, from his jurisdiction, the alteration being one manifestly originally intended by both parties, and one which justice required to be made. Wilson v. James, 29 Kan. 233.

2. Matthews v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 209; Bliss v. Hoggson, 84 N. Y. 667; Johnson v. Whitlock, 13 N. Y. 344; Jaycox v. Cameron, 49 N. Y. 645. In Westcott v. Thompson, 16 N. Y. 613, it was said that where the referee in his report set out the evidence at length, and stated that the facts proved on the first trial did not materially differ from those proved on the trial to which his report related, except as to one additional fact which he stated, and omitted to tell what state of facts was proved on the first trial, that nothing was before the court on which the judgment could be reviewed; and the appeal was dismissed, with leave to the appellant to apply to the supreme court for an amendment of the finding of facts by the referee and the case, so as to conform to the requirements of law.

The New York practice requires that a motion for the resettlement of a case be made upon affidavits setting forth what took place on the former trial; and it must be made at a special term. Witbeck v. Waine, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 433. This case held further, that the order for resettlement might

VIII. FILING.—After the case has been settled and signed by the judge or other officer, and attested by the clerk, it must, within a certain time, usually prescribed by a rule of court, be filed in the clerk's office;¹ and a failure to comply with this rule be made, where the action was pending in the court of appeals, before the record was sent back; but in Adams v. Bush, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 118, it is held that after an appeal to the court of appeals and a case made and returned to the clerk, the court below will not hear a motion to correct the case, but it must be sent back to enable them to do so.

A referee being for the purpose of the action a special term judge, a motion to re-settle a case should properly be made before the general term. Cheever v. Brown (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 918. See Pettit v. Pettit, 20 N. Y. W'kly Dig. 154.

Where, upon an appeal from an order granting a new trial, it did not in any way appear that an order to show cause why the case for a new trial previously served should not be allowed, settled, and signed, was ever disposed of, or that the case was allowed, examined, or signed by the judge or that the new trial was granted upon the case as proposed and presented in the paper-book, it was held that the irregularity was too important to be overlooked, and the same was remanded to the court below with leave to the respondent to apply for correction of the record, or an amendment of the return. Phoenix v. Gardner, 13 Minn. 294.

Where one of the parties caused a case to be filed in the supreme court, which he claimed was a case settled after judgment, but it did not conclusively show on its face that it was so intended, and the trial judge who signed the document certified to the superior court that in so signing he did not suppose he was settling a case under the statute, and that the one signed did not set forth all the facts as they existed, it was held that the papers should be remitted to the trial court for such action as it should deem proper under the circumstances. Farrand v. Bentley, 6 Mich. 281.

When, upon the trial of an action, all evidence to be offered by the defendant in support of a counter-claim set up in his answer was excluded by the court, and a motion to have the case re-settled and to have the ruling of the court excluding the evidence and the exception thereto inserted was denied, it was held that such denial was error; and that, as the right of the party to review the action of the court below was absolute, so was his right to have a complete and accurate statement of the matters determined against him set forth in the case; and the order was reversed and a re-settlement directed with the addition proposed to be made. Gleason v. Smith, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 547. As to such an order being appealable, see People v. New York Cent. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 418; In re Duff, 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 350. In Marckwald v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 548, it was further held, on appeal from an order denying a motion made for the re-settlement of a case containing exceptions on the ground that it should contain only so much of the evidence as is necessary to present questions of law raised on the trial, and not all the evidence, that such order should be reversed and a re-settlement directed, excluding needless depositions and stenographic notes and substituting in place thereof, so far as might be proper, a statement of the facts which such evidence proved or tended to prove. See McNish v. Bowers, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 214.

The superior court will order the re-settlement of a case where the affidavits used on a motion for a new trial have been omitted. Gallaudet v. Steinmetz, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 239.

If an exception which was actually taken was not noted by the stenographer, and the case was settled in accordance with his report, the remedy is by a motion to re-settle. Toner v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 302.

If the trial judge refuses to re-settle a case because he thinks it is correctly settled, such refusal is conclusive upon the appellate court. Grossman v. Supreme Lodge, etc., 52 Hun (N. Y.) 611.

will be deemed an abandonment of the case, unless the time for filing has been extended by the court.¹

SETTLEMENT.²—In contracts, as between debtor and creditor, a settlement is an agreement by which two or more persons who have dealings together, so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain the balance due from one to the other; an accounting, adjustment, or liquidation of mutual accounts and agreement becomes a record of the court, and it may be taken prima facie in the further progress of the action as evidence of the facts therein appearing. VanBergen v. Ackles, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 314.

By the 37th rule of the New York court of common pleas, the party must file with the clerk a copy of the case as settled, and the original papers containing the case and amendments as they came from the judge or referee. Parker v. Link, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 375.

But in South Carolina, the rule (Cir. Ct. Rule 49) does not say that the original case shall be filed, and so an appeal will not be dismissed because a copy of such case has been filed instead. Archer v. Long (S. Car. 1891), 14 S. E. Rep. 24.

By Gen. Rule, New York supreme court rules, the case cannot be filed by the clerk unless the same is so ordered by the judge. Under this rule it is held that if the appellant fails to procure an order filing the case, such order may be procured by the respondent. Davidge v. Coe, 9 N. Y. Supp. 310.

By Rev. Stat. Texas, art. 1379, the court may, by an order entered upon the record, authorize the statement of facts to be made up, signed and filed during vacation. When no such order is shown to have been made, the statement will not be considered on appeal, if the statement was filed two days after the adjournment of the trial court. Broussard v. Sabine, etc., R. Co., 75 Tex. 702; San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 75 Tex. 643. See White v. Parks, 67 Tex. 605; International, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 58 Tex. 187.

In Ballew v. Anderson, 31 S. Car. 360, it was held on a motion to reinstate an appeal dismissed by the clerk for failure to file the return required, that where the appellant relied upon a local practice in his county of agreeing upon a case and filing a printed copy of the same with the clerk of the supreme court within a reasonable time, such filing would not excuse his non-compliance with a rule requiring him to file the return or an agreed statement of the case, as allowed by act of March 5, 1875, within the time required by said rule; and that he must be deemed to have waived his appeal.

1. Leech v. West, 2 Cal. 95; Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107; Kavanagh v. Maus, 28 Cal. 261.

Where it appeared that the appellant failed to comply with the rule requiring a case made to be filed in the clerk's office within a certain time after settlement, and such omission did not appear to have occurred by reason of inadvertence, mistake or excusable neglect, a motion to perfect an appeal on such case was dismissed, and a motion for an order declaring the appeal abandoned was granted. Donahue v. Enterprise R. Co., 33 S. Car. 608. See Archer v. Long (S. Car. 1891), 14 S. E. Rep. 24.

Until the time for filing a case made, or the extension of such time, expires, the case cannot be noticed for argument. Donohue v. Hicks, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 438.

The court may extend the time for filing a case, even though the time as originally prescribed has already expired. Strong v. Hardenburgh, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 438.

But a motion for a new trial does not extend the time for filing. Mahoney v. Caperton, 15 Cal. 313.

The mere failure of the clerk to mark the case "filed" will not be ground for dismissing the appeal where the case was left with him by the party making it, in good time. Aultman v. Utsey, 33 S. Car. 611. See Fore v. Western N. Car. R. Co., 101 N. Car. 526.

upon the balance.¹ The word may be used in the sense of mere computation, or it may be so used as to include the idea of compromise or adjustment of controversy.² The term settlement does not necessarily mean payment,³ though it may, especially under circumstances which exclude the idea of controversy and adjustment, be understood as meaning payment.⁴ Questions involving the construction of this word frequently arise in the law of agency in cases where it is necessary to determine the powers of an agent under an authority to "settle" or to make a "settlement."⁵

When the word "settle" is used in the sense of accounting together and striking a balance, a promise to settle implies a promise to pay the balance. Moore v. Hyman, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 274.

Two contracting parties are said to settle an account when they are certain what is justly due by one to the other; when one pays the balance or debt due by him, he is said to settle the balance. 11 Ala. 419.

It was held that the word "settled" at the foot of a bill of parcels, imported a receipt of payment and acquittance. Rex v. Martin, 7 C. & P. 549; 32 E. C. L. 626.

But it is not always that the word necessarily means payment in full. Thus, where a debtor inclosed a check in a letter of transmittal, which was merely a printed form, with the blanks filled out in writing and containing the printed words, "in settlement of account," and the letter also inclosed a receipt in similar form and with the same printed words, it was held that the words, "in settlement of account," meant no more than "applied on account." Widner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 51 Mich. 291.

Circumstances Precluding the Idea of Controversy and Adjustment.—A promise to settle a demand which has been liquidated and is undisputed means to pay it. Pinkerton v. Bailey, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 600; Stilwell v. Coope, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 225; Brody v. Doherty, 30 Miss. 40.

5. See AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 367.

It was held that a power of attorney to settle up mercantile business, which had been conducted in the name of the principal, did not confer power to purchase or to execute a note for the purchase price of real estate. Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413; 54 Am. Dec. 297.

But it was held that a power given by one to his agent, authorizing him to settle the principal's business and collect all claims due him, gave the agent authority to execute a replevin bond. Merrick v. Wagner, 44 Ill. 266.

Where a physician left his books of account for services with his agent "for settlement," it was held that the agent had no authority to assign the books to a surety of his principals as security. The words "for settlement" restricted the authority of such an agent to a power to settle the demands with the persons from whom they were due. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800; 42 Am. Dec. 612.

Where one holding certain vouchers for certain personal services rendered to a railroad company, had sent the unpaid vouchers to his agent, with authority to make the best settlement possible, it was held that the term "settlement" gave the agent not only authority to determine the amount due, but to collect and receipt the money coming to the principal under such

In conveyancing, settlement is the limitation of real or personal property or the enjoyment thereof to several persons in succession, prescribing the mode of holding, enjoying, and disposing of it.¹ The settlement generally implies a deed, or an instrument equivalent to a deed, such as articles of agreement for a settlement; but a settlement may be and often is made by will.² The party making the deed of settlement is called the settlor,

An agreement by partners upon the dissolution of the firm that the business should be settled with one of the partners, was held not to authorize such partner to renew a note which had been given by a partnership. In regard to the meaning of the authority to settle, the court by Cowen, J., said: "This was no more than a power to liquidate partnership demands and sanction the liquidation by the firm name. It no more gave power to renew the old note than to give one payable in chattels. A says to B, settle my debts with C, and sign my name for the purposes of such settlement. It is a strained and unnatural construction to say that B may use A's name in extinguishing the old contract by executing such a new one in A's name as he pleases. The agent can do no more than deal with the old debt by paying or stating an account. The word 'settle,' as here used in respect to the debts due from the firm, and the word 'business' no doubt covers these, is thus defined by Mr. Webster: 'To adjust; to liquidate; to balance or to pay; as, to settle accounts.' Webst. Dic. 'Settle,' pl. 18, 4th ed. That this is so understood by courts, may also, I think, be collected from several of the cases cited by the learned counsel for the defendant on the argument. Kilgour v. Finlyson, 1 H. Bl. 155; Mowatt v. Howland, 3 Day (Conn.) 353; White v. Union Ins. Co., 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 561; 9 Am. Dec. 726; Sanford v. Mickles, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 224. Others cited by him are in point. Abel v. Sutton, 3 Esp. 111; Martin v. Walton, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 16; Hackley v. Patrick, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 536. These were all cases of an express authority to settle, after dissolution, yet the first holds that the power did not extend to indorsing a partnership note even in liquidation of a partnership debt. In the second, it was denied to be a power of renewal; and in the third, a power of adjustment was denied to operate as an authority to sign an account stated. In the case at bar an express power to use the name is given; but it is confined to the purposes of adjustment (settlement). The words did not work an extension of power in any respect beyond the form of doing the business." National Bank v. Norton, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 572.

An attorney authorized by salvors to settle their claims against the vessel saved, has authority to receive the money, but not to afterwards distribute it upon his own judgment among the salvors, or to pay charges against the fund. Hawkins v. Avery, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 551.

It was held that a clerk in a store authorized to settle a claim against a carrier for the loss of certain goods, cannot give a discharge without receiving any consideration. His mere agreement to receive other goods in place of those lost will not operate as a release of the carrier's liability. Patterson v. Moore, 34 Pa. St. 69.

The power "to settle" on an assignment of a complainant's interest in a contract was held not to authorize the assignee to include it in a general arbitration of all matters in difference between him and the other party to the contract. Held, also, that an award thereon obtained against the protest of the complainant, and by the assignee's deception, constituted no bar to a specific performance of such contract. Lawrence v. Emson, 31 N. J. Eq. 67.

I. STATEMENT AND ORIGIN OF RULE.—When a person takes an estate of freehold, legal or equitable, under a deed, will, or other writing, and afterwards, in the same deed, will, or writing, there is a limitation, by way of remainder, with or without the interposition of any other estate, of an interest of the same quality, as legal or equitable, to his heirs generally, or the heirs of his body, by that name in deeds or writings of conveyance, and by that or some such name in wills, and as a class or denomination of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs will entitle the person or ancestor himself to the estate or interest imported by the limitation.⁴

Other Statements.—In Shelley's Case, 1 Rep. 104 a, the rule was stated to be that when the ancestor by any gift or

It is generally supposed that the Rule had its origin in the principles and policy of feudal tenures. This policy favored descents as much as possible, there being feudal burdens which attached to the heir when he took by descent from which he would have been exempt as purchaser.¹

conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, "the heirs" are words of limitation of the estate and not words of purchase. This statement of the Rule is that of Coke and is that most generally adopted. In this case the Rule was stated on the authority of several cases in the Year Books, viz., 24 Edw. III, 27 Edw. III, 38 Edw. III, 40 Edw. III. Sir William Blackstone, in his opinion in Perrin v. Blake, Harg. Law Tracts 501, relies on a still earlier case in 18 Edw. II as establishing the Rule. In Co. Litt. 22b, 319b, Lord Coke asserted that the Rule was a clear and undisputed rule of law; and it was laid down as such by Fitzherbert and Rolle. Fitz. Abr., tit. Feoffment, pl. 109; 2 Rol. Abr. 417. The case of the Provost of Beverly, 40 Edw. III, just cited, decided in 1366, was said by Preston, who gave at large a translation of it, to be precisely in point in its assertion of the existence of the Rule. 1 Preston on Estates 304.

In Challis' Real Prop. 129, it is said that Shelley's Case decided these two distinct propositions:—First: When the ancestor by any assurance takes an estate of freehold, and by the same assurance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, always in such cases "heirs," etc., are words of limitation, and not of purchase; Second: The further addition of words of limitation to "heirs" makes no difference, provided that the further limitation is to heirs of the same quality.

"Wheresoever the ancestor takes any estate of freehold, whether it be or be not such as may determine in his lifetime, and there is afterwards in the same conveyance an unconditional limitation to his right heir or heirs in tail (either immediately without the intervention of any mean estate of freehold between his freehold and the subsequent limitations to his heirs, or mediately, that is, with the interposition of some such mean estate), there such subsequent limitation to the heirs or heirs in tail vests immediately in the ancestor, and does not remain in contingency or abeyance." Fearne, 1 Rem. 33.

"In any instrument, if a freehold be limited to the ancestor for life, and the inheritance to his heirs, either mediately or immediately, the first taker takes the whole estate; if it be limited to the heirs of his body, he takes a fee tail; if to his heirs, a fee simple." Serj. Glynn in Perrin v. Blake, 1 Coll. Jurid. No. 10, p. 288.

"Whenever a limitation of land to A for his life or any other estate of freehold is followed by the limitation of a remainder to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, the latter limitation shall have the same effect as if it had been made to him and his heirs, or to him and the heirs of his body. It confers the benefit of the remainder on the ancestor himself; it inserts, in effect, his name in the limitation of the remainder; it creates a gift to him, and tacks to such a gift the word 'heirs,' etc., as words of limitation of his estate. A remainder to the heirs of A is turned into a remainder to A and his heirs." Hayes' Real Est. (Inquiry, etc.) 93.

1. This view of the Rule's origin and purpose was favored by several of the judges of the king's bench in Perrin v. Blake, 1 Coll. Jurid. 298, 305, 312; Harg. Law Tracts 389. It is also supported by 1 Challis' Real Prop. 123, and by 1 Prest. Est. 295, where it is said: "After wardships, reliefs and other incidents of tenure flowing from estates of inheritance were introduced into the feudal system, it was accounted a fraud on the lord, who was entitled to these fruits and incidents on the death of his tenant and the succession of the heir, that there should be a power to give the property to the ancestor for his life only, and of extending the enjoyment to his heirs, quatenus they were his heirs; so that the heirs should be entitled precisely in the same manner as if they took by hereditary succession, and yet take as purchasers in their own right, and, as a consequence, defeat the lord of the fruits to which he would have been entitled on a succession from the ancestor."

II. NOT A RULE OF INTENTION.—The Rule in Shelley's Case is a rule of law and not of construction. Where the language used in the instrument brings the case within the Rule, the fact that it was the intention of the grantor or devisor that the Rule should not operate is of no importance.¹ So imperative is the Rule that Blackstone, J., in Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2579; Harg. Law Tracts 489, imputed the origin, growth, and establishment of the Rule to the aversion that the common law had to the inheritance being in abeyance. He thought another foundation of the Rule to lie in the desire to facilitate the alienation of land, and to throw it into the track of commerce one generation sooner by vesting the inheritance in the ancestor and thereby giving him the power of disposition. In Doe v. Laming, 2 Burr. 1100, Lord Mansfield thought the Rule to have been introduced originally, not only to save to the lord the fruits of his tenure, but likewise for the sake of specialty creditors.

The following exposition of the origin and meaning of the Rule is from Williams on Real Prop., 254*. "In ancient times, the feudal holding of an estate granted to a vassal continued only for his life. And from the earliest times to the present day a grant or conveyance of lands, made by any instrument (a will only accepted), to A, simply without further words will give him an estate for his life, and no longer. If the grant was anciently made to him and his heirs, his heir, on his death, became entitled; and it was not in the power of the ancestor to prevent the descent of his estate accordingly. He could not sell it without the consent of his lord; much less could he then devise it by his will. The ownership of an estate in fee simple was then but little more advantageous than the possession of a life interest at the present day. The powers of alienation belonging to such ownership, together with the liabilities to which it is subject, have almost all been of slow and gradual growth, as has already been pointed out in different parts of the preceding chapter. A tenant in fee simple was, accordingly, a person who held to him and his heirs; that is, the land was given to him to hold for his life, and to his heirs to hold after his decease. It cannot, therefore, be wondered at that a gift expressly in these terms, 'To A for his life, and after his decease to his heirs,' should have been anciently regarded as identical with a gift to A and his heirs, that is, a gift in fee simple. Nor, if such was the law formerly, can it be a matter of surprise that the same rule should have continued to prevail up to the present time. Such indeed has been the case. Notwithstanding the vast power of alienation now possessed by a tenant in fee simple, and the great liability of such an estate to involuntary alienation for the purpose of satisfying the debts of the present tenant, the same rule still holds; and a grant to A for his life, and after his decease to his heirs, will now convey to him an estate in fee simple with all its incidents; and in the same manner, a grant to A for his life, and after his decease to the heirs of his body, will now convey to him an estate tail as effectually as a grant to him and the heirs of his body. In these cases, therefore, as well as in ordinary limitations to A and his heirs, or to A and the heirs of his body, the words heirs and heirs of his body are said to be words of limitation; that is, words which limit or mark out the estate to be taken by the grantee. At the present day, when the heir is perhaps the last person likely to get the estate, these words of limitation are regarded simply as formal means of conferring powers and privileges on the grantee as mere technicalities, and nothing more. But, in ancient times, these same words of limitation really meant what they said, and gave the estate to the heirs or the heirs of the body of the grantee, after his decease, according to the letter of the gift. The circumstance that a man's estate was to go to his heir was the very thing which afterwards enabled him to convey to another an estate in fee simple. And the circumstance that it was to go to the heir of his body was that which alone enabled him, in after times, to bar an estate tail and dispose of the lands entailed by means of a common recovery."

St. Rep. 377.

This doctrine may now be considered as established. In the great case of Perrin v. Blake, Harg. L. Tracts 489; 4 Burr. 2579, the Court of King's Bench made the Rule yield to the testator's manifest intent; he having declared in his will his intent and meaning to be that none of his children should sell his estate for a longer time than their lives, and to that intent devising a part of his estate to a son for and during the term of his natural life, remainder over during his life, remainder to the heirs of the body of the son with remainders over. The question was whether the son took an estate for life or an estate tail, and that depended upon the other question whether the words "heirs of the body" were to be taken to be words of purchase to affect the manifest intent of the will, or words of limitation according to the Rule in Shelley's Case. On error to the exchequer chamber, the judgment of the King's Bench was reversed; and upon a further writ of error to the house of lords, the dispute was compromised and a non pros. entered on the writ of error by consent, so that the final result of the controversy affirmed the rule that even the testator's manifest intent could not control the legal operation of the word "heirs" when standing for the ordinary line of succession as a word of limitation and render it a word of purchase.

It is now settled that the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench was erroneous. Williams on Real Property 213*.

In the earlier case of Bagshaw v. Spencer, 1 Ves. 142, 2 Atk. 582, 1 Coll. Jurid. No. 15, Lord Hardwicke had decided, where there was a devise to trustees in fee in trust, and after divers limitations in trust, then to B for life, remainder to the trustees and their heirs during his life, to preserve contingent remainders, and after the death of B remainder to the heirs of his body, that this was a trust in equity and that B did not take an estate tail under the will, for that the words "heirs of the body" should be deemed words of purchase to fulfill the manifest intent. But this decision was not in accord with the decisions of the King's Bench in Colson v. Colson, 2 Atk. 248; Str. 1125, in which the Rule in Shelley's Case had been emphatically and recently enforced in a similar case, and was questioned and overruled in Wright v. Pearson, 1 Eden 119, and Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 206, on the ground that that case was not one of an executory trust, and that, therefore, it should have been held within the Rule.

In Doe v. Laming, 2 Burr. 1100, Lord Mansfield denied, as he did also in Colson v. Colson, 2 Atk. 248, that there was any solidify in the distinction between trusts executed and trusts executory, and held that all trusts were executory, because a trust executed was within the Statute of Uses. He insisted, also, that there was no foundation for the distinction between the equitable and legal estate and that a court of equity as well as a court of law was equally bound by a general rule of law.

In Doe v. Smith, 7 T. R. 531, Lord Kenyon took a distinction between a general and a secondary intention in a will, and held that the latter must give way when the two intentions interfered, and that if the testator intended that the first taker should take only an estate for life and that his issue should take as purchasers, yet if he intended that the estate should descend in the line of hereditary succession, the general intent should prevail and the word "issue" be deemed a word of limitation.

See Doe v. Colyear, 11 East 548; Jesson v. Doe, 2 Bligh 2; Doe v. Harvey, 4 B. & C. 610, 10 E. C. L. 420, in support of the doctrine that the words "heirs of the body," whether in deeds or wills, are construed as words of limitation, unless it appears clearly and unequivocally that the words were used to designate certain individuals answering the description of heirs at the time of the death of the first taker.

Hargrave, in his observations on the Rule, favored giving it a most absolute and peremptory application, considering it beyond the control of intention when a fit case for its application existed; and that it was a conclusion of law of irresistible efficacy when the testator did not use the words "heirs" or "heirs of the body" in a special or restrictive sense, for any particular person or persons who should be the heir of the tenant for life at his death, and in that instance inaptly denominated heir, and when he did not intend to break in upon and disturb the line of descent from the ancestor, but used the word "heirs" as nomen collectivum for the whole line of inheritable blood. Harg. Law Tracts 489.

Fearne said: "Nothing can be better founded than Mr. Hargrave's doctrine, that the Rule in Shelley's Case is no medium for finding out the intention of the testator; that, on the contrary, the Rule supposes the intention already discovered . . . which ought to be adjusted before the Rule is thought of—that to resolve that point, the ordinary rules for interpreting the language of wills ought to be resorted to; that when it is once settled, that the donor or testator has used words of inheritance according to their legal import, has applied them intentionally to comprise the whole line of heirs to the tenant for life, and has really made him the terminus or ancestor, by reference to whom the succession is to be regulated, then comes the proper time to inspect the Rule in Shelley's Case; that then, too, it will appear that . . . it is perfectly immaterial whether the testator meant to avoid the Rule or not; and that to apply it, and to declare the words of inheritance to be words of limitation, vesting an inheritance in the tenant for life, as the ancestor and terminus of the heirs, is a mere matter of course. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 188.

Hayes said: "The Rule does not assume to fix or shackle the meaning of words. It strikes at the intention when discovered, but it furnishes no touchstone for directing the import of the limitations. That is entirely without the province of the Rule, and is left to the uncontrolled operation of general principles. On the one hand, the word 'heirs,' though properly a word of limitation, will not by its magic attract the Rule, if it be clearly used as a substituted term for 'sons' and 'children,' etc.; on the other hand, the words 'sons,' 'children,' etc., though properly words of purchase, will not repel the Rule, if they be clearly used as substituted terms, for heirs. The Rule wars not with words; it leaves to the common rules of exposition the task of working out the meaning; and stands aloof until they have performed their office." Hayes' Real Est. 95.

Kent says, "All the modern cases contain one uniform language, and declare that the words, heirs of the body, whether in deeds or wills, are construed as words of limitation, unless it clearly and unequivocally appears that they were used to designate certain individuals answering the description of heirs at the death of the party." 2 Kent's Com. 229*.

Minor says: "The Rule is not a mean to discover the intention of the grantor or testator, but supposing the intention ascertained, the Rule controls it so far as it is repugnant to the policy of the law, giving effect to the general and legal, rather than to the more particular and proscribed, intent. The party making such a limitation has in his mind two purposes, which are legally in conflict. One is to give the ancestor only a life estate, the other to limit the land to his heirs collectively, and in indefinite succession. These two intents cannot stand together, without more or less of general mischief to the public welfare; and the Rule prevails simply to subordinate the particular, and apparently less important, design of limiting the ancestor's interest to a life estate, to the more comprehensive, and probably the preferred, purpose of transmitting the inheritance in the manner indicated." 2 Minor's Inst. 395.

Farman says: "The Rule in Shelley's Case is a rule of law and not of construction;" and that, since the final determination of Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2579; Harg. Law Tracts 489, "The Rule in question has been regarded as one of the most firmly established rules of property, and, strictly speaking, no instance can be adduced of a departure from it. Undoubtedly, in many cases a devise to a person for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, has been held by force of the context to give an estate for life only to the ancestor; but this has been the result, not of holding the heirs of the body, as such, to take by purchase, but of construing those words to designate some other class of persons generally less extensive. The Rule, therefore, was excluded, not violated by this interpretation." 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) 333*.

Washburn says: "Wherever the Rule does apply, it is, as a rule of the common law, so imperative, that, though there be an express declaration that the ancestor shall only have a life-estate, it will not defeat its union with the subsequent limitation to his heirs. So, though the limitation be accompanied by a declaration to the effect that the heirs shall take as purchasers, or is made to the heirs of the first taker and their heirs, or where the estate is to A for life, and, after his death, to the heirs of his body, to share as tenants in common, or to be equally divided between them, it comes within the Rule." 2 Washburn, R. P. * 273.

In List v. Rodney, 83 Pa. St. 483, the court, by Mercur, J., said: "It is only after the intention has been discovered that the Rule in Shelley's Case can be applied; it cannot be used as a means of discovering the intention."

This matter underwent discussion in the very recent Illinois case of Carpenter v. Van Olinder, 127 Ill. 42; 11 Am. St. Rep. 92; here the will gave to the testator's widow and daughter the use of property "to be divided among them as the same would be by law without a will, except that it is my will that none of the real estate be sold, or disposed of, except the wood-lot in the big woods, for their use, but to be kept sacred for their heirs." The decision was, that the word "heirs" in the will was a word of limitation and not of purchase, and that the estate was vested in the devisee in fee simple and not for life. The court said: "Stress is laid, in argument, upon different matters, as presented by the entire devise, claimed to show that the testator could not have intended to give an estate in fee to his daughters. But we have seen that this is not the question. If the language he used, in the legal sense that must be placed upon it in the connection in which it occurs, imports a conveyance in fee to the daughters, such must be its effect, although it may appear that he actually only intended to convey a life estate, the only inquiry permissible being, whether, from other parts of the devise, it appears that the word 'heirs' was used in a sense more restricted than the term itself imports,—as the equivalent of 'children,' 'issue,' or some other partial or restricted class of heirs." In this case the court referred with disapproval to certain language used in the opinion in Belsay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182, which appeared to place the decision in that case upon the intention of the testator to vest a fee in the legal representatives or legal heirs of certain grandchildren, as determined from a consideration of all the language of the will, and not, as should have been done, upon the evident intention of the testator to use the words "legal representatives" or "legal heirs" as synonymous with "children," and therefore as words of purchase and not of limitation; and said: "this language of the opinion was unadvisedly assented to by a majority of the members of the court, and is now disapproved and overruled."

It was held in Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 88, that the Rule in Shelley's Case was in force in Illinois as a rule of property, and that the question of intent, in determining whether the rule was applicable in a given case, did not turn upon the quantity of estate intended to be given to an ancestor, but upon the nature of the estate intended to be given to the heirs.

In Bender v. Fleurie, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 345, the testator gave to his daughter certain land, in these words: "She shall have it as her own during her life, and then it is to come to the heirs of her body." The court said: "But it is said the testator did not mean to give her an estate-tail. Perhaps he did not. But he has used words which, in law, mean nothing else. If he intended to give but a life estate voluit non dixit, we must take what he said, not what he meant. . . . But no court in this State or in England has ever treated the phrase 'heirs of her body' as words of purchase when they are used with reference to the issue of a devisee to whom a life estate is given. They are words of limitation, and as such they create an estate-tail in the first taker, which cannot be cut down, even by the clearest desire that it shall be a life estate only."

So, in Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. St. 344, 53 Am. Dec. 474, the court said: "The requisite limitations to the ancestor and his heirs being found, the Rule must be applied. It can never be a question whether the Rule shall be applied or not, whether the author of the limitation intended it to be applied or not;" and again: "The question on a will is not whether the testator intended that the Rule shall not operate,—for this is not subject to his power—but whether he used the words, 'heirs of the body,' as synonymous with the word 'children' or its proper equivalent."

So, the Indiana court in Allen v. Craft, 109 Ind. 476, 58 Am. Rep. 425, said: "It has seemed to many that there is a conflict between the rule declaring that the intention of the testator must govern and the Rule in Shelley's Case; but the appearance of conflict fades away when it is brought clearly to mind that when the word 'heirs' is used as a word of limitation, it is treated as conclusively expressing the intention of the testator. Where it appears that the word was so used, the law inexorably fixes the force and meaning of the instrument. If once it is granted that the word was used in its strict legal sense, nothing can avert the operation of the Rule in Shelley's Case; so that the inquiry is, Was the word used as one of limitation? The only method in which an instrument employing the word 'heirs' can be shown not to be within the Rule is by showing that the word was not employed in its strict legal sense."

In Polk v. Paris, 9 Yerg (Tenn.) 209, 30 Am. Dec. 400, decided in 1836, which was a case on a deed, the court, by Reese, J., said: "The Rule in Shelley's Case is a rule of property and of public policy, not of intention merely, or construction. By this it is not meant to assert that the intention of the grantor is to be altogether excluded, as to the entire instrument, in fixing upon it a construction or interpretation. But it is intended to assert that it matters not how distinctly in point of intention it may appear that the grantor meant that the first taker should have a life estate only, if it further appeared that by the use of the terms, heirs of the body, issue, sons, children, etc., he meant the descendants of the first taker should take in their character of heirs, a descendible estate of inheritance exhausting the lineal stock of the first taker; such purpose, by the operation of the Rule, vests the first taker with the inheritance. In other words, it matters not how strongly or how clearly the grantor may intend that the instrument should not be controlled by the rule of law; yet if the proper construction of the terms which he has used in the entire instrument bring it within the operation of the rule of law, the rule of law and not his intention must have effect."

In Doebler's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 9, decided in 1869, the court, by Sharswood, J., said: "If the intention is ascertained that the heirs are to take qua heirs, they must take by descent, and the inheritance vests in the ancestor. The Rule in Shelley's Case is never a means of discovering the intention. It is applicable only after that has been discovered. It is then an unbending rule of law. . . . It declares inexorably that where the ancestor takes a preceding freehold by the same instrument, a remainder shall not be limited to the heirs qua heirs as purchasers. . . . It is not competent for the testator to prevent this legal consequence by any declaration, no matter how plain, of a contrary intention. That is a subordinate intent which is inconsistent with, and must, therefore, be sacrificed to, the paramount one. Even if he expressly provides that the Rule shall not apply, that the ancestor shall be tenant for life only and impeachable for waste—if he interpose an estate in trustees to support contingent remainders, . . . or, as in his will, declares in so many words that he shall in nowise sell or alienate as it is intended that he shall have a life interest only, it will be ineffectual to prevent the operation of the Rule."

In Hageman v. Hageman, 129 Ill. 164, decided in 1889, the court, by Shope, C. J., said: "The Rule in Shelley's Case is a rule of property in this State, and its application to the particular case depends not upon the quantity of the estate intended to be given to the ancestors, but upon the estate devised to the heirs. When the devise is to heirs general, the Rule applies, and is held to conclusively express the intention of the testator, and will necessarily govern and control in determining the estate devised, notwithstanding the expression of an intention on the part of the testator that the ancestor shall take a less estate than the fee."

In Trumbull v. Trumbull, 149 Mass. 200, the court, by Devens, J., said of the Rule in Shelley's Case: "It was a rule of property and not of construction, and therefore no declaration, however unequivocal when an estate was thus created, that the ancestor should have an estate for life only, or that his estate should be subject to all the incidents of a life estate, or that the heirs though there be an express declaration that the ancestor shall only have a life estate, yet this expressed intention will not defeat its operation.¹ This principle has unfortunately been more than once overlooked, some cases regarding the Rule as merely one of construction yielding to the manifest intention of the testator.²

should take as purchasers, would be operative." Citing Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198.

In Daniel v. Whartenby, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 639, the court, by Swayne, J., said: "A declaration, however positive that the Rule shall not apply, or that the estate of the ancestor shall not continue beyond the primary express limitation, or that his heirs shall take by purchase and not by descent, will be unavailing to exclude the Rule, and cannot effect the results. . . . The rule is one of property and not of construction."

"Even, therefore, though there should be an estate for life in express terms, and a devise to issue in remainder on the death of the tenant for life, either expressly or by implication only, as by a devise over for want or in default of issue, unless there is something to contradict unequivocally the presumed intention that the devise over shall not take effect until the whole line of issue is extinct, the rule of law is an unbending one which vests the inheritance in tail in the first taker. The particular intent must give way to the general one. The Rule in Shelley's Case is not a rule of construction—not a means of ascertaining the intention of the testator. It presupposes that intention to be ascertained. It is a rule of law which declares inexorably that where the ancestor takes a preceding freehold by the same instrument, whether deed or will, a remainder shall not be limited to his heirs as purchasers. When we determine that by 'issue' he means heirs of the body—the entire line taking in succession by descent—the rule has the same application. If given as an immediate remainder after the freehold, it shall vest as an executed estate of inheritance in the ancestor; if immediately after some other interposed estate, then it shall vest in him as a remainder." Kleppner v. Laverty, 70 Pa. 70.

Doebler's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 9, decided in 1869, was on a will in which there was a devise of real estate: "I give to my son the block, etc., . . . but he shall nowise sell or alienate any of the property, as it is intended he shall have a life interest only in the same with remainder to his heirs in fee . . . should my son die without heirs," then over. The son contracted to convey certain of the real estate in question in fee. The purchaser refused to complete the contract on the ground that the son could not give a good title, and the son brought a bill in equity. Held, that the son took a fee simple by the Rule in Shelley's Case, and specific performance was decreed. See also Clarke v. Smith, 49 Md. 106.

In Indiana this view of the Rule has apparently obtained the strongest hold. The language of the cases very strongly implies that the Rule will not be permitted to overthrow the manifest intention of the testator. Thus, in McCray v. Lipp, 35 Ind. 116, it is said that the Rule is "not inflexible when applied to devises. It yields to the manifest intention of the testator." See also Siceloff v. Redman, 26 Ind. 258; Hull v. Beals, 23 Ind. 25; Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 251; Fountain Co. Coal, etc., Co. v. Beckleheimer, 102 Ind. 76; 52 Am. Rep. 645; Millett v. Ford, 109 Ind. 159; Jackson v. Jackson, 127 Ind. 346; Earnhart v. Earnhart, 127 Ind. 397; 22 Am. St. Rep. 652. All these cases, however, might have been decided upon the ground that the interpretation of the will showed that "children" were meant by the terms used in limiting the subsequent estate, and, therefore, the question of a contest between intention and the Rule was not necessarily involved. And this view of the cases is strengthened by Allen

The inquiry, whether the word "heirs," or other term used to designate the takers of the subsequent estate, should be construed in the circumstances of the particular case to mean technically the "heirs" of the ancestor, is totally distinct from the inquiry whether the case is within the Rule. To blend the two inquiries tends to confuse. A failure to keep them distinct and separate may be said to account for much of the apparent confusion in the cases. The first inquiry is purely one of interpretation and has nothing to do with the Rule itself. If it is determined in the affirmative, then the further question arises as to whether or not the Rule applies. If determined in the negative, no question of the application of the Rule can possibly arise.¹

v. Craft, 109 Ind. 480; 58 Am. Rep. 425; and Conger v. Lowe, 124 Ind. 368, where it is very distinctly laid down that the Rule will defeat the testator's intention.

In Belslay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182, it is said: "It is at most a technical rule of construction and has always, since the decision in Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2579, given way to the clear intention of the testator or donor, when that intention could be ascertained from the instrument in which the words, supposed to be words of limitation, were used." But this language is disapproved in Carpenter v. Van Olinder, 127 Ill. 50; 11 Am. St. Rep. 92.

In Findlay v. Riddle, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 139; 5 Am. Dec. 355, the court seemed to lean strongly against applying the Rule when the intention that the first taker should have only the life estate was perfectly plain. But the Pennsylvania courts have since unhesitatingly applied the Rule regardless of the intention when the subsequent limitation was to heirs, qua heirs. See Pennsylvania cases cited in preceding notes.

In Polk v. Faris, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 209; 30 Am. Dec. 400, the court, by Reese, J., said: "The many vexed questions which have, from time to time, arisen in the application of the Rule, and much of the obscurity and apparent contradiction in the decisions of the courts upon the subject, have probably proceeded from a want of uniform attention to this distinction, or of a just application to it. In wills especially, where intention has always been favorably regarded, and been permitted to exert a controlling influence, the courts have perhaps sometimes erred in not sustaining the Rule with sufficient firmness against the person's supposed intention."

Illustrations.—The proper method of applying the Rule in Shelley's Case is this: Interpret the deed or will by the ordinary rules of construction precisely as if the Rule had no existence. Then, having ascertained the testator's intention, look at the Rule, and see whether such intention conflicts with it. If it does, the Rule must be applied, for it is absolute and has no exceptions whatever. Crockett v. Robinson, 46 N. H. 454, illustrates this perfectly. The devise was to J and C "to be equally divided between them and their heirs, if they have any lawful heirs at the time of their decease; and if they have no lawful heirs at the time of their decease," to be equally divided between the children of a sister of J and C. The court, without so much as a mention of the Rule in Shelley's Case, proceeded to interpret the will, and, by Perley, C. J., said: "In the construction which, after careful consideration we have given to this will, the intention of the testator was that an estate in one undivided half of the land should go to J for his life, and then to his heirs in the line of descent as a class; . . . that under the term lawful heirs must be included the whole heritable blood of J, and we find the actual intention of the testator to have been that J should take an estate for his life only, and should have no power to dispose of the inheritance. It is upon a devise of such intended operation that we are called on to decide whether J took an estate of inheritance, or for life only." Having interpreted the will, the court then ap-

III. GENERAL REVIEW OF THE RULE—1. The Prior Estate.—The prior estate given to the ancestor must be an estate of freehold,¹ but any estate of freehold is sufficient.² The freehold need not necessarily be in possession, but may be a freehold in remainder. In such a case a merger of it in the inheritance will give rise to an inheritance in remainder, which occupies the place in the order of limitation which would have been occupied by the freehold if it had not been merged.³

plied the Rule in Shelley's Case, saying: "In determining whether the Rule in Shelley's Case shall apply, it is not material to inquire what the intention of the testator was as to the quantity of estate that should vest in the first taker. . . . The material inquiry is, what is taken under the second devise. If those who take under the second devise take the same estate that they would take as his heirs, or as heirs of his body, the Rule applies." Having already determined by interpretation that this was just what the testator did mean, the court without difficulty applied the Rule, and held that J and C took estates tail, which, by the statute of New Hampshire abolishing estates tail, were turned into fees simple.

Where the estate to the ancestor is for years only, the Rule does not apply. Tippen's Case, 1 P. Wms. 559; Harris v. Barnes, 4 Burr. 2157; 1 Prest. Est. 309.

A Prior Estate of Freehold Must Be Given to the Ancestor.—Where there was a deed of personal property to husband and wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the wife, it was held that by the law of Alabama, the property not being to the wife's separate use, her husband was entitled to it; therefore, the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, since the remainder was to the heirs of the wife who took no prior estate of freehold. Price v. Price, 5 Ala. 578.

The testator directed his executors to invest a portion of his estate "for the use of my son H;" that the income should be paid to H during life and "after his death the principal shall go and be paid to his children or children's children in the proper line of descent;" but if he "shall die without leaving children or grandchildren, as aforesaid, or any direct descendants from his body begotten, then to revert to the testator's estate." It was held that the Rule in Shelley's Case was not applicable, that there was no bequest to H for life with remainder over, but only a bequest to him of the income with a devise over of the principal. The case, therefore, did not fall within the terms of the Rule. Harbester's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 351.

2. Challis' Real Prop. 132; Fearn's Cont. Rem. 28 V. 1; 1 Prest. Est. 313. It may be for life, or in tail, or for the life of another person, or for the joint or several lives of the party and some other person; 1 Prest. Est. 313. Or it may have a collateral limitation, as to a woman during her widowhood. Thus, an estate was limited to husband and wife for their joint lives, and after the decease of either of them to the wife's heirs by the husband begotten, and for the want of such issue, to the wife for life, remainder to the right heirs of the husband forever. After the death of the husband, a contest arose between the wife and the children. Held, that the wife took an estate tail under the Rule in Shelley's Case. It was said that it was "an estate tail executed sub modo, not presently by severance of the jointure, as it would be by a several conveyance, but upon the death of him whose life keeps the estates asunder, they are united and executed." Merrill v. Rumsey, 1 Keb. 888; Siderf. 247. Under nearly the same facts in Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89, the decision was the same.

3. Challis, R. P. 124; Brown v. Renshaw, 57 Md. 67; Spader v. Powers, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 153.

Devise to A "after his father's decease, provided his father does not sell said property, which privilege I grant him, provided it is necessary for his maintenance. After the said A's decease the said house and land is to go to his nearest heirs." It was held, the father not selling the property during

The possibility of the freehold estate determining in the lifetime of the ancestor does not affect the working of the Rule.¹ Nor will it have any effect to exclude the Rule that the subsequent estate could not by possibility vest as a remainder in the lifetime of the ancestor.²

2. The Subsequent Estate.—The subsequent limitation may be to the heirs, either general or special; that is, it may be in fee simple, fee tail general, or fee tail special.³ The Rule operates even his life, that A, under the Rule in Shelley's Case, took a fee simple. Ryan v. Allen, 120 Ill. 648.

1. Thus, "a grant to A and B during their joint lives, remainder to Z for life, remainder to A's heirs; here, if B and Z die leaving A, it terminates the freehold estate and the subsequent remainder in the lifetime of the ancestor A, and yet the Rule applies so as to vest the inheritance in A; at least to this conclusion Mr. Fearne comes with irresistible force of reason and authority against the opinion of Mr. Serjeant Rolle." 2 Min. Inst. (3d ed.) 345; citing Fearne's Cont. Rem. 30, 33; 2 Th. Co. Litt. 143n (P.); 2 Rolle's Abr. 418.

2. Thus, where the gift is to A and B so long as they shall jointly live, remainder to the right heirs of him that dies first, the Rule will operate. 1 Prest. Est. 315; 1 Co. Inst. 378; Fearne's Cont. Rem. 32, et seq. In such an event the heirs must derive their title through the ancestor and take by descent, not by purchase. So if the remainder be limited on a contingency which does not happen in the ancestor's lifetime, nevertheless the heirs will take by descent. 2 Washb. on Real Prop. (5th ed.), p. 271.

Devise to P, "during her natural life, and after her death to the begotten heirs or heiresses of her body forever." It was held that under the Rule in Shelley's Case P took a fee tail which was turned into a fee simple by statute of North Carolina 1784. Leathers v.

Deed to N "during her life, and then to her children share and share alike," habendum "to her for life and then to the heirs of her body." Deed of land to "A and the heirs of her body by B." It was held that by the Rule in Shelley's Case A took a fee tail special which was enlarged to a fee simple by the statute abolishing estates tail. Tipton v. La Rose, 27 Ind. 484.

Deed of land to "C for her lifetime, after her death to descend to the heirs of her body." It was held that C took a fee tail under the Rule, enlarged by the Indiana statute into a fee simple. Andrews v. Spurlin, 35 Ind. 262.

Devise to "M for and during his natural life, and from and after his decease I bequeath the same in fee to the lawful issue of said M; and if he shall decease without such issue, then I give and bequeath the same in fee to the heirs of said M." though the subsequent limitation of the estate is contingent.¹ The subsequent limitation may be mediate or immediate. The interposition of other estates between the freehold and the inheritance does not prevent the Rule from operating. Where there are such intermediate estates the ancestor takes simultaneously two distinct estates, a freehold in possession or in remainder, as the case may be, and an inheritance in remainder, the inheritance being subject to the interposed estates, which are in no way affected. When, by the determination or failure of the intermediate estates, the cause which prevents merger is removed, then the two estates will coalesce.²

In Illinois, however, the statute (Illinois law of 1872, § 6, p. 283) provides that where an estate tail is created it shall be a life estate in the first taker and a fee simple in his heirs. Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86; Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594.

1. 2 Jarm. Wills (6th ed.) *1185; Co. Litt. 378b; 1 Prest. Est. 316.

It has already been pointed out that a remainder to "heirs," etc., is necessarily contingent, but that under the Rule in Shelley's Case, the words being construed as words of limitation instead of as creating a remainder, the contingent nature of the inheritance ceases, and it becomes vested. The statement in the text is to be referred, therefore, to a contingency annexed to the remainder itself, in addition to that which has been spoken of as arising out of a remainder to persons not ascertained; and the existence of such contingency does not affect the application of the Rule.

2. "When the limitations to the ancestor and the heirs are immediate, or eventually become so by the determination or failure of the intermediate estates, the several interests imported by these limitations will consolidate, and by merger become one entire estate, giving one undivided time of continuance. When other estates are limited intermediately, the limitation to the heirs will, during the existence of these estates, give to the ancestor an estate of inheritance in remainder, to take effect in possession according to the order in which it is limited; but in subordination to, and after the determination of the intermediate estates by which it is preceded." 1 Prest. Est. 346.

"If the subsequent limitation to the heirs follows immediately, without the interposition of any mesne estates, upon the prior freehold, the freehold is merged in the inheritance, and the specified person takes an estate of inheritance in possession. If any estate sufficient to prevent merger is interposed, or if by reason of any other circumstance, merger is prevented from taking place, he takes two distinct estates, a freehold in possession and an inheritance in remainder.

"The last preceding paragraph assumes that the prior limitation of the freehold is a limitation of a freehold in possession. If the prior freehold itself is in remainder, and an inheritance follows immediately, merger takes place, and the ancestor takes an inheritance in remainder. If interposed estates or any other circumstances prevent merger, the ancestor takes two distinct estates, a freehold in remainder and an inheritance in remainder." Challis' Real Prop. 124.

In Dennett v. Dennett, 43 N. H. 499, there was a devise to M D "to descend to the youngest son of his body begotten, and from him to the oldest male heir of said youngest son of his body lawfully begotten, and in failure of such issue, then to the heirs of said M D forever." It was held that by the Rule in Shelley's Case M D took a fee simple subject to the life estates of the youngest son of M D and of the oldest male heir of said youngest son. The same will was involved in Dennett v. Dennett, 40 N. H. 498.

In Quick v. Quick, 21 N. J. Eq. 13, which arose on a will, taking effect prior to the New Jersey statute, abolishing the Rule in Shelley's Case as to wills, there was a devise to E for life, then to E's widow, in case he should leave one, during her widowhood only, "and at the decease of his widow, the

The subsequent estate must be limited to take effect as a technical remainder. The Rule has no application where the estate to the heirs is an executory limitation.¹

3. Heirs Must Be Deduced Solely from Persons Taking Freehold—

a. THE PRINCIPLE.—In order to bring the Rule in Shelley's Case into operation the heirs who are to take the subsequent estate must be deduced exclusively from the person who, as ancestor, takes the prior freehold. If such heirs are to be the common heirs of the body of the person who takes the freehold and of some other person, the Rule does not operate; and the subsequent estate is a contingent remainder by purchase.² By this principle are solved the problems which are presented when the prior freehold is given to several persons, or when the subsequent estate is limited to the heirs of more than one, or when both complications are involved.

b. FREEHOLD TO ONE, REMAINDER TO HEIRS, ETC., OF HIM AND ANOTHER, OR OTHERS.—Where the subsequent limitation in remainder is to the heirs, etc., of the person who takes the free-said devised plat of land is to go to his (E's) heirs, to be divided among them as the law directs, in case of dying intestate." Held, that under the Rule in Shelley's Case, E took a fee simple.

1. 1 Prest. Est. 324; Fearn's Cont. Rem. 276; Challis' Real Prop. 122.

Thus the Rule does not operate where the estate to the heirs is a springing use. Loyd v. Carew, Prec. in Chanc. 72; Show. Cas. in Parl. 137; Fearn's Cont. Rem. 276; 1 Prest. Est. 324.

"This includes cases in which the prior limitation is executory; because in such cases the subsequent limitation is necessarily also executory." Challis' Real Prop. 122.

So of course if there is a grant or devise "to A and his heirs," or to "A and the heirs of his body," the Rule has no application, and the estate will be a fee simple or a fee tail as the case may be. Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa 60.

Illustrations.—The exact meaning and effect of the statement in the text are well illustrated by the following cases: Devise to a wife for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, begotten by the husband. Here the Rule in Shelley's Case operates, and the wife takes an estate tail special. (Alpass v. Watkins, 8 T. R. 516.) But if a devise is to a wife for life, remainder to the heirs to be begotten on the body of the wife by the husband, the Rule in Shelley's Case will not operate, and the wife will take only a life estate. (Gosage v. Taylor, Sty. Rep. 325.) Here the only difference in form is the use of the words "on the body," etc., in the second case, instead of the words "of the body," etc., as in the first. But bearing in mind the principle laid down in the text, it is plain that there is a vital distinction. In the one case the remainder was limited to the heirs of the body of the wife; while in the other case the remainder is really to the heirs of the husband begotten on a particular woman. It is true that the persons answering the description of heirs of the body will in both cases be the same. But in the one case they are deduced exclusively from the wife as ancestor; while in the other they are really not heirs of any kind, but simply individuals pointed out by the fact that they proceed from the common bodies of two specified persons. It, therefore, appears that, strictly speaking, this principle is but another application of what is laid down infra, this title, General View of Rule, The Subsequent Estate Must be to Heirs Qua Heirs. Helm v. Frisbie, 59 Ind. 526.

If both husband and wife take a freehold and the remainder is to the heirs to be begotten on the body of the wife by the husband, the construction will be the same as if the heirs of the body were to issue from both; since they are not in terms required to be of the body of either. Therefore, the Rule hold and of another, or several other persons, by copulative words¹ in the same clause, there are important differences of construction dependent upon whether such persons can or cannot have a common heir.²

First, where a freehold is given to one person, remainder to the heirs, or heirs of the body of that person and another, or several others, by copulative words, and such persons are incapable of having a common heir of their bodies, the Rule will operate to the extent of that part of the inheritance which would be the share of the heirs, or heirs of the body, of the person who takes the freehold.³

Second, where a freehold is given to one person, remainder to the heirs, or heirs of the body, of that person and another, by copulative words, and such persons are capable of having a common heir of their bodies, the Rule in Shelley's Case does not apply; and the heirs, etc., being the issue of their common bodies, take, by purchase, a contingent remainder in fee simple or fee tail accordingly as the limitation in remainder is to heirs, or heirs of the body.⁴

will apply as explained infra, this title, Freehold to Several, Remainder to their Heirs.

1. That is, when the language of the gift over after the freehold estate is simply to "the heirs (or heirs of the body) of A and B." When such is the form of the gift, the construction is well settled that, unless such persons are incapable of having a common heir, there is meant an heir proceeding from the common bodies of A and B. If the gift over were by some other form of words the construction of the whole will or deed must determine whether a common heir, or whether heirs proceeding from them separately, is intended. See next note.

2. If the several persons are of the same sex or are so related by consanguinity, or affinity, that they cannot lawfully marry, they are regarded as incapable of having a common heir of their bodies. In all other circumstances they are, in contemplation of law, capable of having such heirs.

The Rule in Shelley's Case operates only when the heirs, etc., who are to take in remainder are to be derived from the person, as ancestor, who takes the prior freehold, and from that person alone. See supra, this title, Statement and Origin. Hence the necessity of determining in limitations to the heirs of two or more, one only of whom takes a prior freehold, whether a common heir of their bodies was intended; for if a common heir is meant the Rule is not applicable. The determination of this question is purely a matter of interpretation, precedent to the question of the Rule's application; and, therefore, not strictly involved in the consideration of the Rule itself. It, however, arises more frequently in connection with the Rule than otherwise, and is, therefore, briefly noticed here as a matter of practical convenience.

3. Prest. Est. 321. Thus, if a life estate is given to A, remainder to the heirs of A and B and they cannot have a common heir, the Rule operates upon one-half; therefore, A takes a fee simple in one moiety; and the other moiety is a contingent remainder in fee simple to the heirs of B, with a life estate therein to A. If the remainder were to the heirs of the body of A and B, the inheritance in each case would be in fee tail instead of fee simple.

4. 1 Prest. Est. 334-5; 2 Jarm. Wills (5th Am. ed.) 340. When the two persons are husband and wife, the statement in the text is undoubtedly correct, whether the remainder is to "heirs" or to "heirs of the body." It is also equally certain that such is the construction where the gift is to "heirs of the body" of two who might lawfully intermarry. There might be room for doubt, however, in the event of the remainder being to "heirs" of two who are not husband and wife, but who might lawfully intermarry. Such limitations are

c. FREEHOLD TO SEVERAL, REMAINDER TO THEIR HEIRS, ETC.—Where there is a freehold, either jointly, severally or successively, to two persons who are capable of having a common heir, with remainder to their heirs, or heirs of their bodies, the Rule in Shelley's Case operates; and such persons take a joint inheritance in fee simple or fee tail, accordingly as the remainder is to heirs or heirs of the body.¹

Where there is a freehold jointly to two or more persons who are incapable of having a common heir, with remainder to their heirs, or heirs of their bodies, the Rule in Shelley's Case operates. If the remainder is to heirs, the ancestors take a joint inheritance in fee simple. If the remainder is to heirs of their bodies, the ancestors will each take a several inheritance in fee tail in such part as would be the share of such ancestor's heirs of his body rarely, if ever, found, except in prenuptial settlements; and there is the same reason in such case to suppose that a common heir is intended as exists where the persons are husband and wife. The statement in the text is, therefore, clearly applicable under such circumstances; but whether the same construction would prevail where the two persons were not in contemplation of marriage, would seem to be open to serious question.

The statement in the text assumes that the limitation is to the heirs of two persons only. In case the remainder were to the heirs of more than two persons, with each or several of whom the person to whom the freehold is given might lawfully intermarry, a very curious question of construction would arise; and would of course have to be decided upon the intention as discoverable from the whole instrument. See 1 Prest. Est. 345.

Devise to testator's wife "during her life, remainder to issue of her body by me begotten, provided also that such issue live to lawful age, and on failure thereof," remainder over. Held, that this did not fall within the Rule in Shelley's Case, but the wife took an estate for life with contingent remainder over in event of the death of issue during minority. Helm v. Frisbie, 59 Ind. 526.

If the prior freehold were to the two persons jointly, then the freehold and the inheritance being both joint, will merge into a joint inheritance in possession. But if the two persons have the freehold severally or successively, merger cannot take place, and the ancestors will have a distinct inheritance jointly, in remainder.

In Crockett v. Robinson, 46 N. H. 454, which arose upon a will which took effect prior to the statute, there was a devise to J and C "to be equally divided between them and their heirs, if they have any lawful heirs at the time of their decease; and if they have no lawful heirs at the time of their decease," then over to the children of a sister of J and C. It was held that by the Rule in Shelley's Case J and C took estates tail in common, which, by the law of New Hampshire, were converted into fee simple.

Devise to husband and wife during their respective lives; after their deaths to their heirs. Held, that the husband and wife took a fee simple. McFeely v. Moore, 5 Ohio 465; 24 Am. Dec. 314. See also King v. King, 12 Ohio 390.

Devise by testator to his daughter, L B, and her husband, J B, "to them during the life of the longest liver of them, and then to their offspring, if any, by my daughter L B, as they shall think best to give it; and in default of such offspring" then over. The daughter died during the testator's lifetime, leaving her husband and children, who were still living at the death of the testator. The children then both died without issue. It was held that by the Rule in Shelley's Case the husband took a fee tail, which was converted into a fee simple by the statute, and the remainder over on failure of issue was barred. Bramble v. Billups, 4 Leigh (Va.) 90.

Where there is a freehold in common or successively, to two or more persons who are incapable of having a common heir, with remainder to their heirs, or heirs of their bodies, the Rule in Shelley's Case will operate; and such persons will each take a several inheritance, in fee simple or fee tail, as the case may be, to such proportion as would be the share of such ancestor's heirs, etc., according to the number of persons to whom the freehold is given.²

d. FREEHOLD TO SEVERAL, REMAINDER TO HEIRS, ETC., OF ONE OF THEM.—Where the freehold is given to several persons in common, remainder to the heirs, or heirs of the body of one of them, the Rule operates to the extent of the share of him who takes the freehold, according to the number to whom the freehold is given.³

1. In McFeely v. Moore, 5 Ohio 464; 24 Am. Dec. 314, there was a devise to W and P of "the use of two tracts of land during their respective lives, but at their decease my will is that these two tracts of land descend to their heirs, to whom I bequeath the same." It was held that, by the Rule in Shelley's Case, W and P took a fee simple.

In Manchester v. Durfee, 5 R. I. 549, there were devises to two daughters "to be to them an estate for life, and to the heirs of their bodies after them, and to the heirs and assigns of such heirs forever." It was held that the daughters took a fee tail under the Rule in Shelley's Case.

Devise to testator's children "for the term of their natural lives," and at their death "to the issue of them." It was held the children took a fee tail under the Rule. Whitworth v. Stuckey, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 404. See also Corroll v. Burns, 108 Pa. St. 386.

In Hageman v. Hageman, 129 Ill. 164, there was devise to testator's four sons, with the provision that said sons "shall neither of them sell nor mortgage any of the land, . . . but the same shall go to their heirs after them." It was held that the sons took a fee simple.

2. Whether the ancestor's freehold and inheritance will consolidate will be dependent upon the doctrine of merger.

Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514, was a devise to M and D. "for and during their natural lives, the use, rents and profits" of two lots of land with one dwelling house partly owned, each lot in the following manner: "Said M and D each having the use of certain stories of said house separately, but the other improvements and appurtenances of the lots in common, and at the decease" of M and D "all the interest of the deceased . . . shall vest in his or her heirs." It was held that by the Rule in Shelley's Case M and D took a fee simple. It was held, further, that the use of the words "at the decease," instead of "after the decease," was immaterial.

Devise of residue of testator's estate "as follows: viz., one-fourth to my daughter H; one-fourth to my son W; one-fourth to my two grandchildren C and D, and one-fourth to my wife C;" followed by a clause directing that the one-fourth given to H should be so secured to her that she should enjoy it during her natural life, and after her decease then to her right heirs forever. It was held that under the Rule in Shelley's Case H took a fee simple. Wicker v. Ray, 118 Ill. 472.

3. 2 Prest. Est. 321. Carpenter v. Van Olinder, 127 Ill. 42; 11 Am. St. Rep. 92. Thus, if a life estate is given to A and B in common, remainder to the heirs of A, the operation of the Rule will give a fee simple in one undivided moiety to A; and the other undivided moiety will be a contingent remainder in fee simple to A's heirs, with a life estate therein to B.

Whether the freehold and the inheritance merge, or whether they will remain distinct estates in the ancestor, will depend upon the law of merger, as has been observed before (see supra, this title, General Review of Rule, The Subsequent Estate), according to

Where the freehold is given to several jointly, remainder to the heirs, or the heirs of the body of one of them, the Rule will operate, and the person to whom the freehold is limited will take an inheritance in the entirety.¹

Where the freehold is given to several successively, remainder to the heirs, or heirs of the body of one of them, the Rule operates, and the one to whose heirs, etc., the remainder is given will take the inheritance, subject to the other freehold estates.²

4. Same Instrument Must Give Both Estates.—Both estates must arise under the same instrument.³

5. Equitable Estates — a. RULE APPLIES TO EQUITABLE ESTATES.—The Rule applies to equitable, as well as to legal limitations; but the prior and the subsequent limitations must both be of the same quality in this respect; either both legal or both equitable.⁴

the time at which the gift to heirs, etc., is to take effect.

1. Whether the ancestor's freehold and his inheritance merge, thus giving him the inheritance in possession sub modo; or whether he takes the inheritance by way of remainder, will depend upon the law of merger as applicable to the form of the gift. 1 Prest. Est. 336, et seq. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 36.

If the form of the gift connects the limitation to the heirs with the limitation to the ancestors, as to two jointly, "and the heirs, etc.," of one of them (1 Prest. Est. 337), the inheritance and the freehold will merge sub modo; "for though they are so far executed in, or blended with the possession as not to be grantable away from or without the freehold by way of remainder, yet they are not so executed into possession as to sever the jointure, or entitle the wife of the person taking the inheritance to dower." Fearne's Cont. Rem. 36. But if there is a distinction between the several limitations, and the times at which they are to confer a right to the possession, as to two jointly and "from and after their decease" to the heirs of one of them (1 Prest. Est. 337), they will not merge, and the ancestor will take two distinct estates, a joint freehold in possession, and an inheritance in remainder. See supra, General Review of Rule; The Subsequent Estate.

2. Deed to a trustee in trust to A for life, then to H (the husband of A) for life, then to the issue of A and H, and in default of such issue, then to such persons as H shall appoint by will, and in default of such appointment, then to the right heirs of H. It was held that the estates limited to H and his heirs being both equitable, the Rule in Shelley's Case applied, and H took a fee simple. The only effect of the power of appointment was to make the fee of H subject to be divested by the exercise of power. Brown v. Renshaw, 57 Md. 67.

3. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 71, V. 13. The two estates must be taken "by, under, or as a consequence of the same deed or instrument, so that the several instruments, if there be several, may be parts of the same transaction." 1 Prest. Est. 309.

An estate taken by the ancestor by way of resulting use, is for this purpose, an estate arising under the same instrument. Challis' Real Prop. 133; Fearne's Cont. Rem. 41, V. 8; 1 Prest. Est. 309; Pibus v. Mitford, 1 Vent. 372; Wills v. Palmer, 2 Wm. Bl. 687; or an estate limited under a subsequent exercise of a power contained in the instrument. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 74, V. 14; 1 Prest. Est. 309; Challis' Real Prop. 133; Venables v. Morris, 7 T. R. 342, or a will and a codicil being part of the will. Hays v. Foorde, 2 Wm. Bl. 698; also 1 Prest. Est. 309.

"Where the limitation to the ancestor is by one deed or instrument, and the limitation to the heirs is by another deed or instrument (without any regard to the priority of the instruments to which one or the other of the limitations owes its existence, and under which it is to receive its effect), the Rule has not any application." 1 Prest. Est. 309; Moor v. Parker, L. Raym. 37; Fonnereau v. Fonnereau, 2 Dougl. 487; Snowe v. Cuttler, 1 Lev. 135.

Rem.* 52, V. 9; 57, V. 10; Brown v. Renshaw, 57 Md. 67; Powell v. Brandon, 24 Miss. 343. Where the life estate is equitable and the remainder legal the Rule does not apply. Mannerback's estate, 133 Pa. St. 342; Little v. Wilcox, 119 Pa. St. 439.

Deed of real estate to trustee in trust for a married woman, for her separate use during her life, "and from and immediately after her death, then for the use and benefit of her legal heirs." Held, that under this deed the married woman had merely an equitable estate; but that her heirs had a legal estate, and, therefore, the Rule in Shelley's Case did not operate, and she took merely an estate for life. This case is particularly valuable on the point that the Rule in Shelley's Case will not operate, unless both estates are of the same quality, legal or equitable. Ware v. Richardson, 3 Md. 505; 56 Am. Rep. 762.

Where the prior limitation is in form equitable, while the subsequent limitation is in form legal, the Rule will apply, if all the limitations are made in fact equitable by reason that the whole legal estate happens to be outstanding. Challis' Real Prop. 134; In re White, 7 Ch. Div. 201.

If one estate is in form equitable and the other in form legal, the Rule will apply if both limitations are made in fact legal, by reason that the trust is executed by the Statute of Uses. Thus, where the subsequent limitation was legal, and the prior estate in form equitable, but the trust being passive, because in fact a legal estate, the Rule was applied. Warner v. Sprigg, 62 Md. 14.

There is considerable diversity in the various States as to when trusts will or will not be executed into legal estates. (See TRUSTS.) This is, of course, a precedent question of law, which must be settled before the application of the Rule in Shelley's Case is considered.

A conveyance in trust for a certain person, and, in case of his death before it expires, for the benefit of his heirs, with discretion to the trustee to turn over the property or the proceeds of a sale thereof to the beneficiary, is an executed trust, and under the Rule in Shelley's Case gives the beneficiary an estate in fee simple. Mack v. Champion (Super. Ct. Cin.), 26 Ohio L. J. 113.

Devise and trust "to hold the same to the separate use of my said daughters during the natural life of my said daughters, and such use as she, notwithstanding any coverture, may direct, and after her death then to the use of her heirs at law." It was held that both limitations being equitable the Rule in Shelley's Case applied. Armstrong v. Zane, 12 Ohio 287.

Deed of lands to a trustee, "In trust for Z during her natural life, and upon her decease the said premises are to inure and vest in her heirs in fee simple forever; they, the said heirs of said Z, to have and hold the said premises unto them and their heirs and assigns forever." Held, that under this deed, Z took an equitable estate, and the heirs a legal estate, and therefore the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. Hence, Z took a life estate and the heirs a contingent remainder. Zuver v. Lyons, 40 Iowa 510.

Devise in these words: "To my daughter S . . . I give the sum of $2,000, to be invested in lands, for my said daughter to have the income of the same during her life, and at her death to go to the heirs of her body, and if none," then over, and an order to the executor to carry out these directions. Held, this was a trust estate in S, and a legal estate in the heirs of her body; therefore, the Rule in Shelley's Case was inapplicable. Hanna v. Hawes, 45 Iowa 437.

Devise to trustee, "In special trust and confidence for my son H T, and after him in fee to his heirs," with an order to the trustee to pay H T the income, "and in the event of his decease without issue," then over. It was held that H took an equitable estate for life, legal remainder in fee to the heirs of his body. The court, by Ames, C. J., said: "The estate of H T being equitable, and of his heirs, who are to take the fee after him, being legal, the Rule in Shelley's Case does not apply." Thurston v. Thurston, 6 R. I. 296.

Devise to testator's son, of income during his natural life, and at his death principal to the son's children, with the proviso that "should he die before attaining the age of 21 years without leaving issue at the time of his death," then over; also a provision that the income should not be liable to attach-

b. DOES NOT APPLY TO EXECUTORY TRUSTS NOR MARRIAGE ARTICLES.—The Rule in Shelley's Case is not applicable to executory trusts. Therefore, where the instrument is in the light of a set of instructions merely, and a conveyance under the direction of a court of equity is necessary to carry it into effect, the court will decree a conveyance in such form as will effectuate the intention.¹

ment for debts, etc. (which provision was valid as a spendthrift trust). It was held that the Rule in Shelley's Case was not applicable, because the life estate was equitable and the remainder legal. Mannerback's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 342.

Passive Trusts.—H, a single woman, conveyed her estate to a trustee in trust for her own separate use for life, and after her death to convey to whom she should appoint, and in default of appointment "to such person or persons as would be entitled to the same if she had died intestate, seized of the said premises in fee simple, and in such manner and for such quantity of estate as such person or persons would, in such case, be entitled to by law." H afterwards married and subsequently became discoverd. Afterward she petitioned the court for an order on the trustee to convey to her in fee simple. Held, that the separate use fell, and that thereby the trust became passive, and, therefore, in fact a legal estate; also that the limitation over in default of appointment was equivalent to a limitation to the "heirs" of H. Therefore, under the Rule in Shelley's Case, H took a fee simple and was entitled to a conveyance from the trustee. Dodson v. Ball, 60 Pa. St. 492; 100 Am. Dec. 586. See also Yarnall's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 335.

Conveyance of personal property in trust for S until she arrived at full age or married, and then to deliver them into her possession, and after such delivery, the trustee to see that the slaves were not disposed of, but preserved for the benefit of the heirs of the body of S, in whom, upon her death, they should vest, and if S should die without heirs of her body, then over. It was held that this was a passive trust and the estates of both S and the heirs of her body were legal estates, and that by the Rule in Shelley's Case S took an absolute title. Carradine v. Carradine, 33 Miss. 698.

said sons, respectively, their shares to go to their several heirs at law." The trust embraced both real and personal property. It was held that this was a dry trust; that therefore the life estate of the sons, and the limitation to their heirs, were both legal, and, under the Rule in Shelley's Case, the sons took a fee simple in the real estate, and absolute title to the personalty. Warner v. Sprigg, 62 Md. 14.

Conflict in Early Cases.—At one time it was seriously questioned whether the Rule in Shelley's Case was applicable to any equitable estate. It is shown elsewhere (see text, this page, General View of Rule; Does Not Apply to Executory Trusts Nor Marriage Articles) that the Rule does not govern executory trusts. In Bagshaw v. Spencer, 1 Ves. 142; 2 Atk. 582; 1 Coll. Jurid. No. 15, Lord Hardwicke took the ground that there was no difference in this respect between an executed and an executory trust, and refused to apply the Rule. This decision, however, was permanently overruled by Lord Northampton in Wright v. Pearson, 1 Eden 119, and by Lord Thurlow in Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 206. Since then it has never been doubted that the Rule in Shelley's Case was fully applicable to equitable estates. See 4 Kent's Com. 219, 220.

Executory Trusts.—"Trusts executory are peculiar to marriage articles, and to those instruments, whether deeds or wills, in which, by the express provisions of the instrument, the trustees are to convey, settle, or assure the lands on which the instrument is to operate; or to purchase lands with money intrusted to be laid out in a real estate; thereby showing that the parties have a further conveyance in their prospect and contemplation. The mere circumstance that the party covenants to do an act or directs a conveyance to be made will not of itself make the trust executory. The conclusion that a trust is executed or executory must depend on the inquiry whether another instrument be in the contemplation of the party as the act which is to give full and complete effect to the particular object he has in view." 1 Prest. Est. 387. See TRUSTS.

The same is true in respect to marriage settlements; since they are always considered as raising executory trusts, unless, previous to the marriage, they have been carried into execution by a settlement in fact.¹

6. Applies to Personal Property.—While, strictly speaking, the Rule in Shelley's Case is applicable only to real estate, the same principles are applied, by analogy, to similar dispositions of personal property, and to the same extent.²

7. The Limitation Must Be to Heirs Qua Heirs—a. THE PRINCIPLE.—In order to bring the Rule in Shelley's Case into operation the subsequent estate must be limited to the heirs qua heirs of the first taker. That is to say, it must be given to the heirs or heirs of the body as an entire class or denomination of persons; and not merely to individuals embraced within such class.³

1. Marriage Articles.—When a settlement is made previous to the marriage, without any reference to the articles, such articles are annulled and no resort can be had to them. But if it appears on the face of the settlement that the parties have the articles in their contemplation, and that the settlement was made in pursuance of and with a view to perform the articles, then a court of equity will resort to them, and decree an execution of the articles by limitations in strict settlement, so as to insure effect to the intention of the parties. 1 Prest. Est. 356. See MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS, vol. 14, p. 538.

It was held that the Rule in Shelley's Case was applicable to personal property and that C took the whole unexpired interest in the term. Horne v. Lyeth, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 431.

3. Guthrie's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 9; Kuntzleman's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 142; 20 Am. St. Rep. 909; Helm v. Frisbee, 59 Ind. 526; Handy v. McKim, 64 Md. 560; 1 Prest. Est. 278, et seq.; Fearne's Cont. Rem. 197, et seq.

The text is really but a different form of stating that the Rule applies only when, in the subsequent limitation to the "heirs," etc., of the ancestor, the words "heirs" or "heirs of the body" are used in their technical sense. Therefore, where "heirs," etc., is employed improperly, as a mere descriptio personarum, the Rule has no application.

Conversely in those instruments, such as wills, where technical words are not necessary to create an estate of inheritance, if there is meant a limitation which should in proper legal phrase have been expressed by the technical term "heirs" or "heirs of the

When the Limitation Is to "Heirs," etc.—If the term "heirs," etc., is used without modification of any sort, there is no difficulty, since there is then no reason to suppose that it was used in any other than its technical sense. But if there are words of superadded limitation, or other words of reference or qualification, interpretation becomes necessary. To use the language of Fearne, if heirs qua heirs are meant, two things must concur: "The one is that the person to claim the inheritance after the ancestor is to claim as heir eo nomine, and under that description, whoever such person may be; and the other, that the effect of the limitation is not confined to the person first so claiming, or his representatives; but directed equally through all other persons successively answering the same relative description of heirship, general or special, to the ancestor referred to; and entitling them eo nomine, or in that character only." Fearne's Cont. Rem. 197.

It is evident that the first branch of this distinction will exclude all those cases where the words "heirs of the body," etc., are, by other words of reference or qualification, explained or restrained; as well as those cases where, on account of words subjoined, the persons to take cannot take as heirs or by virtue of that description, by reason of a distributive direction amongst several not constituting an heir, or some other mode irreconcilable with the course of a descent. The latter branch of the distinction excludes all those cases wherein the import of the word "heir," etc., is by annexed words of limitation confined to the first, next, or one individual heir, etc.; as well as those where words of limitation superadded to the words "heirs," etc., denote a different species of heirs from that described by the first words. At the same time it admits all those cases where, though the testator inserts trustees to support contingent remainders, or imposes restrictions against alienations, or restrains the successive heirs to estates for life, yet he does not fix on or stop at any particular heir, but appears to have the

On this point it is well said in 1 Prest. Est. 283: "The intention that the heirs should or should not take by purchase, ought not to form any part of this preliminary inquiry. The single point to be decided is, in what manner they are to take; generally, without exception, as a class of inheritable persons, and as the successive heirs of the person to whom the preceding estate of freehold is limited; or partially, as individuals selected out of the class of heirs, and for an estate which so far as it depends on the gift to the heirs, because they, as heirs, etc., of their ancestor, are the donees, will determine with their deaths; and so far as it is of an inheritable quality, will entitle those heirs only, who, deducting their pedigree from these individuals are to look up to them as their common stock, from whom their descent is to be derived."

In Stonebraker v. Zollickoffer, 52 Md. 154; 36 Am. Rep. 364, there was a devise to one for life and after his death to his "children." It was held that by its very terms the rule was inapplicable. To the same effect Oyster v. Oyster, 100 Pa. St. 538; 45 Am. Rep. 388; Keim's Appeal, 128 Pa. St. 480; Cannon v. Bony, 59 Miss. 289; May v. Ritchie, 65 Ala. 602; Turner v. Ivie, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222; Smith v. Chapman, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 240.

In Burges v. Thompson, 13 R. I. 712, there was a devise to T "for his use during the period of his natural life, and upon his decease, to his heirs at law, him surviving, share and share alike." It was held that construction of this will showed that the testator used the words "heirs at law" not in its technical sense, but to point out individuals, and that, therefore, the Rule in Shelley's Case was not applicable, and T took only a life estate. The court by Durfee, C. J., said: "The Rule is inflexible when the words are used with nothing to qualify them, but if they are used in connection with explanatory words, which show they were used, not with technical accuracy, body," such technical meaning will be given to whatever form of words may have been used and the Rule will operate.¹

b. WHAT LIMITATIONS WILL BE SO CONSTRUED.—The question whether or not the terms of limitation used in a devise or grant were intended by the testator or grantor as the equivalent of the technical words "heirs" or "heirs of the body," and to embrace an entire class or denomination of persons, and not merely the individuals who constitute that class is, as has been repeatedly said, one of construction, and must in every instance be determined by the ordinary rules of interpretation, applicable to devises and conveyances, before the Rule in Shelley's Case can be applied. These rules of interpretation have been set out in other articles in this work,² but many illustrations will be found in the note.³

but inartificially to denote particular persons, then they will be permitted to have effect accordingly, especially in wills. . . . Can we then hold that this language and these provisions of the will, considered as indications that the word 'heirs' was used to designate particular persons, are strong enough to overcome the presumption that the word was technically used?"

1. Simpers v. Simpser, 15 Md. 160.

On this point the court by Strong, J., in Haldeman v. Haldeman, 40 Pa. St. 29, said: "The real question is, whether the language . . . imports the same thing, according to the true and actual intent of the testator, as a devise to the 'heirs.' . . . Where a testator intends the estate to go to the whole body of persons in legal succession, constituting, in law, the entire line of descent lineal, he evidently means the same thing as if he had said 'issue' or 'heirs of the body;' or if he intends it to go to the whole line of descent, lineal and collateral, he means the same thing as if he had used the term 'heirs,' which, as a word of art, describes precisely the same line of descent."

Two Pennsylvania cases are excellent illustrations of this doctrine. In the one, Yarnall's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 335, the subsequent limitation was to "such person or persons as would be entitled to the same" in case the life tenant had "departed this life intestate seized thereof in fee." It was held that this was equivalent to a limitation to "heirs" and the Rule was applied. In the other case, Kuntzleman's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 142, the subsequent limitation was precisely the same except that the mother and the husband of the life tenant were to be excluded. It was held that the restriction to a portion only of those who would have been legally comprehended under the term "heirs," prevented the limitation from being given that meaning, and reduced it to a mere descriptio personarum; consequently the Rule had no application.

It thus appears that the Rule in Shelley's Case is to be invoked only when the subsequent limitation is to the technical "heirs," etc., of the person taking the prior freehold. Whether or not such is really the nature of the remainder is purely a preliminary question of construction, and in fact forms no part of the law concerning the Rule. See supra, this title, Not a Rule of Intention.

Devise to M "and at her death to her child, children, or other lineal descendants." It was held that child, children, etc., were used as equivalent to heirs of the body, consequently the Rule in Shelley's Case operated and M took an estate tail. Mason v. Ammon, 117 Pa. St. 127.

2. No matter what words are used, the Rule applies or not accordingly as the real meaning was or was not a limitation to technical "heirs" or "heirs of the body." For the rules of construction and interpretation by which the sense of the language used is determined, see ISSUE, vol. 11, p. 870; REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 829; WILLS. See also CHILD—CHILDREN, vol. 3, p. 229; DEEDS, vol. 5, p. 423; ESTATES, vol. 6, p. 875; INTERPRETATION, vol. 11, p. 507; LEGACIES AND DEVISES, vol. 13, p. 7.

3. "Heirs," etc., Construed to Mean "Children."—In the following cases the terms "heirs" or "heirs of the body," etc., were construed as equivalent of "children," and therefore the Rule was held inapplicable. Shimer v. Mann, 99 Ind. 202; 50 Am. Rep. 82; Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 251; Eldridge v. Eldridge, 41 N. J. Eq. 89; Criswell v. Grumbling, 107 Pa. St. 408; Howell v. Knight, 100 N. Car. 254; Hadlock v. Gray, 104 Ind. 596; Conger v. Lowe, 124 Ind. 368; Foust v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357; Bunuel v. Evans, 26 Ohio St. 409; Zebach v. Smith, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 69; 5 Am. Dec. 352; Conger v. Lowe, 124 Ind. 368; Earnheart v. Earnheart, 127 Ind. 397; 22 Am. St. Rep. 652; Pryor v. Duncan, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 27; May v. Ritchie, 65 Ala. 604; Loving v. Hunter, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 4.

Devise "to the heirs of the body of Sarah B. (testator's daughter), she, the said Sarah, to have the use and benefit thereof during her life, but not to sell or dispose of the same." Held, that the entire will showed that by "heirs of the body" the testator meant "children;" therefore, the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. Roberts v. Ogbourne, 37 Ala. 174. See also devise in these words: "In trust for my said daughters during their natural lives, and to the heirs of their bodies forever." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, since construction of the will showed that "heirs of their bodies" was used in the sense of "children." Ward v. Saunders, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 174.

In Millett v. Ford, 109 Ind. 159, the remainder was to "heirs;" but it was decided that interpretation of the whole will showed that "heirs" was used in the sense of the word "children," and the Rule was therefore held inapplicable.

Devise to a grandchild "during her natural life," with a provision "in case any of said grandchildren should depart this life without issue of their body, then all their share. . . . shall be equally divided among all my grandchildren and their legal representatives, and the title thereto thereafter so vest forever. It is my will that no title in fee to any of said land shall vest in my said grandchildren, and I declare it to be my will that they shall only have a life estate therein, and that the fee simple shall vest in their legal heirs." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply; the grandchild took only a life estate. Belslay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182. The decision in this case was in a later case approved, on the ground that "legal heirs" was used in the will in the sense of "children;" but the language of the court, which had seemed to place the decision upon the ground of carrying out the intention of the testator, was condemned, the court by Scholfield, J., saying: "This language of the opinion was unadvisedly assented to by a majority of the members of the court, and is now disapproved and overruled." Carpenter v. Van Olinder, 127 Ill. 42; 11 Am. St. Rep. 92. Compare these two cases in relation to the effect of intention upon the Rule in Shelley's Case.

In Self v. Tune, 6 Munf. (Va.) 470, there was a deed to W and M (husband and wife) "for and during their natural lives or that of the longest liver of them," and after the decease of them both "to be equally divided among the heirs of her body and in default of such heirs then over." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, since the provision for equal division between heirs of the body was inconsistent with an estate tail, and showed that "children" was meant by the words "heirs of the body." See also Bradley v. Misby, 3 Call (Va.) 50.

Where an estate is devised to a certain person "or his heirs" at the happening of a certain event, the word "heirs" will be construed as a word of purchase, and not of limitation, if it sufficiently appears that the term was used to designate particular persons who might stand in that relation at the happening of the event, and not the whole line of heirs in succession. Ebey v. Adams, 135 Ill. 80; 10 L. R. A. 162.

Heirs Held to Have Been Used Technically.—Deed conveying land to M "during the term of her natural life, and to descend to her heirs in equal proportions, the said M, the maker of this deed, included, after death." The covenants of warranty were to "said party of the second part and her heirs." Held, under the Rule in Shelley's Case, M took a fee simple. Taney v. Fahnley, 126 Ind. 88.

The language of a devise to D was: "it is my will . . . that he shall have the benefit of all the interest or proceeds thereof, as long as he shall live, and after his natural death the principal shall fall to his lawful heirs." There were a number of other provisions in the will which were claimed to indicate that "heirs" was used in the sense of "children." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case applied and D took a fee simple. Hochstedler v. Hochstedler, 108 Ind. 506.

"Children" Held Equivalent to "Heirs of the Body."—Devise to N "and at her death to her child, children, or their lineal descendants." It was held that "child," "children," etc., were used as equivalent to "heirs of the body," and, consequently, the Rule in Shelley's Case operated and N took an estate tail. Mason v. Ammon, 117 Pa. St. 127.

Devise to testator's three daughters "during their natural lives the income or profit arising out of each of their share of the residue, and after the death of either, then to go and descend to the child, and if children, share and share alike. Should, however, either of my daughters . . . die and leave no lawful issue, then such share or portion is to fall back again to the residue and form part of the same." The heirs made partition, and as to one piece of the real estate, two of the daughters conveyed their title to the third daughter, who contracted to convey in fee to H. The deed tendered was refused by H on the ground of defect of title. Held, that construction of the whole will showed that the word "children" was used as equivalent to "heirs of the body," and therefore the Rule in Shelley's Case operated. The daughters took estates tail enlarged into a fee simple by the Pennsylvania statute. Haldeman v. Haldeman, 40 Pa. St. 29.

"Children" Held to have Been Used in Its Primary Sense.—In the following cases it was held that the term "children" was used in its technical sense, and not as equivalent of "heirs," and therefore the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. Stump v. Jordan, 54 Md. 619; Bannister v. Bull, 16 S. Car. 220; Smith v. Smith, 24 S. Car. 304; Oyster v. Knull, 137 Pa. St. 448; Donnelly v. Turner, 60 Md. 81; In re Griffin's Estate (Pa. 1890), 22 Atl. Rep. 91; Patterson v. Wilson, 64 Md. 193; Tate v. Townsend, 61 Miss. 316; Belslay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182.

Deed to A and B "for and during their natural lives, and after their decease I give the same to their children, the heirs of their bodies, forever." Held, that annexing "heirs of their bodies" to the word "children" was not sufficient to change its meaning, and the Rule did not apply. Doe v. Jackman, 5 Ind. 283.

A deed to A during her natural life, and to her children and assigns forever. Held, that the remainder being to "children," the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. Sorden v. Gatewood, 1 Ind. 107.

In the following cases the subsequent estate in remainder was to "children," and in several of them there were expressions seeming to indicate that "children" was used in the sense of "heirs;" but it was decided they were not sufficient to overcome the technical meaning of the word; therefore, the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. McMahon v. Newcomer, 82 Ind. 565; Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 251; Jackson v. Jackson, 127 Ind. 346.

Devise to C during her natural lifetime and at her death . . . to her children, if she have any; in the event of her death without lawful issue," then over. Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. The phrase "in the event of her death without lawful issue," is not sufficient to change the meaning of the word "children" to "heirs of the body." Stump v. Jordan, 54 Md. 619.

Devise to the testator's married daughter of "the use and life estate in her own proper person, but without power to convey the same to any other person for any period or term," and after the decease of the said daughter "to such of her children or their heirs as may survive her as tenants in common." That is, the child or children of any deceased child of hers shall hold the same interest and right that the deceased parent would have held if living." Held, that there was nothing in this will to indicate that the testator had used the word "children" in any other sense than its primary one as a word of purchase; therefore the rule did not apply, and the daughter took only a life estate. Guthrie's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 9.

Conveyance by deed of land to B, "during her natural life," free from the debts, etc., of her husband, "and at her death to go to the children of her body." Held, that children of her body did not mean "heirs of her body," and therefore the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and the children took as purchasers in fee simple. Beacroft v. Strawn, 67 Ill. 28.

Superadded Words.—"Where the limitation of the freehold to the ancestor is followed by a limitation to his heirs but accompanied by words of qualification, or superadded limitation; e. g., Grant to A for life, remainder to the heirs of A now living; or remainder to the heirs of A, share and share alike, as tenants in common; or remainder to the sons of A, and their heirs; or remainder to the heir of A, and the heirs male of the body of such heir; or remainder to such persons as shall, at the life-tenant's death, answer the description of heirs at law of the life-tenant. In all these cases the subsequent words of limitation are, in general, words of purchase, creating a remainder in the party to whom the limitation is made, which will be vested if the person is ascertained, and contingent if he is not ascertained." 2 Minor's Inst. 404, citing Fearne's Rem. 150, et seq.; Fearne's Rem. 178-9, 210; 2 Co. Litt. 145, n. (P.); 4 Kent's Com. 220; Archer's Case, 1 Co. 66 b; Lewis Bowles' Case, 11 Co. 30 a; Doe v. Laming, 2 Burr. 1100; Taylor v. Cleary, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 448, 452-3. See also Shreve v. Shreve, 43 Md. 382; Boykin v. Ancrum, 28 S. Car. 486; 13 Am. St. Rep. 698.

"Let it be remembered, however, while such is in general the construction of the foregoing limitation, that where a clear manifestation of an intent that the persons who are to take the so-called remainder are the heirs or heirs of the body of the first taker, in indefinite succession, the Rule in Shelley's Case is applicable, notwithstanding the superadded words of modification." 2 Minor's Inst. 404, citing Jesson v. Doe, 2 Bligh P. C. 1; Moore v. Brooks, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 135, 143, et seq.; Hall v. Smith, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 70, 72, et seq.

Devise to S "during her life without control of her husband, and at her death to the heirs of her body and their heirs and assigns forever." Held, the superadded words took the case out of the Rule, and S took only a life estate. Dott v. Willson, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 457. See also Lemacks v. Glover, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 141.

In Warners v. Mason, 5 Munf. (Va.) 24, there was a devise to W "during his natural life, and then to his heirs lawfully begotten of his body—that is, born at the time of his death or nine calendar months thereafter, and for want of such heirs," then over. Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply. The explanation annexed to heirs, etc., showed that the testator meant "children."

In Andrews v. Lothrop (R. I. 1890), 20 Atl. Rep. 97, the devise was "during his natural life and after his decease to his heirs, their heirs and assigns forever." It was held that the superadded words did not affect the construction and that "heirs" was used in its technical sense and that the Rule applied. In support of this the court cited Manchester v. Durfee, 5 R. I. 549; 2 Jarm. Wills, ch. 37; Goodwright v. Pullyn, 2 Ld. Raym. 1437; Wright v. Pearson, 1 Amb. 358; Den v. Shenton, 1 Cowp. 410; Measure v. Gee, 5 B. & Ald. 910; 7 E. C. L. 300; Kinch v. Ward, 2 Sim. & S. 409; Osborne v. Shrieve, 3 Mason (U. S.) 391; Morris v. Ward, 36 N. Y. 587; 3 Greenl. Cruise 346.

In North Carolina it was held, before the abolition of the Rule that the addition "share and share alike to be equally divided," etc., to "heirs" would take the devise out of the Rule. Mills v. Thorne, 95 N. Car. 362; Ward v. Jones, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 400; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 96 N. Car. 259.

Other Instances of Construction.—Devise of land to testator's son W, "during his natural life, and from and after his decease . . . to my grandson C, eldest son of the said W, and from and after the decease of my said grandson C, then to remain to the first son of my said grandson and the heirs of the body of such first son lawfully issuing . . . ; and for default of such issue, then I give the same to my grandson T, second son of the said W, for and during the term of his natural life, and after his decease to remain to his issue in tail in such manner as I have limited the same to my grandson C and his issue; and for default of such issue, then to the third son of the said W in like manner; and in default of such issue, remainder to testator's life heirs." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and T took only an estate for life. This decision is based upon the ground that the words "to his issue in tail" in the devise to T were controlled by the next following words, "in such manner as I have limited to my grandson C," which, therefore, show that by those words he meant "first son," etc. This case is a particularly valuable presentation of the Rule. Lyles v. Digges, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 364; 14 Am. Dec. 281.

Devise to testator's son "W E for and during the term of his natural life. . . . At the death of said W E, I

IV. STATUTES ABOLISHING THE RULE.—The Rule in Shelley's Case has at one time obtained in nearly all of the United States as a part of the common law.¹ The Rule has been abolished by statute in a majority of the States; in some, the abolition only extending to cases arising under wills, in others, both to wills and give and devise said lands in fee simple to the person who would have inherited the same from the said W E had he owned the same in fee simple at the time of his death, the same to go to said persons in the same manner and in the same proportions as though said W E had owned the same in fee simple at the time of his death; but the provisions of this item should only vest in the said W E a life estate in said lands and nothing more." Held, that the Rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and that W E took only a life estate. Earnhart v. Earnhart, 127 Ind. 397; 22 Am. St. Rep. 652. This case was decided upon the ground that "the words used in making disposition of the remainder are words of purchase descriptive of the persons to whom the fee is devised." The correctness of the decision was certainly very doubtful. Those thus taking in remainder clearly took as heirs; an intention that they should take as purchasers could not prevent the application of the Rule.

Devise to testator's children "for the term of their natural lives, to be divided among them share and share alike, the children of deceased parents, representing such deceased parents; and finally upon (their) decease . . . to the issue of them and their heirs forever." Held, the Rule did not apply, and the children took only life estates. McIntyre v. McIntyre, 16 S. Car. 290.

Devise to testator's daughter for her sole and separate use for life, and after her death for the use "of such persons as would be entitled to the same by the laws of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania if my said daughter had survived her mother and husband, and died intestate, seised and possessed of the said premises, and for such estate and estates as such person or persons would in such case be entitled to by the laws aforesaid." The daughter's husband died, therefore the separate use trust fell. Afterward the mother died. The daughter then claimed the whole estate absolutely, on the ground that since her mother and husband were both dead, the parties to take at her (the daughter's) death were her right heirs, and that the Rule in Shelley's Case operated. Held, that such a devise over would ordinarily signify the same as "heirs," but that the exclusion of the mother and husband, who would otherwise be entitled, showed that the testator did not intend to limit the remainder to the right heirs, but only to certain of them; therefore the Rule was not applicable. Kuntzleman's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 142; 20 Am. St. Rep. 909.

Devise to testator's daughters "during their natural life," and after their death "to be the absolute property of the issue of their bodies forever." Held, the Rule did not apply, and the daughters took only a life estate. Myers v. Anderson, 1 Strobh. Eq. (S. Car.) 346; 47 Am. Dec. 537.

Iowa.—There has been no direct decision upon the question whether the Rule in Shelley's Case was adopted as a part of the common law. Several cases have arisen in which the Rule was invoked, but in all of them it was decided that the Rule did not apply. The court, however, seemed to assume that the Rule was in force. Zuver v. Lyons, 40 Iowa 510; Hanna v. Hawes, 45 Iowa 437; Slemmer v. Crampton, 50 Iowa 302; Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa 60.

Kentucky.—It was held in Turman v. White, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 450, that the Rule in Shelley's Case was never in force in Kentucky. The court by Marshall, C. J., said: "As there is no reported case in which this court has applied the Rule with the effect of determining by it the rights of property involved, it cannot be said to have become a rule of property here. . . . A single manuscript decision withheld from publication, as if of doubtful authority, is the only instance in which the Rule has been directly applied and carried out by this court." See also Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 329, and see Kentucky Rev. St. 1852, ch. 80, p. 10.

Maine.—Maine was separated from deeds.¹ It may be questioned whether many of these statutes are comprehensive enough to accomplish their object. Thus, the Rule applies where the ancestor takes any estate of freehold, with remainder to his heirs, etc.; while many of the statutes abolishing it only embrace by their terms those cases where the ancestor's estate is for his life. The terms of these statutes, therefore, would not be applicable where the prior estate is to the ancestor

Massachusetts in 1820, after the statute had been abolished in the latter State (see infra, next note, Massachusetts). The Rule, therefore, was never in force. Pratt v. Leadbetter, 38 Me. 9; Hamilton v. Wentworth, 58 Me. 101. Maine Rev. St. of 1883, ch. 13, § 6, provides that a conveyance "or devise of land to a person for life and to his heirs in fee, or by words to that effect, shall be construed to vest an estate for life only in the first taker and a fee simple in his heirs." As to the nature of the remainder which the heirs take under this statute, see Read v. Fogg, 60 Me. 479; Read v. Hilton, 68 Me. 139; Hunt v. Hall, 37 Me. 366.

1. Alabama.—The Rule is abolished both as to deeds and wills. Alabama Code, 1876, § 2183.

California.—The Rule is abolished both as to deeds and wills. See California Civ. Code, §§ 779, 1335.

Connecticut.—In 1821, a statute was passed with the purpose of abolishing the Rule. It provides that "all grants or devises of an estate in lands to any person for life and then to his heirs shall be only an estate for life in the grantee or devisee." Connecticut Gen. Stat., § 2953.

Effect of Statute.—This statute abolishes the Rule, both as to deeds and wills. By its terms, however, it refers only to real estate; and it might be open to question whether the Rule is not still in force as to personal property. In Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498, which was a devise largely of personal property, this point was not raised, but it seemed to be taken for granted that the Rule was also abolished as to personal property.

It appears that the abolition of the Rule in Connecticut has the effect, by reason of the statute in that State against perpetuities, of defeating the intention of the testator more completely than could the Rule in Shelley's Case itself. Thus, in the recent case of Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498, there was a devise to testator's daughter for life, "the remainder to go to her heirs forever." Held, since the remainder cannot vest until the daughter's death, and since the persons who will then take may be neither persons who were in being at the death of the testator nor the children of such persons, that the gift is obnoxious to the Connecticut statute against perpetuities (forbidding a gift which does not necessarily vest in some person living at the death of the testator or in the children of such person); and the remainder was void; and that, there being no gift over, there was an intestacy after the life estate.

In Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498, the court, by Torrance, J., says: "There may be such gift in form at least which will not be obnoxious to the statute against perpetuities, as 'a devise to A for life, and then a gift of the remainder to his heirs in fee, is good to-day, if by heirs the testator means the children of A.'" Since such a case as the one proposed never did fall within the Rule in Shelley's Case, which by its very terms is only applicable when the remainder is to heirs qua heirs, this attempt of the legislature to effectuate the presumed intention of testators, by abolishing the Rule in Shelley's Case, would seem to have been even worse than useless.

North and South Dakota.—The Rule was abolished, as to wills at least, before the separation of these States. Comp. Laws Dakota, 1887, 3361.

Georgia.—In Wilkerson v. Clark, 80 Ga. 367; 12 Am. St. Rep. 258, the court, by Bleckley, C. J., said: "The Code, by §§ 2248, 2249 and 2250, abrogates the Rule in Shelley's Case—wipes it out utterly as a rule of law in limitations over. But this is only as to conveyances executed since the Code went into effect."

Kansas.—The Rule in Shelley's Case has been abolished as to wills. Kansas Gen. St., 1889, § 7256.

Massachusetts.—In 1791 a statute was passed for the purpose of abolishing the Rule as to wills. Massachusetts Stat. of 1791, ch. 60, § 3. This was afterwards extended to deeds. Massachusetts Rev. Stat., ch. 59, § 9; Massachusetts Pub. Stat., ch. 126, § 4.

Effect of Statute.—In Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198, the court expressed a doubt whether the statute extended to cases where the estate for life should not be created by express terms; and also whether the remainder should not be expressly, and not by implication only, to the heirs in fee simple. Although the statute in terms only abolishes the Rule when the remainder "is in fee," yet it has been held to apply as well to cases where the remainder was in fee tail. Trumbull v. Trumbull, 149 Mass. 200; Steel v. Cook, 1 Met. (Mass.) 281.

Where the Rule in Shelley's Case is prevented by the statute from operating, the heirs take a contingent remainder; their estate vests only upon the death of the life tenant. Putnam v. Gleason, 99 Mass. 454; Richardson v. Wheatland, 7 Met. (Mass.) 169; Lavery v. Egan, 143 Mass. 389. Compare Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198. Although the remainder to the heirs after the termination of the life estate is contingent, the children of such life tenant (heirs apparent) take a vested interest in such contingent remainder, which is assignable. Heirs presumptive, however, have a mere possibility which is not assignable. This is in accordance with the ordinary rules applicable to contingent remainders. Putnam v. Story, 132 Mass. 205. See also REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 829.

The abolition of the Rule in Shelley's Case does not affect the construction of a devise over after the subsequent estate. Trumbull v. Trumbull, 149 Mass. 200.

Michigan.—The Rule is abolished both as to deeds and wills. Howell's Annot. Michigan Statutes, § 5544. Gaukler v. Moran, 66 Mich. 353.

Minnesota.—The Rule is abolished both as to deeds and wills. Gen. St. Minnesota, 1891, § 3984.

Mississippi.—In 1822 the legislature passed an act concerning conveyances, which provided, in section 24, that "every estate in land or slaves, which now is or shall hereafter be created an estate in fee tail shall be an estate in fee simple . . . provided that any person may make a conveyance or devise of lands to a succession of donees then living, and the heirs or heirs of the body of the remainder-man, and in default thereof, to the right heirs of the donor in fee simple." And in section 26, that "every contingent limitation in any deed or will made to depend upon the dying of any person without heirs or heirs of the body, or without issue or issue of the body, or without children or offspring, or descendants or other relative, shall be held and interpreted a limitation to take effect when such person shall die not having such heir or issue, or child or offspring, or descendant or other relative, as the case may be, living at the time of his death, or born to him within ten months thereafter, unless the intention of such limitation be otherwise expressly and plainly declared on the face of the deed or will creating it." See Mississippi Code, 1880, § 1201.

It has been held that section 26 quoted above has no effect upon a deed or will, where it expressly, or as plainly, appears that it was the intention by the use of those words to create a fee tail. Powell v. Brandon, 24 Miss. 343; Hampton v. Rather, 30 Miss. 193; Dibrell v. Carlisle, 48 Miss. 691. The effect of this section, therefore, is only to provide a statutory interpretation in those cases where it was formerly doubtful whether or not the subsequent estate was limited to specific individuals, or to a certain class of heirs. Under such doubtful cases the statute at once provides for an interpretation, which takes the case out of the Rule in Shelley's Case, the only difference being, that before the statute, whether or not the Rule would apply, would depend upon the court's interpretation of the given words.

The proviso to the 24th section, quoted above, has been considered as an abolition of the Rule, so far as concerns real estate, but is held not to include personal property. Powell v. Brandon, 24 Miss. 343; Hampton v. Rather, 30 Miss. 193; Dibrell v. Carlisle, 48 Miss. 691; Carradine v. Carradine, 33 Miss. 699. As to personal property, the Rule is, therefore, still in force, subject to the statutory interpretation referred to above.

Missouri.—In Tesson v. Newman, 62 Mo. 198, it is said: "The Rule in Shelley's Case has no existence with us since the enactment of the statute."

Montana.—The Rule is abolished as to wills. Comp. St. Montana, 1887, 11 Div., § 492 (p. 389).

New Hampshire.—"No express

devise of any estate for life or other limited estate, shall be enlarged or construed to pass any greater estate by reason of any devise to the heirs or issue of any such person." New Hampshire Gen. Laws, ch. 193, § 5. This statute was passed in 1843, and affects the Rule only as to devises. It is still in force as to deeds. Crockett v. Robinson, 46 N. H. 454. See also Cloutman v. Barley, 62 N. H. 44.

In Sanborn v. Sanborn, 62 N. H. 631, this statute was discussed and applied, and it was said by the court that it should receive a liberal interpretation.

New Jersey.—In New Jersey the Rule is abolished as to wills. New Jersey Sts. tit. 10, ch. 2, § 10. But still applies to deeds. See Quick v. Quick, 21 N. J. Eq. 13.

Effect of Statute.—In Demarest v. Den, 22 N. J. L. 599, it was decided that under this statute, the children of the life taker, living at the death of the testator, take a vested remainder, subject to open and let in after-born children. This reversed the decision in the same case, sub tit., Den v. Demarest, 21 N. J. L. 525, which had held that the remainder was contingent. See also Akers v. Akers, 23 N. J. Eq. 26.

The questions which would arise under this statute, in the event of the life tenant dying without leaving any issue, are suggested in Demarest v. Den, 22 N. J. L. 599, particularly in the dissenting opinion, and in Den v. Demarest, 21 N. J. L. 525. No case involving this has as yet arisen.

New York.—The Rule is abrogated both as to deeds and wills. 1 New York Rev. Sts. 725, § 28.

Nature of Remainder.—The effect of the New York statute abolishing the Rule without more, would be simply to make the subsequent estate a contingent remainder.

But the whole doctrine of contingent and vested future interests has been modified in New York by the provisions of the code, and the nature of the estate must therefore be determined with reference thereto. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66, affirming 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 488.

A complete investigation of the subject does not, therefore, properly fall under this title (see REMAINDERS, vol. 20, p. 829; WILLS). It may be stated briefly, however, that the subsequent estate, under the law of New York, is a vested interest or remainder, subject to be divested by the death of the heir before the death of the life tenant. It is, therefore, alienable, and liable to sale on execution. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66, affirming 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 488; House v. McCormick, 57 N. Y. 310, and subject to dower; House v. Jackson, 50 N. Y. 161, the rights of the purchaser, creditor or widow being, of course, subject to be divested in the same manner by the death of the heir prior to the decease of the life tenant. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66, affirming 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 488; House v. Jackson, 50 N. Y. 161.

Those who sustain the character of heirs at the death of the life tenant take by purchase under the original deed or will, and therefore are not bound by any conveyance or covenant of those through whom they derive their status as heirs. Thus, land was conveyed to J "for and during his natural life, and after his death to his heirs." During the lifetime of J one of his children, F, conveyed, with warranty, her interest under the deed, and afterwards, while J still lived, died, leaving a daughter. Held, that at the death of J the daughter was entitled to take F's share, and was not bound by her mother's conveyance. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66, affirming 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 488. The above case is only one of several in which the same deed was litigated, and the series (cited below) contains a full discussion of the question arising as to the nature of the remainder. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66, affirming 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 488; Sheridan v. House, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 569; 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 218; House v. Jackson, 50 N. Y. 161; Jackson v. Sheridan, 50 N. Y. 660; Powers v. Wheeler, 50 N. Y. 660; House v. McCormick, 57 N. Y. 310.

In Taggart v. Murray, 53 N. Y. 233, there was a devise to C for life, "at her death to pass to her heirs, and if she leaves no heirs," C to have a power of appointment. This will was interpreted as using "heirs" in the sense of "children." See also in particular Byrnes v. Stilwell, 103 N. Y. 453; 57 Am. Rep. 760, as to the nature of the remainder to "children." On the general question of vested and contingent interests, closely related to the point under consideration, see Barlow v. Barlow, 2 N. Y. 386; Brown v. Lyon, 6 N. Y. 419; Post v. Post, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; Bundy v. Bundy, 38 N. Y. 410; Livingston v. Greene, 52 N. Y. 118; Smith v. Scholtz, 68 N. Y. 41; Ham v.

for the life of another, nor, indeed, where he took any freehold

Van Orden, 84 N. Y. 257; Hennessey v. Patterson, 85 N. Y. 91; Nellis v. Nellis, 99 N. Y. 514.

North Carolina.—Statute abolished the Rule both as to deeds and wills. Code N. Car., § 1829.

Ohio.—Statute abolished the Rule as to wills. Ohio Rev. St. 1854, ch. 122; Rev. St., § 5968.

The very important question as to whether the remainder to the heirs under this statute is vested or contingent has not been litigated. It seems probable from the Ohio cases involving remainders, that the ordinary rules applying to contingent remainders would be applied. See Gilpin v. Williams, 25 Ohio St. 283; Bunnell v. Evans, 26 Ohio St. 409.

Rhode Island.—The only statute of Rhode Island affecting the Rule in Shelley's Case was passed in 1798, and is in these words: A devise to any person "and to the children or issue generally of such devisee in fee simple shall not vest a fee tail estate in the first devisee, but an estate for life only, and the remainder shall on his decease vest in his children or issue generally agreeable to the direction in such will." Rhode Island Pub. Stat., ch. 182, § 2.

Effect of the Statute.—This statute is strictly construed and is held to have no effect upon the Rule except in cases which fall literally within the words of the statute.

In Manchester v. Durfee, 5 R. I. 549, there were devises to daughters "to be to them an estate for life and to the heirs of their bodies after them, and to the heirs and assigns of such heirs forever; but in case any of said daughters shall die without leaving issue surviving them," then over; it was held that the statute did not apply and that the daughters took a fee tail under the Rule in Shelley's Case. The court by Ames, C. J., said: "Are we to read the latter provision of this section as applicable only to wills in which the words 'children' or 'issue' of the life tenant are used to describe who is to take the remainder, . . . or as applicable also to wills in which after an estate for life to one the remainder is given to his or her 'heirs of the body'? . . . Was it designed to include only the particular cases named in it, or by interpretation all other analogous cases? We adopt the narrow interpretation of the section." See also Bullock v. Waterman St. Baptist Soc., 5 R. I. 273; Cooper v. Cooper, 6 R. I. 261; Williams v. Angell, 7 R. I. 145; Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514; Taylor v. Lindsay, 14 R. I. 518; Burges v. Thompson, 13 R. I. 712; Thurston v. Thurston, 6 R. I. 296; Andrews v. Lothrop (R. I. 1890), 20 Atl. Rep. 97; Browning's Petition, 16 R. I. 441.

Tennessee.—The Rule was abolished in 1852 both as to deeds and wills. Code of 1858, § 2008; Mill. & Bert. Code, § 2514.

Virginia.—The Rule has been abolished by statute as to deeds and wills of both real and personal property. Virginia Act of 1887, § 2423. An earlier statute intended to abolish the Rule referred only to where the prior estate was to any person for his life, remainder to his heirs, etc. Virginia Code 1873, ch. 112, § 11. It was pointed out by Professor Minor in his Institutes that this left the Rule in force where some other freehold than a life estate was given to the first taker. In order to cover this point the new code was changed. 2 Min. Ins. (2d ed.) 405.

In Hood v. Haden, 82 Va. 588, the testatrix had power under the will of her deceased husband to appoint the land in question among their children, but no power to appoint it to the heirs of such children. She, by her will, gave the land to two of the children for their lives and after their death to their heirs. It was held that the statute assaying to abolish the Rule in Shelley's Case applies only where the grantor or testator is competent to and does vest in the heirs the remainder in fee simple after an estate for the ancestor's life, and, therefore, in this case the appointment of the land by the testatrix to the heirs of the appointees being in excess of her power the Rule still operated, and the children took a fee simple.

Washington.—The Rule is abolished as to wills. Hill's Ann. Code, § 1473, p. 514.

West Virginia.—The Rule is abolished as to deeds and wills. West Virginia Code 1891, ch. 71, § 11.

Wisconsin.—The Rule is abolished both as to deeds and wills. Rev. Stat. 1878, ch. 95, § 2052.

estate save only for his own life.¹ And, again, most of the statutes refer only to real estate, and, if strictly construed, would leave the Rule still operative as to personalty.²

The Rule still applies to all conveyances taking effect before the enactment of the statute abolishing it.³

SHELLS.—See MANUFACTURE, vol. 14, p. 262.

1. "The statutes of Virginia, imitating those of New York, have very much circumscribed the application of this famous and, upon the whole, judicious, rule of property. They declare that 'where any estate, real or personal, is given by deed or will to any person for his life, and after his death to his heirs, or to the heirs of his body, the conveyance shall be construed to vest an estate for life only in such person, and a remainder in fee-simple in his heirs, or the heirs of his body.' (V. C. 1873, ch. 112, § 22; 4 Kent's Com. 232). If the intent of this statute was to abolish the Rule, as it would seem to have been, it has imperfectly accomplished the result. The Rule applies to all cases where the ancestor takes any estate of freehold, with remainder to his heirs, etc., whilst the statute prescribes a different construction only in those cases where the limitation to the ancestor is for his life. The terms of the statute, therefore, would not be applicable where the limitation is to the ancestor for the life of another, nor, indeed, for any other freehold estate, save only for his own life." 2 Minor's Inst. 405. See statutes cited in preceding note.

In McQueen v. Logan, 80 Ala. 304, the court said: "The real question in this case is, whether Payne's deed, in its proper interpretation falls within the Rule in Shelley's Case—a rule of interpretation, under the common law which prevailed when this deed was made, but was repealed in this State by the Code of 1852. As said in 2 Washb. Real Prop. *268, the peculiarity of such estate is, that 'while in form the estate has two parts, a particular one for life, with a contingent remainder to the heirs of the tenant who takes the particular estate, it is constructively a single estate of inheritance in the first taker. The form of limitation of such estates is to the grantee or devisee for life, and after his death to his heirs, or the heirs of his body, either mediately or immediately, both estates being created by the same deed or devise.

As we have said, this rule of interpretation is not now the law of Alabama. It was changed a third of a century ago. Code of 1876, § 2183. Only deeds or wills executed before the adoption of our first Code—January, 17, 1853—are governed by it. Few cases will hereafter come before us which can feel its influence. Alabama can now share with New York in the touchingly beautiful tribute paid to it by the learned and classical Kent, 4 Com. *283. We will, therefore, abstain from any elaborate consideration of its principles. The question is not an open one in this court. We have three well considered decisions, pronounced on titles not distinguishable in principle from Mr. Payne's deed under which plaintiffs claim, in each of which the Rule in Shelley's Case was held to apply, and that the absolute title vested in the first taker. Lenoir v. Rainey, 15 Ala. 667; Hammer v. Smith, 22 Ala. 433; Martin v. McRee, 30 Ala. 116. See, also, Williamson v. Mason, 23 Ala. 488; McVay v. Ijams, 27 Ala. 238; *Mason v. I. GENERAL NATURE OF OFFICE.—The sheriff is the chief executive officer of the county.¹ He executes the mandates and carries into effect the judgment of courts within his own county,² is the custodian of the county jail,³ has charge of prisoners pending trial,⁴ and executes the sentence of the court. He is the chief conservator of the peace within his own county, and may arrest on view all persons breaking or attempting to break the peace.⁵ It is his duty to pursue and arrest criminals,⁶ and, at common law, to seize all escheats, wrecks, and estrays.⁷ At common law his judicial functions were considerable,⁸ but in the United States are confined generally to inquests or writs of inquiry to estimate damages.⁹ His jurisdiction is generally bounded by his own county,¹⁰ but he may do some mere ministerial acts out of his county.¹¹ He may appoint deputies to

2. Dinkgrave v. Sloan, 13 La. Ann. 393.

3. 1 Bl. Com. 345. See also the statutes of the various States.

4. State v. Reiss, 12 La. Ann. 166. He has no power to take security. State v. Howell, 11 Mo. 613; or bail for their appearance. State v. Walker, 1 Mo. 546.

5. U. S. v. Pignel, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 310; Cayles v. Hurtin, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 85. He is not liable to a party injured by his own neglect to preserve the peace. South v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 396.

6. 1 Bl. Com. 343.

7. 1 Bl. Com. 343.

8. 1 Bl. Com. 342.

9. See the statutes of the various States. To the point that, in the United States, the duties of the sheriff are exclusively executive and ministerial, see Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 41; Attorney-General v. Squires, 14 Cal. 12.

10. State v. Finn, 4 Mo. App. 352; Kinter v. Jenks, 43 Pa. St. 445; Runk v. St. John, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 585.

could also at common law, when commanded by habeas corpus, carry a prisoner out of his county, and if a prisoner escaped, on fresh pursuit could capture him in another county.

1. Bacon Abr. Sheriff H. 3; McWilliams v. Richland County, 6 Ill. App. 333; Day v. Justices, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 198.

The deputy cannot act until sworn into office. Lee v. Eval, 1 N. J. L. 283. He may be removed by the sheriff at any time. Hoge v. Trigg, 4 Munf. (Va.) 150. And may resign. Caines v. Lindsey, 4 Ohio 88. The sheriff cannot delegate to another the power to appoint a deputy for him. Perkins v. Reed, 14 Ala. 536.

At common law the sheriff could appoint his deputy by parol. McGee v. Eastis, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 307; State v. Allen, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 36. In some States his appointment must be in writing under seal. Edmunds v. Barton, 31 N. Y. 495. And in some the commissions must be recorded. Coffin v. Chase, 13 Me. 72; Putman v. State, 49 Ark. 449; Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27. It has been held, however, that if a person has acted generally as a deputy sheriff with the sheriff's knowledge and consent, the sheriff is liable for the official acts of such person, though he may not have given him any express authority. Bosley v. Farquar, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 61; Mann v. Martin, 82 Ky. 242.

Special Deputy.—The sheriff generally has power to appoint a person to do a particular act, as to serve a certain writ, although he may not have been a general deputy or have taken the oath. Proctor v. Walker, 12 Ind. 660; Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 159; but the appointment must be indorsed on the writ. Guyman v. Burlingame, 36 Ill. 201; Miller v. M'Millan, 4 Ala. 527; People v. Moore, Dougl. (Mich.) 11.

A deputy sheriff can appoint such special deputy. Hunt v. Burrell, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 137; New Albany, etc., R. Co. v. Grooms, 9 Ind. 243; Thrift v. Fitz, 7 Ill. App. 55; or by his return adopt such special deputy's act. Clark v. Gary, 11 Ala. 98.

If the special deputy be selected by the plaintiff, the sheriff is not liable to the plaintiff for the defaults of such deputy. Skinner v. Wilson, 61 Miss. 90; but he will be liable to the defendant and to third persons. Barrett v. Seward, 22 Vt. 176.

The office of deputy cannot be the subject of sale. Carlton v. Whitcher, 5 N. H. 196; Cardigan v. Page, 6 N. H. 183; Hall v. Gavitt, 18 Ind. 390; but in Connecticut it was held that a contract between a sheriff and his deputy, that the latter shall pay the former a certain sum per annum in consideration of his appointment, was not illegal. De Forest v. Brainerd, 2 Day (Conn.) 528.

The general deputy is authorized to perform all ministerial duties of the sheriff. State v. Wilson, 12 La. Ann. 189. He is a general agent for the sheriff. Ramsey v. Strobach, 52 Ala. 513; but the sheriff is not legally bound to know all that is known by his deputies. West River Bank v. Gorham, 38 Vt. 649. In some States the deputy can only act in the name of his principal. Ryan v. Eads, 1 Ill. 168; but in others he is recognized as a distinct officer, and his doings are certified in his own name. Eastman v. Curtis, 4 Vt. 616; Dayton v. Lynes, 30 Conn. 351. And see generally DEPUTY, vol. 5, p. 623.

2. Murfree on Sheriffs, §§ 425-430. In some of the States—e. g., in Alabama, Arkansas and Missouri—the statutes so require.

Where a statute expressly provided that he should attend, it was held that his presence in court was not necessary either for organization or continuance. McGubbe v. State, 17 Ga. 497.

3. See, as to the requirement of a bond, the statutes of the various States. Murfree on Sheriffs, §§ 43-45; BONDS, vol. 2, p. 448; infra, this title, The Bond.

Ignorance of the sheriff as to what his duties are does not excuse him. York v. Cloptan, 22 Ga. 362. Nor is it an excuse that he was not actually corrupt. Cantine v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 629.

In State v. Brunst, 26 Wis. 412; 7 Am. Dec. 84, it was held that constitutional provisions for the election of sheriff implied an establishment of the office with duties substantially as generally known when such constitution was adopted, and that the legislature could not take from the sheriff an important portion of such duties. In many States he is tax collector ex officio. Bailey v. Lockhart, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 567; Fulkerson v. State, 14 Mo. 49.

He may summon the power of the county (posse comitatus) to assist him in the performance of his duties.¹

II. ELECTION; APPOINTMENT; TERMINATION.—Generally, in the States of the Union, the sheriff is elected by the people of the county. He must fulfill the statute qualifications,² which are generally that he shall be a male citizen of the State,³ a resident of the county in which he is chosen, and at least twenty-one years of age.⁴ He may be ineligible by holding office incompatible with that of sheriff.⁵

It is generally provided that he shall not make writs. Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

1. Posse Comitatus.—A sheriff may summon aid to assist him without previously having attempted to levy and been resisted. Bell v. North, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 133. And after resistance. Sutton v. Allison, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 339; Cayles v. Hurton, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 85.

He may summon the power of the county on mesne process; but is not bound to. Houser v. Hampton, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 333. See also Sutton v. Allison, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 339; Coyle v. Hurtin, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 85.

To resist a member of the posse comitatus is to resist the sheriff. Thraillkill v. Daly, 16 Neb. 114.

Private individuals, when called on by the sheriff to assist in making an arrest, must respond. Coleman v. State, 63 Ala. 93; State v. Shaw, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 20; Comfort v. Commonwealth, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 437; State v. Hailey, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 73; McMahan v. Green, 34 Vt. 69. And, sometimes, are made liable to indictment if they do not. State v. Deniston, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 277. See 1 East P. C. 80; 1 Bishop Cr. Law, § 469.

2. Where ownership of real and personal estate was a required qualification, all votes for him previous to such ownership were held illegal and void in Hatcheson v. Tilden, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 279; that in such case the election is only voidable, was held in State v. Anderson, 1 N. J. L. 318.

3. An alien is ineligible. State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497; Scott v. Strobach, 49 Ala. 477.

4. But a deputy sheriff who is a minor is a de facto officer and a service by him is not illegal. Irving v. Edrington, 41 La. Ann. 671.

5. Bunting v. Wilk, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 144.

Under the laws of Alabama the same person could not hold the office of sheriff and member of the general assembly at the same time, yet a member of assembly may be elected sheriff and his acceptance of the latter office does not vacate the former, though it furnishes ground to compel him to elect which office he will retain. Scott v. Strobach, 49 Ala. 477.

Where the statute declares that his office shall become vacant on his failure to file or renew bond, such a failure does not, per se, vacate the office. Until due judgment of forfeiture, his acts are good as to third persons. Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69; Flaton v. State, 56 Tex. 93; Catching v. Davis, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 91; Vann v. Pipkin, 77 N. Car. 408; McCracken v. Todd, 1 Kan. 148; Brown v. Grover, 6 Bush (Ky.) 1; contra, Bosworth v. Heys, 46 Ga. 635.

Where he applies to the court for induction into office he must have done everything necessary on his part to make his title complete. Thomason v. Justices, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 233; and, having done this and having a prima facie right to office, the court should approve his sureties. In re Ewing, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 370.

A clause in a constitution forbidding re-election applies only to those sheriffs who shall be elected after adoption of that instrument. State v. Giles, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 112.

In Tennessee, the appointment of a defaulter is null and void. Newman v. Justices, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 4.

Although an appointment is void yet

The term of the office of sheriff is variously limited by statute in different States. In many, he holds office until his successor is qualified to act.¹ His removal in certain events and provision for a temporary successor in case of vacancy are generally subjects of statutory regulation.²

At common law the sheriff who began the execution of a writ was obliged to finish, though meanwhile his term expired.³ If unexecuted, he should hand over process to his successor.⁴

In some States an outgoing sheriff must transfer all process, including those in which levies have been made.⁵

On the death of the sheriff, at common law, the coroner succeeded to the office.⁶

his acts as de facto officer may be good. People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; Bates v. Dyer, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 162.

1. Akers v. State, 8 Ind. 484; Collins v. Call, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 457; Curtis v. Kimball, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 275.

2. If the sheriff is removed, this is no obstacle to his re-election, if there is no statute to the contrary. Gordan v. State, 43 Tex. 330.

He is not entitled to trial by jury on proceedings for his removal. Davis v. State, 35 Tex. 118; State v. Richmond, 29 La. Ann. 705; Bruner v. Bryan, 50 Ala. 522; Vann v. Pipkin, 77 N. Car. 408; Carrothers v. Russell, 53 Iowa 346; 36 Am. Rep. 222.

Under a constitutional provision for his removal for "crime, incapacity or negligence," it was held that intoxication was a cause for removal. McComas v. Krug, 81 Ind. 327.

The misconduct of a deputy is not a ground for removing the sheriff, where there is no evidence that the sheriff sanctioned the misconduct. State v. Budd, 39 La. Ann. 232.

3. Clerk v. Withers, 6 Mod. 293; and is the rule in this country independent of statute. Campbell v. Cobb, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 18; State v. Parchmen, 3 Head (Tenn.) 609; Colyer v. Higgins, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 6; 85 Am. Dec. 601; Bondurant v. Buford, 1 Ala. 359; 35 Am. Dec. 33; Welsh v. Joy, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 477; State v. Hamilton, 16 N. J. L. 153; Doliver v. Collingwood, 15 R. I. 510; Ferguson v. Lee, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 258; Rogers v. Darnaby, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 238. But he must have begun the service of the particular writ before his term expired. Cotton v. Atkinson, 53 Ark. 98. He is not entitled to serve final process when he had served mesne process and before he levied execution his term expired.

Fletcher v. Morrel, 78 Mich. 176; Tunstall v. Withers, 86 Va. 892; Wolf v. Taylor, 68 Tex. 660.

But if a deputy vacates office, he is not entitled to complete unfinished process in his hands. Ferguson v. Lee, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 258.

If the sheriff absconds, a deputy may act until the office is declared vacant. Ballance v. Loomis, 22 Ill. 82; Kent v. Roberts, 2 Story (U. S.) 591; Johnson v. Foran, 58 Md. 148.

The sheriff has the right to keep property on which he has levied attachment until it is demanded of him on execution, though, in the meantime, his term has expired. Tukey v. Smith, 18 Me. 125; 36 Am. Dec. 704. See also, to the same effect, McKay v. Harrower, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 463.

4. Lawson v. Orear, 4 Ala. 156; Dunnica v. Coy, 28 Mo. 525; 75 Am. Dec. 133; Fondrin v. Planters' Bank, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 447; Sauvinet v. Maxwell, 26 La. Ann. 280.

In Pennsylvania, the successor completes unfinished business. Leshey v. Gardner, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 314; 38 Am. Dec. 764.

5. Fockler v. Martin, 32 Iowa 117; Matthis v. Pollard, 3 Ga. 1; Fowble v. Rayberg, 4 Ohio 45; and if he delivers goods seized by him to his successor, who sells, he is still liable if the original taking was a trespass. Duke v. Vincent, 29 Iowa 308. But the incoming sheriff would not be liable for goods seized by his predecessor, without proof that the incoming sheriff had received them or bound himself for their production. Ballew v. Bobb, 13 La. Ann. 375; McKay v. Leonard, 17 Iowa 569; McKay v. Thorington, 15 Iowa 25.

6. This rule has prevailed in some of the United States. People v. Phoenix,

An officer can justify his acts only as an officer¹ de jure, but his acts as a de facto sheriff may be good as to third persons.²

III. POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES—1. Process.³—In civil actions there must be a writ in existence at the time process is executed to justify.⁴ If the process is regular on its face and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, it is his duty to obey its mandates with reasonable diligence⁵ within his jurisdiction,⁶ and he is protected in so doing.⁷

In New York the under sheriff and sheriff's estate and securities become his sureties. Newman v. Beckwith, 61 N. Y. 205; but where the office becomes vacant by any other reason than death the under sheriff cannot perform the duties of sheriff. Paddock v. Cameron, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 212.

The sheriff may complete the execution of a process begun by a deputy before his death. Ingersoll v. Sawyer, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 276.

2. Service by him was held good where made so soon after his successor was qualified that it could not have been generally known he was succeeded, Flournoy v. Clements, 7 Ala. 535; but if his authority has notoriously ceased, the reason for rule ceases. King v. Corp., 6 East 368; Charitable Assoc. v. Baldwin, 1 Met. (Mass.) 359.

The validity of his acts cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding. Stickney v. Stickney, 77 Iowa 699; Morse v. Calley, 5 N. H. 223; and can only be questioned by those directly affected by his acts. Moore v. Graves, 3 N. H. 408; and where he failed to qualify or file bond. Dunphy v. People, 25 Mich. 10. Acting under a void appointment, de facto sheriff may be good as to third persons. People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 214; so, where he was ineligible. Bates v. Dyer, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 162; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Chester, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 458; State v. Anderson, 1 N. J. L. 318.

Where he has not renewed his bond the sureties on the original bond may be liable. Dunphy v. People, 25 Mich. 10; Ramsey Co. v. Brisbin, 17 Minn. 451.

3. See also SERVICE OF PROCESS.

4. Hall v. Roche, 8 T. R. 187; Norcross v. Nunan, 61 Cal. 640. A delivery of a writ to a sheriff after an arrest does not justify. Where a sheriff was requested by telegraph to attach, which he did, the writ being then on its way to him, it was held that it did not justify him. Wales v. Clark, 43 Conn. 183.

Dec. 603; Fletcher v. Bradley, 12 Vt. 22; 36 Am. Dec. 324; Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335; 73 Am. Dec. 584; unless otherwise directed by the plaintiff or his attorney. Patton v. Hamner, 28 Ala. 618.

6. He must see whether writ is enforceable in his county. People v. Van Eps, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 387; Chiles v. Hoy, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 47; Bickerstaff v. Doub, 19 Cal. 109.

7. Where a plaintiff has made a mistake in the affidavit and writ and amount of his claim in petition, and the sheriff who makes the attachment releases property on the defendant paying the amount named in the writ and costs, the sheriff is not liable to the plaintiff, though he afterwards recovers judgment for a larger amount. Page v. Belt, 17 Mo. 263; Ethridge v. Milling, 15 La. Ann. 513; Barr v. Boyles, 96 Pa. St. 31.

It is immaterial to the sheriff that the judgment does not correspond to the execution, Camp v. Mosely, 2 Fla. 171; Burton v. Sweaney, 4 Mo. 1; Davis v. Cooper, 6 Mo. 148; Kleissendorf v. Fore, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 473; Keys v. Gannis, 3 Nev. 548; Hill v. Haynes, 54 N. Y. 153; or whether there is any judgment or not. Farley v. Lee, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 169; 32 Am. Dec. 680.

He was protected by his process, valid on its face, where he had made levy on fee bill, though costs had been taxed

If the process is issued by a court not having authority, but this does not appear on the face of process, the sheriff is protected.¹ It is not his duty to question apparently regular process,² nor is it his right,³ unless it is absolutely void, when he may serve it, but is not bound to.⁴ This protection is personal to the against another person, Miller v. Weida, 41 Ind. 199; where costs were erroneously taxed and indorsed on the execution, Kothan v. Priest, 34 Kan. 179; where there were irregularities in proceeding before judgment, Norcross v. Nunan, 61 Cal. 640; where execution issued on an erroneous judgment, Smith v. People, 99 Ill. 445; where a warrant erroneously issued, Donahue v. Shed, 8 Met. (Mass.) 526; State v. Hamilton, 9 Mo. 794; for not arresting where he was directed so to do, and process justified it, he may show that defendant was exempt, Cody v. Quinn, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 191; 44 Am. Dec. 75; Chase v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 469; 50 Am. Dec. 52; McComb v. Reed, 28 Cal. 281; 87 Am. Dec. 115; Martin v. Hall, 70 Ala. 421; Bensel v. Lynch, 44 N. Y. 162; Roth v. Munshower, 29 Ohio St. 617; Reid v. Stegman, 99 N. Y. 646; Crocker on Sheriffs, §§ 284, 286; Earl v. Camp, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 562; State v. Manley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 636.

In Earl v. Camp, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 562, the court by Cowen, J., said: "These cases go to the utmost length and the true length in the protection of ministerial officers. The law imposes various duties upon them on delivering to them the process of the superior or inferior courts, or the warrants of officers to the discharge of which they are absolutely bound, provided there is jurisdiction; and though there be a total want of such jurisdiction, if it be not apparent on the face of the process, the law will not put them to inquire and judge of the case. In general, they ought not to look beyond the process, and in no case need they do so. . . . In no case where he becomes satisfied there is a want of jurisdiction is he bound to act in any way. He has a discretion, if he choose to exercise it; and if he refuses in the first instance, the party cannot make him accountable."

If the officer does suspend proceedings on production of defendant's discharge in insolvency it is at his own risk. Orange Co. Bank v. Dubois, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 351. officer and no defense to the wrongdoer under color of whose process the officer acts.¹ The sheriff's knowledge of facts in relation to a cause of action does not affect his duty or liability.² The rule is one of protection merely and the officer cannot build a title on such process.³

If the process is only voidable and not void it is the sheriff's duty to serve it,⁴ if the error is such that it may be amended,⁵ or is cured by the failure of the proper party to take advantage of it. He is not protected in serving process void on its face,⁶ whether for apparent lack of jurisdiction⁷ or for want of material allegations in the process.⁸

If a court having jurisdiction issues a writ against specific property, the officer is protected in taking it,¹ whoever owns it,² if he takes it from the defendant in writ,³ although the plaintiff had no claim.⁴

The sheriff cannot serve a writ to which he is a party,⁵ or in which he is interested;⁶ and if, in such case, the writ issues to the coroner or other officer, it need not disclose on its face the reason why it is not issued to the sheriff.⁷ He should indorse the date of its receipt on the writ.⁸

He must come within the class of officers to whom the writ is directed;⁹ but if he does not, and yet would have had authority to serve the writ, some authorities say that if properly

He is not liable for what he has done on an abandoned process.⁴

2. Summons to Appear.—A sheriff must make a reasonable effort to serve a summons.⁵

3. Where Several Writs.—In the absence of any lien it is the sheriff's duty to levy first the execution first delivered to him and to apply the proceeds of the assets seized to that execution, as against such as came into his hands at a later date.⁶ Where the judgment is a lien, it is the duty of the sheriff to apply the proceeds to the writ having the oldest lien.⁷

4. Houseman v. Stewart, 28 Ala. 684.

A taking under a valid attachment cannot be converted into a tort where the attachment is discharged. In Williams v. Ives, 25 Conn. 573, it was said to be the duty of the sheriff on discovering that a writ valid on its face was issued without authority from the plaintiff, to restore the property to the owner, and make a true return of facts on the process to the court.

Russell v. Lawton, 14 Wis. 202; 80 Am. Dec. 769.

Where the senior execution was lodged in the sheriff's office and entered in full on his books, this was held notice to him of such execution, State v. Boles, 18 S. Car. 534; he is not liable to the holder of a senior execution where, holding two writs, he

Where he has several executions under one of which he has levied, and such levy is discharged by the plaintiff in the execution or by payment of the debtor, he must retain the property and sell it to satisfy the other executions.³

Baldwin*, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 388.

A belief by the officer that he had already levied the senior execution on sufficient property is no excuse for paying over funds. Ohlson v. Pierce, 55 Wis. 207.

If he applies proceeds to a senior execution which by a private arrangement between the parties has been paid, he is not liable to a claimant under a junior execution. Burnett v. Gentry, 32 S. Car. 597.

3. Leach v. Pine, 41 Ill. 66; 89 Am. Dec. 375. But if there are several attachments and the officer neglects to levy in any suit by the last attaching creditor against the officer, the officer may show as a defense that

The officer has a right to tie a prisoner if he believes it necessary to secure him. State v. Stalcup, 2 Ired. (N. Car.) 50.

Bail.—By Stat. 23, Hen. VI, ch. 9, which is part of the common law in the United States, sheriffs were compelled to admit to bail upon reasonable surety, persons in custody by force of writ on mesne process, and taking this bond was a defense to a motion for an attachment for not having the body on the return day. Rex v. Sheriff, 7 T. R. 239; Hill v. Bolt, 4 T. R. 352. If sufficient bail is offered the sheriff must accept it, and is liable if he does not, Creswell v. Houghton, 6 T. R. 355; Gibbs v. Randlett, 58 N. H. 407; but he is not obliged to travel around with the prisoner to procure bail. Page v. Staples, 13 R. I. 306.

Under the above statute he must have taken two sureties, Rex v. Sheriff of London, 2 Bing. 227; Long v. Billings, 9 Mass. 479; Rice v. Hosmer, 12 Mass. 129; Lane v. Smith, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 281; to a contract under seal, Peyton v. Mosely, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 80. If he takes the sureties required and they are good at the time, but afterwards become insolvent, he is not liable, Rice v. Hosmer, 12 Mass. 127; Stevens v. Boyce, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 292; Sherwood v. Pearl, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 314; Bradt v. Holden, 12 R. I. 335.

If the statute requires it to run to sheriff, it is void if it runs to the deputy. Conant v. Sheldon, 4 Gray (Mass.) 300; Smith v. Adams, 12 Met. (Mass.) 564; Rogers v. Reeve, 1 T. R. 422. In some States, by statute, bail may be given by sureties indorsing their names on the writ, Jacobs v. Stevens, 57 N. H. 610; Stoughton v. Barrett, 20 Vt. 385. The sheriff, if he allows the debtor to depart on receipt of an undertaking not recognized by statute, is liable for an escape, Fuller v. Prest, 7 T. R. 109; Rogers v. Reeves, 1 T. R. 418; and if the sheriff, for such reason, is compelled to pay the debt he cannot recover money so paid. Pitcher v. Bailey, 8 East 171. The officer is bound to make diligent search for the body and property of the debtor, when the execution is delivered to him, though bail has been given. Kidder v. Parlin, 7 Me. 80. Unless his return shows this, the bail will not be charged, Rowell v. Hoit, 8 N. H. 38; and this return cannot be made until the return day. Niles v. Field, 2 Met. (Mass.) 327; Bull v. Clarke, 2 Met. (Mass.) 587.

Special Bail.—In some States the sheriff is liable as special bail if he allows an arrested debtor to depart, and bail is not given or justified or the signature of a surety is forged. Metcalf v. Stryker, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 62; Hart v. Lanier, 3 Hawks. (N. Car.) 244; Gray v. Hoover, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 445; Townsend v. Stoddard, 26 Ga. 430; Marsh v. Bancroft, 1 Met. (Mass.) 497. It has been held that a sheriff, for not taking bail for a person notoriously insolvent, before allowing him to depart, was only liable in nominal damages. Eaton v. Ogier, 2 Me. 46; Weld v. Bartlett, 10 Mass. 470. As to special bail the sheriff's powers are commensurate with that of any bail, and he may arrest the defendant. Bronson v. Noyes, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 188; Brady v. Brundage, 59 N. Y. 310. If an arrest is unauthorized, no action will lie for neglecting to take sufficient bail. Mason v. Hutchings, 20 Me. 77. And see generally ARREST, vol. 1, p. 719; BAIL, vol. 2, p. 1.

Shriner*, 15 Ohio St. 43; Arden v. Goodacre, 11 C. B. 883; McRae v. Clarke, L. R., 1 C. P. 403. If the defendant is in custody on mesne process, the plaintiff must prove an indebtedness; and this is not maintained by evidence of a claim barred by the Statute of Limitations. Slocum v. Riley, 145 Mass. 370.

Insolvency of the debtor is not a bar,

At common law, in case of a voluntary escape,¹ the defendant was discharged and the sheriff became liable to the plaintiff for the debt.² If the escape was negligent or involuntary and the debtor was in custody before action was brought by the plaintiff against the sheriff, such recaption was a bar.³

It is no defense that the jail is out of repair;⁴ that there is no jail,⁵ or that he used due care in keeping the prisoner;⁶ but it is a defense that the process on which the defendant is held is void,⁷ or that the escape was caused by the act of the plaintiff or his attorney.⁸

Wolverton v. Com., 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 273; Currie v. Worthy, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 315; but is admissible in mitigation, Barnes v. Willett, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 514.

In New York, when the sheriff becomes liable as special bail, insolvency of the debtor is not admissible in mitigation.

If the debtor is insolvent, damages can be only nominal. Hotchkiss v. Whitten, 71 Me. 577.

according to its terms, in the absence of instructions.¹ If the commands of the writ are general and the plaintiff gives special instructions, these should be followed.² If no special instructions are given, he should still make reasonable search and inquiry for the defendant or his property.³ It is no excuse that the plaintiff did not inform him of property.⁴ But if he has a reasonable doubt of the defendant's title, he may require a bond of indemnity before proceeding,⁵ and where he has this doubt he should notify

He is to act in each case honestly and diligently, but with due regard to his other duties. If he has been required to make all possible effort in one case, he might lose the opportunity of executing every other process in his hands; the fact that the defendant has property does not alone fix the sheriff with liability for a failure to act, if he has been diligent in searching for it. Barnes v. Thompson, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 313.

1. In the New England States the sheriff is not required to attach on mesne process unless directed by the plaintiff to do so, Smith v. Judkins, 60 N. H. 127; Hubbel v. Kingman, 52 Conn. 17; Palmer v. Gallup, 16 Conn. 556; in Maine not unless so directed in writing, Betts v. Norris, 15 Me. 468; Kimball v. Davis, 19 Me. 310; Connor v. Madden, 57 Me. 410; and this writing may be quite informal. Abbott v. Jacobs, 49 Me. 319. Elsewhere in the United States if the writ clothes him with authority and the circumstances of the case permit, it is his duty to attach without special instructions to do so, Ransom v. Halcott, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 56; after the writ has been delivered to him—he cannot attach before, Wales v. Clark, 43 Conn. 183; Seiber v. Switzer, 35 Ohio St. 661; but in New England if he has attached without instructions the attachment is good, and he is bound to hold it and levy the execution on it, Davis v. Richmond, 14 Mass. 473; Start v. Sherwin, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 521.

Palmer, 46 Ill. 398; 95 Am. Dec. 418; Hunter v. Maddox, 1 Hann. N. B. 162; Marshall v. Simpson, 13 La. Ann. 437; Levy v. Shockley, 29 Ga. 710; West v. St. John, 63 Iowa 287.

5. See INDEMNITY CONTRACTS, vol. 10, p. 402. And its refusal by the plaintiff in such cases will warrant the officer in not seizing or holding. Freeman on Executions, § 275. At common law, when the officer had doubts of the defendant's title to the property, the return day of the writ was extended until the plaintiff gave the officer a bond of indemnity. Freeman on Executions, § 254; and where there are several writs and some of the defendants will not furnish indemnity, only those who comply have their liens preserved. Burnett v. the plaintiff so that a bond may be given.¹ Indemnity is implied from directions to serve in a particular manner.² The sheriff may show, as a defense for not levying, notwithstanding the bond, that the property belonged to a third person.³

If he seizes property of a third person where the writ does not run against it, generally he becomes at once a trespasser, and, in the absence of a statute, the owner may sue him at once.⁴

N. Car. 438. In Marsh v. Gold, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 289, the court by Parker, C. J., said: "An officer, called upon to serve a precept either by attaching property or arresting the person, if there be any reasonable grounds for doubting his authority to act in any particular case, has the right to ask for indemnity. He is not obliged to serve process in civil actions at his own peril when the plaintiff in the suit is present, and may take the responsibility upon himself. It has been decided that the sheriff has a right to require indemnity of the creditor when he shall be directed to attach chattels, the title to the property in which may be questionable. Marshall v. Hosmer, 4 Mass. 63. The same rule exists when the sheriff shall be directed to arrest the body of any one, and he has reasonable doubts of the identity of the person. There can be no reason why the same principle should not apply where there may be doubts of the lawfulness of the arrest on other grounds. The cases cited to show the illegality of this promise show satisfactorily that a contract entered into with an officer to indemnify him against the consequences of a breach of official duty is void; but it is no breach of official duty for an officer to hesitate to serve civil process where his proceedings may make him a trespasser until he shall have security of indemnification from the creditor. Actions have frequently been maintained upon such contracts and they are neither immoral, unjust, nor illegal in any respect."

The sheriff would be liable where he completed a levy made by his predecessor. Freeman v. Apple, 99 Pa. St. 261; or where, property having been delivered to him by his predecessor, he refuses to deliver it to the owner on demand. Vaughn v. Allgaier, 27 Mo. App. 523.

He may seize the whole property on a writ against one tenant in common, Veach v. Adams, 51 Cal. 609; but he cannot sell the whole property, Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541; *Sheppard v. The claimant has this right of action in many States whether he appeared in the attachment proceedings to protect his property or not, Trieber v. Blocher, 10 Md. 14; or whether he demanded a release of property or not, Bodega v. Perkerson, 60 Ga. 516; Shuff v. Morgan, 9 Mart. (La.) 592; and, in some cases, even though he has receipted for or given a delivery bond for the property, Turner v. Lytte, 59 Md. 199; Johns v. Church, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 557; 23 Am. In many States, when a claimant appears, a method is provided by statute for determining rights, and, if the decision is against the claimant, the officer is not liable for proceeding with his levy, although the claimant was the real owner. Capital Lumbering Co. v. Hall, 9 Oregon 93; Schroeder v. Clark, 18 Mo. 184; Cassell v. Williams, 12 Ill. 387; Patty v. Mansfield, 8 Ohio 370; Zacharias v. Totton, 90 Pa. St. 286; Philips v. Harriss, 3 J. Marsh. (Ky.) 122; 79 Am. Dec. 166.

In other States the determination as to the claimant's title does not conclude the claimant, but justifies the officer in not proceeding unless he obtains indemnity. Platt v. Sherry, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 236; Curtis v. Patterson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 67; Strong v. Pat- terson, 6 Cal. 237; Perkins v. Thornburgh, 10 Cal. 189.

Under many of these statutes, the claimant is free to resort to his common-law remedies, and cannot be compelled to submit his claim to be investigated by the statutory method. Moore v. Samuel, 13 Tex. 120; Steele v. Farber, 37 Mo. 71; Jones v. Wilson, 16 Ohio St. 420; Pike v. Colvin, 67 Ill. 227.

In some States the officer may begin proceedings and compel the claimant to try title in the manner provided by the statute. Philips v. Harriss, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 122; 19 Am. Dec. 166; State v. Sandlin, 44 Ind. 504. In Ohio if the proceeding is begun by the officer and found against the claimant it does not bar him from suing the officer. Jones v. Carr, 16 Ohio St. 420.

If he levies on exempt property, his liability varies in different States. In some he is justified until claim of execution is made, and, if the defendant does not claim his privilege, the sheriff must levy,² while in others he must take notice of executions,³ and in others he must inform the debtor of his privilege and give him a chance to select.⁴

² Utah 126; if levied, an execution must show a valid judgment as well as execution, Ford v. McMaster, 6 Mont. 240; Jansen v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Barber*, 7 Conn. 274; Slattery v. Stewart, 45 Ill. 293. Some courts require the presence of fraud to justify the officer. In Smith v. Sanborn, 6 Gray (Mass.) 134, the court by Merrick, J., said: "It is only in cases where the intermixture has been caused by the willful or unlawful acts of one of the proprietors, and the several parcels have thereby become so confused or mingled together that they can be no longer identified that his interest in them is lost," and these courts also say that if the intermixture is not fraudulent, the sheriff is liable if he takes a third person's goods, although such person refused to point out the debtor's goods, Davis v. Stone, 720 Mass. 228; Smith v. Sanborn, 6 Gray (Mass.) 134; Foot v. People, 14 Ill.

App. 280; Beach v. Schmultz, 2 Ill. 185; Treat v. Barber, 7 Conn. 274; but the officer may require a third person to point out his own goods, Tufts v. McClintock, 28 Me. 424; 48 Am. In Nebraska the filing of an inventory by debtor is essential to maintain an action and is essential to the sheriff for taking exempt property. Mann v. Welton, 21 Neb. 541. Adkinson*, 40 Cal. 408; Hillard v. Wilson, 65 Tex. 286; Atcheson v. Hutchison, 51 Tex. 203. In Handy v. Clippert, 50 Mich. 355, the court, by Cooley, J., said: "The officer is, or should be a minister of justice, not of oppression; he should execute every writ put into his hands in such a manner so as to do as little mischief to the defendant as possible." He was held liable where he levied on jewelry worth $800 for a debt of $21, Cook v. Jenkins, 30 Iowa 452; where he levied on a steamboat worth $35,000 for a debt $109. Silver v. McNiel, 52 Mo. 518; where he levied on a valuable horse for a bill of $20, when he could easily have taken a common horse and by ordinary inquiry could have learned the value of the horse he took. Vance v. Vanarsdale, 1 Bush (Ky.) 504; but where there is property of uncertain value, he is not to be deemed guilty of misconduct because the quantity levied on turns out to be largely in excess of the demand. Sexey v. Adkinson, 40 Cal. 408; and where he is liable for an excessive levy he is not a trespasser ab initio for all the property, but only for the excess beyond that which he might lawfully have taken. Wentworth v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 434; and where the writ commanded him to attach $200 worth of property and he attached realty worth $4000 as well as personal property, it was held that he was not liable, having acted in good faith, and he was not culpably negligent in not ascertaining that the real estate was not unincumbered. Davis v. Webster, 59 N. H. 471.

When the property fails to bring enough to satisfy the writ, this is a refutation of a charge that the levy was excessive, Lynn v. Sisk, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.)

d. DELAY IN LEVY.—He must make an immediate levy, if possible, where the circumstances known to him require it,¹ or where he has received special instructions to act,² or where he had the means and opportunity of acting.³ Each case depends on its circumstances.

135; Ingram v. Belk, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 207; 47 Am. Dec. 591; an excessive levy is not void; until set aside it is valid. Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27; Dezell v. Odell, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 215; 38 Am. Dec. 628; Brown v. Allen, 3 Head (Tenn.) 429; Pugh v. Callo-way, 10 Ohio St. 488. Sometimes, in harsh cases, both levy and sale have been set aside, Cook v. Jenkins, 30 Iowa 452; Tiernan v. Wilson, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 411; Stead v. Course, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 403; but, generally parties are left to their legal remedies. Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27; 100 Am. Dec. 133. Where the defendant points out property to be taken he cannot object to the levy as being excessive. Cornelius v. Burford, 28 Tex. 202; 91 Am. Dec. 309. If the officer is convinced that the levy is excessive he may release the excess, Black v. Nettles, 25 Ark. 606; in levying on a part of a large quantity of property he may take possession and retain possession of the whole, so far as may be necessary to separate and dispose of the part levied on. Morgan v. Spangler, 14 Ohio St. 116; and it has been held, though the levy was excessive, yet if there was only enough sold to pay execution the debtor had no cause of action. Drake v. Murphy, 42 Ind. 82. In the absence of proof to the contrary he may be presumed, at a sale of land under execution, to have complied with the requirements of the law in not selling more than was necessary to satisfy the execution, where the land is divisible. Banks v. Bales, 16 Ind. 423; and if levy and sale were excessive that it could be ratified by the defendant, by writing valid within the Statute of Frauds. Pepper v. Com., 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 27.

Car.) 548; 14 Am. Dec. 603. A writ of arrest was placed in the hands of a sheriff at nightfall, with notice that an absconding debtor was in a hotel in a city near the State line, intending to abscond before daylight, such being the fact; and, the debtor having escaped into another State because the sheriff failed to search for him, it was held that the sheriff was liable. Philips v. Ronald, 3 Bush (Ky.) 244; 96 Am. Dec. 216. A sheriff was held negligent where, having a writ against a resident of another State, known by the sheriff to be in his county on a temporary visit, and also informed that he would be in a particular place on a certain day in his county, he failed to be present at such time and place without excuse, when, if he had been there, he might have arrested the defendant. Jenkins v. Troutman, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 169.

2. French v. Kemp, 64 Ga. 749; Barnard v. Ward, 9 Mass. 269. When a sheriff received a writ of assistance and went with the plaintiff to the premises for the purpose of putting him in possession, but, for reasons not stated, in opposition to the plaintiff's wishes and against his protestations, declined to take any action, and on a subsequent day executed the writ, but in the mean time the occupants had damaged the premises, the sheriff was held liable for this damage. Chapman v. Thornburgh, 17 Cal. 87; 76 Am. Dec. 571.

3. Where, four days before his term expired, the sheriff received an execution and had the means and opportunity of levying and neglected to do so, thereby prejudicing the plaintiff, he was held liable, State v. Roberts, 12 N. J. L. 114; 21 Am. Dec. 62; and where, living within ten miles of the defendant, he delayed to levy for eight days, within which time the defendant made an assignment, Hearn v. Parker, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 150; where the defendant carried on business a mile and a half from the court house, and execution was delivered April 25th to the officer, who saw the defendant and was told the debt would be paid, but the officer did nothing further, though the defendant had plenty of property easily found, and on April 29th the defendant made an assignment and the plaintiff lost his debt, the officer was

c. FAILURE TO LEVY.—If the plaintiff or another points out to the officer property belonging to the debtor, or if the officer knows of it,¹ or if, by exercising due diligence, he might have found it within his district, he is liable for failure to levy.² If he has been diligent, he is not liable for such failure, even though the debtor had property which might have been levied on.³

held negligent. Elmore v. Hill, 51 Wis. 365. When an attachment was handed to the sheriff very early in the morning, with special instructions to levy upon real estate known to him, he being then at the county seat of the county in which the land was, where he remained long enough to have made the attachment and have filed the statute notice and then went to a town twenty-two miles distant for the purpose of attaching personal property, where he levied on land in the afternoon, prior to which time, and after he left the county seat, a mortgage on the land was executed by which the creditor failed to collect on his debt, the sheriff was held liable. Springett v. Colerick, 67 Mich. 362.

1. Apart from any question of indemnity he should levy on it, and a bare suspicion that the defendant does not own it will not justify the officer in refusing to levy, Marshall v. Simpson, 13 La. Ann. 437; nor will the idle assertions of third persons justify such refusal, Dunlap v. Berry, 5 Ill. 327; 39 Am. Dec. 413; nor is it an excuse that he was informed "by the debtor and his wife and neighbors that property in his possession belonged to his wife," Robertson v. Bealer, 3 Port. (Ala.) 385; nor that there was a general report of the defendant's insolvency, Parks v. Alexander, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 412.

Bennington*, 12 Vt. 404; Van Winkle v. Udall, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 559; Pinney v. Levy, 38 Ga. 141. This duty to levy generally continues until the return day, Henry v. Com., 107 Pa. St. 361; Lyendecker v. Martin, 38 Tex. 287; and the sheriff is liable even though the property which he should have levied on was not enough to pay the debt in full,

Com. v. Hurt, 4 Bush (Ky.) 66; State v. Neff, 74 Ind. 146; and he should take the debtor's property, though in the possession of a third person. Emanuel v. Cocke, 6 Dana (Ky.) 212; James v. Thompson, 12 La. Ann. 174. He should not return execution without making inquiries to ascertain if the defendant had property subject to it. Henry v. Com., 107 Pa. St. 361. These inquiries should be made at the residence of the defendant. Hinnan v. Borden, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 367; Parks v. Alexander, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 412. The fact that he does not make inquiries of the plaintiff concerning the defendant's whereabouts does not show negligence. Kock v. Coats, 43 Mich. 30.

It is no defense for neglecting to levy on goods attached on mesne process that he had previously sold the goods without the consent of the creditor and received the money. Fairbanks v. Stanley, 18 Me. 296. Where the defendant's title to real estate was not of record and there was nothing to show that he was in actual possession or that a reasonably diligent inquiry by the sheriff would have disclosed his ownership, he was held not liable for failure to levy. Force v. Gardner, 43 N. J. L. 417. Nor is he liable where the defendant owned personal property, unless it appears that such property was in his jurisdiction subject to levy and in the defendant's possession, or so situated that a reasonable inquiry by the sheriff would have discovered that the defendant owned it. State v. Neff, 74 Ind. 146.

It is a defense that the judgment is void;¹ that the execution was stayed;² that the property did not belong to the debtor,³ or that the sheriff's apparent neglect was induced by acts or instructions of the plaintiff.⁴

Supp. (N. Y.) 410; but the sheriff is not liable if the plaintiff's counsel, when applied to to point out property, withholds information that would have enabled the officer to make a levy. Batte v. Chandler, 53 Tex. 613.

J. Marsh. (Ky.) 149; not that the consideration of the judgment has failed, Arnold v. Com., 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 109.

2. McCall v. McRae, 10 Ala. 313; Com. v. Magee, 8 Pa. St. 240; 44 Am. Dec. 509; Cason v. Mulling, 50 Ga. 598; State v. Gilreath, 16 S. Car. 100; Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136. Where he neglected to advertise for six months and then an injunction was obtained restraining him, he was held liable. Weal v. Price, 11 Ga. 29; but in Hunter v. Phillips, 56 Ga. 634, where the plaintiff asked the sheriff for a levy for June sales and the sheriff levied for July sales, and before that time the sheriff was enjoined, it was held that he was not liable unless the injunction was dismissed. After execution perpetually enjoined motion could not be made against the sheriff, although the execution had been several years in his hands before the order was made. McCall v. McRae, 10 Ala. 313.

Defendant, a sheriff, levied an execution on chattels in favor of the plaintiff and delivered them to A, taking her receipt and advertising them for sale. A subsequently claimed them as her property, and brought replevin against the officer, who then made return of the above facts. A lost the replevin suit because she already had possession, the question of ownership not being considered. Held, that the officer, after the judgment in replevin, should have withdrawn the execution and sold the chattels, and was liable for his failure to do so. Cox v. Currier, 62 Iowa 551; but it is no defense that the defendant gave notice of an intention to file a bill in equity, and the sheriff supposed that an injunction would be granted. Dawson v. Merchants' Bank, 30 Ga. 664. Where an affidavit of illegality was a

Y.) 565; Com. v. Vandyke, 57 Pa. St. 34; Bagley v. Bates, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 185.

Gemmill*, 1 Houst. (Del.) 9; State v. Emmons, 88 Ind. 279; but he is liable for the damage suffered where the creditor takes back the execution so as to prevent him from completing the levy, where there has been neglect, and delivers it to another officer who makes a partial levy. Wetherby v. Foster, 5 Vt. 136. An agreement between creditor and debtor to suspend levy does not justify the officer in a failure to serve execution. Derby Bank v. Landon, 2 Conn. 417. Nor is he justified by an agreement between creditor and debtor that the amount due on the execution should be charged against the debtor on the creditor's books and be adjusted, where it was not in fact adjusted. Nye v.

It is a defense that a levy would have been useless.¹ It is the sheriff's duty to have a sufficient number of deputies to execute process within the proper time.²

The statutes of some States require an officer who has an execution against two persons, one of whom is a surety, to levy first on the property of the principal, if the surety brings himself within the statute.³

f. RECEIPTORS.⁴—In some States it is the practice for the sheriff to deliver over to a third person the goods attached, taking from him a promise to redeliver them.⁵ It is at the officer's option, however.⁶ He is still responsible to the plaintiff unless the goods are delivered to the receptor with the plaintiff's consent and by his direction.⁷

Kellam, 19 Vt. 548. Nor is he released where he levies execution against two defendants by the fact that, previous to the delivery of the execution to him, one of the defendants was released by the plaintiff. Mason v. Watts, 7 Ala. 703. He is not liable where the writ comes to him so late that he cannot execute it. Hanmer v. Griffith, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 193; Lyendecker v. Martin, 38 Tex. 289; O'Bannon v. Saunders, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 138.

Where the proceeds of levy and sale would not pay expenses of sale, In re Mowry, 12 Wis. 52, and he is liable only for nominal damages for failing to levy against a partner's interest in partnership property on an execution against him individually, where the debts of firm equaled the assets. State v. Emmons, 99 Ind. 452. Where he holds several executions against the same defendant, he is liable for failure to levy one where injury results to one of the plaintiffs, although a claim has been interposed to property levied on by him under one of the other executions. Brown v. McCrary, 30 Ga. 878; and he is liable for failure to execute a ca. sa., although he has already executed another ca. sa. against the defendant, in which case he gave bonds to take the benefit of the poor debtor's act and notified the plaintiff in second ca. sa. of such intention. Porter v. Pierce, 19 Ga. 268.

2. Hallett v. Lee, 3 Ala. 28. Sickness of officer is no defense. He should have a sufficient number of deputies or give the writ to another officer. Trendenstein v. McNier, 81 Ill. 208.

3. He is not liable if the surety does not make a required affidavit. Gregg v. Crawford, 4 Ala. 180; 37 Am. Dec. 739; nor where the execution did not distinguish which was principal and which was surety. Shufford v. Cline, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 463; nor where the statute required an order to be obtained and this was not done, though he knew of the suretyship. Bliss v. Douch, 110 Ind. 296.

—The form of the receipt varies. It may be quite informal. Hunter v. Peaks, 74 Me. 363. If it is in the alternative, to deliver goods or pay judgment, the sheriff can still take the goods. Sibley v. Story, 8 Vt. 15. Contra, he can only recover the money. Waterman v. Treat, 49 Me. 309; 77 Am. Dec. 261.

It is not necessary that the goods should be specifically described. Bruce v. Pettengill, 12 N. H. 341; but they should be so described generally or specifically in the receipt that they can be easily identified. Anthony v. Comstock, 1 R. I. 454.

If the bailee is nominated by the plaintiff the officer is not responsible to the plaintiff for the acts of such bailee. Donham v. Wild, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 520; 31 Am. Dec. 161.

In Blake v. Kimball, 106 Mass. 116, the court, by Ames, J., said: "Upon the attachment of personal property on mesne process the duty of the attaching officer to the plaintiff in the suit, is to keep

The plaintiff must take out execution within the life of the attachment and deliver it to the attaching officer so that the execution may be levied,¹ or he may deliver it to another officer, but in the latter event such officer should make demand on the attaching officer² for the property, even though it could not have been produced.

The bailee or receiptor is the agent or servant of the officer.³ He is accountable on his receipt for refusal and neglect to deliver, so long as the officer is accountable to any one, and no longer.⁴ He is bound to take reasonable care of the the property attached safely so that it may be forthcoming in order to be taken within thirty days after the final termination of the suit in a judgment in favor of such plaintiff. . . . During the pendency of the suit the officer may make such arrangements upon his own responsibility in regard to the custody of the property as he may think proper. To these arrangements the attaching creditor is not a party unless he should choose to make himself so by participation or express consent. The removal of the attached property beyond the officer's reach would have no effect on the rights and liabilities of the parties in relation to each other. The attached goods remain constructively in the officer's possession and his liability to the creditor and the creditor's rights against him are exactly the same as if the possession, instead of being constructive, was actual and literal."

1. Donham v. Wild, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 520; Brown v. Cook, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 361; Humphreys v. Cobb, 22 Me. 380. Mere delivery of execution to attaching officer is sufficient notice that the plaintiff claims to have the goods attached applied to the execution, and if made by a deputy and the execution is placed in the hands of the sheriff the rule is the same. Ayer v. Jameson, 9 Vt. 363.

2. Howard v. Smith, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 202; Collins v. Smith, 16 Vt. 9; Pearsons v. Tinckner, 36 Me. 384; Wetherell v. Hughes, 45 Me. 61; Stackpole v. Hilton, 121 Mass. 449; Shepherd v. Hall, 77 Me. 569; but where the attaching officer delivered the receipt to the attaching creditor who took out execution and delivered it and the receipt to another officer who made a demand on receiptor, it was held that this was sufficient and no demand on attaching officer was necessary. Moore v. Fargo, 112 Mass. 254. In this case the court, by Colt, J., said: "The creditor had chosen to take the receipt as a substitute for the property and was entitled as equitable assignee to the security which it afforded, with the" (attaching officer's) "name." A demand on the attaching officer made by the creditor or officer holding the execution would have been of no avail, nor was it necessary that the execution should have been placed in the attaching officer's hands for service, or that he should make the demand. "The receipt having been delivered to the officer having the execution by one having the entire equitable interest in it there was implied authority given with it to make the demand or do any other act necessary to hold the receiptor."

In Moore v. Fargo, 112 Mass. 254, the officer was discharged from liability to the plaintiff for the goods, but where the plaintiff did not ask for the receipt and when it was delivered to him made no agreement to receive it as a substitute, the sheriff was not discharged from liability. Humphreys v. Cobb, 22 Me. 380.

v. Williams, 37 Wis. 339, it was held that where the receptor did not admit that the debtor was owner and the receipt asserted ownership in himself, he could claim the goods as against the officer. Where partnership property was levied on as against one member of the firm and was receipted for to the officer by the firm, the firm was not permitted to show that after giving the receipt the property was applied to the uses of the firm. *Burrall v. A demand on the receptor is generally necessary¹ even though he is unable to deliver the goods.²

The right to sue the receptor matures on demand.³ Damages depend on the officer's liability;⁴ if the officer is liable for the goods, the measure of damages against the receptor is their full value.⁵ If the value is stated on the receipt, that binds.⁶

Lighton*, 20 Me. 266; nor if the receptor has permitted the property to be taken out of the State. Webster v. Coffin, 14 Mass. 196; in Mason v. Briggs, 16 Mass. 452, demand at the receptor's dwelling house during his absence from the State held good. "If it were necessary in a case like this to make a personal demand it would always be in the power of the party to elude a demand, and thus to avoid responsibility. One who makes a contract to deliver specific articles on demand should always be ready at his dwelling house or place of business. A demand made upon him personally for goods which he could not carry about with him would be liable to more reasonable objection than that in the case before us. Absence from the commonwealth, if such a demand as was made by the plaintiff would not otherwise be proper, fully justifies him in the course he took." In Phelps v. Gilchrist, 28 N. H. 266, the court held that the demand must be such that a receptor, having left property in a reasonable place, shall have opportunity at such place at a reasonable time to deliver it to the bailor.

It is not necessary where he has delivered the goods to the debtor. Webster v. Coffin, 14 Mass. 196. If there are joint receptors, demand on any one is sufficient. Griswold v. Plumb, 13 Mass. 298. If the bailee receipts for property attached on several

If he does not have the sureties approved by the creditor or in the way pointed out by the statute, he is responsible for their subsequent insufficiency. Miner v. Coburn, 4 Allen (Mass.) 136.

To prove the insufficiency of the bond it is competent for the plaintiff to show that he brought suit on it and had not realized anything from it, and that the officer could find no property of principal or sureties as tending to show original insufficiency. *Carter v. It is sufficient if he takes security believed by him to be, and understood by well-informed men to be responsible. People v. Robinson, 89 Ill. 159.

An officer who serves a replevin writ on behalf of a defendant, to recover the possession of property attached, is bound to take sureties on the replevin bond who are at the time actually responsible for its amount. It is not enough that they are at the time the bond is taken in good credit and apparently responsible; but, on the other hand, he is not liable if, being actually responsible when taken, they cease to be so before the bond is put in suit. *Bank of Middlebury v. He cannot resist recovery on the ground that the plaintiff had received satisfaction of the defendant on an execution in another action for the same cause. Hill v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Ala. 314.

A sheriff received a writ of attachment with orders from the plaintiff to levy on the contents of the debtor's warehouse, including goods, on which the latter had liens for storage and advances and to release the property so stored upon payment by the owners of the charges thereon due the defendant; the sheriff having done so, but having then paid out the money so collected on the defendant's order, was held liable to the attaching creditor for the money so collected, whether the goods were attachable or not, since he should have attached the money. *Hanchett v. If he sells without receiving price, he is liable to defendant for the balance, after deducting execution and costs as though he had received money, Kumler v. Brandenburg, 39 Minn. 59; but where goods were sold on mesne process on credit and judgment is for defendant, the sheriff is not liable to the defendant for the price, unless he receives it. *Seaver v. A remedy is now generally provided by statute, by summary proceedings³

Balch*, 8 Me. 133. The proceedings to obtain the penalty must be promptly instituted. Donley v. Wiggins, 52 Tex. 301; Scogins v. Perry, 46 Tex. 113.

An injunction on part would be no defense for not paying over the remainder. Phillips v. Behn, 19 Ga. 298.

It is a defense that the money was made on property not belonging to the debtor. Peaselee v. Stainford, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 170; Frankel v. Elias, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 74; or that the money has been used in paying prior liens. Hammen v. Munick, 37 Gratt. (Va.) 249.

2. At common law, for certain defaults, the court issued attachments against him as for a contempt of court, and, unless the contempt was purged, imprisoned or amerced him. These contempts were such as not obeying an order of the writ to bring in the defendant, or making a return on its face insufficient. Rolle Abr. M. 1;

Sewall on Sheriffs, 304. And it was necessary for the plaintiff to proceed within a reasonable time. Rex v. Sheriff of London, 1 Taunt. 111; Rex v. Per-ring, 3 B. & P. 151.

If the court did not set the attachment aside the sheriff was liable to the plaintiff for the amount due on the writ. Rex v. Sheriff, 9 East 316; Hep-pel v. King, 7 T. R. 370. This method was applied in this county but the party injured could also proceed by action. Burk v. Campbell, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 456; State v. Sheriff, 1 Mill (S. Car.) 151; Ronald v. Bentley, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 461; Phillips v. Cunningham, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 416. The attachment was allowed only for a willful default acting by virtue of some order and within a reasonable time. Mongie v. Cheney, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 145; Lawson v. Johnson, 5 Ark. 168. This method was not universally adopted. Clark v. Foxcroft, 6 Me. 296; 20 Am. Dec. 309. In some, he was coerced by fine or imprisonment. State v. Tipton, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 166; in others by imprisonment. Lawson v. Johnson, 5 Ark. 168. But if he acted in good faith and the loss did not result from his act he was relieved. Pitman v. Clarke, 1 McMull. (S. Car.) 316; McLean v. Du Bose, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 646; Daniel v. Capers, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 237.

When both of these remedies exist he cannot follow them simultaneously. Wood v. Hunt, 23 Ga. 379; Pugsley v. Drew, 52 Ga. 339.

3. Without a jury. Wells v. Caldwell, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 441; Hensley v. Baker, 10 Mo. 157. And this is not a violation of a constitutional guarantee of trial by jury. Lewis v. Fellows, 6 How. (Miss.) 261; Lewis v. Garrett, 5 How. (Miss.) 434.

For non-return see Halcombe v. Rowland, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 240; State v. Latham, 6 Jones (N. Car.) 233; Wakefield v. Moore, 65 Ga. 268; Hyatte v. Allison, 3 Jones (N. Car.)

in the action¹ in which his default occurred, and he is made to respond for actual damages suffered, and for the penalty² as well.

533. For failing to pay over money, see Moore v. Disney, 2 Ohio 490; Stone v. Ruffin, 2 Ohio 503. But this means a willful neglect to pay and not cases where liability is questioned. Custer v. Agnew, 83 Ill. 194—or for failure to pay an assignee where he has no knowledge of the assignment. State v. Judges, 10 N. J. L. 319. Mere non-return is not enough in New Jersey. Tood v. Hoagland, 36 N. J. L. 352. The motion, and not notice that it will be made, is the commencement of the suit. Hill v. Hinton, 2 Head (Tenn.) 124. Contra, the notice is the commencement. Scott v. Dow, 14 N. J. L. 350. Notice generally must be served on the sheriff. Stryker v. Merseles, 24 N. J. L. 542; Davis v. Irwin, 8 Ga. 153. Appearance will cure want of notice and errors therein. Watkins v. Barnes, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 201; Gore v. Hedges, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 520. Slight informalities in the notice do not harm it. Fergus v. Ball, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 197. In some no pleadings are necessary. Wadsworth v. Parsons, 6 Ohio 452. In others, they are. Nagle v. Lumpkin, 48 Ga. 521.

Generally a rule for contempt in not executing process will be discharged on motion where the sheriff has acted in good faith under advice of counsel. Harrell v. Feagin, 59 Ga. 821. Or, if caused by the plaintiff's act. Simms v. Quinn, 58 Miss. 221. The rule should specify the term at which the motion is made and the court in which the judgment was had on which execution issued. Welch v. Fourier, 6 Ala. 516; Bethune v. Bonner, 2 Ga. 169. Should not allege more than one ground for the motion. Morgan v. Billings, 3 Ala. 172. And motion should be made at the time appointed and some proceedings had to keep alive notice or it will lose its force. Armstrong v. Robertson, 2 Ala. 164. It does not lie in favor of an assignee. Beaver v. Batte, 19 Tex. 111. In his own name. May v. Johnson, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 229. Must be made within a reasonable time. Overseers v. Tucker, 2 Leigh (Va.) 580; Mitchell v. Fullbright, 32 Mo. 551; Van Tassel v. Van Tassel, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 439. It may be served by permitting him to read it. Stephens v. Hume, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 6. Should be served by copy. People v. McHatton, 3 Ill. 566.

In Kansas, proceedings are a lien on real estate from the day the petition is filed. Knox v. Merrill, 22 Kan. 572.

1. In court from which the process issued. Tapp v. Bonds, 57 Miss. 281; and Fisher v. Franklin, 38 Kan. 251; Kennedy v. Coleman, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 6.

2. Where the statute provides for fixing on the sheriff satisfaction by way of penalty, it is immaterial that the defendant was insolvent so that the plaintiff suffered no actual damage. Cox v. Ross, 56 Miss. 481.

Chalmers, J., said: "The penalty denounced against an officer for failing to return final process by the code is strictly in the nature of a penalty to be inflicted on him for neglect of duty, and while it inures to the benefit of the plaintiff, it is in no manner dependent upon any actual damage sustained, as is well settled by former adjudications of this court. Steen v. Briggs, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 326; Morehead v. Holliday, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 625; Beall v. Shattuck, 53 Miss. 358. On bond the rule would be different. Dailey v. State, 56 Miss. 475."

But if not given as a penalty but as a substitute for an action at law, see Hustick v. Allen, 1 N. J. L. 168. Whatever would be a defense to an action would be to a motion. Billingsly v. Rankin, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 82. That it does not appear that the property on which he failed to levy was subject to levy under this rule would be a defense. Smothers v. Field, 62 Tex. 435; Robinson v. Schmidt, 48 Tex. 13; Young v. Donaldson, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 52.

Such a fine, though its object is to pay the claim of the plaintiff in the writ is not a debt within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt. Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 628. And a judgment against an officer on summary process is in no sense assets of the original defendant, and is for the benefit only of the creditor in whose favor the rule was made. Ford v. Perkerson, 59 Ga. 359.

A personal remedy is only allowable where expressly provided for. Bushnell v. Eaton, Wright (Ohio) 720; Duncan v. Drakely, 10 Ohio 45.

It will not be extended by implication against his sureties. Soule v.

12. The Bond.¹—A sheriff and the sureties on his bond are liable for his breaches of duty arising out of the performance of his ministerial duties.² These acts include those which the laws authorize him to perform and which are considered among the duties of his office.³

The distinction originally was between acts done virtute officii, defined as those within the limits of his authority, but which he performed improperly, and for which his sureties were liable, and acts done colore officii, defined as acts of such a character that his office gave him no authority to perform them, for which his sureties were not liable.⁴

Worshan, 22 La. Ann. 78; Hernandez v. Hugh, 22 La. Ann. 245.

The statute must be strictly followed. Robinson v. Schmidt, 48 Tex. 13; and strictly construed. Connell v. Lewis, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 251; Conkling v. Parker, 10 Ohio St. 28.

The execution to sustain such a proceeding must conform strictly to the judgment rendered. Fisher v. Franklin, 38 Kan. 251.

Not more than one fine can be imposed on a sheriff for failing to return one execution. Tomkins v. Dounman, 6 Munf. (Va.) 557.

Where a sheriff receives a writ and goes out of office before returning it, he is not liable to amercement for the non-return. State v. Woodside, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 296. Contra, Armstrong v. Grant, 7 Kan. 285; Bell v. Thorpe, 44 Ga. 509. See also Stansbury v. Patent Cloth Mfg. Co., 5 N. J. L. 433.

In some States a sheriff cannot on motion be amerced for a false return, but resort must be had to an action. Bank of Gallipolis v. Domigan, 12 Ohio 221.

1. See generally, BONDS, vol. 2, p. 448.

2. But he is not liable for failing to keep the peace, whereby the plaintiff is injured by a mob. South v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 396.

3. People v. Dikeman, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 93; for acts as a special commissioner, Hubbard v. Elden, 43 Ohio St. 380; as distributee of funds under a partition, State v. Jones, 26 Mo. App. 190; as trustee under an appointment of court, State v. Griffith, 63 Mo. 545; State v. Taylor, 6 Mo. App. 277; State v. Davis, 88 Mo. 585; for his defaults as tax collector, where this is a part of his official duty, sureties on his bond as sheriff may be held liable, State v. Powell, 44 Mo. 436; State v. Hill, 17 W. Va. 452; State v. Matthews, 57

Miss. 1; Hewlett v. Schenck, 82 N. Car. 234; although another bond was exacted from him besides his bond as sheriff, New Orleans v. Gauthreaux, 36 La. Ann. 109 (contra, People v. Burkhardt, 76 Cal. 606); but not where he has no right to collect the taxes, Anderson v. Thompson, 10 Bush (Ky.) 132; Greenwell v. Com., 78 Ky. 320; his sureties are not liable for his acts as an administrator, this being considered outside the duties of his office, Robinson v. State, 47 Miss. 423.

In Prairie v. Worth, 78 N. Car. 169, it is said that the sheriff takes office subject to the power of the legislature to control his duties as the public good may require, and every officer gives bond affected with notice of this right of sovereignty; and that it enters into and becomes an express part of his contract with the State, and is as binding on the bondsmen as an express condition.

The sureties are not liable to printers for their fees in advertising notices of sale and other official notices, although the sheriff is required by law to make such advertisements and they would have been liable if he had failed to do so. Brown v. Phipps, 14 Miss. 51; Com. v. Swope, 45 Pa. St. 535.

In a State where the sheriff is also tax collector, and a statute authorized the county court, where there was a vacancy in the office of sheriff, from any other cause than the incumbent's death, to appoint a person to collect the taxes, and the sheriff was removed, but no person was thus appointed to collect the taxes, it was held that the sheriff must proceed to collect them notwithstanding his removal, and the sureties on his official bond were liable for his failure to do so. Ballard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 14.

4. The distinction is still recognized but the general rule puts a larger

His sureties are liable for an escape,¹ for a failure to levy,² to return process,³ to deliver goods to the defendant on discontinuance of the action,⁴ for non-payment of money collected as sheriff,⁵ for loss of attachment by his negligence or voluntary act,⁶ for damage to property seized caused by his negliliability on his sureties. In Gerber v. Ackley, 37 Wis. 43, the officer took goods, claiming to act by virtue of a writ of replevin, when in fact he had no writ, and the court by Cole, J., said: "The surety is only liable for his official acts done or omitted, in other words for those done virtute officii. A distinction is taken by the authorities between an act done colore officii and one done virtute officii. See Coupey v. Henley, 2 Esp. 540; Seeley v. Birdsell, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 267; Morris v. Van Voast, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 283. "Acts done virtute officii are where they are within the authority of the officer, but in doing them he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence the law reposes in him, whilst acts done colore officii are where they are of such a nature that his office gives him no authority to do them." Pratt, J., in People v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 137. "In order to show that the marshal violated some duty resting upon him as marshal, it must appear that he was acting under process and not merely claiming to act in the execution of process. If the marshal had a legal writ issued by a justice which commanded him to seize this identical property, that would afford him full protection unless he acted wrongfully in executing it. Griffith v. Smith, 22 Wis. 646; Bates v. Hamlin, 22 Wis. 669. If he had no such writ he cannot be said to be acting virtute officii and in the discharge of an official duty."

Wise*, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 142; Thomas v. Browder, 33 Tex. 783; Turner v. Collier, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 89; Bacas v. Hernandez, 31 La. Ann. 85; Heidenheimer v. Brent, 59 Tex. 533.

Where, holding a replevin writ, he took a deposit of money instead of bond, and embezzled the money, his sureties were held not liable, because the act was extra official. People v. Hilton, 36 Fed. Rep. 172.

For his failure to pay over funds when demanded the sureties were held liable, although they became sureties after he had come into possession of the money which he was ordered to hold subject to the order of the court. Wentz v. Ledoux, 24 La. Ann. 131; but where he had made a levy and afterwards collected and lost the money, the sureties on his bond at the time of levy were held liable, though before collection and loss he gave a new bond. Wooddell v. Bruffey, 25 W. Va. 465.

For any surplus in the sheriff's hands the sureties are liable to the defendant. State v. Clymer, 3 Houst. (Del.) 20.

Money paid to a sheriff in satisfaction of an execution, but after the return day, charges the sureties. Beale v. Commonwealth, 7 Watts (Pa.) 183; contra, on ground that the officer had no authority to receive the money. Forward v. Marsh, 18 Ala. 645; Thomas v. Browder, 33 Tex. 783.

The sureties are not liable for money paid to the sheriff by a judgment debtor to apply upon the judgment, where no process has been issued thereon. State v. Allen, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 564; nor are they liable for money deposited with the sheriff in lieu of bail by a defendant arrested on a capias, State v. Long, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 415; so where he sells personal property which he has attached, but the sale is made by agreement of the parties and not as prescribed by law, his sureties are not liable for the money. Governor v. Perrine, 23 Ala. 807; Webb v. Anspach, 3 Ohio St. 522; Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 65; but they are liable for money collected by him on an execution, though there was no judgment. *State v. His sureties are not liable for acts of the sheriff which are not a part of his official duties,⁶ nor for breaches caused by the plaintiff's acts,⁷ nor for penalties.⁸

4. Where the statute entitled a purchaser of mortgaged chattels to possession on his compliance with the terms of the mortgage, a liability is incurred by the delivery by the officer before such compliance. Stifer v. State, 114 Ind. 291.

So, if an officer sells mortgaged property under a second lien, and delivers possession to the purchaser without requiring his compliance with the conditions of a prior mortgage, the officer and his sureties are liable. Kackley v. State, 91 Ind. 437.

10. Sherrell v. Goodrum, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 419. Where it was the duty of the outgoing sheriff to deliver unexecuted process to his successor and he did not, but collected the money, his sureties were held not liable. *State v. Where a sheriff sold property under an order of court, but did not receive the money until after his term had expired, but then held the office under a new election, and had given a new bond, and failed to pay over the money, it was held that the time of the defalcation determined the liability, and that the second bondsmen were liable. State v. McCormack, 50 Mo. 568.

Where the sheriff collected on an execution regular on its face and paid over the proceeds, and after his death the judgment was reversed, it was held that his sureties were not liable for the money collected. Clark v. Lamb, 76 Ala. 406.

In some States the sureties are liable for certain acts done after the expiration of his term. Baker v. Baldwin, 48 Conn. 131.

In those States where it is the duty of the sheriff to complete a levy which he has begun, even though this requires him to act after the expiration of his term, the liability of the sureties on his bond is extended accordingly, and if he has again been chosen and has given another bond the sureties in the first bond are, and the sureties in the second bond are not, liable for his defaults relating to such levy. Elkin v. People, 4 Ill. 207; State v. Roberts, 12 N. J. L. 114; Governor v. Cobb, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 18; Tyrel v. Wilson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 59.

Where money was received by a sheriff upon a sale under an attachment during his term of office, the sureties on his bond were held liable for his failure to pay over the money, although it was not due or demanded until after the expiration of his term. King v. Nichols, 16 Ohio St. 80; Brobst v. Killen, 16 Ohio St. 382.

Where he sold real property in partition during his first term, and received the money during the second term, it was held that the sureties for the second term were liable for the money. Ingram v. Coombs, 17 Mo. 558. See also supra, this title, Election; Appointment; Termination.

Successive Bonds.—A sheriff, having collected part of the taxes, was required before the day of payment to give a new bond; and the sureties in that bond were held liable for money previously received by him. Miller v. Moore, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 189.

Additional Sureties.—Persons who in September added their names as sureties to a sheriff's bond filed in the preceding February were held liable as if they had executed it when filed. Com. v. Adams, 3 Bush (Ky.) 41.

Omitted Signature.—Where the record of court stated that a sheriff elect and his sureties came into court and executed an official bond; and one of those named as surety who was present did not sign the bond, it was held that neither of the sureties was liable. Fletcher v. Light, 4 Bush (Ky.) 303.

Strickland*, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 354; 17 Am. Dec. 668. In State v. Colerich, 3 Ohio 487, it was held conclusive if the sureties had notice of the suit, otherwise only prima facie.

In other States, it is said to be not even prima facie evidence against the sureties. People v. Russell, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 524; Lucas v. Governor, 6 Ala. 826.

Dec. 680; and so held when it ran to the State contrary to the statute, State v. Horn, 94 Mo. 162; Huffman v. Koppelkom, 8 Neb. 344; and the sureties are as firmly bound as though the bond fulfilled all the requirements of the statute, Crawford v. Howard, 9 Ga. 314; Treasurers v. Taylor, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 524; where a sheriff's bond was conditioned for the years 1872 and 1873 and action was brought thereupon for his default in the collection of taxes for the year 1874, it was held that the sureties were not liable, notwithstanding a statute which saved bonds varying from the provisions prescribed by law. The court said: "The object" [of the statute] "was to enforce the substance of the obligation without regard to formal defects or variances. But it certainly never was the purpose of the act, to make men do that which they never undertook to do in form or substance, nor especially to do precisely the contrary of their undertaking." Prince v. McNeill, 77 N. Car. 398.

2. Deputy's Bond.—Rowe v. Richardson, 5 Barb. (N.Y.) 385; Tuttle v. Cook, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 274; Cook v. Palmer, 6 B. & C. 739. A deputy sheriff's bond to his principal is not a mere bond of indemnity against actual loss, however. Badgett v. Martin, 12 Ark. 730; Chace v. Hinman, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 452; 24 Am. Dec. 39.

Deputy.—The sheriff is liable civilly for the acts of his deputies. Watson v. Todd, 5 Mass. 271; Jentry v. Hunt, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 410; Hazard v.

Israel, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 240; Moore v. Dawney, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 127; Prosser v. Coots, 50 Mich. 262; Estes v. Williams, Cooke (Tenn.) 413; Murrell v. Smith, 3 Dana (Ky.) 462; where the deputy assumes to act under color of his office, Harrington v. Fuller, 18 Me. 277; State v. Moore, 19 Mo. 369. He is liable for the default of a deputy who, being duly authorized by the plaintiff on receipt of the writ, to settle the suit by receiving an order on a particular person, receives the amount of the claim in money from the defendant and does not pay it to the plaintiff or serve the writ. Hammond v. Root, 15 Gray (Mass.) 416; for the act of his deputy, in taking more fees than allowed by law, M'Intyre v. Trumbull, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 35; for the neglect of the deputy to take a sufficient bond in replevin, Harriman v. Wilkins, 20 Me. 93; for the act of the deputy in taking goods that do not belong to the defendant in the execution, Wilbur v. Strickland, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 458; Pond v. Lemon, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 152; Satterwhite v. Carson, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 549; for money collected by a deputy. Hill v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Ala. 314. An attachment is an official act of the deputy for which the sheriff is responsible. Rider v. Chick, 59 N. H. 50.

The sheriff is not liable for the services of a person employed by his deputy, to keep property attached by the latter, Dooley v. Root, 13 Gray (Mass.) 303; Krum v. King, 12 Cal. 412; Kendrick v. Smith, 31 Me. 162; Lucier v. Pierce, 60 N. H. 13; Dow v. Rowe, 58 N. H. 125; nor for the act of his deputy performed while the deputy of a former sheriff, Wilton Mfg. Co. v. Butler, 34 Me. 431; Pillsbury v. Small, 19 Me. 435; nor for the act of his deputy in accepting an order to pay over the proceeds of an execution in his hands, Moore v. Jarret, 10 Tex. 201; nor where there is a departure from the ordinary execution of his office by the deputy under the instructions of the plaintiff, Gorham v. Gale, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 739; nor for money received by the deputy on a case in which the execution had not then been lodged in his office.

IV. FEES AND COMPENSATION.—The sheriff's fees are provided for by statute; are paid by the party for whom the services are rendered, and, if he prevails in the proceeding, are taxed as a part of his costs.¹ He may require prepayment of his fees.²

Chelsea v. Holloway, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 164.

A sheriff's liability for such default is not terminated by the expiration of his term, when the execution of process is commenced before that time but not finished until afterwards. Hill v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Ala. 314; Larned v. Allen, 13 Mass. 295; Doliver v. Collingwood, 15 R. I. 510.

At common law a stranger could not sue a deputy sheriff for the breach or non-performance of his official duties, but only the sheriff, Harlan v. Lumsden, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 86; White v. Johnson, 1 Wash. (Va.) 159; Stone v. Chambers, 1 Strobb. (S. Car.) 117. Contra, that he could sue either, Draper v. Arnold, 12 Mass. 449; Estey v. Chandler, 7 Mass. 464.

A joint action will not lie against a sheriff and his deputy for the acts of the deputy. Moulton v. Norton, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 286; Campbell v. Phelps, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 62.

And see generally DEPUTY, vol. 5, p. 623.

Sheriff as Collecting Agent.—The sureties on a sheriff's bond are not liable for his defaults as a collecting agent, he being regarded as a mere agent of the plaintiff. Kinnard v. Willmore, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 619; Brumble v. Brown, 71 N. Car. 513. Contra, McLean v. Buchanan, 8 Jones (N. Car.) 444. If he receives a note for collection and fails to account for it there is a prima facie presumption that he either collected it or converted it to his own use. Brumble v. Brown, 71 N. Car. 513. If he shows judgment was recovered on note, he sufficiently accounts for it. Miller v. Pharr, 87 N. Car. 396. He is bound to use reasonable diligence in the collection. He must obtain judgment and execution within a reasonable time, and if debt is lost in consequence of his neglect, he is responsible. Kinnard v. Willmore, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 619.

In Maryland he was responsible for the amount of officer's and lawyer's fees put into his hands for collection within the time limited by law, unless he made return to the officers and lawyers within a prescribed time, Mantz v. Collins, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 65.

1. Boswell v. Dingley, 4 Mass. 413. He has a right to call on the plaintiff's attorney for them, Adams v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 252; Burnham v. Savings Bank, 5 N. H. 446; unless the attorney has informed him that he would not be responsible, Heath v. Bates, 49 Conn. 342; 44 Am. Rep. 234; if the sheriff recovers judgment against the attorney, he cannot then look to the plaintiff, Ousterhout v. Day, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 113.

Sometimes a statute provides a summary remedy for the sheriff against the plaintiff who has discontinued an action. Robertson v. Smith, 37 Ga. 604.

Where the fees are not a part of the judgment and costs in the execution, and the execution is paid, the officer cannot levy for subsequent fees. Craft v. Merrill, 14 N. Y. 456, 463; Jackson v. Anderson, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 474. Contra, Howard v. Levy Court, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 558.

An agreement by the sheriff to accept less than the amount of his fees, if the person to whom they are charged would allow the amount thus reduced, is without consideration. Van Nest v. Lott, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 130.

When the sheriff has money in his hands collected on execution, he may retain from this the amount due him from the same plaintiff on another execution. Robertson v. Smith, 37 Ga. 604.

An act requiring the sheriff to pay his fees into the county treasury was held unconstitutional in Fulk v. Board of Commissioners, 46 Ind. 150.

He cannot claim fees for serving an execution contrary to the directions of the plaintiff. Oswitchee Co. v. Hope, 5 Ala. 629.

Where he returned an execution satisfied, with no detailed return thereon of his doings, and without itemizing his fees, he was held liable to the defendant for the proceeds, above what was necessary to satisfy the judgment. Harrington v. Hill, 51 Vt. 44.

2. Prepayment.—Jones v. Gupton, 65 N. Car. 48; Adams v. Dinkgrave, 26

Poundage is the amount allowed a sheriff or other officer for commissions on the money made by virtue of an execution.¹ The amount varies in the different States. At common law, if the debtor paid the creditor before levy, the sheriff was not entitled to poundage, but if so paid after levy he was entitled to it.² In the United States the rule varies as to how far an officer must have proceeded to be entitled to poundage, when the parties among themselves have disposed of the execution.³

La. Ann. 626; Haas v. Gaddis, 1 Wash. 89; but if prepayment is not demanded he cannot refuse to make return until they are paid, Wit v. Shoonmaker, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 460; and is bound to serve as though prepaid. Carlisle v. Soule, 44 Vt. 265.

Where a judgment debtor was imprisoned and the creditor refused on demand of sheriff payment of jail fees for board weekly in advance, the sheriff was justified in allowing the prisoner to go at large. Gill v. Miner, 13 Ohio St. 182.

1. Poundage.—Bouvier Law Dict. Originally this was a charge out of the debt, Woodgate v. Knatchbrill, 2 T. R. 148; but by Stat. 43 Geo. III it was added to the debt.

If the sale realizes only a part of the debt he is entitled to a commission only on the sum made, Bryan v. Buckmaster, 1 Ill. 408; Black v. Ely, 6 N. J. L. 232; and if the proceeds of the sale are more than the debt he has only a percentage on amount of the debt. Sumickson v. Gale, 16 N. J. L. 21. If judgment is reduced by the court, he gets commission only on the reduced amount. Campbell v. Cothran, 56 N. Y. 279; Shaw v. Brown, 41 Tex. 446. Where the goods were taken from him on legal process he was held entitled to full poundage, Baldwin v. Shaw, 35 Vt. 273.

Where he levied an execution and it was suspended by decree and he sold afterwards under venditioni exponas, he was given full poundage on sale but no additional poundage for the levy. Boyd v. Harper, 3 Bush (Ky.) 142; but where it was sold after levy, by another officer under decree, first officer was not given poundage. Harris v. Pettigrew, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 596.

2. Alchin v. Welles, 5 T. R. 470; Bullen v. Ansley, 6 Esp. 111.

3. That he is not entitled if execution is paid by defendant to plaintiff before levy, Barnard v. Stevens, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 429; 16 Am. Dec. 733; Hildreth v.

Ellice, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 192; Snell v. Woodford, 9 Dana (Ky.) 128, that it must be paid to the sheriff to entitle him to poundage, Vance v. Bank of Columbus, 2 Ohio, 214; Wynne v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 45 Miss. 569; that he is not entitled to it unless he receives the money, Com. v. Brown, 5 Call (Va.) 569; that he is entitled to full poundage on the amount paid after levy where the parties settled among themselves, Parsons v. Bowdoin, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 14; Bolton v. Lawrence, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 435; Pritchard v. Bank of California, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 184; Woodruff v. Imperial F. Ins. Co., 90 N. Y. 521; that he is entitled to no claim for commission unless the service is rendered, Barnes v. Jackson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 416; but where he sold property to the plaintiff and credited amount of bid on the execution without receiving any money, he was held entitled to full poundage, Arnold v. Dinsmore, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 235; Litchfield v. Ashford, 70 Iowa 393; contra, Coleman v. Ross, 14 Oregon 349; and where he returned execution satisfied by instruction of the plaintiff, he was held not entitled to poundage. Hernndon v. Mason, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 575. In New Jersey if the parties by mutual consent after levy dispose of the case, the sheriff is entitled to his full poundage. Sturges v. Lackawanna, etc., R. Co., 27 N. J. L. 424.

In Indiana, he is not entitled to it, if payment be made before levy, though he would be, if the payment were made after levy, Pomroy v. Harter, 1 McLean (U. S.) 448; Miles v. Ohaver, 14 Ind. 206; Kirland v. Robinson, 24 Ind. 105; and the same rule exists in Missouri. Gaty v. Vogel, 40 Mo. 553; Gordon v. Maupin, 10 Mo. 352; 47 Am. Dec. 118; Irwin v. Milburn, 10 Mo. 456; Gates v. Buck, 75 Mo. 688.

Where a sheriff, by instruction from plaintiff, received one-sixth of the amount of an execution in full settle-

When he arrests a defendant on a ca. sa. he is entitled to full poundage.¹ He is not entitled to double compensation for the same act.² He may have a reasonable compensation for the expense of keeping and selling goods attached before applying goods to the execution,³ if the statute allows ment, he was held only entitled to poundage on that amount. Pierce v. Delesdernier, 17 Me. 431. He is not entitled to it unless the money is paid before return day of writ or while he has process in his hands authorizing him to levy, Lofland v. Jefferson, 4 Harr. (Del.) 303; Kincaid v. Smyth, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 496.

1. Gardner v. Neal, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 85; although the defendant is discharged on poor debtor proceedings, Boswell v. Dingley, 4 Mass. 410; or under insolvent laws, Adams v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 252; or although ca. sa. issued irregularly where the sheriff, notwithstanding the regularity, incurs the risk of being made liable for an escape. Scott v. Shaw, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 378. If defendant dies while in the sheriff's custody, the sheriff is not entitled to poundage, Flack v. State, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 286.

2. Where he holds several executions and makes one seizure he cannot charge a levy fee on each writ. Thrower v. Vaughan, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 18.

Where he brought three prisoners on one trip, or might have done so, he was only allowed one mileage, Barnes v. Marion Co., 54 Iowa 482; contra, where he was held entitled to mileage for each one, Sherman v. Santa Barbara Co., 59 Cal. 486; Evans v. State, 85 Tenn. 269.

Where he made one trip in serving seven subpoenas he was allowed mileage for one trip only. Redfield v. Shelby Co., 64 Iowa 11.

On various warrants to assess damages which a statute required to be tried before the same jury, the fees of the sheriff for service, summoning jurors, and notifying the parties, were held to be the same as if one warrant, and to be apportioned among the parties. Wilmarth v. Knight, 14 Gray (Mass.) 112.

He is entitled to a levying fee against each of several defendants in an execution. State v. Burton, 4 Harr. (Del.) 457.

Where he served eighteen citations on the defendant at the same time he was given mileage in each case. Gull, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, 69 Tex. 519; and where in several suits the defendants lived close together so that only one trip was necessary he got mileage in each case. McGee v. Dillon, 103 Pa. St. 433.

Where he levied on separate parcels of real estate he was given fees for each levy. Young v. Miller, 63 Cal. 302.

In a suit against a corporation, where the sheriff attached divers parcels of real estate belonging, respectively, to individual members of the corporation who were liable in their individual capacity for debts of the corporation, he was not allowed a separate fee for each parcel attached. Washington Bank v. Boston Glass Manufactory, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 375.

He cannot charge plaintiff with expenses incurred in holding property after he is notified that the plaintiff has released his claim. Hall v. U.S. Reflector Co., 34 Hun (N. Y.) 467.

He has no authority to insure and ask reimbursement for premiums paid. Owens v. Davis, 15 La. Ann. 22.

He may charge for storage, Eastman v. Coös Bank, 1 N. H. 23; and has a claim for reimbursement of money necessarily paid to preserve the property, Hanness v. Smith, 21 N. J. L. 495; and expenses incurred in maintaining animals attached, may be recovered of plaintiff if judgment is given it.¹ His fees for travel are to be computed by the distance on the usual way traveled.² He is entitled to his legal fees,³ and these include a great variety of expenses,⁴ not specially provided for, but covered by some general provision of the statute. He is not entitled to extra compensation or reward for doing that which is merely his duty.⁵

for defendant, Phelps v. Campbell, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 59; Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135. Bartholomess*, 67 Ga. 452.

Ramsey*, 2 Disney (Ohio) 334; and is not allowed for mere care of property outside of statutory fees and salary. In McKeon v. Harsfall, 88 N. Y. 431, it was held that he was not entitled to keeper's fees, these depending on agreement recoverable only by action, but that he might employ an attorney if necessary. Mayhew v. Duncan, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 87; and be allowed expenses incurred in regaining property taken from him without his fault, Rhoads v. Woods, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 471; Newman v. Wilson, 1 La. Ann. 45.

2. Pierce v. Delesdernier, 17 Me. 431. Where a statute provided that he should receive mileage for "every mile necessarily traveled in going only in executing any warrant of arrest, etc., taking prisoner before magistrate, etc." he was held entitled both for mileage in going to make arrest and for that traveled in bringing prisoner from place of arrest to a magistrate, Allen v. Napa Co., 82 Cal. 187; but the same court did not allow mileage for traveling in different directions looking for one criminal. Broughton v. Santa Barbara Co., 65 Cal. 257.

3. Hicks v. Moore, 2 Ga. 240; Burnham v. Savings Bank, 5 N. H. 446; King v. Shepherd, 68 Iowa 215. An agreement between the sheriff and the parties in a suit to accept a certain sum in lieu of all fees for services afterward to be performed, is void, Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 40 Iowa 200; as is an agreement for compensation in excess of that fixed by law. Burk v. Webb, 32 Mich. 173. Where the fees are specifically fixed by statute the court has no discretion, and can give no more, Irvin v. Alexander, 63 Ill. 528; Fletcher v. Aldrich, 81 Mich. 186; Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. East Alabama R. Co., 81 Ala. 94.

4. If the expense of recovering property was caused by his own neglect in losing it, it will not be allowed, Gill v. Wilkinson, 30 Ga. 760; Martin Co. v. Pipher, 98 Ind. 124; nor will it be allowed if it is extra work, but included in an item for which fees are fixed—e. g., extra work in carrying meals or caring for prisoners which the courts decide are included in an allowance for board, Schneider v. Sears, 13 Oregon 69; Bynum v. Greene Co., 100 Ind. 90; Benton Co. v. Harman, 101 Ind. 551; Republic Co. v. Kindt, 16 Kan. 157; Grubb v. Woodbury Co., 48 Iowa 404; Ford v. Howard Co., 3 Mo. 309; Stockton v. Shustea, 11 Cal. 113; but where, by act of the legislature, $100 was given sheriffs for their fees in criminal cases, it was held this was not meant to be their sole compensation, because there are many services rendered by sheriffs not provided for in the fee bill, Parker v. Robertson, 14 La. Ann. 249.

Y.) 44; Smith v. Whildin, 10 Pa. St. 39; 49 Am. Dec.

He is liable in an action to refund excessive or illegal fees.¹

V. MARSHAL.—The general duties of the United States marshal are substantially similar to those of the sheriff.² He holds office 572; or if they are rendered out of his precinct. Brown v. Godfrey, 33 Vt. 120; People v. Rainey, 89 Ill. 34; Blake v. Baldwin, 54 Conn. 5.

He is not entitled to profits made in using property attached. Price v. Cutts, 29 Ga. 142; 74 Am. Dec. 52.

Where a prisoner who was sick, promised the jailer if the latter would attend altogether to the prisoner instead of devoting his spare time to his business as a blacksmith, to pay him therefor twice as much as he could earn by his work, it was held that the contract was valid. Trundle v. Riley, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 396.

A deputy sheriff was held not entitled to compensation offered by an individual for procuring the return from another State of a fugitive from justice from his own State where the statute fixed the compensation of a State agent empowered for such a purpose, and forbade a public officer to receive any additional compensation for such service. Day v. Townsend, 70 Iowa 538. Contra, Morrel v. Quarels, 35 Ala. 544.

1. Jackson v. Smith, 52 N. H. 10; he is liable for commissions received and retained by him on an unauthorized sale, Shropshire v. Pullen, 3 Bush (Ky.) 512.

The payment of illegal fees without protest is not a waiver of the right to recover a statutory penalty. McClure v. Locke, 61 N. H. 14. De jure sheriff can recover the emoluments of his office received by the de facto sheriff during his usurpation. Mayfield v. Moore, 53 Ill. 428; 5 Am. Rep. 52; Boyter v. Dodsworth, 6 T. R. 681; Glascock v. Lyons, 20 Ind. 1; 83 Am. Dec. 299; Currey v. Wright, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 247; McCue v. Wappel Co., 56 Ga. 598; contra, Stuhr v. Curran, 44 N. J. L. 181; 43 Am. Rep. 353.

Subrogation.—The sheriff, who for a default, has become liable, and has paid to the execution creditor the sum due on an execution which he has for collection, is subrogated to the creditor's rights against the debtor, Heilig v. Lemley, 74 N. Car. 250; 21 Am. Rep. 489; Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 1; Staples v. Fox, 45 Miss. 667; Bellows v. Allen, 23 Vt. 169; where the sheriff left the property with the defendant who removed it from the county and the sheriff paid the execution, the court issued a new execution for the benefit of the sheriff to be levied on real estate of the defendant. People v. Onondaga, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 79.

Where the sureties on a sheriff's bond were compelled to pay for the default of the sheriff's deputy in taking indemnity fund instead of a bond, they were held to be subrogated to the rights of the sheriff against the deputy and his sureties and also against the indemnity fund. Blalock v. Peake, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 323.

Where the sheriff made an illegal levy, an attachment bond having been filed, and the sheriff has paid the judgment, he is subrogated to defendant's rights for what he has paid out. Shaw v. Holmes, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 692.

He is not authorized to pay money due on a judgment and keep it open for his own benefit. Rutland v. Pippen, 7 Ala. 469; Finn v. Stratton, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 364; Reed v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 426; 5 Am. Dec. 287; Hill v. Sewell, 27 Ark. 15.

Miller*, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 740; Fearnster v. Withrow, 12 W. Va. 611; see Sanford v. McLean, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 117.

2. He cannot bind a vessel for repairs not absolutely necessary to the preservation of the vessel while in his custody. It is his duty merely to keep the vessel as he received her. The Sultana, Brown's Adm. 35.

The marshal is not bound to hold an execution the sixty days it might run before making a return: the presumption that he did his duty is not overcome by the fact that he returned the process the day he received it. Bassett v. Orr, 7 Biss. (U. S.) 297.

Bailiffs.—In States where a sheriff may, by writing, empower any person to execute process, a marshal may do the same. U. S. v. Fayette Co., 2 Abb. (U. S.) 265.

A bailiff is a special deputy of the marshal. In re Crittenden, 2 Flip. (U. S.) 212; Tug E. W. Gorgas, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 460.

for four years,¹ and in the event of his death his deputies continue to act in his name until his successor is qualified; and a default of the deputy during this time constitutes a breach of the marshal's bond.² In case of a marshal's removal, or the expiration of his term, he or his deputies may execute all process then in his hands.³

If the marshal or his deputy is a party to a suit the process must be executed by a disinterested third person appointed by the court.⁴ It is his duty to keep the peace at national elections and protect the United States supervisors.⁵

The compensation of the marshal is a fixed salary, exclusive of expenses, and a suitable compensation for his deputies.⁶

VI. CONSTABLE.—The office of constable is one of great antiquity.⁷ At common law it was elective,⁸ and the constable's principal duties were police duties.⁹ His term was for a Simonton*, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 585.

But where he has committed a prisoner to a county jail under a mitimus, he has no further control over the prisoner and is not responsible for an escape. U. S. v. Harden, 4 Hughes (U. S.) 455.

The court will not direct him to amend his return. Steamer v. Circassian, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 128.

Acts After His Term.—He may do certain acts after his term has expired. U. S. v. Strobach, 4 Woods (U. S.) 592.

The petit constables were chosen at the court-leet, and if not so chosen were appointed by the justices of the peace. Comyn's Dig., Constable B; 1 Dickinson's Justice 475. By statute in England magistrates were empowered to appoint special constables when a riot was likely to occur and such appointees were compelled to act under penalties.

year.¹ He was required to be an inhabitant of the place for which he was qualified to serve,² and to be duly sworn before entering upon the duties of the office.³

After justices of the peace were created the constable was the ministerial officer of the justice and was authorized to serve all warrants and præcepts within the authority of the justice.⁴

The constable for special reason, such as sickness or absence, could appoint a deputy.⁵

In the United States the name constable is applied to a class of officers, including policemen, city marshals and other officers whose duties are more generally, and perhaps exclusively, police duties. These officers are policemen, and possess in their districts the powers of the sheriff as conservators of the peace.⁶

A constable may arrest an offender without a warrant,⁷ whose arrest is necessary to prevent an immediate breach of the peace,⁸ or where a breach of the peace is committed in his presence.⁹ He may arrest without warrant an offender guilty of a felony.¹⁰

In Dows v. McGlynn, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 241, it was held that a constable to whom an execution was directed, had no power to delegate his authority to another constable.

Where a constable holding an execution delivers it to another constable, who collects the money, the second constable is liable to the plaintiff in the execution in an action for money had and received but his sureties are not liable in any form. Pettijohn v. Hudson, 4 Harr. (Del.) 178.

He should take the prisoner before a magistrate for a hearing as soon after arrest as possible.¹ It is generally provided by statute that an officer, in the execution of his duty, may command aid and that any person refusing such aid shall be liable to punishment.²

The constable, properly so called, besides having the powers above mentioned, as a peace officer, has other powers (within certain limits prescribed by the statutes of his State), similar to those of a sheriff, to act in civil proceedings. His duties and his liabilities, within the scope of his authority, are measured by the rules applied to sheriffs.³ He is declared by the statutes of many

2. These provisions do not permit the officer to commit the performance of his duty to some other person, but give him authority to associate with him persons in such number as he considers necessary to overcome resistance. Rex v. Patience, 7 C. & P. 775; 32 E. C. L. 730; People v. Moore, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 1; People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480.

It was held in Comfort v. Com., 5 Whart. (Pa.) 437, if he be resisted in the service of a capias he may raise the posse comitatus for his assistance.

3. He is bound to execute process valid on its face and not void. Billings v. Russell, 23 Pa. St. 192. He cannot avail himself of any mere irregularities in the process, not rendering it or the judgment void, to excuse his failure to execute it. Couch v. Atkinson, 32 Ala. 633. He is protected from liability in serving process valid on its face. McDonald v. Wilkie, 13 Ill. 22; 54 Am. Dec. 423; Fortner v. Flannagan, 3 Port. (Ala.) 257. If he serves process which on its face shows that the justice who issued it has no jurisdiction, he is a trespasser. Hall v. Blaisdell, 2 Ill. 332; Sasnett v. Weathers, 21 Ala. 673; Crumpton v. Newman, 12 Ala. 199.

In Morrell v. Cook, 35 Me. 207, it was held that a constable could make a legal service of a writ within his jurisdiction, although it was not directed to him, as the direction, being matter of form, is not necessary to the validity of the writ.

He should make due return of his process. Robertson v. Marshall County, 5 Gilm. (Ill.) 559, in writing and signed, Fitzgerald v. Adams, 9 Ga. 401; Shaver v. Funk, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 457; and, if the process is valid, is liable for failure to do so. Kautzler v. People, 11 Bradw. (Ill.) 610; Betts v. Baxter, 58 Miss. 329. He cannot rid himself of his duty to return the writ by transferring it to another constable to execute. Calhoun Co. Ct. v. Back, 27 Ill. 440. The return may be amended. Freeman v. States to be the proper ministerial officer of a justice of the peace, and unless other provision be made by statute, the one to serve his process.¹

The office of constable, in the United States, is generally a town office, corresponding to that of petit constable at common law. The constable is generally elected at periods varying from one to four years in the different States.² The liability on his official bond is measured by the rule applied to sheriffs' bonds.³ execution against one of them, he is a trespasser. Smith v. Tankersley, 20 Ala. 212.

If process has been superseded he is protected in serving it, unless notified of the supersedeas. Payne v. Governor, 18 Ala. 320. He cannot serve a writ where he is plaintiff. Morton v. Crane, 39 Mich. 526. He is liable for the escape of a defendant whom he has arrested on ca. sa. Abbott v. Holland, 20 Ga. 598.

Illegal Security.—A constable has no right to receive a deposit of money as security for the appearance of a defendant arrested by him upon a civil warrant, and if he does, refusing to pay it upon demand is a conversion for which an action lies. Millard v. Canfield, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 61.

Void Promise.—A promise by a constable to a debtor against whom he has an execution, that if the debtor will deliver property as security he will wait thirty days before selling it, is without consideration and void. Goodale v. Holridge, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 193.

1. Bacon Ab. Constable D.; Murfree on Sheriffs, § 1112.

The scope of his powers depends on the statutes of the different States. Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296; Lafontaine v. Greene, 17 Cal. 394. He must bring himself within the provisions of the statute, and cannot serve any other process. Conner v. Palmer, 13 Met. (Mass.) 302; Hart v. Huckins, 5 Mass. 260; Tilley v. Damon, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 247. When acting outside of these limits he is not vested with official character. People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199.

Where A was appointed a policeman with the powers of a constable at a theater, under the provisions of a statute authorizing such appointment, it was held that his power was not confined to the space within the walls of the theater, but extended to the environs so far as the special vigilance of an officer might be required to keep the peace and preserve order among persons frequenting the theater. Com. v. Hastings, 9 Met. (Mass.) 259.

2. If he ceases to be a resident of the town during the term for which he is chosen, he vacates the office. Barre v. Greenwich, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 129.

Some States provide a punishment, as at common law, for one who, being elected, refuses to serve. Massachusetts Pub. Stat., ch. 27, § 112.

Sale of Office.—The sale of the office is contrary to public policy, and a note executed for the price is void. Meredith v. Ladd, 2 N. H. 517; Groton v. Waldo, 11 Me. 306; 26 Am. Dec. 530.

The vote of a town, that whoever "should make the lowest bid for collecting the taxes" would be the constable, is not the choice of such person for that office, because the electors vote for no particular person. Crowell v. Whittier, 39 Me. 530.

Special Constables.—There is a provision in the statutes of most States for the appointment of special constables. Where the justices of the peace had authority under the statute, "in cases of emergency," to appoint a special constable, it was held that the justices were the exclusive judges of the necessity of such appointment. Moles v. State, 24 Ala. 672.

3. The liability is fixed by the terms of the bond and the statutes in force at the time. Freudenstien v. McNier, 81 Ill. 208.

The sureties may be liable, though the bond varies from the statutory bond. Prince v. McNeill, 77 N. Car. 398.

In a suit on the bond the constable is not permitted to deny that he is an officer. Shaw v. Havekluft, 21 Ill. 127; nor can the sureties take advantage of a neglect to swear the constable, or to approve his bond. Musselman v.

His fees depend upon the statutory regulations of his State.¹ He may hold another office not incompatible with that of constable.²

Com., 7 Pa. St. 240; nor can they object that the security was not filed within the statutory time. Dutton v. Kelsey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 615.

The sureties are not liable for an act of the constable's prior to the time when the bond takes effect. Bryan v. Kelly, 85 Ala. 569. Where a demand was put in a constable's hands for collection in 1839 and he committed a breach of duty in not collecting it that year, and he was reappointed for 1840 and committed a like breach during that year, it was held the injured person had an election to resort to either bond or to both bonds and might recover his full damages in either suit. State v. Wall, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 20. Where a constable receives an execution during his first term returnable after the expiration of that term, and he is chosen for a second term and gives bond for that term, the sureties on the bond for the first term are not liable for his failure to pay over the money on the return day, because the default did not occur during the term covered by the bond. Warren v. State, 11 Mo. 583.

Scope of Liability.—If the act is committed under color and by virtue of his office he and his sureties are liable. Jewell v. Mills, 3 Bush (Ky.) 62; Lowell v. Parker, 10 Met. (Mass.) 309; and it is immaterial so far as the sureties' liability is concerned that the act was instigated wholly by private malice and was in no way connected with his duties as constable. Clancy v. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa 740; 7 Am. St. Rep. 508.

His sureties are liable for his levy on exempt property, McElhaney v. Gilleland, 30 Ala. 183; for his act in levying on the goods of a stranger to the writ, Brunott v. McKee, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 513; Walsh v. People, 6 Ill. App. 204; Horan v. People, 10 Ill. App. 2; Archer v. Noble, 3 Me. 418; for damages by reason of his negligence, to goods seized by him and in his hands by virtue of a writ. Witkowski v. Herp, 82 Cal. 604.

The sureties are not liable for money collected by the constable, except by virtue of process, when such collection is no part of his required duty, Henckler v. Monroe Co. Ct., 27 Ill. 39; White

v. Com., 3 Dana (Ky.) 462; Bogart v. Green, 8 Mo. 115; Treasurers v. Temples, 2 Spears (S. Car.) 48; Crittenden v. Terrill, 2 Head (Tenn.) 588; nor are they liable for his failure to pay to the plaintiff money intrusted to him (the constable) for the purpose after the writ was served, Boston v. Moore, 3 Allen (Mass.) 126.

In State v. Stephens, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 92; State v. Eskridge, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 411, State v. Wall, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 11, the sureties were held liable for the constable's failure through his default to collect notes in his hands for collection.

The sureties held not liable where the constable purchased property from the judgment debtor, and, as a part of the price, agreed to pay the judgment, which he failed to do, Hill v. Kemble, 9 Cal. 71; nor are they responsible for an act not done in his official capacity, Snapp v. Corn, 2 Pa. St. 49.

1. He cannot generally recover fees for a mere levy without a sale. Pixley v. Butts, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 421. He may receive a compensation agreed on to go out of his county to serve a warrant without being liable for taking illegal fees. People v. Rainey, 89 Ill. 34. He cannot recover on a quantum meruit for services, the fees for which are fixed by statute, Wilcoxson v. Andrew, 66 Mich. 553; but he may if the statute does not prescribe the fees, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 149. Where a constable defended an action to protect his levy, the plaintiff in the execution having had notice of his so doing and having succeeded, paid his attorney from the proceeds of the levy, and retained the sum so paid, it was held he was justified in doing so. Johnson v. Haynes, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 303.

2. It has been held that he could be a justice of the peace. Com. v. Kirby, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 577; contra, Chapman v. Shaw, 3 Me. 372; Pooler v. Reed, 73 Me. 129.

It is quite generally provided by statute that he shall not make any writ, declaration, etc., in an action; under such a statute, which mentioned "sheriffs" only, it was held that constables were included. Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

I. DEFINITION.—A sale is an exchange of a commodity for its equivalent in money.¹

In the absence of a contrary indication, the term "sheriff's sales" will herein be used in its ordinary generic sense—namely, as applying to official sales by the sheriff, deputy, constable, coroner, high bailiff, or marshal.²

A judicial sale is a sale made in pursuance of a mandate of a competent court by an officer therefor authorized.³ This, in effect, includes generically every sheriff's sale that requires confirmation by the court; and conversely.⁴

1. The command, "feri facias," etc., "cause to be made out of the defendant's goods the sum," etc., means "raise the cash." 3 Bl. Com. 417. No credit can be granted except by consent of the parties, special mandate of the court, or statutory exception. For collation of statutes, and decisions thereon, defining the rights and liabilities of the sheriff, the purchaser and the parties, see infra, this title, Conducting the Sale—Cash or Credit; The Purchaser's Title—When a Lienholder Purchases.

2. In some statutes, the word "sheriff" includes "constable." Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198; Hume v. Norris, 5 Oregon 478.

3. Abb. L. Dict.; Black L. Dict.; Bouv. L. Dict.; Burrill L. Dict.; Rappalje & Law. L. Dict., Art. "Judicial Sale."

4. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 208, also p. 209, note, quoting in extenso from the opinion in Andrews v. Scotton, 2 Bland (Md.) 629.

Market Overt.—A leading case distinguishing a sheriff's sale from a judicial sale, is that of Griffith v. Fowler, 18 Vt. 390, wherein Redfield, J., observes that the rigorous English doctrine that a sale in market overt passes an absolute title to the chattel, does not apply to any sheriff's sale in Vermont; the purchaser acquiring only the execution debtor's interest. So also in Massachusetts. Dame

II. PRELIMINARIES—1. Sheriff's Duty as Bailee.—A sheriff in possession of personal property under a levy is bound to exercise the care usually bestowed upon such property by prudent owners.¹ If, by his undue delay, the property is depressed, or the title passes to an assignee in bankruptcy, he is liable to the execution creditor for the value, if this does not exceed the amount of the execution.²

2. Cognizance of Nullity—a. JUSTIFICATION UNDER PROCESS.—Although it be a rule of common law, and in some States even prescribed by statute, that the sheriff may justify seizure under an execution regular upon its face, whatever be the defects in the previous proceedings, it is his duty, before appraisal or advertisement, to heed all facts ascertainable by due vigilance, affecting his power to sell.³ He is presumed to know the pertinent

v. Baldwin, 8 Mass. 518; and in New York. Wheelwright v. Depeyster, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 480; 3 Am. Dec. 345. Chancellor Kent even affirms that the law of markets overt does not exist in this country. 2 Kent's Com. 324. See also Kent's Com. (13th ed.), note 1. Where two churches agreed that a lot in dispute should be sold by the sheriff and the settlement be made the judgment of the court, it was held that such a sale was not a judicial sale. Doyle v. African Meth. Church, 43 Ga. 400.

1. His liability for negligence is not that of an insurer, but of an ordinary bailee for custody and sale. Sherman and Redf. Neg., § 621; Browning v. Hanford, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 591; 40 Am. Dec. 369. Such property need not be taken into his actual possession, provided it be forthcoming to answer the exigencies of the writ. Dorrance v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 160.

Statutes either specifically (like Massachusetts Pub. Stat., ch. 161, §§ 90-95) prescribe for attachment, immediate appraisal, and sale of live animals and perishable property, or generally (like Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 1758) "at such time and place and in such manner as sound discretion may warrant."

In Arizona, a levy may be made on animals running in a range by making a reasonable estimate in presence of two credible persons, and giving notice to the owner or his herder, and filing a copy in the county recorder's office; and the execution purchaser may pen them and select, etc. Arizona Ex. Law of 1889, p. 39, §§ 9, 15.

In Missouri, if no receiver be appointed to hold the account books, etc., the sheriff shall act, and when required, give security other than his official bond. Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4919. In New York, a sale under execution, without leave of the court, of property in a receiver's hands, is void. French v. Pratt, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 635.

2. See infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights and Liabilities—Liability to the Plaintiff. Crawford v. Word, 7 Ga. 445.

In England, however, the sheriff is consequently liable to the plaintiff only for the actual damage suffered by him. Clifton v. Hooper, 6 Q. B. 468. This has been animadverted upon as allowing the execution plaintiff to be perpetually kept out of the fruits of his judgment during the continuing solvency of the defendant, if it is impossible to show that any beyond nominal damages resulted from the failure to sell. Freeman Ex. (2d ed.), § 304.

The sheriff is liable to be amerced for laches, although no vend. exp. has been issued. See infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights and Liabilities—Amercement.

In Jeanes v. Wilkins, 1 Ves. 195, the court by Ld. Ch. Hardwicke said: "A vend. ex., though a proper writ, is not of necessity, being rather to compel the sheriff, when guilty of laches, to do what he has authority to do, than to give him a new authority." But compare Porter v. Neelan, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 108.

3. See infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights and Liabilities—Liability to the Defendant.

He would be liable for conversion if he proceeded to sell after the execution defendant had tendered the amount of law and any limitations of territorial jurisdiction.¹ He is bound to recognize that if either the execution or the levy is void, the order of sale thereunder is also void, also that a sale under a void² or satisfied judgment is a nullity.³ If there be any harmful irregularities whereof he has actual or constructive notice, he proceeds at his peril.⁴

b. ADVERSE CLAIMS.—In case of complications arising from intervention of adverse third claimants of personal property levied upon, it is the sheriff's duty promptly to avail himself of the appropriate statutory proceedings for protection and adjustment.⁵

the judgment, costs and fees on a sale, on the pretext that the amount was insufficient. Tiffany v. St. John, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 153.

But if the defendant simply pays the amount of the judgment to the execution plaintiff before the time for sale, he is liable to the sheriff for the fees allowed in case of a levy. Morse v. Gibbons, 43 Cal. 377.

Where a sheriff, believing he could not postpone, conducted the sale in great haste, in absence of the owner of the greater part of the judgment, and the price was only one-twelfth of the value, the sale was set aside. Kauffman v. Morriss, 60 Tex. 119.

1. Under Alabama Code, 1886, § 2882, a fi. fa. is addressed "to any sheriff of the State." It seems, that if it be delivered to the sheriff of one county, and be by him acted under, it is invalid in the hands of the sheriff of any other county. Plant v. Anderson, 16 Fed. Rep. 914.

In Georgia, a whole tract of land divided by the county in which the execution defendant resides, can be levied on and sold as his property by the sheriff of that county, but not by the sheriff of the adjoining county. Farnbrough v. Amis, 58 Ga. 519.

In Indiana, a sale on three executions when the one first to be satisfied was wrongly issued, was held to be invalid, as based on a defective record. Brown v. McKay, 16 Ind. 484.

In Michigan, although it is irregular to issue two executions at once upon the same judgment to the sheriffs of different counties, yet a sale under one, without the other's return, is not necessarily void. Atwood v. Bearss, 45 Mich. 469.

In North Carolina, after a sale of land on one execution, a sale thereof on another, later issued on the same judgment, gives no title. Beebles v. Pate, 90 N. Car. 348.

In Tennessee, a sale is valid, made under two executions, only one of which is sufficient. Simpson v. Sparkman, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 360.

In New York, the sheriff may make a valid sale upon the junior execution, whether the senior be in his own or another's hands. Marsh v. Lawrence, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 461.

In Massachusetts, where the senior execution creditor's sale of goods was, by his direction, made on six months' credit, the sheriff keeping the goods as security, and, on the purchaser's failure, they were sold under the junior execution for cash, it was held that the first sale was invalid, and the proceeds should be applied on the junior execution. Bayley v. French, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 586.

2. Jones v. Calloway, 56 Ala. 46; Maxwell v. King, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 460; Floyd v. Goodwin, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 484; Criswell v. Ragsdale, 18 Tex. 403.

3. See infra, this title, Void Judgment.

4. See infra, this title, Effect of Irregularities—Sheriff's Liabilities.

In Georgia, it has been held to be no justification of a sheriff's suspension of the sale, that he had been notified that the defendant was adjudicated a bankrupt and that the property was exempt under the bankrupt law. Wheeler v. Redding, 55 Ga. 87.

5. See infra, this title, Liability to Third Parties. As to property in custodia legis, see EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 129.

Where a sheriff, when requested by the execution plaintiff to sell, refused on the ground (set forth in his return) that the goods were claimed by other parties, but asked of the plaintiff no indemnity, nor took any measures to

3. Injunction or Stay.—The sheriff is liable for proceeding after being served with an injunction, notice of allowance of a writ of error or of certiorari, and commanded to stop; or after being officially notified of a supersedeas or other stay.¹

4. Waiver of Formalities.—Essential formalities can be waived only by common consent of the parties.² The rule that the secure himself against the claim, it was held that he was liable to amercement; and that the burden of proof was on himself to show that goods whereof the defendant was found in possession were not liable to the levy. Harris v. Kirkpatrick, 35 N. J. L. 392.

1. As to the plaintiff's control of proceeding, see infra, this article. Plaintiff's Rights and Liabilities; Sheriff's, etc.—Liability to the Plaintiff, and Liability to the Defendant.

As to a Michigan rule of court for bidding "proceedings to enforce" a decree before its enrollment, not applying to execution sales, see Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232.

On being enjoined, the sheriff must return the writ, with a statement of his action, and the reason for his ceasing to act. Bryan v. Hubbs, 69 N. Car. 423.

Existence of an injunction sanctioned by the sheriff's own fault affords him no excuse for delay. Neal v. Price, 11 Ga. 297.

If the purchaser refuses to pay, the sheriff is not bound to make himself liable and sue the purchaser. He must, upon being enjoined to stay, etc., restore the chattels to the owner. Bisbee v. Hall, 3 Ohio 449.

An order of stay is operative from the time of service, and a sale subsequently made of part of the chattels levied on is properly declared to be naught. Bernheim v. Daggett, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 316.

In Minnesota, when the sale is enjoined, the sheriff should note the fact on the execution and simply retain his levy; if the injunction is not dissolved before the return-day, he should return the facts; if it is, he should advertise again, and sell in the ordinary way, but he should not adjourn the sale. Pettingill v. Moss, 3 Minn. 222; 74 Am. Dec. 747.

As to when a member of a partnership, who claims as exempt the property levied on, cannot make the sheriff a party to a suit to enjoin the sale, see Stout v. McNeill, 98 N. Car. 1; Mann v. Wallis, 75 Tex. 611.

In order to make the sheriff a party to a suit to restrain the sale, he must be interested in the subject-matter, and there must be no adequate remedy at law. Howell v. Foster, 122 Ill. 276; Dunn v. Baxter, 30 W. Va. 672; Driggs Bank v. Norwood, 50 Ark. 42; Swayze v. Hackettstown Nat. Bank, 44 N. J. Eq. 9.

As to the effect of alleged insolvency of the sheriff's sureties thereon, see Bentley v. Crenshaw, 85 Ga. 871. As to the effect of insolvency of parties to the judgment, see Biggerstaff v. Hoyt, 62 Mo. 481.

In Indiana, the sale of A's land under an execution against B may be enjoined. Scobey v. Walker, 114 Ind. 254. But compare, as stating the better rule, Baker v. Rinehard, 11 W. Va. 238; Searles v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 621; Davidson v. Seegar, 15 Fla. 671.

In Louisiana, an injunction granted against the sale of one undivided half of a plantation, need not prevent the sale of the other undivided half. If the sale is to be made with benefit of appraisalment, the one-half of the estimated value of the entire property is the proper basis on which the sale should be made. Thereupon the sheriff, on refusal, could be compelled by mandamus to make formal title to the half sold, and to put the purchaser in possession thereof. Losee v. De Lacey, 23 La. Ann. 287.

As to injunction against sale on seizure pending a suspensive appeal, see the complicated case, Choppin v. Blanc, 25 La. Ann. 35.

2. In South Carolina, where, at a sale of slaves levied on, the execution creditor, privately and without consent of the defendant administratrix, arranged with an insolvent bidder (a distributee of the estate) temporarily to remove them without payment, and, on a resale four years later (that was forbidden by various persons), the slaves brought only a nominal sum, it was held that, as against her, the execution must be regarded as satisfied; the effect was as if the sheriff had of formalities in forced alienations are to be strictly observed, is intended rather for the benefit of the defendant and purchaser.¹

In order to avoid hardship in dispensing justice, the provisions of merely directory statutes as to the preliminaries of the sale have sometimes been considered as waived.² But proceedings in disregard or waiver of a mandatory statute invalidate the sale.³

5. Death of a Party.—In some States, the sheriff's procedure on the death of the defendant is prescribed by statute.⁴ In some his own head waived the formalities. Richardson v. Inglesby, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 59.

The Connecticut requirement that all the appraisers be freeholders of the town, etc., cannot be waived by agreement of the parties. Chapman v. Griffin, 1 Root (Conn.) 126.

In Louisiana, the debtor's telling the sheriff at the sale that no appraisal was necessary, was held to be a sufficient waiver. Desplate v. St. Martin, 17 La. Ann. 91. Waiver by an execution debtor in failing circumstances is of no effect. Hiligsberg's Succession, 1 La. Ann. 340.

In Arkansas, the defendant's acquiescence during all the proceedings may preclude him in a collateral suit from attacking the validity of the sale. Feild v. Dortch, 34 Ark. 399.

1. As to waiver of appraisal, see infra, this title, Preliminaries—Non-Appraisalment. As to waiver of the notice, see infra, this title, The Notice—Waiver and Estoppel. See infra, this title, Sheriff's, etc.—Liability to the Defendant.

2. See infra, this title, The Notice—Effect of Want of Notice; Statutes Mandatory or Directory.

After a levy had been set aside, a sale on a new inquisition and vend. exp. was held not to be affected by the want of an alias fi. fa. and new levy. Thompson v. Phillips, Baldw. (U. S.) 246.

A discrepancy between the writ and the notice (of sale of a tan yard) as to the terms of payment was held not to be fatal. Lewis v. Gordy, 5 La. Ann. 570.

As to the distinction between an implied waiver and an estoppel, see Bigelow, Estop. (5th ed.) 660.

3. See infra, this title, Vacating Sales—Grounds for Vacating.

So held, as to sale without previous issuance of the vend. exp., prescribed by the Pennsylvania act of 1705. Porter v. Neelan, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 108.

4. In Missouri, if the defendant dies after the levy, the sheriff must return the execution, stating the fact, and this shall be sufficient indemnity for his failure to proceed. Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 6025.

In Indiana, Oklahoma, and a few other States, the defendant's death does not affect the proceedings, except to exempt the widow's allowance. Oklahoma Stat. 1890, § 4811. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 790. If it occurs after the levy, the sheriff may proceed to sell. Doe v. Heath, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 154.

In Colorado, on defendant's death before the issuance, the judgment creditor's remedy shall not be suspended by non-age of defendant's heirs, but the execution must not issue within one year from the decease. Colorado Annot. Stat. 1891, § 2533. But after a year, it may issue against the representative without reviving the judgment. § 2570.

In Illinois, a sale without the statutory notice to the defendant's executor, or a sci. fa., is void. Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 313. Compare Turney v. Young, 22 Ill. 253; Clingman v. Hopkie, 78 Ill. 152.

In Mississippi, if a party dies after a stranger has interposed a claim, a sci. fa. issues to the executor, etc. Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 1779.

In Alabama, on defendant's death before issuance of the execution, the sale would be void. Meyer v. Hearst, 75 Ala. 390.

In New Jersey, if the defendant die after the issuance, and a levy be made thereafter, the selection for the use of his family is relegated to the ordinary. New Jersey Rev. 1878, p. 392, § 16.

Under the Texas probate act of 1848, land levied on before the owner's decease, can only be sold thereafter by order of the county probate court. Burdett v. Chandler, 22 Tex. 14.

A sale under an execution issued after the defendant's death, on a judg-

States his death, after the levy, need not hinder the sheriff's proceeding to sell; the sale not being void, but, under certain circumstances, voidable.¹ In many States, if the only defendant has died after levy there must be a revivor.²

Upon the death of the plaintiff the judgment must be revived in the name of his personal representative.³ On death of the purchaser, his representatives are entitled to the deed.⁴

6. Reservations—a. DOWER.—In absence of any statutory provision therefor, a widow's right to have dower assigned cannot be seized or sold.⁵

ment rendered theretofore, is void. Cain v. Woodward, 74 Tex. 549.

Under the Pennsylvania law of 1836, an amicable sci. fa. can be filed nunc pro tunc to cure an irregular sale under such judgment. Diese v. Fackler, 58 Pa. St. 109.

A sale was held valid, though on revivor against the terre-tenant only. Colborn v. Trimpey, 36 Pa. St. 463. See Rosengarten v. Deemer, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 63. So also was held valid a sale under a judgment against an administratrix by default on sci. fa. to revive a judgment against her intestate, although another sci. fa. was pending at his death. Middleton v. Middleton, 106 Pa. St. 252.

In Tennessee, if the execution defendant dies after levy and before a valid sale, his heirs may demand a revivor against the personal representative; also exhaustion of personal assets before the lien can be enforced by sale of the land. McKnight v. Hughes, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 522.

1. This was the case at common law. Tidd's Prac. 915; Lewis v. Coombs, 60 Mo. 44; Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland (Md.) 443; 18 Am. Dec. 327; Hughes v. Wilkinson, 37 Miss. 481; Aycock v. Harrison, 65 N. Car. 8; Wait v. Savage (N. J. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 225; Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368; 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 405; Holman v. Holman, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 215.

In New York, A's purchase under A's execution against B of B's life estate, was held to be a valid satisfaction of the judgment, although B died after the levy, and before A was entitled to enter upon the land. Kleinhenz v. Phelps, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 568.

In Ohio, if the defendant dies after a levy on real estate and before sale, his representatives need not be made parties to the judgment. Bigelow v. Renker, 25 Ohio St. 542.

In Alabama, in such case, the sale cannot be impeached, in a collateral proceeding, because it was made under a vend. exp. or because personal notice of the levy had not been given him. Strange v. Graham, 56 Ala. 614.

In Arkansas, a sale under an execution issued and bearing teste after the defendant's death without a revivor, is a nullity, and open to collateral attack. Cunningham v. Burk, 45 Ark. 267.

2. Bristow v. Payton, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 91; 15 Am. Dec. 134; Stockard v. Pinkard, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 119; Harrison v. Wood, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 437; Cartney v. Reed, 5 Ohio 221; Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 711; 13 Am. Dec. 568.

3. In Colorado, thereupon the letters of administration may be recorded in the court, and execution issue in the name of the executor or administrator. Colorado Annot. Stat. 1891, § 2571.

In Tennessee, a sheriff has no power to sell and convey real estate under a vend. exp. issued after death of the plaintiff in the judgment of condemnation, without such revivor. Hewgly v. Johns, 59 Tenn. 85.

The purchaser stands, as to improvements, as if the conveyance had been by deed directly from the husband. Ayer v. Spring, 9 Mass. 8; McClana-

So also as to the right of quarantine.¹

b. HOMESTEAD.—In some States, the statute providing for laying off the homestead, in proceedings on execution, is considered merely as directory, and the sheriff's failure to have it set out as not to invalidate the sale.² Otherwise where the statute is adjudged mandatory.³

han v. Porter, 10 Mo. 746; Summers v. Babb, 13 Ill. 483.

In Georgia, the widow's right of dower in land seized as her deceased husband's, may be reserved in the sale, though this was not done in the levy, and the deed be effective as to the reversion. Parler v. Johnson, 81 Ga. 254.

In Pennsylvania, statutory dower, before assignment, may be seized and sold. Thomas v. Simpson, 3 Pa. St. 60. Although a sale under an execution against a tenant in tail does not pass the heir's title, it divests the wife's title to dower. Elliot v. Pearshall, 3 Pa. L. J. 157.

As to the New York law and the rights of parties thereunder, see Jackson v. Aspell, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 411.

The Missouri statute providing that a "creditor" of the widow, or of her husband, may have her dower assigned and thus render it amenable to execution, does not change the common-law rule. Waller v. Mardus, 29 Mo. 25.

1. Cook v. Webb, 18 Ala. 810; Wallis v. Smith, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 220.

2. As to the homestead exemption generally, see HOMESTEAD, vol. 9, p. 423.

In Georgia, if the sheriff sells pending application for assignment of homestead, equity will enjoin eviction until the rights of the parties be adjusted. Kilgore v. Beck, 40 Ga. 293.

In Missouri, on failure to have it set out, the title passes subject to the homestead. Bunn v. Lindsay, 95 Mo. 250. In ejectment brought for the premises by the purchaser. Crisp v. Crisp, 86 Mo. 630.

In Alabama, similarly, Nelson v. McCrary, 60 Ala. 301.

In Tennessee, the omnia vite presumption upon the validity of the sheriff's deed, is not overcome by the mere fact that the land was sold without first laying off the homestead. Burnett v. Austin, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 564.

The Iowa statute of 1839, inhibiting sale of the homestead if there is enough other land, is merely directory, and non-compliance will not vitiate the sale, even where the plaintiff's attorney is the purchaser. Cavender v. Smith, 1 Iowa 306. Offering several tracts without obtaining bids, is "exhausting the other property," within Iowa Rev. St. § 2281. Burmeister v. Dewey, 27 Iowa 468. The owner's failure to object does not render sale of the exempt homestead valid. Visek v. Doolittle, 69 Iowa 602.

3. Kipp v. Bullard, 30 Minn. 84; Mohan v. Smith, 30 Minn. 259.

Under Nebraska Laws, 1877, p. 34, if the homestead had not been plotted and recorded, the sheriff's failure to do this before selling any portion of the premises, invalidates the sale. Aultman v. Howe, 10 Neb. 8. Compare Eaton v. Ryan, 5 Neb. 47.

In North Carolina, a sale on a judgment founded on a debt contracted before adoption of North Carolina Const., 1868, without first allotting a homestead, is void, unless it is apparent there can be no excess. McCannless v. Flinchum, 98 N. Car. 338. Where the sale is for a debt against which the exemption does not prevail, and the debtor's only property is worth less than $1,000, laying off the homestead is an idle form and ommissible. Miller v. Miller, 89 N. Car. 402. If the statute be not complied with, the purchaser, whether plaintiff or stranger, acquires no title. McCracken v. Adler, 98 N. Car. 400. The sale would be absolutely void. Mebane v. Layton, 89 N. Car. 396.

In South Carolina, a majority of the court held that where a sheriff, at the time of a levy and sale of an estate of homestead under an execution founded on a debt contracted after adoption of South Carolina Const. 1868, had in his office an execution founded on a debt contracted theretofore, the sale might be referred to this execution, although his deed did not mention it, nor the

The statutory rights of parties to the execution, or of strangers holding liens as to the homestead, may be restricted or waived as to many matters by their own acts.¹

c. OTHER EXEMPTIONS.—Seizure and sale of property that is by statute exempted from levy, renders the sheriff a trespasser ab initio.²

7. The Appraisement—a. STATUTORY METHODS.—The time, place, and manner of appraisement of real estate levied on are generally prescribed by statute.³ So also appraisement of perishable personal property.⁴ Sometimes personalty in general is embraced in such statutes.⁵ In some States the appraisement must precede advertisement of sale.⁶ In some States the appraisers must all concur.⁷ Some statutes prescribe their qualifications, as to householding, vicinage, disinterestedness, etc.⁸

purchaser know of it. Agnew v. Adams, 17 S. Car. 364.

The execution is notice that the defendant has other property than the homestead. He is not estopped to demand that a sale thereof be set aside by his failure to object; he having presumed that the sheriff would do his duty. Owens v. Hart, 62 Iowa 620.

1. In Georgia the fact that a third person has taken a homestead on land against which a foreclosure fi. fa. has issued, will not excuse the sheriff for failing to sell; a rule to show cause may be made absolute against him for the value of the land, not exceeding the amount of the execution. Blackman v. Rome R. Co., 45 Ga. 292.

2. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 130; infra, this title, Conducting the Sale—Grounds for Vacating; and Sheriff's Rights, etc.—Liability to the Defendant.

It is held that a sale on execution against A of realty in adverse possession of B is invalid. Campbell v. Point Street Iron Works, 12 R. I. 452.

3. As to strict construction of the appraisement laws, waiver thereof, etc., see APPRAISEMENT, vol. 1, p. 635.

6. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4552; Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5390. In Pennsylvania, the sheriff's omission to give the statutory notice of the inquisition will not invalidate the sale. Meanor v. Hamilton, 27 Pa. St. 137.

7. Evans v. Landon, 6 Ill. 307. In Massachusetts, if but two have certified, a sufficient reason must be given why the other did not. Moffitt v. Jaquins, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 331.

8. The Connecticut requirement that they be freeholders of the town in which the land lies, cannot be waived by agreement of parties. Chapman v. Griffin, 1 Root (Conn.) 196.

In Kansas, a sale of personal property was held not to be avoided merely because the under sheriff who sold it acted as one of the appraisers. Sullenger v. Buck, 22 Kan. 28. An unmarried man owning a storehouse, doing business in one part and living with a family in the other part is a "householder." Kutler v. Buckout, 4 Kan. 101.

In Indiana, a sale was avoided by an appraiser's not residing in the township of the land. Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134. Compare Woods v. Cochrane, 38 Iowa, 484.

In Maine, the appraisers need not be residents of the county. Woodman v. Smith, 37 Me. 21.

In Massachusetts, the sale transfers no title if the sheriff's return fails to show that the appraisers were disinterested, and otherwise legally qualified. Williams v. Amory, 14 Mass. 20; Wolcott v. Ely, 2 Allen (Mass.) 338.

In Connecticut, so also. Fitch v. Smith, 9 Conn. 42; Johnson v. Huntington, 13 Conn. 47.

In Vermont, after two years' acquiescence, objection that the appraisers were appointed in part from each town, etc., was held to come too late. Perrin v. Reed, 35 Vt. 2. Unfriendliness to the execution debtor was there held not to disqualify, the appointing justice

b. INCUMBRANCES.—In some States, incumbrances are to be deducted, each lien to be specifically enumerated.¹ In others, the sheriff must furnish the appraisers with a schedule of the property levied on, and the incumbrances made known to him.²

c. NON-APPRAISEMENT.—In general, an execution sale without the prescribed appraisement (or "inquisition and condemnation") or waiver thereof is utterly void.³

Where the law, at the date of a contract on which judgment has been rendered, requires an appraisement before the sale, omission thereof renders the sale void; and conversely.⁴

being sole judge of the fitness. Briggs v. Green, 33 Vt. 565.

In New Hampshire, upon an extent on land of A and B, the husband of a second cousin of A's wife and the husband of a sister of B, were held to be "disinterested." Baker v. Davis, 19 N. H. 325.

An attorney who had conducted the suit was there held to be a "reputable freeholder." Porter v. Bean, 1 N. H. 362.

In Lower Canada, "the relative valuation being established upon the report of experts, the case is sent back to the prothonotary, to determine the order of collocation, and the distribution of the money." Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 5950.

In England, on elegit or extent, real estate is appraised and set off to the plaintiff until he is paid out of the profits. See infra, this title, The Purchaser's Title—Effect of Reversal—Under Elegit.

1. In Nebraska, a tax deed is not included as an incumbrance. Sessions v. Irwin, 8 Neb. 5.

In Iowa, it has been held, that as against an execution defendant seeking to have the sale set aside for not realizing the exclusive two-thirds of the appraisal value (as prescribed in Iowa, Kansas, Ohio, etc.), the purchaser need not prove that the appraisers estimated the incumbrances; he may rely on the public records therefor, although an incumbrance appear to be partly satisfied. Barber v. Tryon, 41 Iowa 349.

2. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 737. In Indiana, it is not enough that the appraisers' return state an estimate, and add, that "if there are any liens, they are to be deducted from the above value." Stumph v. Reger, 92 Ind. 286.

In Massachusetts, appraisers' deducting, as an incumbrance, the amount of a previous attachment in a suit pending at the time of the levy, was held to avoid the levy. Barnard v. Fisher, 7 Mass. 71.

In Ohio, where a mortgage of a railroad has precedence of a judgment against the corporation as to that part of the road lying in one county, the portion that is not subject to the mortgage cannot be sold under the execution; the whole road must be appraised and sold together, and the proceeds be brought into court and distributed according to priority of liens. Ludlow v. Clinton Line R. Co., 1 Flip. (U. S.) 25.

In Connecticut, an equity of redemption levied upon must be appraised and set off to the execution creditor. Scripture v. Johnson, 3 Conn. 211.

In Ohio, the land itself, and not the debtor's interest therein, must be appraised. Baird v. Kirtland, 8 Ohio 21.

3. Gardner v. Sisk, 54 Pa. St. 506; Tyler v. Wilkerson, 27 Ind. 450. So held where the sale was for less than two-thirds of the proved value. Brown v. Butters, 40 Iowa 544; Capital Bank v. Huntoon, 35 Kan. 577. So held also where the two-thirds was $901, and the sale was for $101, but subject to a supposed mortgage of $800. De Jarnette v. Verner, 40 Kan. 224.

In Massachusetts, failure of the sheriff's return to state by whom the appraisers were chosen renders the levy void. Allen v. Thayer, 17 Mass. 299. And his return must show that he notified the debtor to choose, etc. Shields v. Hastings, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 247.

So also in Maine, must notification be shown therein. Harrison v. Cummings, 45 Me. 351.

4. Rosier v. Hale, 10 Iowa 470; 77 Am. Dec. 127; Hutchins v. Barnett, 19 Ind. 15; Rawley v. Hooker, 21 Ind. 144; Blakeney v. McCraw, 28 Ark. 200; Robinson v. Perry, 4 Tex. 273.

But compare Patrick v. Oosterhout,

d. ESTOPPEL.—As against an innocent purchaser, not a party to the execution, a defendant who, in absence of fraud or mistake, has taken no step to prevent confirmation of a sale made contrary to the appraisement laws, is estopped to deny its validity.¹

e. CONCLUSIVENESS.—In the absence of fraud, or mistake other than of mere judgment, the appraisement is conclusive and cannot be impeached.²

After considerable lapse of time, the maxim omnia rite præsuntur esse acta, applies, and the regularity of the appraisement must be presumed.³

III. THE NOTICE.—1. In General.—a. ORDINARY REQUISITES.—The purpose of the notice is to inform the parties, and especially the public, of the time, place and terms of the sale, the character of the property, and the names of the persons whose interests are to be affected; thereby procuring attendance, competition, and the full equivalent.⁴

Remedial Incidents.—Authorization to proceed under one of several plaintiffs' execution renders the sale valid as to the others. Shirk v. Wilson, 13 Ind. 129. So, also, is the sale made valid by a direction that a part of the judgment be collected without appraisement. Mugge v. Helgemeier, 81 Ind. 120. It is well settled that the appraisement may be established by evidence outside the return. Thurston v. Barnes, 10 Ind. 289.

In New Hampshire, the return is evidence that an agent was authorized to choose for the creditor. Odiome v. Mason, 9 N. H. 24.

In Kansas, disqualification of an appraiser of attached real estate was held to be no ground for setting aside the execution sale; the defendant having appeared before the judgment. Gapen v. Stephenson, 17 Kan. 613.

2. Lawrence v. Edelen, 6 Bush (Ky.) 55.

Even where the appraisers, through mistaking the tract to be sold, so undervalued the land that it brought less than two-thirds of its real value, although two-thirds of its estimated value, the sale was held valid. Valandingham v. Worthington, 85 Ky. 83.

If the estimate be below the value, the debtor cannot recover of the creditor the difference; his only remedy is seasonably to redeem. Horn v. Swett, 2 N. H. 301.

As to what ambiguity or variance is ground for setting aside the appraisement, on seasonable application, see Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Goodin, 10 Ohio St. 557; Johnson v. Hovey, 9 Kan. 61.

3. Evans v. Ashby, 22 Ind. 15; Hale v. Talbot, 86 Ind. 44.

In Connecticut, everything so annexed to the freehold as to pass by the levy, is presumed to have been considered in the estimate. Payne v. Farmers etc., Bank, 29 Conn. 415.

In Massachusetts, parol proof is not admissible to show that the third appraiser did not concur. U. S. v. Slade, 2 Mason (U. S.) 76.

4. As to the requisites of evidence of notice, burden of proof, etc., see NOTICE, vol. 16, p. 827.

b. STATUTORY CHARACTERISTICS.—The statutes of nearly all the States prescribe these objects quite specifically.¹ In a few, however, somewhat is left to inference. Thus, *California*² and *New York*³ do not prescribe notice to the parties or direct reference to the judgment.

c. NOTIFYING THE DEFENDANT.—In some States, the defendant must receive personal notice,⁴ or if this be not practicable, the nearest equivalent thereto.⁵ Some statutes require notice to the mortgagee of chattels levied on.⁶

d. WAIVER AND ESTOPPEL.—Such notice being for the defend-

1. The ordinary features of such statutes, as to sales of realty on execution, are perhaps best exemplified in Massachusetts Pub. Stat., 1882, ch. 172, § 29. "The officer shall give notice in writing of the time and place of sale to the debtor, if found within his precinct, and shall also cause notification thereof to be posted up in some public place in the city or town where the land lies, and also in two adjoining cities or towns, if there are so many in the county; all which notices shall be given thirty days at least before the sale. The officer shall cause an advertisement of the time and place of sale to be published three weeks successively before the sale in some newspaper printed in the county where the land lies, if any such paper is there printed."

It has been held that a return that the sale was made "after giving public notice of the time and place of sale agreeably to the law," etc., was not curable by subsequent extrinsic proof of the necessary facts. Wellington v. Gale, 13 Mass. 488.

A change of statute as to the length of notice is held not to contravene the constitutional inhibition of enactments impairing the obligation of contracts. James v. Stull, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 482.

2. Simply written notice of the time and place of sale. California Code Civ. Proc., § 692, 1. See contrast thereof with the mandatory statute of Tennessee, in Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 649; 99 Am. Dec. 441.

3. The notice prescribed by 2 New York Stat. 366, § 21, on sale of chattels need not describe the execution, nor give the name of the debtor. Chapman v. Morrill, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 318.

4. E. g., in Delaware, "One such advertisement shall, at least ten days before the day of sale, be delivered to the defendant or be left at his usual place of abode; if he does not reside in the county, notice shall be served on his tenant, or, if there be no tenant, shall be left at the mansion house." Delaware Rev. Stat. 1874, 111, § 23. It has been held that leaving a copy in the hands of the tenant's wife is insufficient. Lewis v. Woodall, 4 Houst. (Del.) 543. This statute is mandatory. Burton v. Wolf, 4 Harr. (Del.) 221.

Tennessee Code, 1884, § 3755, requires that if the defendant is in actual possession and occupation of the land levied on, the officer shall within twenty days serve him with written notice. It was held in Lafferty v. Conn, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 221, that the notice could not be served on the tenant or other resident; and in Christian v. Mynatt, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 615, that the notice need not be given to a defendant not in actual occupation of the land.

In California, after considerable lapse of time, it will be presumed that the defendant was duly notified, and given opportunity to designate the property. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 206.

5. In Illinois, if the debtor is out of the county, the officer need not notify him to claim his exemption. Foot v. People, 12 Ill. App. 94.

In Missouri, if the land lies in the county where the judgment was rendered, the notice prescribed by Missouri Rev. Stat., 1889, § 4943, to be given to a defendant living in another county is not required. Lohmann v. Stocke, 94 Mo. 672.

In Alabama, want of personal notice of the levy, etc., does not invalidate the sale. White v. Farley, 81 Ala. 563.

In Massachusetts, notice of an execution sale of an equity of redemption, served upon an administrator, but not upon the heirs, was held to be sufficient. Atkins v. Sawyer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 351; 11 Am. Dec. 188.

6. Washington Territory Code, § 1990, is mandatory, but does not affect the validity of the sale. Byrd v. Forbes, 3 Wash. T. 318.

ant's own benefit, may, by express word or by tantamount acts, be waived by him.¹ But a sale made under a waiver savoring of fraud upon creditors will not be upheld.²

Ordinarily, it is not the sheriff's duty specially to notify the execution plaintiff of the time of the sale.³ The latter may also become estopped from denying the sufficiency of the regular notice.⁴

c. EFFECT OF WANT OF NOTICE.—By the preponderance of judicial decisions, statutes requiring notice are more directory than mandatory, and consequently, default thereof will not avoid the sale against a purchaser, not himself in fault.⁵

1. Burroughs v. Wright, 16 Vt. 619. So held where the sheriff advertised to sell "Saturday," Jan. 5, 1827, and sold on Friday, Jan. 5, and the defendant, though knowing of the mistake, pointed out the boundaries to the intending purchaser. McClure v. McCormick, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 129.

In Tennessee, it has, however, been held that the defendant's presence at the sale without objecting, did not amount to a waiver. Carney v. Carney, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 491; 31 Am. Dec. 590. And the court, by Cooper, J., in Prater v. McDonough, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 670, held that the defect could not be remedied by adequacy of notice of a previously advertised sale which did not take place; and further that the sufficiency of the notice was a question for the court and not for the jury.

An execution debtor, by pointing out property, waives his right to special notice of the sale. Hewitt v. Stephens, 5 La. Ann. 640. His acceptance of the surplus of the proceeds is a waiver of a defect of the notice. Huffman v. Gaines, 47 Ark. 226. And conversely his knowledge of the sale imports notice of the levy and return. Cowles v. Hardin, 101 N. Car. 388.

2. Gibbs v. Neely, 7 Watts (Pa.) 305.

In Louisiana, spouses' waiver of notice of an executive sale of dotal property was held not to render a sale, made without the prescribed advertisement, effectual to divest the wife's title. Esneault v. Cooley, 16 La. Ann. 165. The waiver cannot there be proved by parol. Lockhart v. Harrell, 6 La. Ann. 531.

In absence of any showing of fraud, notice will be deemed waived if the defendant did not object within a reasonable time. Morris v. Hastings, 70 Tex. 26.

3. In Kansas, the fact that the sheriff failed to fulfill his promise to notify the plaintiff has been held to be no ground for the court to refuse to confirm the sale. Keene Five Cent Sav. Bank v. Marsh, 31 Kan. 771.

In Missouri, the sheriff's omission to give the statutory notice to a non-resident debtor, does not, ipso facto invalidate the sale. Hobein v. Murphy, 20 Miss. 447.

4. Especially as against an innocent purchaser. Hollcraft v. Douglass, 115 Ind. 139.

His appointment of an appraiser imports a waiver of error in the advertisement. Lewis v. Gordy, 5 La. Ann. 570.

Persons under disability may be estopped therefrom through a husband's or a guardian's acquiescence in the sale. Meanor v. Hamilton, 27 Pa. St. 137.

5. Jackson v. Spink, 59 Ill. 404; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 302; Rounsaville v. Hazen, 33 Kan. 71; Wade v. Saunders, 70 N. Car. 270; Mitchell v. Nodaway Co., 80 Mo. 257; White v. Cronkhite, 35 Ind. 483; Wallace v. Trustees, 52 Ga. 164; Thulemeyer v. Jones, 37 Tex. 560; Lee v. Howes, 3 U. C. Q. B. 292.

Some decisions hold to this rule even where the purchaser knew of the deficiency. Harvey v. Fisk, 9 Cal. 93; Johnson v. Reese, 28 Ga. 353; 73 Am. Dec. 757.

Even where the plaintiff was the purchaser, absence of notice has been held not to defeat the sale. Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368. But see dicta to the contrary in Dula v. Seagle, 98 N. Car. 458; Collins v. Smith, 57 Wis. 284.

In New Jersey, it has been held that absence of notice invalidates the sale. Henderson v. Hays, 41 N. J. L. 387. Compare dictum in Hughes v. Watt, 26 Ark. 228.

f. REMEDIAL INCIDENTS.—The sale will not be set aside for insufficiency of notice alone, where statutes provide ample remedy by amercement of the sheriff.¹ Nor for clerical error involving no obviously serious damage.²

g. CHANCERY PRACTICE.—In absence of statutory regulation, notice of a sheriff's sale in lien or equity proceedings is entirely within the discretion of the court granting the decree.³ In the English chancery practice, the complainant's solicitor prepares the advertisement, and obtains from the master an order for its publication; a subsequent or "peremptory" advertisement fixes the time, and is published in the Gazette.⁴

2. Describing the Property.—The property should be sufficiently designated to notify the public of its location, extent, character and value. A description calculated to do this, will not cause the sale to be set aside for any blunders not misleading.⁵ And

As to how far the confirmation precludes inquiry into the regularity of the notice, see infra, this title, Confirmation—Effect.

1. See infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights, etc.—Amercement.

So held under California Code Civ. Proc., § 693, Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47; 65 Am. Dec. 475; Shores v. Scott River Water Co., 17 Cal. 626. In Illinois, the filing of the certificate of sale is constructive notice to everybody. McClure v. Englehardt, 17 Ill. 47.

2. Thus under Rhode Island Pub. Stat., ch. 223, § 11, requiring that "all persons concerned" be notified, it was held that a notification was not vitiated by describing the execution plaintiff, Richard Bassett, as "Richard Bartlett;" nor by omission, after a stay of the execution had been vacated, to post the notifications de novo. Horton v. Bassett, 16 R. I. 419.

But after an injunction on the sale has been dissolved, and considerable time elapsed, the notice must be given de novo. Patten v. Stewart, 26 Ind. 395.

In Tennessee, issuance of an alias execution does not necessitate new advertisement. Luther v. McMichael, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 298; Arnold v. Dinsmore, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 235.

Otherwise in New York. Mascraft v. Van Antwerp, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 334.

In Delaware, the sheriff is bound to prove notice of sales of land strictly, the statute being mandatory. Burton v. Wolfe, 4 Harr. (Del.) 221.

In Illinois, it was held that where the execution was valid, and the plaintiff, the purchaser, the burden of proving a want of notice was on the party attacking the regularity of the sale; the court, by Lacey, P. J., observing that it is the policy of the law to uphold judicial sales, and citing Rorer, Jud. Sales, § 1306.

In Georgia, too, this policy has been recognized, and an advertisement sustained where in the execution defendant, "Jeffries," was described as "Jeffers;" the names being idem sonans. Jeffries v. Bartlett, 75 Ga. 230.

In Pennsylvania, omission to notify a holder of land of an extent of execution thereon, was held to be cured by the acknowledgment of the sheriff's deed. Critchlow v. Critchlow (Pa. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 235.

3. Gould v. Garrison, 48 Ill. 258.

4. Daniel's Ch. Pr. & Pl. (5th Am. ed.), § 1270.

5. Immaterial Defects.—The following illustrative instances may be adduced in addition to those presented in JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 211, note 1.

Where standing corn on the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of a township section was misdescribed as on the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the mistake was held to be immaterial, there being such surrounding circumstances that all persons "would be apprised with sufficient certainty." Pollard v. King, 63 Ill. 36. So, also, was held immaterial a clerical error putting "township" for town. Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 250. So, also, was an omission in the notice to give the numbers to lots or to buildings, in absence of evidence that the property was not well known in the conversely.¹ Some States provide specifically against fraudulent misdescription of the property in the advertisement and return.²

Some statutes provide that the defendant may deliver to the officer a plan of the land, and that he must sell according thereto.³ Ordinarily a defect in the description is not curable by the deed.⁴

A misdescription in the advertisement, carried into the deed, is relievable in equity;⁵ otherwise, however, in case of laches, or of intervention of the bar of the Statute of Limitations.⁶

community. Collier v. Vason, 12 Ga. 440; Allen v. Cole, 9 N. J. Eq. 286. So, also, where the name of the county was omitted. Duncan v. Matney, 29 Mo. 368; 77 Am. Dec. 575. So, also, where the name of the town was omitted from a notice published in the town. Dickerson v. Small, 64 Md. 395. See, also, as to identifying the town or township. Reeside v. Peter, 33 Md. 120; Frazier v. Steenrod, 7 Iowa, 344; 71 Am. Dec. 447. So, also, as to the surplus addition of "or arpents" in stating the quantity of acres. Thompson v. Barrow, 7 La. Ann. 670.

In Pennsylvania, it has been held that the notice need not state a prior incumbrance. Association v. O'Neill, 6 W. N. C. (Pa.) 501.

1. Where land in "the southeast quarter of a township section" was described and sold as in "the southwest (S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$) quarter," etc., it was held that the court was justified in refusing to confirm the sale. Helmer v. Rehm, 14 Neb. 219. So, also, where the section was not fractional was a description, "the fractional east half," etc., held insufficient. Peck v. Sims, 120 Ind. 345.

In Minnesota, a description, "lot 5, block 39," without naming the city or village, was held fatally defective. Herrick v. Ammerman, 32 Minn. 544.

In New Jersey, a clause "together with all his other real estate in the county of Atlantic, of which a more particular description will be given on the day of sale," was held insufficient to authorize a sale of any lands except those specified above it. Merwin v. Smith, 2 N. J. Eq. 182. Where the tract advertised was four acres more than the tract (contained therein) to be sold, the advertisement was held fatally defective; persons desiring only the latter's quantity might not attend the sale. Fenner v. Tucker, 6 R. I.

555. Where the sheriff levied upon part of a tract, but the schedule, return, and advertisement failed to show what part, it was held that the defect was not cured by a recital in his deed that he had levied on the whole tract. Langley v. Jones, 33 Md. 171. Compare Wooters v. Arledge, 54 Tex. 395.

In Delaware, omission to mention "a good large barn" was held to be ground for setting aside the sale. Oldham v. Hossinger, 5 Del. 434.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that buildings must be mentioned, wherever they would enhance the bidding. In re Wallace's Estate, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 145. An alleyway appurtenant must be mentioned. Ulrich v. McCann, 1 T. & H. Pr. (Pa.) 998.

In Indiana, a description of section 36 as "section 26" was held fatal. Goss v. Meadors, 78 Ind. 528.

For collation of Tennessee decisions upon the description, see Doe v. Plunkett, 1 Flip. (U. S.) 434.

2. E. g., Massachusetts: forfeiture of five times the amount of the actual damage. Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1881, ch. 171, § 41.

For amercements in other States, see infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights, etc.—Amercement.

3. In Iowa, this applies to sales under special as well as under general executions. Taylor v. Trulock, 59 Iowa 558.

4. Pfeiffer v. Lindsay, 66 Tex. 123. See infra, this title, The Deed—Recitals. Otherwise held, as to a failure to state the numbers of certain lots of land. Lawrence v. Grambling, 13 S. Car. 120.

5. Steward v. Pettigrew, 28 Ark. 372.

6. Walling v. Morefield, 33 La. Ann. 1174. As to when the deed will be reformed, see infra, this title, The Deed—Reforming.

In a notice of a sale of a right in equity, a general description of the land is sufficient.¹

In advertising mortgage sales, it is generally sufficient to follow the mortgage description, and refer by book and page to the registry, or to some authoritative plan.²

3. Designating the Time.³—The notice ought to name the hour when the sale will begin, in order that persons inclined to attend will not be deterred by a prospect of being kept waiting in business time. But notices are sustained which declare that the sale will be made between two certain business hours.⁴ If a statute designates the hours between which a sale may be made the advertisement need not mention them.⁵ And in absence of any showing of consequent damage, such advertisement will be sustained where the statute only prescribes notice of the time and place.⁶ And vice versa.⁷

So also, indefiniteness as to the day of the week is not fatal if it does not tend to mislead.⁸

The consequence to the advertisement of its fixing the day on Sunday, would depend somewhat on the existence or absence of statutory provisions thereon. Only judicial proceedings on Sunday are prohibited at common law.⁹

1. So held, where the description was: "The right in equity of redeeming the messuage and farm situate in Brighton, in the county of Middlesex, on which Jonathan Winship now lives," without designating any parcels, or stating the nature of the incumbrance. Pomeroy v. Winship, 12 Mass. 514; 7 Am. Dec. 91.

2. Jones, Mort. (4th ed.), § 1840. So held, even where the street number of the building has been changed after the making of the mortgage; the number appearing only on a plan referred to in the mortgage, and the mortgagee not knowing of the change. Model Lodging House Assoc. v. Boston, 114 Mass. 133. So held, even where the description in the mortgage was very imperfect. Robinson v. Amateur Assoc., 14 S. Car. 148. So, also, where there was a defective exception of lands already sold. Loveland v. Clark, 11 Colo. 271.

3. As to computation, see NOTICE, vol. 16, p. 817.

As to length of time, see JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 212, note 3.

4. As to the hour, see JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 211, note 4.

5. Evans v. Robberson, 92 Mo. 192.

6. Thorwarth v. Armstrong, 20 Minn. 464.

7. Thus a mere specification that the sale could be made, "on the 2d day of January next" was held insufficient. Trustees of Schools, etc. v. Swell, 19 Ill. 156. Whether a designation, between the hours of nine o'clock A.M. and the setting of the sun, is sufficient depends on the circumstances of the case. McCormick v. Wheeler, 36 Ill. 114, 85 Am. Dec. 388. This designation was held sufficient where twelve years had elapsed without attack. Menard v. Crowe, 20 Minn. 448.

8. The Day.—An error in appointing a postponed sale on "Thursday, Dec. 19, 1873," corrected on Thursday, December 18 by substituting "Friday," was held not to invalidate the sale. Chandler v. Cook, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 176. But it was held otherwise as to a converse correction of "Friday, the 17th," made on Friday the 16th, the day of sale. Wellman v. Lawrence, 15 Mass. 326. And a notice appointing a sale on Saturday, June 24, 1855 (Saturday being the 23d), was held insufficient. Thayer v. Roberts, 44 Me. 247. So, also, as to appointing one on Wednesday, Feb. 19, 1874, the 19th being Thursday. Thacker v. Tracy, 8 Mo. App. 315.

9. These would not include a foreclosure sale. Sayles v. Smith, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 57; 27 Am. Dec. 117. But such advertisement could certainly be rem-

So also may a mistake in designating the month¹ or the year² be too obvious to vitiate the advertisement.

4. Specifying the Place.—The notice should indicate the place of sale with such certainty that any person interested would have no difficulty in finding the spot. In determining this the prominence of a building or town in the country, or the uncertainty from extent of a city, are to be considered.³ The statutes generally require simply "notice of the time and place," etc.⁴

5. Posting.—The statutes of some States require that the notice be posted in some "public place." This is a relative term.⁵ The statutes provide against the defacing or tearing down of the notice.⁶

6. Publication.—In order to a sale of realty, the statutes usually edied by a postponement, even without personal service of notice on the defendant. Westgate v. Handlin, 7 How. Pr. (N.Y.) 372.

1. The Month.—So held where an advertisement was directed to be made twenty days before the sale and one dated December seventh stated that the sale would take place "on the 28th day of December next;" this word would be understood to mean "instant." Gray v. Shaw, 14 Mo. 341.

2. The Year.—So held upon a designation of the year as "1761," instead of 1861, in Jensen v. Weinlander, 25 Wis. 477; and as "1858" instead of 1868, in Mowry v. Sanborn, 68 N. Y. 153. But a notice dated in January, 1858, appointing a sale in 1859, although published in a paper issued in 1859, was held to be fatally ambiguous. Fenner v. Tucker, 6 R. I. 551.

3. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 212, note 1. A designation "at the court-house door in the town of Hillsboro" (without naming the county) was held sufficient in Powers v. Kueckhoff, 41 Mo. 425; 97 Am. Dec. 281.

4. The naming of an impossible place is tantamount to naming no place. Bottineau v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 31 Minn. 125.

5. See PUBLIC PLACE, vol. 19, p. 563. In Cummins v. Little, 16 N. J. Eq. 48, it was said that was a public place for notice of sale which is likely to inform persons who may probably become bidders. A blacksmith's shop, or a tree at an intersection of public roads, would be a public place in the country if in the vicinity of the land; but not if many miles distant therefrom. And in Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 648, where the notice had been posted inside an open shed, the court, by Kellogg, J., said that a public place is any place where the posted advertisement attracts such general attention that its contents may reasonably be expected to become a matter of notoriety in the vicinity. A barn, dwelling-house, shed, or even a rock or tree may answer this condition. In Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 556, it was held that a dwelling-house, if near the land, is a public place. So, also, is the side of a public square. Carter v. Abshire, 48 Mo. 300. So, also, is a hotel or coffee-house. Fox v. Tio, 1 La. Ann. 334. So, also, the inside of a postoffice, though closed on Sunday. Graham v. Fitts, 53 Miss. 307.

On the question of publicity or obscurity, the fact that before the sale, the ink had so faded as to render the advertisement nearly illegible, was held no ground for setting the sale aside. Holly v. Bass, 68 Ala. 206.

The Maine statute, requiring a posting of two notices, is held to be mandatory, and an omission of one to be fatal to the purchaser's title. Grosvenor v. Little, 7 Me. 376.

Otherwise, an omission of one of the five required by the Mississippi statute. Natchez v. Minor, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 246.

The Kentucky statute of 1790 requiring one to be posted at the meeting-house door, is directory only; and, in absence of fraud, non-compliance is not fatal. Lawrence v. Speed, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 401.

6. In New York, an execution defendant was punished for picking up and carrying off an advertisement blown down in a grocery. Murphy v. Tripp, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 189.

require that the sheriff not only post advertisements but publish notice thereof a stated period in some newspaper.¹ Statutes in derogation of the common law are to be construed strictly.² The preponderance of judicial decision is, that a statute prescribing publication of the notice for three successive weeks requires at least twenty-one days to intervene between the first publication and the day of the sale.³

The statutes of some States expressly require the computation to exclude the first day of publication and to include the day on which the event is to happen.⁴

The proviso in some statutes, "if there be a paper published in the county," imports an available paper.⁵

1. A sheet gratuitously distributed weekly at expense of advertisers has been held not to be a "newspaper." Tyler v. Bowen, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 225.

In Lower Canada, "the sheriff is bound to advertise in the Quebec Official Gazette, in the French and English languages." Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 5933.

2. For collated examples, see NOTICE, vol. 16, p. 817, note 5.

3. Early v. Doe, 16 How. (U. S.) 610; Smith v. Rowles, 85 Ind. 264; Bacon v. Kennedy, 56 Mich. 329.

The Kansas statute prescribing publication "for at least thirty days before the day of sale," it is held to require that the notice be first published at least thirty days before the day of sale, and be continued in successive issues of the paper up to the day of sale. Whitaker v. Beach, 12 Kan. 492.

In Illinois, a requirement of publication for three weeks successively is held to be sufficiently complied with by three publications, between the first of which and the day of sale nineteen days intervened. Garrett v. Moss, 20 Ill. 554.

The New York statute is held to be sufficiently complied with by publication once in each week for the six weeks before the sale, although six full weeks did not elapse between the date of the first publication and the date of sale. Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368.

In South Carolina it has been held that the first day of the publication and the day of the sale may both be included to make twenty-one days. Manning v. Dove, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 395; Maddox v. Sullivan, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 4; 44 Am. Dec. 234.

In Wisconsin, an execution plaintiff purchasing at a sale upon insufficient notice, is chargeable with knowledge thereof, and has not the rights of a bona fide purchaser. Collins v. Smith, 57 Wis. 284.

4. E. g., Minnesota and Ohio. In a daily paper, the first publication may be thirty days before the day of sale. Hagerman v. Ohio Bldg., etc., Assoc., 25 Ohio St. 186.

Under the Pennsylvania act of 1836, the first notice must be at least twenty-one days before the day of sale. Erie Sav. Fund, etc., Assoc. v. Thompson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 511.

5. By Missouri Rev. Stat., 1889, § 4941, it is the sheriff's duty to give "twenty days' notice of the time and place of sale, . . . by advertisement in some newspaper printed in the county, which may be designated by the plaintiff or his attorney of record, if there be one regularly published weekly or daily, and if not by at least six printed or written handbills, put up," etc. Where the defendant, owning the only newspaper in the county, refused to permit the notice to be published therein, it was held that notice by hand bills was a sufficient compliance with the statute. Walton v. Harris, 73 Mo. 489.

Omission to advertise "in the public gazette," as required by the South Carolina act of 1797, was held not to invalidate the sale. Turner v. M'Crea, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 11.

Under Kansas Civil Code, § 460, authorizing the officer to refuse to publish the notice until the execution plaintiff advances money sufficient to pay therefor, it has been held that the sheriff cannot be compelled by mandamus to publish the notice in a newspaper selected by the plaintiff, though it has been paid in advance therefor. Winton v. Wilson, 44 Kan. 146.

IV. THE TIME OF SALE—1. In General—a. STATUTES DIRECTORY OR MANDATORY.—Under a statute merely directory as to notice, a sale made without notification of the time is not absolutely void;¹ otherwise, under a mandatory statute.² In some States, the sale must be at a date during the statutory period of the lien.³ In others, a specific limit is prescribed.⁴

1. Supra, this title, Notice—Statutory Characteristics.

2. So, in California. Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 133; 99 Am. Dec. 256; Eldridge v. Wright, 55 Cal. 531.

In Isaac v. Swift, 10 Cal. 81, the court by Burnett, J., distinguished the California statute, that the lien, shall continue for two years; from the Arkansas and Texas statutes, that the lien shall cease, etc.; in Arkansas in three years, and in Texas in one year.

A sale made contrary to the North Carolina statute prescribing certain sale days, was held to be void; the court, by Smith, C. J., distinguishing prior decisions turning on statutes directory or on waiver. Mayers v. Carter, 87 N. Car. 146. Compare decisions of the same court in Lowdermilk v. Corpening, 101 N. Car. 649, and Wortham v. Basket, 99 N. Car. 70. But a sale made not on the day prescribed by a Texas statute was upheld after its confirmation. Brown v. Christie, 27 Tex. 73; 84 Am. Dec. 607.

In Tennessee, a sale for taxes, made on a day other than prescribed by the statute, is void. Conrad v. Darden, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 307.

In New York, the ten years begin to run at the original docketing, and the lien is not saved by revivor on sci. fa. Tufts v. Tufts, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 621. But there, an execution issued more than a year and a day after the judgment and without revivor, is voidable merely, and the sale will confer a valid title. Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 711; 13 Am. Dec. 568.

Similarly in Tennessee. Overton v. Perkins, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 367.

3. The lien of the judgment does not depend on the levv. Thompson v. Phillips, Bald. (U. S.) 246. "The lien is neither jus in re nor jus in rem. Though the judgment creditor release all right to the land, he may afterwards extend it by execution." Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491; Whiting v. Butler, 29 Mich. 122; 4

Kent. Com. (13th ed.) 437. And see EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 144; and JUDGMENTS, vol. 12, p. 105.

In California, where an execution was returned without sale, and after the judgment lien had expired, another was issued and levied, it was held, that the sale made hereunder took effect by relation at the time when the second (not the first) execution was levied. Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121; 99 Am. Dec. 256.

4. In Missouri, "if there be sufficient time, the officer shall appoint the day of sale at least fifteen days before the return day of the execution." Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4939.

Where, through non-attendance of the judge, there is a statutory adjournment of the court from day to day for three days, a sale meanwhile made should be set aside. Sarpy v. Detchemendy, 31 Mo. 196. But where a term was postponed by an act of the legislature, it was held that the lien of the judgment was preserved beyond the regular time, until the writ was executed, and that the sale conferred a good title. Bank of Missouri v. Wells, 12 Mo. 361; 51 Am. Dec. 163.

Under the Missouri statute extending the lien until a sale day at a future term of court, a new levy by the sheriff's successor was held not to be necessary. Tierney v. Spiva, 97 Mo. 98.

In Maine, after levy on personal property, if the sheriff does not advertise and sell within the time prescribed by statute, his claim to the property is extinguished. Plaisted v. Hoar, 45 Me. 380. Compare Mason v. Ham, 36 Me. 573.

In Massachusetts also, a sale made after the period therefor designated by statute, is a nullity. Macy v. Raymond, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 285. And even in absence of any expressed statutory limit of operation of license to sell, a sale will be treated as void if made after lapse of many years. Wellman v. Lawrence, 15 Mass. 326.

In Florida, the legal day of sale is the first Monday in every month. Florida Dig. Laws, 1881, p. 525, § 25.

b. IF AFTER RETURN DAY.—In absence of a contrary statutory prohibition, the sheriff may sell before or after the return day. His power to sell grows out of his levy; it does not depend on the then status of the execution.¹

Under appropriate statutory provision for proceeding upon the creditor's affidavit that delay will endanger collection, a sale, after due notice, of goods covered by a mortgage, is not void, though the execution be issued immediately after the judgment, as authorized in such case.²

1. Besides the cases cited at JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 218, see Smith v. Mundy, 18 Ala. 182; 52 Am. Dec. 221; Johnson v. Bemis, 7 Neb. 224; Lowry v. Reed, 89 Ind. 442; Rose v. Ingram, 98 Ind. 276; Savings Inst. v. Chinn, 7 Bush (Ky.) 539; Mooney v. Maas, 22 Iowa 380; Bryant v. Dana, 8 Ill. 343; Wheaton v. Sexton, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 503.

In Pennsylvania, the sale must be made on or before the return day or within six days thereafter. B. P. Dig. Pennsylvania Laws, 1885, p. 758, § 89. Otherwise it is void. Dale v. Medcalf, 9 Pa. St. 108. But compare McCormick v. Meason, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 192.

But if the levy also be after the return day, the sale is void. Young v. Smith, 23 Tex. 598; 76 Am. Dec. 81; Doe v. M'Kinnie, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 279; Bank of Missouri v. Bray, 37 Mo. 194; Jefferson v. Curry, 71 Mo. 85.

In Illinois, it has been held that if the sheriff improperly returns the execution, he may sell without either an alias or a vend. exp. Willoughby v. Dewey, 63 Ill. 246.

In Mississippi, a sale made six weeks after the return day was held void. Williamson v. Williamson, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 725; 41 Am. Dec. 636.

In Michigan, even when there had been a delay of five years, it being in good faith, the sale was held valid, as against an intervening levy and sale. Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 Mich. 332.

In South Carolina, in 1826, a sale made four years after a levy of the sheriff's predecessor was held valid. Leger v. Doyle, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 109; 70 Am. Dec. 240.

In Pennsylvania, where, after entry of judgment, five years elapsed before sale, but not before issuance of the vend. exp., it was held that the sale passed the defendant's title; but the lapse let in a subsequent judgment creditor to priority in the distribution of the proceeds. McCahan v. Elliott, 103 Pa. St. 637.

In Arkansas, a sale under vend. exp. three years after date of the judgment, was held void. Pettit v. Johnson, 15 Ark. 55.

In Texas, a sale after the return day is a nullity. Cain v. Woodward, 74 Tex. 549. And the deed conveys no title. Mitchell v. Ireland, 54 Tex. 301.

In North Carolina, a sale of land under an execution issued over ten years after the docketing of the judgment is invalid. Lyon v. Russ, 84 N. Car. 588.

In Illinois, a delay of nine years between levy and advertisement was held fatal. Conwell v. Watkins, 71 Ill. 488.

In Indiana, a sale of land under an execution issued on a justice's transcript filed more than ten years after judgment was rendered, is not void for want of revival and leave of court, but voidable only in a direct proceeding instituted before the sale. Martin v. Prather, 82 Ind. 535.

In Kentucky, the sheriff may sell after the return day while the original execution is in his hands, provided the levy was made before the return. Kentucky Gen. Stat., 1887, p. 554, § 3. But see dictum in Colyer v. Higgins, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 7; 85 Am. Dec. 601.

2. Conrad v. Wilson, 66 Ind. 437. Otherwise, a sale made on two days' notice, without the knowledge of one of the three execution creditors, the attorney of the two others becoming the purchaser. Skinner v. Warren, 81 N. Car. 373.

A notification on the day set for sale, that the defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt and that the property was exempt under the bankrupt law, has been held to be no justification for the sheriff's suspending the sale. Wheeler v. Redding, 55 Ga. 87.

An officer discovering that he has sold on a day other than the one prescribed in the notice, cannot be compelled by mandamus to accept payment and convey.¹

After the confirmation of the sale, the maxim omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta is applied in his favor.²

Some statutes protect the purchaser's title against such irregularity on the part of the sheriff.³

c. THE HOUR.—In some States the statute regulates the hour at which the sheriff's sale is to take place.⁴ Where the hour is fixed by the notice of sale, either under such a statute, or in the absence of it, the sale may be made at any time before the expiration of the hour; that is, if the time is fixed at eleven o'clock, the sale may be made at any time between eleven and twelve.⁵

2. Dies Non.—a. SUNDAY.—At common law, Sunday was dies

1. Collins v. Byrd, 42 Ga. 629. Such sale would, in legal effect, be one without notice, and if made should be set aside. Wheatley v. Terry, 6 Kan. 427. Especially when fraudulent. McConnell v. Gibson, 12 Ill. 128. The defendant's presence thereat, without objection, would not be a waiver of his right to have the sale vacated. Humphreys v. Browne, 19 La. Ann. 158.

2. Under the Iowa restriction as to "four o'clock P. M.," where the sheriff's notice appointed a sale between two and five o'clock P. M., it was held that the sale must be presumed not to have been held after four o'clock. Cole v. Porter, 4 Greene (Iowa) 510.

Similarly was it held in Missouri, on recital in the deed that the sale was made between the "lawful hours." Evans v. Robberson, 92 Mo. 192.

The purchaser may rest his title on the judgment and execution; "the seal of the court is enough." Barkley v. Screven, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 408. So held, on a collateral attack made after lapse of nearly half a century, where the advertisement had appointed the sale for April 11, but the deed recited it was made April 9. Houck v. Cross, 67 Mo. 151.

3. The Illinois statute expressly provides that the officer be amerced for non-compliance therewith as to the time of sale, and that the irregularity shall not affect the title of a purchaser who buys without notice thereof. Thus, a sale to such purchaser was upheld, though averred by the certificate to have been made at four o'clock in the morning. Rigney v. Small, 60 Ill.

416. But otherwise, one made, two days before the date notified, to a party with notice. King v. Cushman, 41 Ill. 31; 89 Am. Dec. 366. Also one made after nine o'clock at night of shares of stock of a building association. McNaughton v. McLean, 73 Mich. 250.

4. California Code Civ. Proc. 1885, § 694; Dakota Comp. Laws, 1887, § 5144; Montana Comp. Stat. 1887, p. 150, § 334.

5. McGovern v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co., 109 Ill. 151.

But a sale made a few minutes before the hour advertised, and at a grossly inadequate price, may be set aside on the defendant's motion. Pickett v. Pickett, 31 Kan. 727.

The fact that a constable's sale of corn advertised for the forenoon took place in the afternoon, and for a sum below value, was held not to raise any presumption of fraud to sustain a collateral attack in trespass quare clausum fregit for entering and carrying it away. Russell v. Stoeckel, 5 Del. 464.

Under Texas Rev. Stat. 1879, § 2303, prescribing "between the hours of ten o'clock A. M. and four o'clock P. M." a sale made after four o'clock P. M. is void; and the non-compliance may be proved by parol. Grace v. Garnett, 38 Tex. 156.

Where a statute, like that of New York (2 Rev. Stat. New York, 3d ed. 466), requires that every sale which may be made by virtue of execution shall be between the hours of nine A. M. and the setting of the sun, a sale made after sunset is void. Carrick v. Myers, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

non juridicus.¹ England and several States have statutes declaratory thereof, and inhibiting unnecessary business or labor thereon.² Accordingly a sale made by a sheriff on Sunday is invalid.³ So, also, is a sale made by him under an advertisement in a Sunday newspaper.⁴

b. HOLIDAYS.—Some States have statutes making certain days non-judicial.⁵ But a sheriff's sale is not a judicial act, and, in absence of special statutory inhibition, if made on a legal holiday in good faith and discretion, would be sustained.⁶ So, also, would the sale be valid if made on an election day.⁷

3. Adjournments.⁸—At common law, a party requesting the sheriff to sell at auction must pay the expenses.⁹ He need not consider the debtor's interest in having a sale postponed. Not finding a buyer for enough of the goods to satisfy the debt, it was his duty to return the fact, and, if a vend. exp. issued, he might make the same return to that.¹⁰ Otherwise, if he sold at auction. If the bid was inconsiderable, he was to keep the goods, return that he did so, for want of buyers, and await a vend. exp., which was construed to mean: "Sell for the best price you can."¹¹

In Upper Canada, all sales "made on the Lord's Day shall be utterly null and void." Ontario Rev. Stat. 1887, p. 2255, § 8.

In Lower Canada, simply a penalty is imposed for selling goods on Sunday, except at church doors for church benefit. Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 3498.

3. See supra, this title, The Notice—Designating the Time. Under the Pennsylvania act of 1705, forbidding the sheriff to keep his office open on Sunday, he could not then receive an order from an execution plaintiff to make the sale. Stern's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 447.

Similarly in New York, he cannot, after midnight of Saturday, receive a verdict in an inquisition of damages. Butler v. Kelsey, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 177.

4. So held, under Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, § 2000, inhibiting disturbance of the peace or good order of society by engaging in one's "usual avocation" on Sunday. Shaw v. Williams, 87

Ind. 158. Compare, under a similar Illinois statute, Scammon v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 146.

5. E. g., "Courts shall not be opened on Sunday, Thanksgiving, Fast, or Christmas, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, the fourth day of July, or the following day when either of the three days last mentioned occurs on Saturday, unless for the purpose of entering or continuing cases, instructing or discharging a jury, receiving a verdict on adjourning." Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, ch. 160, § 4.

6. The Texas inhibition of service of process on a legal holiday does not apply to a sheriff's sale. Crabtree v. Whiteselle, 65 Tex. 111.

7. The New York inhibition of transaction of court business on election day is held not to apply to a sheriff's sale; this never compelling absence from the polls. King v. Platt, 37 N. Y. 155.

Declaring a day a legal holiday does not import a suspension even of judicial business. Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179; 35 Am. Rep. 736; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Harding, 63 Tex. 262.

The statutes of many States also provide for such adjournments.¹ In other States, without express statutory provision therefor, the sheriff may, to avoid a sacrifice, change both the time and place.² He is, by common law of all the States, invested with a large discretion according to the circumstances and exigencies that may demand a postponement,³ but he is responsible for its abuse.⁴ If a sale cannot be completed at sunset, it should be adjourned; if until next day, by proclamation; but if longer, by formal notices.⁵

1. E. g., "If at the time appointed for the sale the officer deem it expedient and for the interest of all persons concerned, that the sale should be postponed either for want of purchasers or for other sufficient cause, he may adjourn the sale for any time not exceeding seven days, and so for like good cause until it is completed, giving notice of every such adjournment by a public proclamation thereof, at the time and place previously appointed for the sale." Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, ch. 172, § 30. Such return need only state that he deemed the postponement expedient for want of purchasers. Sanborn v. Chamberlin, 101 Mass. 409.

The Rhode Island statute specifies "accidents or extraordinary storms" as grounds for postponement; but the sheriff's power to adjourn is held not to be limited thereto. Aldrich v. Grimes, 14 R. I. 219.

The Iowa limit is three days. McClain's Iowa Rev. Stat. 1888, § 4312.

In Missouri, under the act of 1863, if, without the officer's fault, the sale is rendered impossible at the first term after issuance, the lien is continued from term to term, and a sale without vend. exp. confers a good title. Wood v. Messerley, 46 Mo. 255. See other Missouri decisions, supra, this title, Statutes Directory, etc.

2. Thus in Vermont, he may properly change the place of a sale of hay from a tavern to the barn where it had been levied on. Jewett v. Guyer, 38 Vt. 216; compare Fairbanks v. Benjamin, 50 Vt. 99; Russell v. Richards, 11 Me. 371; 26 Am. Dec. 532; Tinkom v. Purdy, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 345.

In Connecticut, when the officer "is of the opinion that the property can be more advantageously sold at some other time or place," he may adjourn the sale not more than ten days, and then again adjourn in like manner. Connecticut Gen. Stat. 1888, § 1162.

In Maryland a foreclosure sale has been confirmed, though made on adjournment to a place other than that named in the decree. Farmers' Bank v. Clarke, 28 Md. 145.

4. Todd v. Hoagland, 36 N. J. L. 352.

His contract for unlawful compensation for making postponement is void. Perkins v. Proud, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 420.

5. Crocker on Sher. (3d ed.), § 482. Two adjournments to enable mistakes in the newspaper advertisement to be corrected were held to be "good cause" within the Rhode Island statute. Reynolds v. Hoxsie, 6 R. I. 463.

An adjournment for one day, long acquiesced in, was held not to be a ground for setting aside the sale. Jackson v. Spink, 59 Ill. 404.

The adjournment should not be beyond the return day. Lantz v. Worthington, 4 Pa. St. 153; 45 Am. Dec. 682.

If the original notice was for too short a time, it cannot be remedied by an adjournment. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524; Sessions v. Peay, 19 Ark. 267.

A bid made before the adjournment is to be treated as withdrawn. Donaldson v. Kerr, 6 Pa. St. 486.

The sheriff cannot delegate to the plaintiff's attorney the power to adjourn the sale. Wolf v. Van Metre, 27 Iowa 348.

Where the sheriff accepted a sole bid that was the amount of the senior judgment, but much below the value of the land, it was held that his refusal to adjourn the sale was no ground for setting it aside, the owner having an adequate remedy by redemption. Equitable Trust Co. v. Shrope, 73 Iowa 297.

Several short adjournments of a foreclosure sale may be made to enable the mortgagor to pay the debt, and, on full payment, the sale may be discontinued altogether.¹

V. THE PLACE FOR SELLING—1. In General.—The statutes ordinarily provide that the sale must be at the place advertised.²

2. Personalty.—The sale of personal property must take place where the bidders can inspect it.³ The preponderance of decisions is that a sheriff's sale, in absence of the chattel, and without the defendant's waiver of the irregularity, is absolutely void.⁴ But there are many decisions that such sale is merely voidable.⁵

1. So held even where there had been a bid of $250,000, and the marshal made four adjournments. Blossom v. Milwaukee R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 106.

2. In Vermont (where by Rev. Laws, 1880, §§ 1549, 1550, the notification is to fix the sale at a public place, and only such chattels as hay, machinery, etc., can be sold elsewhere) a constable selling cattle and farm utensils elsewhere than as advertised, was held liable in trespass for the full value, although he applied the proceeds on the execution. Evarts v. Burgess, 48 Vt. 205. Such application could only properly be made on a legal sale. Hall v. Ray, 40 Vt. 576; 94 Am. Dec. 440.

In Indiana, an execution sale of brick elsewhere than as advertised was held void, although the defendant had consented to a levy and sale; the consent must be presumed to be only to a legal sale. Murphy v. Hill, 77 Ind. 129.

In Louisiana, sales have been set aside where a sacrifice resulted from a waiver as to the proper place. Lawrence v. Young, 1 La. Ann. 297; Hilligsberg's Succession, 1 La. Ann. 340.

In Delaware, so held, although the sheriff had a discretion as to the place of sale. Cowgill v. Cahoon, 3 Harr. (Del.) 23.

3. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 213.

"No personal property shall be exposed for sale, on execution, unless the same be present and within the view of those attending such sale; and it shall be offered for sale in such lots or parcels as shall be calculated to bring the highest price." Michigan Stat. 1888, § 7691. Hereunder a sale of a crop of corn three-fourths of a mile distant was set aside. Winfield v. Adams, 34 Mich. 437.

In California, Dakota, and Montana, "property capable of manual delivery" must be within view of the bidders. California Code Civil Proc., 1885, § 694; Dakota Comp. Laws, 1887, § 5144; Montana, Comp. Stat., 1887, p. 150, § 334.

4. So held, as to a sale of flax machinery six miles distant. Cresson v. Stout, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 116; 8 Am. Dec. 373. And a sale of wheat two miles off. Tibbetts v. Jageman, 58 Ill. 43.

And a sale of cattle running on a range a mile away, Rowan v. Refeld, 31 Ark. 648; and a sale of an interest in slaves absent in another county, Blanton v. Morrow, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 47; 33 Am. Dec. 391; and a sale of a slave in adverse possession, Brown v. Lipscomb, 9 Port. (Ala.) 472; and a sale of goods locked in a room upstairs, Ainsworth v. Greenlee, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 470; 9 Am. Dec. 615; and a sale of a hog in a pen a hundred rods off, Gaskill v. Aldrich, 41 Ind. 338; and advertisement and sale in one town in Kansas, under a justice's execution issued in another, Paulson v. Hall, 39 Kan. 365.

5. Thus, a sale of a chattel saw and grist mill, at a courthouse door and not within view, was sustained; the court, by Hough, J., saying that cases may be imagined where the more vigorous rule "would be productive of inconvenience and positive detriment to the parties interested." Eads v. Stephens, 63 Mo. 90.

It would be folly to tear up all the furniture of a large summer hotel, and pile it on the lawn, or allow the crowd to go through the rooms at the sale to inspect it. National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

A sale of stereotype plates absent in vault was upheld, impressions therefrom being exhibited; the principal value not being their material. Bruce v. Westervelt, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 440.

Where, without the sheriff's conclu-

3. Realty.—In the absence of waiver by the defendant, a sale of real estate must be at the place fixed by statute or decree. This is usually at the door of the courthouse of its county.¹ A sale at a point approximately near is a substantial compliance, especially if the courthouse is destroyed.² The sale must be in the county where the land lies, and by the sheriff thereof.³

A sale made at an improper place is sometimes treated as valid until set aside.⁴

VI. BY WHOM—1. Deputies.—The sale must be made by the sheriff of the county,⁵ in person, or under his immediate direc-

sion in the absence of the chattel a few moments, a slave worth $1,000 was sold for $625, the sale was upheld. Hamilton v. Shrewsbury, 4 Rand. (Va.) 427; 15 Am. Dec. 779. So, also, the sale of a small barn a mile away, in a sparsely settled country. Phillips v. Brown, 74 Me. 549. But compare Foster v. Mabe, 4 Ala. 402; 37 Am. Dec. 749.

A sale of two horses, one of which was absent, was held valid as to the one present. Linnendoll v. Doe, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 222. But a constable's sale of fourteen sheep out of a flock of twenty-one present, without more specification than that he meant "the fattest," was set aside. Warring v. Loomis, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 484. So, also, was an indiscriminate sale of goods, although a few articles were pointed out. Sheldon v. Soper, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 352. So, also, a sale of horse railroad chattels en masse and mostly out of view. Boylan v. Kelly, 36 N. J. Eq. 331.

1. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, pp. 213, 214, notes.

Sometimes the term "courthouse door" is defined specifically; e. g., in Texas Rev. Stat., 1879, art. 2310.

2. Wilhelm v. Schmidt, 84 Ill. 183. So held, as to a sale a hundred yards distant, but in view of the courthouse site. Longworthy v. Featherston, 65 Ga. 165. A sale at the courthouse door was held valid, notwithstanding a private local law prescribing sale on the premises. Biggs v. Brickell, 68 N. Car. 239.

The former Mississippi statute thereon (Code of 1857, art. 277) was mandatory, and a sale elsewhere was void. Koch v. Dridges, 45 Miss. 247.

In Texas, a sale by a U. S. marshal, before the door of a U. S. courthouse instead of at the door of the county courthouse where the land lies, is void. Moody v. Moeller, 72 Tex. 635.

In Missouri, a sale at the circuit courthouse door of the county seat under a judgment obtained in a common pleas court in another town, was held valid. Mers v. Bell, 45 Mo. 333.

In Rhode Island, in absence of statutory provision to the contrary, a sale was held valid though made at the sheriff's office in Newport, twenty miles from the tract. Howland v. Pettey, 15 R. I. 603.

3. Terry v. O'Neal, 71 Tex. 592; Finley v. South Car. Canal, etc., Co., 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 567.

The rule that the sale must be in the county was applied even to a foreclosure sale in Jackson county of two tracts separated only by the Muscatatuk river, the boundary between their counties and the sale of the Scott county tract was held invalid. Holmes v. Taylor, 48 Ind. 169.

In Lower Canada, immovables held in free and common "socage, or otherwise than en roture or en franc alleu roturier, when they are not situated in a parish civilly erected, can only be offered for final bidding and adjudication at the registry office for the division in which they are situate." Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 5937.

4. A sale at the courthouse door under a trust deed prescribing sale on the premises, was sustained upon collateral attack. Nixon v. Cobleigh, 52 Ill. 387.

5. See SHERIFF. Where a judgment was recovered in Knox county, but an execution, directed to the sheriff thereof was delivered to the sheriff of Fulton county, who, in 1840, levied on land therein and sold it, it was held that the defect was not cured by an amendment, made three years later by the Knox circuit

tion.¹ If the writ be not directed to the sheriff personally, it may be executed by a regularly appointed deputy.²

2. Coroner.—Neither the sheriff nor his deputies can execute a writ under a judgment to which he is a party in name or in interest.³ In such case the writ must be directed to another officer; usually to the coroner.⁴

3. Representatives.—Expiration of the sheriff's term of office does not confer upon his successor power to make the sale, if the vend. ex. should be directed to himself.⁵ He acquires by the levy a special property continuing after his removal from office, or even after his death. Accordingly, his executor or administrator can execute the *vend. ex.*⁶ court, substituting "Fulton." Bybee v. Ashby, 7 Ill. 151. But compare Walden v. Davison, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 575.

After the sheriff has levied he has power to make the sale, although meanwhile the land has become included in a new county. Lofland v. Ewing, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 42; 15 Am. Dec. 41.

A constable of one township selling personal property under a writ directed to a constable of another township is a mere trespasser. Gordon v. Camp, 3 Pa. St. 349; 45 Am. Dec. 647.

2. Levett v. Farrar, Cro. Eliz. 294; Wroe v. Harris, 2 Wash. (Va.) 126. Ever since Gordon's Case, tried in 1789, and reported in East's Pleas of the Crown, p. 315, acts of a mere de facto deputy are sustainable on collateral attack. Potter v. Luther, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 431.

Under the New York statute requiring all sales under a decree to be made by a master, it was held that he could not specially deputize a seller. Heyer v. Deaves, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 154.

A sale by a bailiff appointed by the sheriff pro hac vice, by parol, would be set aside on petition to the chancellor, in course of the same proceeding. Meyer v. Patterson, 28 N. J. Eq. 239.

A sale made by another than the sheriff upon an agreement with the defendant's attorney, was held void. Kronschnable v. Knoblauch, 21 Minn. 56.

In South Carolina, the court may specially appoint another than the sheriff to carry into effect an order of sale. Adams v. Kleckly, 1 S. Car. 142.

4. "Where the sheriff, to whom an execution is delivered, dies, is removed from office, or becomes otherwise disqualified to act before the execution is returned, his undersheriff must proceed upon the execution as the sheriff might have done. If there is no undersheriff, the court from which the execution issued, may designate a person to proceed thereupon, who . . . must give such security as the court directs." New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 1068, § 27.

In Vermont, the high bailiff so acts. Vermont Rev. Laws, 1880, § 2396; Fletcher v. Bradley, 12 Vt. 22; 36 Am. Dec. 324.

5. And this, notwithstanding statutory direction to deliver over the books and papers of his office. Ryan v. Couch, 66 Ala. 244.

In England, his successor could compel him to proceed with the sale. Clerk v. Withers, 6 Mod. 290.

The Missouri statute has been construed to authorize a sale by either the levying officer or his successor. Kane v. McCown, 55 Mo. 197.

In California, on levy upon real estate, the court may issue the vend. ex., to the successor of the levying officer; otherwise as to personalty. Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133.

6. Obiter, of Mansfield, C. J., in Cooper v. Chitty, 1 W. Bl. 69. The official successor assuming to execute it, could recover no commissions. Sanderson v. Rogers, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 38; Read v. Stevens, 1 N. J. L. 264.

In Mississippi, if, after levy and before sale, the sheriff dies, a vend. ex. issues to the proper county officer to re-

To Whom.

SHERIFF'S SALES. Not to Sheriff or Deputy.

4. Auctioneers.—The sheriff may employ an auctioneer to call off the property, but must himself be present and approve of its being struck off.¹ In England, if neither party had requested an auction, the sheriff must himself pay the expense out of his commissions.² Otherwise in New York, etc.³ The auctioneer is merely the sheriff's agent.⁴

5. In Chancery.—Statutory provision for chancery sales to be made by a certain class of officers, does not import want of power to decree a sale by a special master.⁵ The decree usually indicates the mode in which the authority to sell is to be exercised.⁶

VII. To Whom.—1. Not to Sheriff or Deputy.—It is a rule in every code of jurisprudence that a purchase by a trustee or agent of the particular property of which he has the sale, whether he has an interest in it or not, per interpositum personam, carries fraud on the face of it.⁷ This prohibits the sheriff, constable, marshal, master, executor, or other trustee officiating,⁸ from being ceive the property from his representatives and sell. Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 1771.

In Michigan, if after levy and before sale, the sheriff dies or becomes incapable of proceeding, the sale may be completed by any other officer who might by law have executed the writ, if originally delivered to him. Michigan Annot. Stat. 1882, § 7695.

2. Sewall on Sher. 253; Woodgate v. Knachtbull, 2 T. R. 157.

3. See Crocker on Sher., § 481; and infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights—Fees, etc.

A New York statute of 1869 provides that on decretal sale of lands in New York county the auctioneer's fees are to be paid by the purchaser in addition to the amount of his bid. But compare Lord v. Richmond, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 173.

4. Where the execution plaintiff bought the goods and paid the auctioneer, who delivered the money to the constable, but the constable thereupon disclosed another execution, levied on the goods and carried them away, it was held that he disaffirmed the sale and was bound to return the purchase money. Thurley v. O'Connell, 48 Mo. 27.

5. Mayer v. Wick, 15 Ohio St. 548. Failure of such officer to file security was held not to be a ground for setting aside the sale after a long lapse of time. Nicholl v. Nicholl, 8 Paige

(N. Y.) 349. But compare Brown v. Frost, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 243.

6. Blossom v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 205.

7. In Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 555, the court, by Wayne, J., said: "The general rule stands upon our great moral obligation to refrain from placing ourselves in relations which ordinarily excite a conflict between self-interest and integrity."

This rule is declared to be well settled in the U. S. Supreme Court. Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 421.

8. The Utah statute inhibits any officer or deputy who is conducting the sale from becoming "interested in any purchase at such sale." Utah Comp. Laws, 1888, § 3436.

The Wisconsin statute forbids the officer from being interested "directly or indirectly." Wisconsin Annot. Stat. 1889, § 2999.

So also that of Wyoming. Wyoming Comp. Laws, 1876, p. 415, § 105.

In Kansas, the sale "shall be considered fraudulent and void" if made either directly or indirectly to the officer selling or to an appraiser. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4560. Nor can the auctioneer buy. Galbraith v. Drought, 24 Kan. 592. Nor can a tax sale be made to a firm of which the county treasurer selling is a member. Spicer v. Rowland, 39 Kan. 740.

As a sheriff could only bid as agent, if at all, the fact that he failed to obey an instruction of the plaintiff to bid for him, was held to be no ground himself, either directly or indirectly, the purchaser.¹ Otherwise, the sheriff, in fixing the time and place, could maneuver to lessen the price, "and no human tribunal could detect the fraud."²

Strictly applied, the rule which inhibits an officer from uniting the two opposing characters of seller and buyer would not allow him to act as agent of an absentee desirous of being a bona fide bidder, wherever the bid would require an exercise of the officer's discretion.³ It seems he might by letter or otherwise receive a specific offer, fairly announce it, and, if the highest bid, accept it.⁴ But this delicate dual condition of private agent and public officer would, in almost every case, involve embarrassing complications.⁵

A deputy, however, may purchase under an execution in his own favor if the sale is conducted by his principal.⁶ An assistant jailer is not a deputy within the New York inhibition.⁷ The crier of the sale, if not a deputy, can be the purchaser.⁸

2. Not to Appraiser.—In an Ohio statute declaring that a sale to the officer or to one of the appraisers "shall be considered fraudulent and void," this word has been construed to mean "voidable" only.⁹ Under the statutes of other States a sale to the sheriff or appraiser is usually adjudged void.¹⁰ for setting aside the sale. Moore v. Pye, 10 Kan. 246.

1. JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 222.

In Massachusetts, an officer, after attaching a partnership stock of goods, may, subject to the attachment lien, purchase a partner's interest therein on a private debt due the officer. Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89; 35 Am. Dec. 296.

2. Perkins v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 146.

In Massachusetts, on sale by a trustee, the cestui has option, if seasonably exercised, to confirm the sale and retain the property, or to confirm the sale and receive the consideration. Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 31.

3. Thus the officer cannot bid as agent of the plaintiff. Knight v. Herring, 48 Me. 533. Compare the Tax-sale Case of Pierce v. Benjamin, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 356; 25 Am. Dec. 396.

4. Dickerman v. Burgess, 20 Ill. 266.

5. An officer, on his way to sell six acres of wheat worth over $100, received a written bid of ten dollars. No person attended the sale. He cried the bid, accepted it, and made return accordingly. The sale was adjudged void on the ground that he could not properly accept the bid. Sparling v. Todd, 27 Ohio St. 521.

By a Tennessee act of 1805, an officer bidding at his own sale, either for himself or for another, is indictable. Chambers v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 237.

6. Jackson v. Collins, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 89; Cowles v. Hardin, 101 N. Car. 388.

In Kentucky, where a statute of 1792, prohibited one deputy from purchasing real estate at another's execution sale, the court, by Marshall, J., in the case of a sale of a slave, declined to declare absolute incapacity of a deputy to buy a chattel at a sale by his co-deputy. Worland v. Kimberlin, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 610; 44 Am. Dec. 785.

8. Crook v. Williams, 20 Pa. St. 342.

9. Sustaining a fair sale to an appraiser, the court, by Brinkerhoff, J., stated that the word "considered" therein, does not import a legislative fiat. Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 85.

Upon the same words in the Nebraska statute, the court, by Maxwell, C. J., stated that the fraudulent sale is a conclusion of law from the conduct, etc.; and a sale of land worth over $800 to an appraiser for $156, was accordingly set aside. McKeighan v. Hopkins, 19 Neb. 40.

10. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 222, note 5.

3. Other Disqualifying Relations.—A purchase by an attorney in charge of the sale will not be upheld if he fails to show that he exercised due care to make the sale advantageous to his client.¹ An administrator's attorney cannot purchase at the sale;² nor can the judge of probate.³ The right of the defendant to purchase has been questioned in one dissenting opinion; "by-standers, on seeing him bid, may, from commendable sympathy, refuse to compete."⁴

The plaintiff, or any person interested in the judgment, may become the purchaser.⁵ In the English chancery practice, any of the parties to the cause may become a purchaser upon procuring an order therefor.⁶ In absence of fraud one co-tenant may, at sheriff's sale, purchase a moiety of any of the others' interest.⁷ So, also, in absence of any suspicious circumstances, may a partner purchase his co-partner's interest.⁸ An execution debtor

In Mills v. Goodsell, 5 Conn. 475; 13 Am. Dec. 90, the court, by Brainard, J., said: "The law cuts up, 'root and branch,' the power to purchase and the temptation to defraud. It will not permit an inquiry into the fairness or unfairness of the transaction." But the defendant may, by acquiescence, be estopped from denying the validity of the sale. Farnum v. Perry, 43 Vt. 473.

In Pennsylvania, a sheriff, selling under a vend. exp., is not estopped from selling the land as trustee of the execution debtor. Robins v. Bellas, 2 Watts (Pa.) 359.

1. Burke v. Daly, 14 Mo. App. 542.

In a case where the attorney purchased 7,000 acres of land for $35, the court, by Robertson, C. J., considered such purchases "per se, as in the twilight between legal fraud and fairness, and to be deemed fraudulent or in trust for the debtor, upon slight additional facts." Howell v. McCreary, 7 Dana (Ky.) 390.

Where a farm worth $2,000 was, on a stormy day, sold to the attorney for ten dollars, the court, by Kent, Ch., adjudged the purchase to be in trust for the respective interests of the parties. Howell v. Barker, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 118.

If there be two plaintiffs in the execution, the attorney cannot purchase for benefit of one, without consent of the other for a less sum than the whole amount of the claim. If thereon he receives the sheriff's deed, there is a resulting trust for both plaintiffs.

2. West v. Waddill, 33 Ark. 575.

3. Livingston v. Cochran, 33 Ark. 294.

But the defendant's attorney may purchase with money advanced by the plaintiff, and the deed be made to the plaintiff as if a mortgage, cutting off subsequent liens. Saunders v. Gould, 134 Pa. St. 445.

In Howell v. Barker, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 120, Chancellor Kent reprobates the practice of letting the plaintiff's attorney become the purchaser. See, also, Forman v. Hunt, 3 Dana (Ky.) 614.

4. In an Iowa case, A, the execution defendant, was the successful bidder, and forfeited his bid. On the next day, the sheriff in good faith accepted B's, the next highest bid, without again exposing the property to competition. The court (Cole, Dillon and Lowe, JJ.) held that the certificate and deed to B were absolutely void. But Wright, C. J., dissented, saying: "A had no right to bid." Sworstzell v. Martin, 16 Iowa 529.

5. Morris's Estate, Crabbe 71; Stratford v. Twynam, Jacob 418. A sale made to the plaintiff, pending appeal, was, upon a reduction of the judgment, set aside. Munson v. Plummer, 58 Iowa 736.

may purchase his co-defendant's property; the latter having a remedy by compelling contribution.¹

4. Inability to Contract.—The sheriff may refuse the bid of a person clearly irresponsible.² An infant or other bidder under disability would not be bound by the bid.³

If a municipal corporation were the bidder, its power to acquire and hold property could be inquired into at suit of the State.⁴

5. The Highest Bidder—a. IN GENERAL.—In the absence of any statutory restriction to the contrary, the sale must be to the highest qualified cash bidder.⁵ If his bid be refused, he can by proceeding in equity compel resumption thereof.⁶ A certificate or deed to another, when so proven, would be set aside.⁷

Until the property is actually struck off, a bid may be withdrawn,⁸ or the sheriff may recede.⁹

Non-payment of the highest bid necessitates a resale; the second highest cannot thereupon be accepted.¹⁰

In Kinney v. Showdy, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 544, it was held that at a tax sale the officer might disregard an infant's bid.

In Alabama, it has been held that a married woman who was a fraudulent grantee, might purchase at an execution sale under a paramount lien, and thus acquire a valid title. Seals v. Pfeiffer, 77 Ala. 278.

4. The Minnesota statute, allowing a county to purchase lands for its public use cannot be extended to lands not intended for public use; and it could not be a purchaser thereof even at its own execution sale. Williams v. Lash, 8 Minn. 496.

In Tennessee, the district attorney has no authority to purchase in the name of the State, land sold under execution to satisfy a judgment in favor of the State. Littleton v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 669.

5. For exceptions to the rule that the sale must not be on credit, see infra, this title, Cash or Credit.

Under a California statute a sale of land for taxes to the highest bidder instead of to the person who would take the least quantity of the land and pay the judgment and costs, is void. Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183.

7. Dickerman v. Burgess, 20 Ill. 266.

A sheriff's deed to one of several joint purchasers would be invalid. Rice v. Smith, 18 N. H. 369. The deed must be to the purchaser or to the assignee of the certificate. Davis v. McVickers, 11 Ill. 327.

8. Blossom v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196.

A bona fide bid, made under mistake of a principal's instructions, may, if promptly, be withdrawn, on payment of the costs. Fuson v. Connecticut Gen. L. Ins. Co., 53 Iowa 609.

9. So held where the officer stopped the sale on being tendered payment by an agent of the judgment debtor. U. S. v. Vestal, 4 Hughes (U. S.) 467.

The execution plaintiff cannot withdraw his bid without the defendant's consent. Downard v. Crenshaw, 49 Iowa 296.

10. Thompson v. McManama, 2 Disney (Ohio) 213.

Where, after a sale to A, he transferred his bid to B, who failed to pay, it was held that the execution plaintiff could not have the property resold and hold B liable for the difference; the first sale was not obligatory on B as a sheriff's sale. Mathews v. Clifton, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 330.

But it has also been held that where the supposed highest is found not to be a legal bid, the bidder next below is the highest, and his bid can thereupon be accepted. Cummings v. McGill, 2

b. DEVICES TO STIMULATE.—Formerly, especially in England, the fact that at an auction the owner secretly employed a person to attend and bid up to a certain price, was adjudged to be prima facie evidence of fraud.² But now, where the intent is only to prevent a sacrifice, and not to get an exorbitant price, the device is countenanced both by Parliament³ and by the court.⁴

The English chancery practice even provides for an order, on motion, to the master to make an estimate, fix a reserved bid accordingly, and transmit it under seal to the officer selling.⁵

Murph. (N. Car.) 357. And in Swortzell v. Martin, 16 Iowa 529, the dissent of Wright, J., was based on the ground that the sheriff should have disregarded the bid of the judgment defendant.

1. It has been held to be a misdemeanor for the sheriff to refuse to sell upon a solitary proper bid; the rule as to returning the execution for want of "bidders," meaning, for want of "any bidder." State v. Johnston, 1 Hayw. (N. Car.) 293. And in State v. Joyce, 1 Hayw. (N. Car.) 43, the court, by Williams, J., remarked that otherwise "no execution could ever be satisfied where the defendant could procure a friend to attend and bid more than the property was worth at first bid."

2. So held in Green v. Bavestock, 14 C. B., N. S., 204; 108 E. C. L. 202; the court, by Earle, C. J., citing for authority, Lord Mansfield, in Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395; Lord Kenyon, in Howard v. Castle, 6 T. R. 642; and Lord Tenterden in Wheeler v. Collier, M. & M. 123. Compare Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134.

3. By Stat. 30 and 31 Vict., ch. 48, a vendor of real estate may employ a person to bid for him, upon the auctioneer's announcement of a reserved price. After a recital, "Whereas there is at present a conflict between Her Majesty's courts of law and equity in respect of sales by auction of land where a puffer has bid," etc., section 5 provides that the particulars or conditions of sale shall state whether such land will be sold without reserve, or subject to a reserved price, or whether a right to bid is reserved; if without reserve, the seller cannot employ a puffer, nor the auctioneer knowingly receive the bid.

4. In Gilliat v. Gilliat, L. R. 9 Eq. Cas. 60, the court, by Romilly, M. R., distinguished, in section 5, of ch. 48, between a reserved bidding and a reserved right to bid, and set aside a sale whereat the latter was not expressly stipulated for.

Compare Mortimer v. Bell, L. R., 1 Ch. App. Cas. 10.

In Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 86, 89, the court, by Tilghman, C. J., animadverted upon Lord Mansfield's reasoning in Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395, as, "upon general principles," and as having "certainly been shaken by subsequent decisions," adding: "If it is generally understood that the seller reserves the right of bidding his goods in, at a limited price, unless the contrary be expressed as a condition of sale, then it is difficult to conceive how it can be a deception to employ an agent to bid up to that price. Perhaps the tone of Lord Mansfield's morals was too lofty for the common transactions of business. Some men may think it immoral to purchase a thing at less than its value. Such was the opinion of the famous Roman lawyer, Scævola, who having purchased a commodity at less than its value, held himself bound to pay the difference. But in all probability it will be long enough before an act of this kind will be recorded of any of our bidders at auction. We must look at both sides of the question. The seller may be deceived as well as the buyer. Combinations may be formed among the buyers not to bid against each other; and thus, unless the seller be permitted to defend himself, his goods may be sacrificed."

The court also said that, at a simple auction, the auctioneer is liable if he sells under the price limited.

Whether the employment of a by-bidder was in good faith is a question of fact for the jury. Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174; 76 Am. Dec. 101.

5. Daniel's Ch. Pl. & Pr. (5th ed.), § 1268.

If the purchaser at a sheriff's sale promptly on discovery shows that he has suffered injustice from fictitious bids of puffers, the courts refuse to compel him to comply with his bid.¹ And he need not return the property if discovery comes too late therefor.² Otherwise, in order to relief, he must promptly tender the property, and offer to rescind.³ But even where puffers have been employed, if they have ceased, and the successful bid occurs in a competition between bona fide bidders, the purchaser will not be released therefrom.⁴

In order to insure good faith, the sheriff may require a reasonable deposit.⁵ He may also adopt safeguards approved by courts of equity and of probate.⁶

c. COMBINATIONS TO DEPRESS.—The courts will not enforce an agreement made with intent to defeat competition at the sale.⁷

In Smith v. Clarke, 12 Ves. 477, Grant, M. R., stated that it was the duty of the vendors, who were assignees under a commission in bankruptcy, thus to protect the interests of the creditors.

1. See Story on Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 292, notes.

This is done the more readily where there were no bids except from the puffer and the purchaser. Howard v. Castle, 6 T. R. 642.

2. In Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. St. 203; 55 Am. Dec. 492, the court, by Gibson, C. J., stated that he has a right to purchase at an undervalue if he can; and a ruling that "if the horse was actually worth the sum to be paid for him, the buyer got the value of his money and could not have been defrauded," was thus animadverted upon: "The fallacy of the principle is in assuming that there is a standard of value independent of the wishes and wants of the bidders, and that every man is willing to buy by it."

3. A tender comes too late, if, in the first instance, made after accepting the sheriff's deed and taking possession thereunder. McDowell v. Simms, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 278; Tomlinson v. Savage, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 430. Compare the case of a sale by administrators, Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. St. 257.

5. At a sale of a valuable summer hotel a requirement of a deposit of $5,000 was upheld. National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159. So, also, at a master's sale of large railway interests, an order of court that each bidder make a deposit of $50,000 was, on appeal, sustained. Blossom v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 196.

6. See infra, this title, Imposing Terms.

In National F. Ins. Co. v. Loomis, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 431, the court, by Walworth, Ch., states that the principle on which the employment of puffers, as mere instruments to deceive other bidders, is disallowed, does not apply to a sale under decree, where the persons bidding, or as the agents of another, are bound to take the property.

7. In Troup v. Wood, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. J.) 254, the court by Kent, Ch., said, the creditor who suffers an execution, which the law lent him for his security, to be perverted to such a purpose, ought to be deprived of any further use of it.

In the complicated case of Hamburgh Mfg. Co. v. Edsall, 5 N. J. Eq. 249 (and 658), where there was a written agreement among certain creditors interested in valuable properties levied on under two executions, that one should bid as trustee for the others, the court by Halsted, Ch. (at p. 317), says: "It would not only be disastrous in its consequences, but it would be a reproach upon the courts to allow property to be sacrificed at sales on executions by means of such arrangements to prevent fair competition."

Similar views are expressed by Williams, C. J., in Spencer v. Champion, 13 Conn. 19; by Rhodes, C. J., in Packard v. Bird, 40 Cal. 378; by Spencer, J., in Thompson v. Davies, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 112; by Church, C. J., in Woodworth v. Bennett, 43 N. Y. 273; by Hitchcock, J., in Seymour v.

In absence of evil intent, persons may combine at the sale to prosecute an honorable business enterprise. Lienholders may properly agree that only one shall bid, and that his purchase shall inure to the benefit of all.¹

A partnership of bidders is also allowable where one has not means to buy alone, or only desires to purchase a part of the property.²

d. FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.—The courts will, in a proper proceeding, vacate the sale if effected by bribery,³ or by false statements concerning the title,⁴ the value of the property,⁵ the time of the sale,⁶ the validity of the proceedings,⁷ or the pur-

In Reagan v. Bishop, 25 S. Car. 590, the court by McGowan, J., stated that, "It is well settled, in this State, that no party to any agreement, the object and effect of which is to chill the sale and stifle competition, shall derive benefit from the sale."

In Hamilton v. Hamilton, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 364; 46 Am. Dec. 58, the court, by Harper, Ch., distinguishes "those desirous of purchasing property upon a speculation of inordinate profit" from "creditors merely desirous of securing their debts."

1. Myers v. Dorman, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 115. See Capital Bank v. Huntington, 35 Kan. 588, wherein the court, by Valentine, J., distinguishes what in Kansas are reviewable irregularities in this regard.

Upon an execution sale of A's undivided interest in land of A, B, and C, B to prevent D, who has foreclosed a trust deed on C's interest, from bidding, may properly agree with the execution creditor, that the sale shall not affect D's title. Kell v. Worden, 110 Ill. 315.

2. In National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 169, the court, by Zabriskie, Ch., says: "If two country merchants in the same village should agree that one should attend an auction sale of flour in a distant city, and should purchase 200 barrels to be divided between them, it would not be illegal, though the effect might be that, instead of each bidding in competition with the other for 100 barrels, the purchase would be made with less competition and at a lower price. Or if, at an auction sale of sugars by the hogshead, two persons, neither of whom wanted to purchase or would purchase a whole cask, were to agree that one should purchase for the common benefit, such arrangement is not against public policy; for, instead of preventing competition, it brings in a bidder who would not otherwise be one."

3. Buying off an intended bidder for ten dollars was held to render the title worthless in the trickster's hands. Abbey v. Dewey, 25 Pa. St. 416.

4. E. g., the holder of a tax deed representing that he had a deed from the execution defendant. Taylor v. Courtney, 15 Neb. 190. Or, the defendants representing that a judgment in a former action was a lien on the land, and that they intended to purchase at a low price to secure themselves, thus deterring V from bidding. Vantrees v. Hyatt, 5 Ind. 487.

Or, maneuvering to have the notice inadequate, thereby buying, for $22, land worth $5,000. Stockton v. Owings, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 256. Or, swiftly entering in the circuit court a transcript of a justice's judgment, the execution creditor thereby bidding off property worth twenty times the judgment. Hobson v. McCambridge, 130 Ill. 367.

7. E. g., publicly impeaching the pose of the bid,¹ or by other chicanery and false promises.² But a promise by creditor to deliver over the property to defendant after reimbursing himself from the profits must be shown to be false; and this by evidence other than that afforded by the presumption arising from the mere fact of delay in settling.³

Or otherwise to share with them the consequent benefits. Wooton v. Hinkle, 20 Mo. 290. Or the execution defendant's diminishing the attendance by falsely saying the judgment had been arranged, and there would be no sale. Black v. Bayless, 86 N. Car. 527. Or the plaintiff causing the execution to be returned nulla bona, and another to be issued to another county, thereby buying for $10 lots worth $1,000. McLaury v. Miller, 64 Tex. 381.

4. F, at an execution sale of a barge worth £150, said he had not been paid for building it, and bid £52. No one bid against him. The auctioneer refused to knock it down to him; whereupon a friend of F advanced the bid a guinea, and F advanced this a shilling, and paid a deposit. The auctioneer declared it unfair, and afterwards resold the barge to another for £100. In trover, it was held that F acquired no title. Fuller v. Abrahams, 6 Moore 316.

5. In North Carolina, where the code provisions as to the preliminaries of the sale are merely directory, a purchaser who is a stranger will get a good title, notwithstanding any irregularities in the sheriff's management; hence the sale cannot be collaterally avoided. Oxley v. Mizle, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 250.

In Hill v. Whitfield, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 120, the court, by Pearson, C. J., distinguished between a fraud practiced by the defendant and one by collusion between the sheriff and the purchaser.

In Burton v. Spiers, 92 N. Car. 509, the court, by Ashe, J., says that an action to recover the land sold on the ground of such collusion is a legal action, and a defendant having equities must set them up in the defense.

In Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 429 [an ejectment case incidental to the celebrated confiscation controversy, McVeigh v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 259] the court, by Christian, J., says, it has been held in numerous cases (citing five) that a purchaser who used unfair means to prevent competition cannot hold the property.

See, also, Jones v. Portsmouth, etc., R. Co., 32 N. H. 544, and cases cited by Bell, J.; also Abbey v. Dewey, 25

In many States, however, the sheriff's acts being presumed to be regular, the sale is considered to be valid until set aside, and the remedy to lie rather in equity.¹

VIII. CONDUCTING THE SALE—1. In General—a. IMPOSING TERMS.—In the act of selling, the sheriff is the agent of the court and of the law. He can impose no terms unauthorized by the writ² or statute.³ But he may impose regulations to assure himself of bidders' good faith and to prevent by-bidding.⁴

3. As to statutes prescribing the hour of sale, see supra, this title, The Time of Sale—In General. Some statutes inhibit sale of more property than will satisfy the writ; e. g., California Code, Civil Proc. 1885, § 694. For statutes otherwise regulating his conduct, see infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights and Liabilities—Amercement; Loomis' Appeal, 22 Pa. St. 312.

In Pennsylvania, before the act of 1830, conditions imposed by the sheriff for incumbrances, were not obligatory upon the purchaser. Aulenbaugh v. Umbehauer, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 259. And this not even upon a purchaser with notice of a parol agreement therefor made by the parties at the sale. Mode's Appeal, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 280. The sheriff can continue no lien to affect subsequent incumbrancers of the purchaser. Randolph's Appeal, 5 Pa. St. 242.

Where a sale was to be made subject to payment of a mortgage, a condition added by the sheriff: "and the several bonds secured by said mortgage," was held not to bind the purchaser. Stevenson v. Black, 1 N. J. Eq. 338.

In a sale of land the sheriff cannot, unless commanded, reserve emblements or way-going crops. Howell v. Schenck, 24 N. J. L. 89.

4. Supra, this title, Devices to Stimulate. A sheriff or a master in chancery may demand a deposit or an immediate compliance with the bid. Irby v. Irby, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 165. As to the Canada statute thereon, etc., see infra, this title, Resale—How Soon—At Law.

In Utah "when a purchaser refuses to pay, the officer may in his discretion, thereafter reject any subsequent bid of such person." Utah Comp. Laws, 1888, § 3438. The officer is only liable for the amount bid by the subsequent purchaser and the amount collected from the purchaser refusing to pay. § 3439.

In cases of real or apparent bad faith, practical questions often arise very perplexing both to the sheriff and the courts as to how to adjust the relative rights of bidders and the parties without inflicting any hardship. Difficulty may not always be escaped, even by taking a bond.

In Virginia, in an ejectment suit, Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. (Va.) 366, 8 Am. Dec. 746, the court, by Roane, J., said, that in a court of law upon a bond or deed founded on a false statement of facts, the principle that fraud and covin vacates every contract is to be taken in subordination to another principle, namely, that the party is estopped from averring a matter of the kind against a specialty.

In North Carolina, it seems that in a case of fraudulent collusion between a sheriff and purchaser under a first execution a purchaser under a subsequent execution must seek relief in the equitable jurisdiction of the court. Compare Currie v. Clark, 90 N. Car. 355, and Crews v. First Nat. Bank, 77 N. Car. 110. In the latter case the court, by Rodman, J., suggested "to the parties as a plan of compromise apparently fair that the land be sold with a clear title, so as to bring a full price and the proceeds divided among the judgment creditors according to their legal priorities."

So, also, where the execution plaintiff, who had been a ward of the absent defendant, announced at a sale of land and slaves, that the land was put up merely to bring the latter to a set-

All the sheriff's arrangements and terms must be for the interests of the parties.¹ He must obey all reasonable directions of execution plaintiffs.² He may accept payment in any manner satisfactory to them.³ He must not imperil any of those interests by demanding immediate cash payment if the circumstances render it oppressive.⁴ He should not decline a bid from one, as tlement, thus preventing competition. Hill v. Whitfield, 3 Jones (N. Car.) 120.

In Alabama, a sheriff's deed to a purchaser who, in order to get the lot below price, disclosed existence of deeds made to him by the defendant, was held to be only impeachable in equity. Costillo v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 937.

Under the Pennsylvania act of 1810, requiring a "public vendue," a sale to the plaintiff when no one else was present, was held to be void. Ricketts v. Unangst, 15 Pa. St. 90.

See infra, this title, Recourse on the Sheriff; Misconduct of the Sheriff; Liability to Third Parties.

1. On finding that the execution plaintiff is absent, and the bids inadequate, the sheriff should adjourn the sale. State v. Moore, 72 Mo. 285.

The sheriff should allow the plaintiff's agent to withdraw a bid made in excess of his authority. Fuson v. Connecticut G. L. Ins. Co., 53 Iowa 609.

2. Disobeying the plaintiff's request to suspend the sale may be assigned as a breach, in an action on the sheriff's official bond. Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58.

3. Although the plaintiff bidder tendering fees, etc., is not bound to pay his bid, it seems that, if a dispute afterwards arises with other creditors as to which execution the money is to be applied on, the sheriff, if not thereupon paid, may refuse to deliver the property, and may resell. Russell v. Gibbs, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 390.

Where, after the sheriff had sold goods to the execution plaintiff as highest bidder, without receiving the money, the judgment and execution were set aside as fraudulent, and the sheriff ordered to apply the moneys collected thereon to satisfy other executions, it was held that a return nulla bona was not false. Nichols v. Ketcham, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 92.

The fact that the property was bid in by the execution defendant's agent and remained in the defendant's hands thereafter, was held not to render the proceeding any less a "sale" within the North Carolina Code, § 461, imposing a penalty for making a sale contrary to the statute. Freeman v. Leonard, 99 N. Car. 274. And where the sheriff, with consent of the parties, disposed of the property at private sale on credit, as the defendant's agent, it was held that his principal could maintain an action on the purchaser's promise. Jones v. Loftin, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 199.

Where the sheriff's deed remained with him as an escrow, it was held that he was not estopped to claim the land as trustee of the judgment debtor. Robins v. Bellas, 2 Watts (Pa.) 359.

An indemnified sheriff, delivering the goods sold on the purchaser's promise to pay will be required to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the bid less cost. Disston v. Strauck, 42 N. J. L. 546. So, also, if he takes the bidder's check; whatever he takes must be treated as money and applied on the execution. Robinson v. Brennan, 90 N. Y. 213.

The sheriff may make payment of his fees a condition precedent to accepting the execution plaintiff's bid. Isler v. Andrews, 66 N. Car. 552. And he may refuse to credit the plaintiff's bid on a specified one of several executions. Isler v. Colgrove, 75 N. Car. 334. But compare Blum v. Rogers, 71 Tex. 668; Wood v. Morehouse, 45 N. Y. 368.

In North Carolina, it has been held that the purchaser has a right to buy up the debts of the execution plaintiff, and thus partly get control of the sale, and have them credited in his bid, instead of paying the whole in cash. Thorpe v. Beavans, 73 N. Car. 241.

4. Aldrich v. Wilcox, 10 R. I. 405.

The sheriff may stop the sale on receiving from an agent of the execution defendant a sufficient tender of the amount of the judgment and costs. U. S. v. Vestal, 4 Hughes (U. S.) 467.

Where a sheriff did not demand instant payment from the bidder, and made no proper memorandum, a tender meanwhile made by a grantor of the execution defendant, was held to be effective, although the sheriff made a certificate of purchase to the bidder. Ruckle v. Barbour, 48 Ind. 274.

to whose solvency and good faith the execution plaintiff is assured.¹

6. CASH OR CREDIT.—The sheriff cannot sell on credit except by consent of the parties, or by special mandate of the court, or by statutory provision therefor.²

1. So held where a bidder showed a letter from the plaintiff's attorney stating that the bid was satisfactory and that he would give a receipt for the amount. Lane v. White, 12 Wis. 381.

2. The Virginia act of 1870, allowing a year's credit in a sale of personalty, where the debt was contracted before April 10, 1865, does not contravene the constitutional inhibition of acts for stay, or acts impairing the obligation of contracts. Garland v. Brown, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 173.

In Ohio, the court may order a sale of realty to be one-third for cash, one-third to be paid in one year and the other third in two years, with interest on the deferred payments, to be secured by mortgage on the premises so sold. Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5381.

In Kentucky, if the right of replevin has not been exercised, the sheriff may allow three months' credit, upon the purchaser's giving bond. Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 559, § 1. As to restrictions upon his accepting a sale-bond, see Spradlin v. Pieratt, 12 Bush (Ky.) 496.

In Arkansas, the three months' credit is allowed only when the right of stay is given and not exercised. Hall v. Doyle, 35 Ark. 445.

In Louisiana, the sheriff may sell on credit, stating the fact in his return. Louisiana Code, § 702.

In California, if the judgment does not call for gold, the sheriff may receive U. S. treasury notes. People v. Mayhew, 26 Cal. 655. As to bank post-notes, see Griffin v. Thompson, 2 How. (U. S.) 244.

In Wisconsin, cash payment can only be delayed by the act or consent of the parties. Sauer v. Steinbauer, 14 Wis. 70. So also in New Hampshire. Chase v. Monroe, 30 N. H. 427; Chandler v. Goodrich, 58 N. H. 525.

In Vermont, the plaintiff's direction at the sale is held to leave the sheriff no discretion to regard a previous arrangement for credit. Walworth v. Readsboro, 24 Vt. 252. But compare Kilgore v. Peden, 1 Strobb. (S. Car.) 18.

In Indiana, the sheriff can receive only an unconditional cash bid. Swope v. Ardery, 5 Ind. 213. But the right in case of non-payment, to re-expose on a subsequent day, imports the privilege of having a reasonable time to pay, if a proper memorandum is made. Ruckle v. Barbour, 48 Ind. 274. The plaintiff, in applying his bid, etc., has not the ordinary rights of a bona fide purchaser for value. Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 62. Compare O'Brien v. Harrison, 59 Iowa 686.

In New York, he cannot take the defendant's accepted draft. Mumford v. Armstrong, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 553. Nor could he, in satisfaction of a capias, take the defendant's negotiable note. Bank of Orange Co. v. Wakeman, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 46. Even so held where the defendant paid the note to another to whom it was transferred. Sherman v. Boyce, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 443. As to "satisfaction," see People v. Hopson, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 574; Robinson v. Brennan, 90 N. Y. 208; Hayden v. Agent of State Prison, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 195. Where a sheriff gave time, it was held that one of the two execution defendants might, by tendering him the amount, avoid the inchoate sale. Holmes v. Richmond, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 634.

In Illinois, he is liable to the plaintiff if, without his concurrence, he gives credit and surrenders the property to the purchaser. McCluskey v. McNeely, 8 Ill. 578. As to effect of a prior mortgage on notes given by the purchaser under private arrangement, see the complicated case, Holmes v. Shaver, 78 Ill. 578.

In Georgia, no agreement between the sheriff and the purchaser to defer payment can affect the rights of the plaintiff or other creditors. Jones v. Thacker, 61 Ga. 329.

In Pennsylvania, a sheriff who accepts the purchaser's notes, has no power to assign them to a third person to pay a debt. The parties interested could reclaim them in the hands of an assignee with notice, and need not

c. DESIGNATION.—The sheriff must clearly designate the property.¹ The interest sold must be all whereof the execution defendant was seized.² In some States he must disclose the interest to be sold;³ also any defects of title.⁴

If the sheriff, in selling chattels, proceeds in substantial compliance with the law, the title will pass, without formal and look to the sheriff's sureties. Reed's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 207.

In Texas, a guardian paying his bid by crediting a judgment foreclosing a mortgage owned by his ward, is not a bona fide purchaser for value. Delespine v. Campbell, 52 Tex. 4.

Where the sheriff and A, the defendant, had agreed with B, that whatever B should bid in excess of the execution debt should be satisfied by paying only the execution, and B's bid was in excess, and was paid partly in a draft drawn by A on himself and accepted by the sheriff, it was held that A was estopped to deny the validity of the sale; also that C, a purchaser at a second execution sale under the same judgment, could not prevail against the first without showing that the draft had not been paid. Pope v. Davenport, 52 Tex. 206.

1. E. g., a description: "A parcel of land containing 100 acres, known as the Neill McLean homestead, situate about sixteen miles northwest of the town of Lockhart," was held to be so indefinite as to render void the sheriff's deed. Wooters v. Arledge, 54 Tex. 395.

2. A sale of an undivided interest, where the defendant estate owned the complete title, was held void. Eberstein v. Oswalt, 47 Mich. 254. But compare dictum in Perkerson v. Overby, 59 Ga. 414.

3. In New York, a sale of a leasehold interest must be advertised and conducted as a sale of realty. Mitnacht v. Cocks, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84.

In Indiana, the sheriff must distinguish between personalty and chattels real (e. g., machinery for coal mining), which may be sold at the door of the courthouse and out of view. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 113 U. S. 408.

4. In Kentucky, a sheriff's omission to mention that the sale was subject to a certain mortgage was held to render him liable to the purchaser to the extent of the injury. Com. v. Dickinson, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 506, 43 Am. Dec. 139.

In Connecticut, in such case, the purchaser can recover of the sheriff in an action for money had and received. Bartholomew v. Warner, 31 Conn. 98; 85 Am. Dec. 251.

In Young v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 43, 21 E. C. L. 215, where an indemnified sheriff sold, without notice of the creditor's previous act of bankruptcy, and paid the money over to the creditor, the court, by Tindall, C. J., said: "Money paid over on an indemnify may be said not to be paid over at all."

A sheriff, who, without taking the bond of indemnity prescribed by the Kentucky Code, seized and sold property, whereof the title was not in the execution defendant, was held liable to the real owner for the consequent injury. Harrison v. Shanks, 13 Bush (Ky.) 620.

Also in Minnesota, it was similarly adjudged as to a sheriff's sale of a large quantity of grain against the protest of the real owner. Hossfeldt v. Dill, 28 Minn. 469.

In Louisiana, upon executive sale, unless the sheriff announces after reading the mortgage certificate, that the purchaser shall have the right to retain the amount of the anterior privileges, the adjudication of sale is held to be a "nullity." But in Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Pike, 33 La. Ann. 823, the court, by Bermudez, C. J., said: "Such nullity is not absolute but only relative, and the adjudication is susceptible of ratification." The sheriff, however, need not announce the amount of taxes due on the property offered. Gusman v. Le Blanc, 27 La. Ann. 280.

In Texas, no property is subject to a sale under the vend. exp., save that to which a specific right has been acquired by the levy of the fi. fa. Borden v. McRae, 46 Tex. 396. But compare Borden v. Tillman, 39 Tex. 262.

immediate change of possession.¹ But a mandatory statute thereon must be complied with.²

d. ORDER OF OFFERING.—In case of simultaneous attachments, the sheriff may sell the whole property at once and divide the proceeds among the execution creditors.³ He should arrange goods in such lots as, in his best discretion, will realize the most satisfactory price. The rule against excessive levies applies to sales of more property than will suffice to satisfy the execution.⁴

An execution defendant must seasonably make known his statutory option to have lands sold in a certain order.⁵

2. Rule of Inverse Order.—It is a rule of equity that if there are two creditors, and two funds or properties, to both of which one creditor can resort, but the other only to one, then the first creditor must first resort to the other fund.⁶ This rule must be applied where the levy embraces parcels, subject to the judgment lien, conveyed by the defendant to different persons at different times; the sheriff must sell them in the inverse order of their alienation.⁷ If no one bids, then he must offer the lot or parcel that was first conveyed.⁸ So also where it includes lots sold by the debtor on some of which the purchase money was fully paid, and on others but partly; he must first sell the latter.⁹

A confessed a judgment in favor of B to secure B and X. B became the purchaser of chattels sold under the execution thereon. B left them with A to be sold, and B and X to be paid from the proceeds. C seized the chattels as A's. Held, that no interest passed under C's levy. Miller v. Irvine, 94 Pa. St. 405.

In North Carolina, the sheriff must have made an actual seizure of chattels capable thereof. Perry v. Hardison, 99 N. Car. 21.

4. Where the sheriff is ordered to sell personal property, and in case that prove insufficient, then to sell real estate, a sale of the latter will not be upheld without proof either that the former was sold, or that the execution plaintiff gave the bond on condition of which giving the order was granted. Houston v. McClung, 8 W. Va. 135.

A sale to the execution creditor of parcels of land in addition to those already sold, sufficient to satisfy the writ, is void. Plummer v. Whitney, 33 Minn. 427.

In absence of any showing that land seized under several executions was capable of division, it was held that the sheriff might properly sell under the first execution without parceling, although there was an attempted sale under the others. Ridenour v. Shideler, 5 Ill. App. 180.

Where the rents and profits of the land have been offered without receiving any bid, the fee simple may be sold. Piel v. Watson, 44 Ind. 447.

9. In re Wallace's Estate, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 145.

But the facts that a third person in good faith bought at private sale from the execution defendant one of the chattels that had been levied on, and paid the full value, and that the sheriff

3. Parceling.—It is an equitable rule that the sheriff must sell articles of personalty or parcels of real estate separately, unless it is clear that they will bring more if offered together.¹ This principle has, in many States, become embodied in the statute governing foreclosure sales;² and sheriff's sales are adjudicated upon as in the same category. Sometimes this is ordered by the court; sometimes it is prescribed by special equities,³ and sometimes it is required by the terms of a mortgage or trust deed.⁴

The rule is often indispensable in execution sales of equities of redemption. Two distinct equities in different parcels under mortgages to different persons cannot be sold together on execution against the mortgagor.⁵

sold this while enough of the other chattels remained to satisfy the execution, have been adjudged to raise no equity against the sheriff or purchaser, though both knew of the private sale. In Bevis v. Landis, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 312; 82 Am. Dec. 418, the court, by Pearson, C. J., remarked that such interference would greatly embarrass officers in the discharge of their duties. One man will say: "I have bought this negro and forbid your selling him, because the other property is sufficient." Another will say: "I have bought this negro," etc.

1. In Rowley v. Brown, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 61, where there were three tenements on one lot of ground, the court said: "It is the rule of this court to disallow in every case a lumping sale by the sheriff, where, from the distinctness of the items of property, he can make distinct sales. It is essential to justice as to the protection of unfortunate debtors, that this should be the general rule; any other would lead to the most shameful sacrifices of property. There may be exceptions, but the purchaser must bring himself within them."

And this, not only to obtain the largest price by parting with the smallest amount of property, but also to enable the execution defendant to redeem, etc. Winters v. Burford, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 328.

And the fact that the sale of all the tracts may be necessary to satisfy the execution, cannot justify the sheriff in selling in solido. Gregory v. Purdue, 32 Ind. 453.

2. "If the mortgaged premises consist of distinct farms, tracts, or lots not occupied as one parcel, they shall be sold separately and no more farms, tracts, or lots shall be sold than shall be necessary to satisfy the amount due on such mortgage at the date of the notice of sale, with interest and the costs and expenses allowed by law; but if distinct lots be occupied as one parcel, they may be sold together." Michigan Stat. 1882, § 8503.

This does not apply to two lots fenced and used as one parcel. Yale v. Stevenson, 58 Mich. 537.

Such, also, is the Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 5350. New York, Wisconsin, Dakota and Mississippi have similar statutory provisions.

Under the New York statute, if one interested in the equity of redemption requests a sale in parcels, and offers in good faith to bid the amount of the mortgage and the expenses, the mortgagee should not sell the entire property in one lot. Ellsworth v. Lockwood, 42 N. Y. 89.

3. Jones on Mort. (4th ed.), § 1616.

Otherwise, in Indiana, in absence of such request, where the division into parcels was not made until after the execution of the mortgage; so held, as to an auditor's sale under a school-fund mortgage. Shannon v. Hay, 106 Ind. 589.

4. Jones on Mort. (4th ed.), § 1857.

5. And this, though there could be no beneficial sales of the equities separately because of the option of the debtor to claim his homestead from either, and the equity in neither would satisfy the debt if the homestead was taken out of it. McCone v. Courser, 64 N. H. 506.

After A's wife had mortgaged certain land that had been conveyed to her, it was again mortgaged in a single deed to B with another parcel belonging to A, who then conveyed the equity of redemption in the second

The principle also applies where the execution defendant's interest in the separate lots is an undivided one.¹

The statutes of some States provide that upon a levy on lots or on land susceptible of division, no more shall be offered for sale than shall be necessary to satisfy the execution.² In a few parcel to C. The equity in each parcel was to D sold separately on an execution against A. In D's action for possession, it was held that this was proper, although the equities had been created by one instrument; A having severed his interest. North v. Dearborn, 146 Mass. 17.

1. In Bell v. Taylor, 14 Kan. 277, the court, by Brewer, J., said: "A man who owns two-thirds of one lot might be very anxious to buy the other third, if he could buy that separately, and at the same time be very unwilling to buy the undivided third of a dozen other lots in order to secure the third of that one."

2. The Oregon statute (Annot. Laws, 1887, § 292) directing sale "separately or otherwise as is likely to bring the highest price," is construed to leave it to the sheriff's discretion. Bank of British Columbia v. Sage, 7 Oregon 454.

The Missouri statute, § 2368, "shall sell only so much," etc., "and if susceptible," etc., is construed to be directory only. Rector v. Hartt, 8 Mo. 448; 41 Am. Dec. 650. So held where the evidence as to the susceptibility was contradictory. Sheehan v. Stackhouse, 10 Mo. App. 469.

But where a lot worth $3,000, and having two houses fronting on different streets, was sold at $51, for a street assessment of $8.55, the sale was set aside. Gordon v. O'Neill, 96 Mo. 550.

In Tennessee, the title papers of the execution defendant must determine whether the land shall be treated as one lot or as several. Ament v. Brennan, 1 Tenn. Ch. 434. But in a mortgage or trust deed, the description is not always conclusive upon the question of parceling. Jones Mort. (4th ed.), § 1857. If the parcels are not contiguous nor beneficial, the one to the other in the uses for which they are respectively adapted, a lump sale to the execution creditor, at an inadequate price, is absolutely void. Mays v. Wherry, 58 Tenn. 133. And this, both at the election of the debtor and as to judgment creditors. Cooke v. Walters, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 116.

The Illinois statute requires that real or personal property, "if susceptible of division, shall be sold in separate tracts, lots or articles, and only so much as is necessary to satisfy the execution and costs." Illinois Rev. Stat. 1887, p. 863, § 12. This is construed to import that in case of a levy upon a farm composed of several adjoining tracts, the sheriff must offer first the smallest subdivision; if this will not sell, then another, and if this draws no reasonable bid, then offer en masse. Phelps v. Conover, 25 Ill. 312.

In Morris v. Robey, 73 Ill. 462, the prior pertinent Illinois decisions are reviewed, and it is held that on a levy upon several lots, if the first one offered receives no reasonable bid, a second must be added; if these two will not sell, then a third one be added, and so on.

A sale of three separate tracts, en masse, after offering them singly, but not offering two together, was set aside; the land bringing a grossly inadequate price. Cohen v. Menard, 31 Ill. App. 503; Douthett v. Kettle, 104 Ill. 356.

So, also, a mass sale of 720 acres lying in five different townships and not contiguous, worth $4,000, for $50.62. Day v. Graham, 6 Ill. 435.

So, also, a sale entire of a farm of 544 acres, capable of division, worth $25,000, for $704. Bradley v. Luce, 99 Ill. 234.

Even after a lapse of five years equity set aside a sale en masse of lots worth $8,000, for $65.38; the owner being led by a court clerk's memorandum to believe that the judgment had been paid. Berry v. Lovi, 107 Ill. 612.

The like statute of Indiana (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 756) is construed similarly. Piel v. Brayer, 30 Ind. 332; 95 Am. Dec. 699; Mugge v. Helgemeier, 81 Ind. 120; a lump sale of a stock of goods at one-fifth of their value was set aside. Brake v. Brownlee, 91 Ind. 359. In Wright v. Mack, 95 Ind. 332, the action of the sheriff in selling en masse, may be conclusive that the land was not susceptible of division. Nelson v. Bronnenburg, 81 Ind. 193.

If the quantity sold be not excessive, a levy needlessly large is not fatal. Drake v. Murphy, 42 Ind. 82.

An execution was returned unsatisfied, save as to a small amount. A second and a third were issued, and without demand on the execution defendant for personalty, an eighty acre tract of land worth $2,500 was sold in solido to the execution plaintiff for the balance due, namely, $36.44. No demand was made for the deed until the period of redemption had expired. Under Indiana Rev. Stat. 1876, § 444, requiring the sheriff to attempt to satisfy the execution out of available personalty, before resorting to realty, it was held that the burden was on the grantee to show that the sale was not fraudulent. Wright v. Dick, 116 Ind. 538. But compare Bardeus v. Huber, 45 Ind. 235. Of course after the sheriff has in vain offered the parcels separately, he may sell them together. Nix v. Williams, 110 Ind. 234.

In California, when the land levied on is in "several known lots or parcels, they must be sold separately; or when a portion of such real property is claimed by a third person and he requires it." California Code Civ. Proc., § 694.

A sale en masse for an inadequate price, without first offering the parcels separately, was set aside; Wallace, C. J., however, dissenting, the sale being to a stranger. Browne v. Ferrea, 51 Cal. 554.

After the redemption period has expired, the title cannot be attacked collaterally for a sale in mass. Gregory v. Bovier, 77 Cal. 121.

The California statute requiring the sheriff in a tax sale to sell only the smallest quantity which any purchaser will take and pay the judgment and costs, is mandatory. French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 506.

The Nevada law is like that of California. Nevada Gen. Stat. 1885, § 3247.

The Minnesota statute requires the sale to be "in such parcels as are likely to bring the highest price." Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 4833. This is construed to be directory only, Tillman v. Jackson, 1 Minn. 183. If the owner can show that the sale in gross was at a sacrifice, and was the result of actual fraud, the court will relieve; otherwise, not. Lamberton v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 24 Minn. 288; Swenson v. Halberg, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 96.

Although all in one instrument to secure seven sums, a mortgage sale of seven lots for a gross sum was held void. Hull v. King, 38 Minn. 349. An execution sale of a homestead with other lands not exempt, as one parcel, was held void as to the whole. Mohan v. Smith, 30 Minn. 259.

The presumption in favor of the officer having performed his duty and sold the lots separately, holds in this case as well as another. Eggers v. Redwood, 50 Iowa 289. See Iowa Rev. Stat. 1888, § 4311, note. A lump sale to the execution plaintiff of city lots lying somewhat remote from the others, at an inadequate price, was held to be voidable as to those remaining in his hands. Williams v. Allison, 33 Iowa 278. A special execution sale of 240 acres in a body, after being offered in forty-acre tracts with no bids, was sustained, Burmeister v. Dewey, 27 Iowa 468. Objection deferred many years comes too late to set aside a sale for want of parceling. So held as to eleven years' delay. Wood v. Young, 38 Iowa 103. Of course, after the sheriff has in vain offered the parcels separately, he may sell them en masse, Lamb v. McConkey, 76 Iowa 47.

In Nebraska, the officer must, when required, levy and sell in separate parcels, "when, in the opinion of the appraisers, the same may be divided without material injury." Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1889, p. 922, § 505. In case of liens, the sale must be for not less than two-thirds of the appraised value of the defendant's interest, unless they equal or exceed its money value, § 491d. A homestead on two parcels may be sold as one. Eaton v. Ryan, 5 Neb. 47. Where the buildings on one of the three lots mortgaged extended to the two others, the sale was adjudged to be properly in gross. Craig v. Stephenson, 15 Neb. 362.

A lump sale of mining claims and a tunnel site in Colorado, after the claims had been unsuccessfully offered singly, was adjudged proper. White v. Crow, 110 U. S. 113.

In New Jersey, a sheriff's sale of the personal property of a horse railroad company en masse, and at a distance, was set aside at the instance of interested parties. Boylan v. Kelly, 36 N. J. Eq. 331.

In Rhode Island, a sale of land from the side of a lot—the sold and the unsold parts each abutting on the highway—was held proper. Howland v. Pettey, 15 R. I. 603.

the statutes provide for a sale in prescribed parcels, at the owner's option.¹

Whether such parcels are deducible from a tract, often depends less upon any printed or written description than on its actual use and occupation.² The same principles apply to sheriff's sales of personal property.³ So, also, as to foreclosure sales, and the sale of an equity of redemption.⁴ In some instances, the writ itself precludes a sale of the land as a whole.⁵

The law requiring sheriffs to sell, in parcels, land levied upon,

In a sale of a city lot whereon tenements are peculiarly situated, inadequacy of price does not, ipso facto, raise a presumption that the sheriff did not fulfill his duty to learn the situation and discriminate. O'Donnell v. Lindsay, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 523.

Where the land was described as two lots, and the dimensions of the whole given, leaving those of each to be ascertained from a map referred to it was held that—the execution defendant not acquiescing—a sale of both as one parcel should be set aside. McIntyre v. Sanford, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 21.

An appraisement and sale in gross of land under description, "lots seven and nine in block thirteen," was set aside on motion of the judgment debtor. Johnson v. Hovey, 9 Kan. 61.

1. The Arkansas statute (Dig. 1884, § 3052), requiring division at the owner's option, into lots of not more than forty nor less than twenty acres, is directory only. Feild v. Dortch, 34 Ark. 399. This is waived if he is present at a sale of the whole tract in a body, and neither asks for a division nor objects. Reynolds v. Tenant, 51 Ark. 84.

So, also, in Texas, if it appears that no greater price could have been obtained by such parceling. Atcheson v. Hutchison, 51 Tex. 223.

In Missouri, the fact that a sheriff's tax sale of land was not by the smallest legal subdivisions thereof, is no defense in ejectment by the purchaser. Well-shear v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 343.

2. "It may consist of parcels known by different names or numbers; it may have formerly been the property of different owners, from whom the defendant acquired it by separate purchases, and yet if the tracts are contiguous, he may have so improved and occupied them as to unite them into one tract. If so, a sale of the tract, by its original parcels, is not required, and is manifestly improper." Freeman, Ex. (2d ed.) § 296.

See infra, this title, Conducting the Sale—Massing.

3. Sale of a negro and her child was held to be a proper exception to the rule as to selling in parcels. Lawrence v. Speed, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 401.

A lump sale of 300 shares of stock, worth $20,000 for $3,000, upon a "snap notice," while the defendant's attorney was preparing appeal papers, was set aside. American Wine Co. v. Scholer, 85 Mo. 496.

4. A common incumbrance creates no reason for selling lots together. Baker v. Chester Gas Co., 73 Pa. St. 116.

After a release of a portion of the mortgaged premises, if the remainder can be sold in distinct parcels, a sale of the whole together is void. Durm v. Fish, 46 Mich. 312. But neither a party who has waived his right to redeem nor the mortgagee can object that the sale was not made in parcels. Clark v. Stilson, 36 Mich. 482.

If, after mortgaging two parcels by one deed, the mortgagor conveys his equity of redemption in each parcel to a different grantee, he thereby so far severs his interest that it is no ground of objection that his interest in each parcel is levied upon and sold separately on an execution against him. He is not aggrieved, for he severed his interest; the mortgagee is not injured, for the debt must be fully paid before he can be compelled to release any parcel. North v. Dearborn, 146 Mass. 17.

5. Such sale, to satisfy the aggregate debt of several defendants, would pass no title under an execution directing the sheriff to make a particular sum out of the land of each. Brown v. Duncan, 132 Ill. 413.

According to the preponderance of the later decisions, a sale in violation of the requirement to offer in parcels is not absolutely void but voidable only.² But in absence of extraordinary circumstances to occasion delay, the application to set aside therefor must be made before expiration of the time to redeem.³

4. Massing.—In some cases a sale by separate parcels is impracticable; and in many cases, even where practicable, it would not be for the interest of the parties. It then becomes the duty of the sheriff to offer and sell the property en masse.⁴ This

1. Joyce v. First Nat. Bank, 62 Ind. 188.

2. It had been argued that the sheriff's act—unlike a commissioner's under a decree as agent of the court—being ministerial, he had no authority to sell more than necessary to satisfy the execution; hence, such sale was void. Dawson v. Litsey, 10 Bush (Ky.) 408.

In Indiana, if no person interested demands a division, the sale is valid, though the land be found susceptible thereof. West v. Cooper, 19 Ind. 1. A sale without division is voidable only. Jones v. Kokomo Bldg. Assoc., 77 Ind. 340; Nelson v. Bronnenburg, 81 Ind. 193; Brake v. Brownlee, 91 Ind. 359.

In Pennsylvania, the earlier decisions (Klopp v. Witmoyer, 43 Pa. St. 219; 82 Am. Dec. 561, etc.) declared them void, but the later voidable only. Smith v. Meldren, 107 Pa. St. 348.

In Michigan they have been declared void. Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195. So, also, in Tennessee. Cooke v. Walters, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 116.

3. Vigoureux v. Murphy, 54 Cal. 346; Love v. Cherry, 24 Iowa 210; Raymond v. Holburn, 23 Wis. 57; 99 Am. Dec. 105.

The sheriff's deed cannot be collaterally attacked therefor. Foley v. Kane, 53 Iowa 64.

4. In Michigan, however, it has been held that the debtor has a right to have the parcels so sold that he may redeem any one without being compelled to redeem the others; accordingly, if they cannot be sold separately, they must not be sold at all. Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 197.

In Furbush v. Greene, 108 Pa. St. 507, the court, by Gordon, J., said: "These goods were sold in two lots; in one was the machinery of the establishment, in the other, a quantity of shawls, some in cases, and others, perhaps samples, on the counters.

Should these goods, the product of a large manufacturing establishment, in a commercial city like this, have been sold by the piece; auctioned off day by day to the rabble which might happen to drop in? Certainly not; for no better way could have been devised for the sacrifice of this property."

A sale in bulk of the personal property in a large hotel for $33,000, was held not to be an abuse of discretion. National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

So, also, was held proper, a sale in one parcel, of two lots whereon had been erected a single building covering one of them and a small part of the other. Geney v. Maynard, 44 Mich. 578.

So, also, a sale of several ditches, and water rights appertaining thereto, constituting but a single connected system of water supply. Gleason v. Hill, 65 Cal. 17.

A homestead in two parcels may be sold as one. Eaton v. Ryan, 5 Neb. 47.

The fact that contiguous tracts were acquired by their owner at different times is no ground for their being sold separately. Stephens v. Taylor, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 307. But, compare Hammett v. Farmer, 26 S. Car. 566.

Several government subdivisions, used together as one farm, can all be sold as one. Maxwell v. Newton, 65 Wis. 261.

Land under one ownership, but divided by stone walls into six lots, was held to be properly sold as one lot. Howland v. Pettey, 15 R. I. 603.

A sale of a central portion of a tract thereby greatly injuring the remainder, accompanied with other circumstances indicating fraud, was set aside. Parker v. Glenn, 72 Ga. 637.

A bulk sale of the machinery and fixtures of an oil well, was held not to be principle has especially been recognized in foreclosure sales.¹ And the decree will direct the sale so to be made as to prejudice little as possible, parties having equities subject to the mortgage.²

void. Smith v. Meldren, 107 Pa. St. 348.

It is only on the ground of fraud, whereby some one is injured that a bulk sale will be set aside. Ross v. Mead, 10 Ill. 171. Especially if nobody requested a sale in parcels. McMullen v. Gable, 47 Ill. 67. And the motion to set aside must be made by a party whose rights are injured by the massing. Hicks v. Perry, 7 Mo. 346. In absence of fraud, a general creditor of the defendant will not be heard to complain. Yost v. Smith, 105 Pa. St. 628; 51 Am. Rep. 219.

Where the execution creditor was purchaser at a lump sale of a quarter section of land, it was set aside on motion; the court taking judicial notice of the irregularity; and he being presumed to have retained the land, although he has assigned his judgment, after the sale. Meacham v. Sunderland, 10 Ill. App. 123.

As to what is deemed to have passed by the sale, see infra, this title, Restriction to Defendant's Interest.

As to evidence whether a sale under two executions embraced two lots or only one, see Ditto v. Woodfill (Ky. 1888), 7 S. W. Rep. 542.

1. In Olcott v. Bynum, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 62 (as to a mortgage sale of 14,000 acres under a power to sell the whole on failure to pay each of the installments at maturity), the court, by Swayne, J., said: "If enough of it to satisfy the amount due could be segregated and sold without injury to the residue it would have been the duty so to sell. . . . But it has upon it water power, timber, ores, mills and furnaces; each part is necessary to every other. Dismemberment, instead of increasing, would have lessened the aggregate value."

So, also, as to a sale of a railway. Wilmer v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 453. Compare Dunham v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 254.

So, also, as to parcels used together as one farm. Anderson v. Austin, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 319; Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 461; Craig v. Stephens, 15 Neb. 362.

There is no obligation on foreclosure to sell suburban residence property in parcels, in order to obtain a greater price. Cleaver v. Green, 107 Ill. 67. Or unimproved city lots. Abbott v. Peck, 35 Minn. 499.

Where parcels not covered by the mortgage were sold with a parcel covered by it, as one tract, and for a gross sum, it was held that this did not avoid the sale as to the parcel covered by the mortgage. Bottineau v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 31 Minn. 125.

2. De Forest v. Farley, 62 N. Y. 628.

The remedy for an erroneous foreclosure order to sell in parcels is by amendment of the final decree. Horne v. Corning, 28 N. J. Eq. 254.

In American L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Ryerson, 6 N. J. Eq. 488, the court, by Halsted, Ch., stated that although there be a decree for the sale of the whole premises, the court may, in its discretion, regulate execution thereunder, and on payment of some installments, let the decree remain a security for subsequent defaults, if they occur. Citing Judd v. Evans, 6 T. R. 399.

The court will protect junior lienholders by selling entire, although the mortgage describes the property in separate parcels. Johnson v. Hambleton, 52 Md. 385. So held, even where the premises consisted of many acres within city limits; it not appearing that specific parcels could be sold for cash. Gregory v. Campbell, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417.

3. In England, an advance bid of £60 on £430; Bourn v. Bourn, 13 Simons 189; and in North Carolina, on one of ten per cent. advance. Dula v. Seagle, 98 N. Car. 458.

Sometimes there has been a second opening therefor. Scott v. Nesbit, 3 Bro. C. C. 475.

In some States, the practice rests

IX. THE MEMORANDUM.—The sheriff can consummate no valid sale without some official memorandum or return. Whether prescribed by a statute for prevention of frauds and perjuries or not, it is evidently his duty to have one sufficient to meet a denial, in case any party should resist the confirmation of the sale.¹ According to the preponderance of decisions, his indorsing the return upon the writ is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.²

In those States, the statutes of which require his proceedings to be stated in the return, or in a certificate of sale, his compliance therewith gives the requisite evidence.³ On the point entirely within the discretion of the court. State Bank v. Green, 11 Neb. 303; Wakeman v. Price, 3 N. Y. 334; Dupuy v. Gorman, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 144.

In Pennsylvania, this has been allowed upon an administrator's report as to a higher offer. Hays' Appeal, 51 Pa. St. 58.

In West Virginia, this was permitted in a commissioner's sale on an upset bid of twenty per cent. advance. National Bank v. Jarvis, 28 W. Va. 805.

As to re-opening, in general, see Lord Eldon's remarks in White v. Wilson, 14 Ves. 151. See, also, Forman v. Hunt, 3 Dana (Ky.) 614; and Williamson v. Dale, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 292.

1. In Smith v. Arnold, 5 Mason (U. S.) 420—where the memorandum of an administration auction sale of a farm failed to state the price and material terms—the court, by Story, J., distinguished such sales from chancery sales, where the court's own superintendence remedies the mischief supposed by the Statute of Frauds.

In Blagden v. Bradbear 12 Ves. 472, the court, by Grant, M. R., said: "From the public nature of a sale by auction, it does not follow that what passes there must be matter of certainty; so far from it, that I never saw more contradictory swearing than in those cases where attempts were made to introduce evidence of what was said or done during the course of the sale. . . . I should therefore hesitate to say the policy of the statute does not extend to such sales."

2. This rests upon the principle of the maxim, omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta, that official acts must be presumed to have been done as prescribed by the statute governing. Thus the return is prima facie evidence of the sale. Hyskill v. Givin, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 369; 26 Am. Dec. 254; Nichol v. Ridley, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 63; Hand v. Grant, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 508.

In Missouri, a sale without memorandum, though within the Statute of Frauds, and not divesting the owner's title, is not void; the deed when made will relate back and take effect from the sale. Alexander v. Merry, 9 Mo. 514.

In Remington v. Linthicum, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 92, the court, by Taney, C. J. (after reviewing pertinent Maryland decisions), said: "The sale by the marshal being within the Statute of Frauds, must be proved by written evidence. This may be procured before or after the jury are sworn in the trial of ejectment."

3. Even if a sale was voidable for non-compliance with the Statute of Frauds, a subsequent sufficient certificate of sale renders it valid as to persons who have not acquired any intervening rights. Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426; 51 Am. Rep. 754.

In Armstrong v. Vroman, 11 Minn. 220; 88 Am. Dec. 81, the court, by Berry, J., said: "The majority of the court are of opinion, that the proper evidence of a sale of real estate upon execution, is prescribed by statute on the subject, and that no note or memorandum other than the certificate of sale is required."

In National F. Ins. Co. v. Loomis, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 431, the court, by Walworth, Ch., after observing that the statute (2 New York Rev. Stat. 135, § 8) only requires the memorandum to be signed by the party acknowledging the sale, remarked that the master's report is a sufficient compliance.

In Simonds v. Catlin, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 65, the court, by Kent, Ch., (after animadverting upon a dictum of Lord whether or not his omission to make a written memorandum, even if bringing the case within the Statute of Frauds, invalidates the sale, the authorities are not unanimous.¹

X. RESALE—1. How Soon—a. AT LAW.—Upon the purchaser's failure to complete his purchase it is the duty of the sheriff to resell. The practice therein is not uniform. Ordinarily, on his acceptance of the bid, he must forthwith demand payment, and in default thereof, re-offer before departure of intended bidders.²

Hardwicke in Attorney-Gen'l v. Day, 1 Ves. 221, says: "The minute provisions in our own statute regulating sale on execution, and even the facts in the case before us [of a sale by a deputy while the sheriff was on his deathbed, and a return erroneously made in the deputy's own name] are sufficient to show that these kinds of sales are equally within the danger of the mischiefs which the act sought to prevent. The court of chancery [in Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696] itself has latterly admitted that it had gone rather too far in permitting part performance, and other circumstances, to take cases out of the Statute of Frauds."

1. In Indiana, a sheriff's testimony that his return was made on the execution "immediately after" the sale, is but a statement of his conclusion, and, in absence of deed or of certificate of sale, is not sufficient, in connection with the return, to take the sale out of the Statute of Frauds. Gossard v. Ferguson, 54 Ind. 519. Compare Chapman v. Harwood, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 82; 44 Am. Dec. 736.

In Kentucky, a memorandum made on a separate piece of paper, and not embodied in the return, will not bind the parties. Linn Boyd Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Terrill, 13 Bush (Ky.) 463.

In Pennsylvania, a sheriff's sale is not adjudged to be within the statute. In Emley v. Drum, 36 Pa. St. 123, the court, by Read, J., says: "It is acknowledged that if there had been a formal return by the sheriff in his own name, it would have been at least prima facie evidence of a sale; and this shows that a judicial sale, with us, is not within the Statute of Frauds, for the return is of course not signed by the purchaser, who is the party to be charged."

In North Carolina, the return itself is a sufficient memorandum. In Tate v. Greenlee, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 151, the court, by Gaston, J. (upon deciding that an execution sale is not within their statute of 1819, which declares parol contracts for sale of land or of slaves to be void), argues as follows:

"It is highly improbable that the Legislature intended that the sheriff should have an arbitrary discretion to make a title or not to make a title to the purchaser, and, if he be 'the party to be charged,' he must have this discretion, because he is not bound to avail himself of this legal objection, but may, like every party sought to be charged, waive it if he pleases. Should he refuse to make title, it is plain that vast confusion must arise."

"If the Legislature intended to vest the sheriff with so dangerous a power, it would have laid down some rule by which the consequences resulting from its exercise would be defined, instead of leaving them to be inferred by judicial conjecture. . . . The sheriff cannot claim the protection of this act against one paying the price of his purchase and demanding a conveyance, nor, conversely, can the purchaser set up the statute as a bar to the demand of the sheriff, for the purchase money, on tendering a conveyance."

2. In Louisiana, it has been held that the bid may be disregarded if not paid "at once." Durnford v. Degruys, 8 Martin (La.) 223; 13 Am. Dec. 285.

So, also, in Nebraska, if he elects to resell instead of suing the purchaser. Jones v. Null, 9 Neb. 254.

In Massachusetts, a reoffering within twenty minutes was sustained. Wilson v. Loring, 7 Mass. 392.

In Georgia, a resale on the same day within legal hours, and without readvertisement, was upheld. Humphrey v. McGill, 59 Ga. 649.

In Missouri, even a resale not taking place immediately, may be without readvertisement. Illingworth v. Miltenberger, 11 Mo. 80.

In South Carolina, the vendue act of

The restriction of the sale in the first instance to the period of the lien, applies also to resales.¹

In some States resales are expressly prescribed by statute.²

b. IN CHANCERY.—In chancery practice and under some codes the purchaser may be summoned to show cause, and on his contin-

1785 required seven days' notice of resale. In Minter v. Dent, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 291, where a slave, bid off for $300, was resold on the next day for $173, it was held that the restriction did not apply to sheriff's sales; the court, by Harper, J., observing that, as the law required the latter to take place on the first Monday and Tuesday of every month, to allow a week would, in effect, be allowing a month.

In Pennsylvania, the sheriff need give the purchaser only a general notice of the resale, without specifying the time or place. Gaskell v. Morris, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 32. But payment, unless neglected until after the return must be demanded, in order to maintenance of an action for the consequent loss. Vastine v. Fury, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 426.

In Missouri, neglect to pay is not considered tantamount to refusal to pay; and, in absence of actual repudiation, the sheriff must not only demand the purchase money but tender a deed before making a resale of realty. Phillips v. Goldman, 75 Mo. 686.

So, also, in Illinois, Hill v. Hill, 58 Ill. 239. Moreover, the purchaser must be notified that he will be held responsible for the consequent deficiency. Maulding v. Steele, 105 Ill. 644.

1. See supra, this title, The Time of Sale.

In Settlemyre v. Newsome, 10 Oregon 446, in deciding that land sold for less than the debt and redeemed by a grantee of the judgment debtor, might be sold a second time for the balance—the court, by Waldo, J., said: "The execution comes as a power to seize the debtor's title and pass it to the purchaser. . . . It is not sufficient to divest the lien that the power should be partly executed by an inchoate sale. The sale is but one of the steps in the exercise of the power."

In Massachusetts, in case no rights of third persons have intervened after a purchaser has made a deposit but refused to complete the sale, the sheriff may, after notice, resell without making or recording another seizure.

Croacher v. Oesting, 143 Mass. 195. And where, on the purchaser's default the sheriff, without return, handed the execution back to the creditor's attorney who elected to treat the sale as a nullity, and in good faith indorsed on the execution that it had never been, in the sheriff's hands, and obtained an alias execution whereunder a resale was made, it was held valid. Slater v. Lamb, 150 Mass. 239. Compare Byrnes v. Morris, 53 Tex. 213; and Maher v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 116 Ind. 486.

2. E. g., in Indiana: "Whenever the purchaser of any property sold on execution, shall fail or refuse to pay the purchase money, he shall be liable, on motion, to be made by the sheriff or the execution plaintiff or defendant in the proper court, five days being given, to judgment for the amount of the purchase money and damages not exceeding ten per cent. and interest with costs; and no stay of execution shall be allowed upon the judgment."

"Or, the sheriff may re-expose and sell the property on the same or any subsequent day, according to law; and if the amount bid at the second sale shall not equal the amount bid at the first sale and the costs of the second sale, the first purchaser shall be liable for the deficiency and damages thereon not exceeding ten per cent. and interest and costs, to be recovered by a like notice and motion. In case he sells on a subsequent day he shall readvertise as in other cases." Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 760, 761.

See, also, Virginia Code 1887, § 3592; West Virginia Rev. Stat. chap. 88, § 10.

In Nebraska, on failure of sale for want of bidders, the sheriff must make return with inventory, and the plaintiff sue out an alias writ, whereupon the sheriff readvertises and resells. Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1889, p. 919, § 490.

In Ohio, the sheriff may resell without making return or obtaining an order of court. Bisbee v. Hall, 3 Ohio 449.

In Lower Canada, whenever two resales on false bidding have taken place, ued default, a resale may be made. If the terms are as beneficial to him as those of the original sale, he can be compelled to pay any consequent deficiency.¹ Otherwise, if they materially differ.²

2. Sheriff's Action for Deficiency.—The loss consequent upon a resale may be recovered of the defaulting purchaser.³ Some statutes provide for a suit therefor by the officer making the sale.⁴ In some States this naturally results from his official responsibility.⁵ In order to such recovery, the terms of the new sale must not vary materially from those of the original sale;⁶ nor must there have intervened any deterioration of the title of the execution defendant.⁷

The fact that the purchaser has obtained a conveyance from the officer is not conclusive; mistake or fraud may be shown in rebuttal. Williams v. Blakey, 76 Va. 254.

In Tennessee, the motion may be ex parte, and at any time before confirmation the purchaser may apply to the court and show cause for relief from the order. Still v. Boon, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 380. But after confirmation, payment of any residue must be compelled by another suit. Van Bibber v. Sawyers, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 81.

In Nevada, the sheriff may so proceed against an execution creditor purchasing and refusing to pay the fees. Sweeney v. Hawthorne, 6 Nev. 129.

In New Jersey, he may sue therefor in his own name, even in case of a foreclosure sale; the remedy in chancery is not exclusive. Townshend v. Simon, 38 N. J. L. 239.

Nor can the execution plaintiff recover it from the first bidder. Harvey v. Adams, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 289.

In Mississippi, the sheriff cannot recover the difference of price without showing that he has been rendered liable therefor, or suffered damage thereby. Adams v. Griffin, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 556.

In Missouri, if the proceeds of the second sale satisfy the execution, the sheriff cannot have judgment on motion against the first purchaser. Reed v. Shepperd, 38 Mo. 463.

6. Supra, this title, Resale—In Chancery. On the same ground as the rule that an executor's resale must not be clogged with terms likely to lower the price; where it seems that if the conditions of the first sale were for security by bond and mortgage, an addition requiring that the bond be with "warrant of attorney," would be so essential a variance as to discharge the purchaser. Paul v. Shallcross, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 326.

7. In Hare v. Bedell, 98 Pa. St. 485 (where the debtor had meanwhile conveyed the land to his wife), the court, by Sterrett, J., argued that the inferior quality of title, or the less advantageous terms would effect a reduction, and we would be left without any reliable standard by which to measure the loss. But Mercur, J., dissented from the applicability in this instance; remarking that there was amply sufficient to

3. Plaintiff's Rights on Reoffering.—The sheriff, although in one sense the trustee of the execution plaintiff, derives all his authority from the law; he alone is responsible for the legal appropriation of the proceeds of a sale. Accordingly as there is no privity of contract between an execution plaintiff and the purchaser, the former cannot sue for the purchase money.¹

At the request of the execution plaintiff, the sheriff may keep the sale open, in order to resell, if the bidder does not make good his offer.² A foreclosure sale was set aside where the officer unreasonably refused a twenty-minute adjournment.³

XI. CERTIFICATE OF SALE—1. Requisites.—In some States the sheriff is required by statute to give the purchaser a certificate of the sale, and to cause a duplicate to be registered. Such certificate should give the names of the parties to the suit, the dates of the judgment and sale, the description of the property, the amount of the judgment and of the bid, and the redemption time. A few statutes prescribe that it state, besides the consideration paid, the price for each distinct parcel.⁴ amend by, and the parol evidence should have been received.

1. Adams v. Adams, 4 Watts (Pa.) 160; Harvey v. Adams, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 289.

In New York, in an action for a false return, it has been held, that it is the duty of the sheriff, when the property is struck off, to demand money, and, if this is not paid, to resell; if he delivers the property and takes a check, this must be treated as money in his hands, to be applied on the execution. Robinson v. Brennan, 90 N. Y. 208.

In Maryland, where the sheriff, without consent of A, the execution plaintiff, gave B, the bidder, ten days' indulgence for payment of a balance, a temporary injunction on the resale, thereupon advertised, was dissolved; A not being bound by the credit sale. Hardesty v. Wilson, 2 Gill (Md.) 481; 41 Am. Dec. 439.

In Wisconsin, conversely, it has been held that the sheriff had no right to disregard a bid approved by the execution creditor's attorney and resell, merely because the bidder had not on hand cash enough to pay the fees, etc. Lane v. White, 12 Wis. 381.

In Missouri, in partition proceedings, the law makes the sheriff the agent of the vendor, with no power to abrogate the sale without his consent; without this, his assumed resale would afford no defense to a suit for specific performance. Stewart v. Garvin, 33 Mo. 103.

The North Carolina Code, § 261—requiring satisfaction out of the real property "belonging to the debtor on the day when the judgment was docketed"—has been construed not to import that a second writ can be levied on the same property effectually sold under the first; it must be upon other lands of the debtor. Peebles v. Pate, 86 N. Car. 437.

In Utah, a marshal's sale of two lots, one to V and the other to W, was set aside by the court upon V's refusal to pay and the non-acceptance of W's bid. On resale, P was the highest bidder for the V lot. The marshal made no attempt to collect the excess of V's bid over P's, and at the execution defendant's request, did not resell the W lot, but accepted her tender of the balance of the judgment remaining over P's bid, and gave her a receipt in full, whereupon she mortgaged the W lot. P refused to pay his bid. It was held that the marshal on readvertising both lots for sale, was properly enjoined from reselling the W lot; it was the execution plaintiff's duty to see that he resold at V's risk. Kershaw v. Dyer (Utah 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 1000.

2. Baring v. Moore, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 48; Isbell v. Kenyon, 33 Mich. 63.

3. Breese v. Busby, 13 How. Fr. (N. Y.) 485.

4. E. g. New York: "The sheriff who sells real property, by virtue of an execution, must make out, subscribe and acknowledge before an officer

These statutes are merely directory.¹ Ordinarily the certificate should be acknowledged like a deed.²

2. Effect.—Statutes of some States provide that the certificate shall pass all the execution defendant's "right, title and interest."³ authorized to take the acknowledgment of a deed, duplicate certificates of sale containing: 1. The name of each purchaser and the time when the sale was made. 2. A particular description of the property sold. 3. The price bid for each distinct parcel separately sold. 4. The whole consideration money paid." New York Code, § 1438. (B's R. S. 1889, § 79, p. 1078.)

The whole purchase money must be recited. Mascraft v. Van Antwerp, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 334. But a recital of the sale is not prima facie evidence of issuance of execution, the statute not prescribing it. Goldman v. Kennedy, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 157.

The Wisconsin statute requires the certificate also to state "the time when such sale will become absolute." Wisconsin Annot. Stat. 1889, § 3000.

The Indiana statute requires it also to state "the estate therein sold, whether in fee for life or for years." Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 766.

In Illinois, "the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed unless the premises shall be redeemed." Illinois Rev. Stat. 1887, p. 864, § 16. It is a void act to give the certificate to another than the one shown by the return to be the purchaser. Dickerman v. Burgess, 20 Ill. 266.

In California, "when subject to redemption, it must be so stated," also, when the judgment is for a specified kind, etc., "the kind of money or currency in which such redemption may be made." California Code Civ. Proc. 1885, § 700. Compare Montana Comp. Stat. 1887, p. 151, § 351.

In Michigan, the officer "shall make and subscribe as many certificates as shall be necessary, of such sale," and shall indorse on each "the rate of interest borne by the judgment." Michigan Annot. Stat. 1882, § 6117.

In Minnesota, "a description of the judgment, execution, decree or order." Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 4936.

The Tennessee statute also prescribes the contents. Tennessee Code 1884, § 3766.

In Upper Canada, the whole form of the sheriff's certificate upon sale of an equity of redemption is prescribed. Ontario Rev. Stat. 1887, p. 736, § 23.

1. Jackson v. Young, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 269; 15 Am. Dec. 473.

"The statute imposes a strict duty upon the sheriff, a failure to perform which would subject him to any costs or expenses necessary to compel his performance. His neglect would not invalidate the proceedings between the parties, nor prejudice the rights of the purchaser." O'Brien v. Hashagen, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 564.

As in case of a deed, a misdescription, in the certificate of sale, of the execution, is not fatal if the execution is fairly identified. Bartleson v. Thompson, 30 Minn. 161. Nor an explainable variance between the description in the certificate and that in the deed. Holman v. Gill, 107 Ill. 467. Nor one between the certificate and an abstract of the judgment as to the amount. Chicago Dock, etc., Co. v. Kinzie, 93 Ill. 415. Nor a clerical error, "township" instead of "town." Herrick v. Merrill, 37 Minn. 250.

2. But the copy filed with the register is evidence without the sheriff's acknowledgment. Knowlton v. Ray, 4 Wis. 288; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552.

3. "Such certificate, so proved or acknowledged and recorded, shall, upon expiration of the time for redemption, operate as a conveyance to the purchaser or his assignee, of all the right, title, and interest of the person whose property is sold in and to the same, at the date of the lien upon which the property was sold, without any other conveyance whatever." Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 4937.

In case of a levy upon land held by a debtor under a subsisting contract of sale, his interest will therefore pass without being specified. Reynolds v. Fleming, 43 Minn. 513.

In New York, a recital in the certificate, after a general description, that it was "embracing all of said lands of said A, but the widow's thirds, which the law gives according to law" was held superfluous, and simply declaring that the sale did not interfere with her enjoyment of her dower; all

Otherwise, the certificate confers on the holder no title to the land.¹

3. Recording.—Where statutes require such certificate they also make it the sheriff's duty to cause a duplicate to be registered.² The ordinary rules of consequent notice to third parties apply.³

4. Amendments.—The certificate may be amended by order of court.⁴

5. Assignments.—In some States the rights of an assignee of the certificate are indicated by statute.⁵

A's right, title and interest passed. Holman v. Holman, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 215.

In Indiana, where there had been no valid memorandum of sale, it was held that the effect of a tender of the amount of the execution, made by a grantor of the debtor, could not be avoided by a subsequent execution of a certificate of purchase. Ruckle v. Barbour, 48 Ind. 274.

1. "No title or interest in the land." Huftalin v. Misner, 70 Ill. 55. It will not disturb the execution defendant's possession until after the redemption period and the sheriff's conveyance of title. Curtis v. Swearingen, 1 Ill. 160.

Failure to make the deed within the five years after the redemption period has expired annuls also the certificate. Ryhiner v. Frank, 105 Ill. 326.

2. E. g., in New York: "The sheriff must within ten days after the sale, file one of the duplicate certificates in the office of the clerk of the county and deliver another to the purchaser." . . . New York Code, § 1439. If the clerk fail to record it, it will be void as against subsequent purchasers whose conveyance was recorded sooner than was the sheriff's deed. Bowers v. Arnoux, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 530.

In Indiana, the clerk of the circuit court must record the duplicate in the lis pendens record. Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, § 766.

In Minnesota, if the sheriff should die without giving a certificate, the purchaser could perfect the evidence aliunde. Barnes v. Kerlinger, Minn. 82.

3. In Michigan, the sheriff's neglect to file the certificate within the ten days prescribed by Michigan Comp. Laws, § 4638, does not affect the purchaser's title, unless the execution debtor or innocent third parties have been thereby misled to their prejudice. Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232. The Michigan act of 1875, § 123, makes the recording of the certificate constructive notice to subsequent purchasers; and, in ejectment this imposes on them the burden of proving themselves to be, or to derive title from bona fide purchasers. Atwood v. Bearss, 45 Mich. 469.

So also in California. Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552.

4. E. g., to insert an omitted parcel of land. Smith v. Hudson, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 430. To identify an execution where the plaintiff in another had died. Gansevoort v. Gilliland, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 218. To strike out a lot to which the execution defendant had merely an equitable title. Richards v. Varnum, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 79. To state the price and the purchaser's name; and this, after the expiration of the sheriff's official term. Bixby v. Rowe, 2 Mich. N. P. 152.

It seems that an inherently insufficient description could not be helped out by evidence of extrinsic facts showing what property the sheriff intended to sell. Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 250.

5. That of Indiana provides that the certificate shall be assignable by indorsement, and the assignment, duly acknowledged, be similarly recorded, at request of the assignee. Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, § 766.

In case of non-redemption, the holder may make a valid assignment after the year has expired. Maddux v. Watkins, 88 Ind. 74. Compare Hasselman v. Lowe, 70 Ind. 414. The assignee on receiving a deed is in legal effect the purchaser at the sale. Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Ind. 19.

A purchaser from the purchaser cannot be bound by any agreement or trust between his vendor and the execution defendant, whereof he had no notice. Parmlee v. Sloan, 37 Ind. 469.

XII. DISPOSAL OF THE PROCEEDS—1. As Between Rival Judgments.—Ordinarily, the purchaser at an execution sale on a junior judgment, takes the property subject to the lien of a senior judgment. And the junior judgment creditor is entitled to the proceeds, the senior judgment creditor being confined to his lien on the property.¹ But in those States where the sale transfers the title to the property regardless both of senior and of junior liens,

An assignee without recourse was held not entitled to recover from the purchaser merely for an irregularity—e. g., omission from the summons, which, in absence of fraud or concealment, did not avoid the judgment. Martin v. Cole, 38 Ind. 379.

In New York, the assignee is not entitled to a conveyance until he has filed the assignment as required by the law of 1835. People v. Ransom, 2 N. Y. 490. But after receiving the sheriff's deed, an omission to file the assignment will not affect his title. Phillips v. Shiffer, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 347.

In California, one taking an assignment of the certificate as security against his liability for debts of the judgment debtor, agreeing to cancel the same when the debts are paid and his liability discharged, ceases on their payment to have any interest in the certificate, and if he obtains a sheriff's deed, neither he nor his assignee with notice acquires any title to the land. Baber v. McLellan, 30 Cal. 135.

1. Commercial Bank v. Yazoo Co., 6 How. (Miss.) 530, 535; Calmes v. Ford, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 190; Andrews v. Wilkes, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 554; Hanauer v. Casey, 26 Ark. 352; Worsley v. Bryan, 86 N. Car. 343; Love v. Williams, 4 Fla. 126; Walker v. Anderson, 31 Tex. 646. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 158. As between attaching creditors, those only who have reduced their claims to judgments will be heard, though others, who have not, have older attachments. "A judgment is necessary to give effect to the attachment lien. By possibility on a trial, the defendant in the attachment may defeat a recovery, and put an end to the attachment lien. It is wholly incomplete and imperfect until judgment; and none but judgment creditors can be regarded." Edwards v. Toomer, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 75.

A judgment and execution of A against B bore the same date as those of C against B and D, late copartners, and under A's the sheriff sold a house and lot, the property of B. It was held that A was entitled to the whole proceeds of the sale. Roberts v. Roberts 8 Rich. (S. Car.) 115.

Where a non-negotiable note had been transferred verbally by the payee, and sued on in his name, for the holder's benefit, it was held that, in the disposal of proceeds, the holder took preference to the payee's judgment creditors; and his right could be enforced on motion for a rule against the sheriff. Ex parte Cark, Dudley (S. Car.) 111.

In Mississippi, when judgments on the same day and in the same court have been rendered against the same defendant in favor of different plaintiffs, and afterwards been enrolled on the same day in the order in which they were rendered, the one first entered on the judgment roll is entitled to be first satisfied out of the proceeds of a sale made under executions issued upon all the judgments. Reed v. Haviland, 38 Miss. 323.

Where A's judgment against C was of the same date as B's against C, and the executions were levied simultaneously, and A gave the sheriff indemnity, but B refused, it was held that A was entitled to priority. Townsend v. Henry, 26 Miss. 203. But compare Girard Bank v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 2 Miles (Pa.) 447.

A, B, and C were successive judgment creditors of D, whose land was sold under A's and C's executions to C, who paid enough of his bid to satisfy A's judgment, and directed the sheriff to credit the remainder on his own execution, which he did, but returned the execution unsatisfied, stating that C had failed to pay the balance of his bid, wherefore the sale was void. B purchased under his execution and brought a bill to enjoin conveyance to C. Held, that B need not tender the amount paid to satisfy A's judgment; the fund should have been applied in the order of the dates of the judgments. Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 62.

the senior lienholders must first be paid out of the proceeds.¹ Liens are determined as they existed at the date of the sale.²

2. As Between Rival Executions.—When one execution has been levied, and before the sale another, regularly issued on an older judgment, comes to the sheriff's hands, the senior judgment creditor is entitled to the proceeds.³ Otherwise, in case of irregu-

Where A's judgment against B and C was entered on the same day as one in favor of B against C, and B's land was sold under the former, it was held that B could claim no part of the proceeds as against A. Vierheller's Appeal, 24 Pa. St. 105; 62 Am. Dec. 365.

Where an execution has issued against land the terre-tenant of which, erroneously believing the judgment to be a lien thereon, has paid the amount of the execution to the officer, he cannot recover it back; it must go to the execution plaintiff. Boas v. Updegrove, 5 Pa. St. 516; 47 Am. Dec. 425.

A grantee from the execution defendant anterior to the judgment, having recourse on the purchaser, is not entitled to the proceeds of the sale in preference to the plaintiff. Helfrich's Appeal, 15 Pa. St. 382.

2. Douglass' Appeal, 48 Pa. St. 223. One to whom the defendant had conveyed after inception of the lien and before the sale, is entitled to the surplus, in absence of paramount liens. Every v. Edgerton, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 259.

Under the Georgia act of 1829, regulating assignments of judgments, the holder of an execution which has been twice transferred is subrogated to the original plaintiff in the distribution of the proceeds. Price v. Bradford, 5 Ga. 364.

In Pennsylvania, in distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale of the land taken by a cognizor, the widow's administrator and the heirs were held to be entitled to the portion of the valuation due at her death in preference to the holders of a judgment obtained against the cognizor, after the date of the recognizance. Riddle's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 177.

In Delaware, where a judgment and execution were obtained in fraud of creditors, it was held that a subsequent and bona fide judgment creditor was entitled to the proceeds of the sale. Taggart v. Phillips, 5 Del. Ch. 237.

3. Bagby v. Reeves, 20 Ala. 427; Lawson v. Jordan, 19 Ark. 297; 70 Am. Dec. 596; Thompson v. McCordel, 27 Ga. 273; State v. Salyers, 19 Ind. 432; Brown v. Hamlin, 23 Miss. 392; Barker v. Gates, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 77; Dunn v. Nichols, 63 N. Car. 107; Cooper v. Scott, 2 McMull. (S. Car.) 150; Watmough v. Francis, 7 Pa. St. 206. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 158.

In Florida, when the sheriff executes first the writ last delivered, he must pay over the money to the plaintiff under whose writ the sale was made. The other has a remedy against the sheriff, in an action on the case. Love v. Williams, 4 Fla. 126.

In Kentucky, a sheriff is bound first to pay off the execution first received by any one deputy, though a junior execution is first levied and a sale made thereunder. Million v. Com., 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 310. Similarly in New Jersey. Mushback v. Ryerson, 11 N. J. Eq. 346.

In Kansas, as to the rights of rival execution claimants, see the complicated case Jones S. & Paper Co. v. Hentig, 29 Kan. 75.

In Pennsylvania, proceeds of sale of personal property levied on and sold on three writs of fi. fa. must be appropriated to the first that came to the sheriff's hands, although the property sold was acquired by the debtor after the first two, and before the third had been received by him. Shafner v. Gilmore, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 438.

In South Carolina, interest which has accrued on an execution must be paid before money collected by the sheriff can be applied to satisfy a junior execution.

In Mississippi, although proceeds of a sale under a junior judgment go first to pay that one, in absence of prior levy under the older one, and larity,¹ or covin.² Sometimes intervention of an injunction, and proceeding thereunder may, incidental to suspension, vary the order of distribution.³ So also as to appeal,⁴ stay,⁵ or certiorari.⁶ So also in case of proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency,⁷ or in probate or orphans' court.⁸ The rights of attaching creditors as to precedence are usually well defined by statute.⁹

It is a common law rule (and consequently, in the absence of contrary evidence, presumed by the court to prevail in a sister State), that where, under two executions issued upon judgments which were docketed at the same time, property not of a sufficient value to discharge both is simultaneously levied on, the proceeds are to be applied equally between the two executions till the smaller one is satisfied, and not pro rata. When the smaller is satisfied, the surplus goes to the larger execution.¹⁰

the surplus to the older, yet if the sheriff had both executions in his hands, his neglect to levy the older one first cannot prejudice the creditor, and the older must first be satisfied. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Trotter, 36 Miss. 416.

1. E. g., issuance after lapse of five years without revivor. Lytle v. Cincinnati Mfg. Co., 4 Ohio 459.

2. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 146. Wandling v. Thompson, 41 N. J. L. 309.

3. See INJUNCTIONS, vol. 10, p. 777.

Where collection of an execution is enjoined, and the sheriff, holding a junior execution, proceeds to sell, he cannot apply the proceeds to the execution enjoined, although before the return of the process the injunction is dissolved. Newlin v. Murray, 63 N. Car. 566.

4. McCants v. Rogers, 1 Treadw. Const. (S. Car.) 443.

5. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 146. In Pennsylvania, if a fi. fa. be levied on personal property, and stayed on the defendant's giving bond as provided by Pennsylvania act of 1842, and a second execution is levied and a sale made during the stay time, the proceeds must be applied to the first. Sedgwick's Appeal, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 260.

6. Walker v. Inman, 78 Ga. 53.

7. See BANKRUPTCY, vol. 2, p. 67; INSOLVENCY, vol. 11, p. 167.

Though a claimant of proceeds of sale of personal property of his debtor has the prior execution, he cannot, by virtue thereof, if insolvent, receive the fund to the prejudice of a subsequent execution creditor, for whose claim he was bound as the surety of the debtor, but the proceeds will be appropriated to the latter claimant. Worrall's Appeal, 41 Pa. St. 524.

8. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 7, p. 165.

In South Carolina, where an executor does not plead plene administravit, and several judgments of different dates are thereupon recovered against him, under which the sheriff sells real estate, the proceeds must be applied to the executions in the order of their dates, without regard to the grade of the claims on which the judgments are founded. Huger v. Dawson, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 328.

9. See ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 926.

In Pennsylvania, a creditor whose attachment was served before entry of other judgments against the defendant on which executions were issued, and his interest sold, is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds when paid into court for distribution. Straley's Appeal, 43 Pa. St. 89.

10. Campbell v. Ruger, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 215; Rutledge v. Townsend, 38 Ala. 706. Compare McAfoose's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 276; Wilcox v. May, 19 Ohio 408; Friar v. Ray, 5 Mo. 510.

Where a sheriff has two executions against the same defendant, and, after levying part of the prior one, proceeds after its return day to make another levy, he must apply the proceeds of the latter levy to satisfy the junior execution. Slingerland v. Swart, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 255.

A mere delay in selling property levied on does not render the sale void as against an execution issued after the sale. Linnendoll v. Doe, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 222.

3. Mortgagees and Other Lienholders.—In general, a sheriff's sale is made subject to all liens paramount to that of the execution;¹ this, whether mortgagees,² vendors,³ landlords,⁴ mechanics,⁵ or dower interests.⁶

4. Proceedings.—The statutory practice in England, Canada and the States, in distributing the proceeds and adjusting interposed claims, is not uniform.⁷

1. See infra, this title, Prior Liens. See also EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 158.

2. In Georgia, although the sale transfers the title free from the lien of prior judgments, it is subject to prior mortgages. Harwell v. Fitts, 20 Ga. 723. As between equities otherwise equal, the elder should be given the precedence. Allen v. Sharp, 65 Ga. 417. Compare Simms v. Kidd, 55 Ga. 626, stated in EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 158, and the Georgia cases.

In Massachusetts, as to surplus proceeds remaining in the hands of a mortgagee on sale under a power, pending attachment of the equity of redemption, see the complicated case of Gardner v. Barnes, 106 Mass. 505.

In Pennsylvania, one claiming adversely to a mortgage cannot share in the proceeds of a sale of the property; his remedy is in ejectment against the purchaser. Housekeeper's Appeal, 49 Pa. St. 141.

3. In Georgia, judgment creditors of a vendee of land who has paid part of the purchase money, and is in possession, but has received no deed, are entitled to the proceeds of an execution sale of his title, in preference to the vendor. Wilkerson v. Burr, 10 Ga. 117. Compare English v. Reid, 55 Ga. 240.

In Mississippi, the rule that the purchaser acquires only the interest of the execution defendant applies to a sale of land subject to a vendor's lien. Lissa v. Posey, 64 Miss. 352.

4. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 12, p. 757c.

Upon an execution sale of a tenant, any lien which the law gives the landlord thereon must be first satisfied out of the proceeds. Weltner's Appeal, 63 Pa. St. 302.

But money due for use and occupation is not to be preferred as rent, etc. Farmers' Bank v. Cole, 5 Harr. (Del.) 418.

As to emblements, see infra, this title, Products and Growing Crops.

Where after a fi. fa. had been levied on land, grain was thereon sowed, which another creditor levied upon and sold, it was held that the latter was entitled to keep the proceeds of the grain. Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161.

5. See MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 15, p. 86.

The Pennsylvania exemption act of 1849, has been held not to entitle the debtor to any part of the proceeds of an execution sale of his land, until mechanics' liens upon buildings erected thereon are first satisfied. The appraisalment thereunder does not affect the claimant's rights, etc. Lauk's Appeal, 24 Pa. St. 426. Compare the Pennsylvania cases stated in EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 159.

6. See supra, this article, Preliminaries—Dower.

In Ohio, where separate parcels of one's real estate were levied upon by A and other creditors, and after his death, the widow's dower in the whole was set off entire upon A's parcel, and the whole was sold, and the proceeds of each paid to the creditors, respectively, who had levied thereon, it was held that A was entitled to contribution from the others. Bank of U. S. v. Delorac, Wright (Ohio) 285.

7. In Pennsylvania, the sheriff may pay the money into court and claimants interplead. Pennypacker's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 117.

Thereupon, if any claimant so demands, issues of fact must be tried by a jury. Appeal of Benson, 48 Pa. St. 159. The decision is then final and conclusive. Noble v. Cope, 50 Pa. St. 17. Where there is a prior judgment, and the sheriff incurs no risk of mispayment in appropriating proceeds of sale of realty, he has no right to impose conditions, or take a promise to refund. *Lewis v. In New Hampshire, a claim must be

XIII. THE PURCHASER'S TITLE—1. In General—a. RESTRICTION TO DEFENDANT'S INTEREST.—The English doctrine that a sale in market overt cuts off all prior liens, and gives the purchaser an absolutely good title, is not adopted in any of the States.² The general rule is that the lien of the judgment and execution attaches only to the defendant's real interest,³ and, accordingly, that nothing more or less than this, except what title he may acquire before the sale,⁴ goes into the purchaser's title.⁵ Thus, interposed before the debt has been satisfied by the levy and the lapse of a year afterwards. Bowker v. Smith, 48 N. H. 111.

In Georgia, the rights of contestants may be settled by a rule on the sheriff to distribute the fund. Crawford v. Williams, 76 Ga. 792. See Georgia Code, 1882, §§ 3664, et seq.

In Missouri, if the sheriff has obeyed the direction of the writ in distributing the proceeds, he is not affected by any subsequent action of the court relating to them. State v. Spencer, 30 Mo. App. 407.

In Arkansas, the sheriff has the responsibility of determining the distribution, and aggrieved claimant must seek redress against him. Trapnall v. Jordan, 7 Ark. 430.

In Alabama, an agreed case may be made, and the sheriff not be a party. Turner v. Lawrence, 11 Ala. 427.

In South Carolina, the money can be awarded only to a party claimant. Caskey v. McMullen, 3 S. Car. 196. But in Mississippi, an order injurious to a claimant may be reversed, though he did not join in the appeal. Heizer v. Fisher, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 672.

The surplus proceeds of a sale of land must be dealt with as land. Matthews v. Duryee, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 69; Wills v. Van Voorhies, 20 N. Y. 412; Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland (Md.) 443; 18 Am. Dec. 327.

Liens that are subordinate to that under which the sale is made are to be satisfied in the order of their priority. Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 470; Benton v. Shreeve, 4 Ind. 66; Polk Co. v. Sypher, 17 Iowa 358.

An officer selling under a junior writ and paying the money to the plaintiff therein, may be compelled to pay it on the writ properly entitled thereto. Drewe v. Lainson, 11 Ad. & E. 529; 39 E. C. L. 529; Kirk v. Vonberg, 34 Ill. 440; Peck v. Tiffany, 2 N. Y. 451; Jones v. Jud-

In Kentucky, the purchaser acquires not only the execution lien, but also an inchoate title, to be perfected by the deed relating back thereto. Greer v. Wintersmith, 85 Ky. 516.

In Tennessee, the purchaser's title relates back to the levy; the inhibition in Tennessee Code, § 1779, of champertous sales does not apply to sales under execution. McClain v. Easley, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 520. But he derives no title until the sale is confirmed. Eakin v. Herbert, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 116.

In Illinois, the execution defendant can only dispute the purchaser's title when, after abandoning the land, he returns to it under an outstanding title. Gould v. Hendrickson, 96 Ill. 599. And, conversely, the fact that the defendant turned out land for the levy, imports no warranty of title, nor any legal or moral obligation to redeem; and this, though the land was incumbered to its full value. Vanscoyoc v. Kinler, 77 Ill. 151.

The purchaser's acceptance of redemption money from a junior execution creditor is a waiver of the irregularity of the latter's levying within the year. Kell v. Worden, 110 Ill. 310.

In Indiana, a deed issued without payment of the bid, passes no title. Ruckle v. Barbour, 48 Ind. 274; Mc-

the writ operating upon the title of no other than the defendant, the purchaser is always liable to be sued by the true owner.¹ As a general rule, the maxim caveat emptor applies.² There is no warranty express or implied.³

In some States the purchaser's interest is defined by statute.⁴ In absence of fraud or any extraordinary circumstances to pre-

From a purchaser at sale under levy on land of a widow, whose estate therein was determinable on her death, to whom the land has been set off in partition, her children after her death can recover. Miller v. Noble, 86 Ind. 527.

In Maryland, the purchaser acquires whatever title the defendant had at the time of the judgment; the defendant cannot, by an agreement thereafter made, to hold the land as tenant of a third party, defeat the purchaser's hab. fac. poss. Miller v. Wilson, 32 Md. 297.

In Louisiana, if the defendant possessed only as lessee, the adjudicatee takes as such. Parish Board of School Directors v. Edrington, 40 La. Ann. 633.

In Michigan, an execution sale of an undivided interest in lands where the defendant has the complete title is void, and the defect cannot be cured by Michigan Comp. L., § 4596. Eberstein v. Oswalt, 47 Mich. 254.

Where the sale is under several executions, whereof only one is valid, the purchaser under this one takes the title. Dearkins v. Rex, 60 Md. 593.

The purchaser acquires the right to resist a mortgage made by the defendant, tainted with usury. Dix v. Van Wyck, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 522. The purchaser of a lessee's interest may maintain ejectment against a purchaser from an assignee taking the lease to secure an usurious loan. Mason v. Lord, 40 N. Y. 476.

The purchaser's title cannot be collaterally impeached on the ground that the judgment was entered against the defendant after he was dead. Taylor v. Snow, 47 Tex. 462; 26 Am. Rep. 311.

The fact that a judgment or decree was erroneous on its face was held not to be fatal to the purchaser's title in a collateral attack. Mays v. Foley, 40 Cal. 281. As to the effect of satisfaction of the judgment, see Judson v. Lyford (Cal. 1889), 23 Pac. Rep. 58.

The mere fact that the defendant was in possession is immaterial. Pekin Min., etc., Co. v. Kennedy, 81 Cal. 356.

2. Besides the instances presented in JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 225, the following are illustrative:

The purchaser must notice any discrepancies between the judgment and execution. Stotsenburg v. Stotsenburg, 75 Ind. 538.

In Alabama, an execution plaintiff buys and credits the price on the judgment at the risk of the defendant's having no title. Goodbar v. Daniel, 88 Ala. 583.

Where by an agreement between the judgment creditor and the mortgagee the lien of the judgment had been postponed and subordinated to that of a junior mortgage, it was held that a purchaser without notice thereof took subject thereto. Frost v. Yonkers Sav. Bank, 70 N. Y. 553; 26 Am. Rep. 627.

So also the purchaser was adjudged to take nothing, where the execution defendant held only under a deed that lacked a seal. Hinsdale v. Thornton, 74 N. Car. 167.

A purchaser who has paid for a worthless title cannot repudiate the transaction. Wells v. Van Dyke, 106 Pa. St. 111; Hexter v. Schneider, 14 Oregon 184.

3. Shaw v. Smith, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 97; Treptow v. Buse, 10 Kan. 170.

4. E. g., Nebraska Code, § 500, making the sheriff's deed vest in the purchaser the same estate as was in the judgment debtor at or after the time when the land became liable to the satisfaction of the judgment. While a deed from A to B remained unrecorded the land was levied on as A's but two days before the sale the deed was recorded; it was held that the sale passed no title. Mansfield v. Gregory, 1 Neb. 432. Compare Miller v. Finn, 1 Neb. 254.

vent attendance or a fair sale, if the statutory requirements have been fulfilled as to the rendition of the judgment, the issuance and levy of the execution, the advertisement and the sale, the purchaser gets a good title, however inadequate the price.¹ The statutes regulating priority of liens determine the respective rights and titles in case of rival executions.² Ordinarily, any title acquired by the execution defendant after the sale, does not inure to the purchaser's benefit.³

b. VENDOR AND VENDEE.—If the defendant holds only under a contract of purchase, the purchaser also becomes subordinated to the rights of the vendor.⁴

Under Louisiana Rev. Code, § 2266, —declaring all unrecorded sheriff's sales of real estate in New Orleans to be void, except between the parties thereto—nothing passes if the adjudication of the sale be not recorded before the judgment debtor sells the property to another party. Huntington v. Bordeaux, 42 La. Ann. 346.

In New York, the purchaser takes only the debtor's interest at the time when the judgment was docketed. Snedeker v. Snedeker, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

A purchaser's title was held to be unaffected by an appeal whereof he had no notice; the defendant having acquiesced in the justice's refusal to stay execution. Kramer v. Wellendorf, 129 Pa. St. 547.

See supra, this title, Preliminaries—Injunction, etc.

2. See infra, this title, Vacating Sales—Inadequacy, etc. See supra, this title, Disposal, etc.—As Between Rival Executions.

Thus in some States a prior purchaser at a sale under a junior execution acquires a better title than a subsequent purchaser under a senior execution. And this especially where the executions are of equal teste. Isler v. Moore, 67 N. Car. 74.

3. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 226; also certain exceptions noted infra, this title, What Passes. Compare also Westheimer v. Reed, 15 Neb. 662; Gritchell v. Kreidler, 12 Mo. App. 497.

The defendant is not estopped to assert it. Gentry v. Callahan, 98 N. Car. 448.

An execution defendant wishing to secure title in himself free from liens, and sell without sacrifice, procured A, his attorney, to bid off the land, B to advance the money, and the deed to be made to B. A, but not B, knew that the judgment had been paid, this not appearing of record. It was held that B, on such purchase, upon receiving a quitclaim from the defendant, acquired an absolute title against liens subsequently entered. Saunders v. Gould, 124 Pa. St. 237.

Where land was sold at a sheriff's sale, and before the time for redemption had expired a tax deed executed to the same land, a purchase by the judgment debtor before the expiration of the right to redeem from the sheriff's sale of the outstanding tax title will be regarded in equity merely as the discharge of his obligation to redeem from the tax sale, and he will not be permitted to set up the title thus acquired against the purchaser's title. Dayton v. Rice, 57 Iowa 429.

4. National Bank v. King, 110 Ill. 254.

In Illinois, if the judgment debtor had only a contract of purchase not performed, the sheriff's grantee must complete it. Where, after the lien of the judgment, another acquires a deed from the original vendor, and seeks to have the sheriff's deed set aside as a cloud on his title, the sheriff's grantee must, in order to defeat the relief sought, show such a contract of purchase in favor of the debtor as can be specifically enforced in equity in his favor. Carbine v. Morris, 92 Ill. 555.

In Iowa, the purchaser's title has been held not to be affected by an unfulfilled agreement for the defendant to repay him the purchase money and retake. Alston v. Wilson, 44 Iowa 130.

See Smith v. Lytle, 27 Minn. 184, where the sale was of an estate in fee and the defendant had only an equitable interest under a contract of purchase.

In North Carolina, when a vendor of land retains the title to secure pay-

c. INCIDENTS OF CO-TENANCY.—If the defendant is a co-tenant, the purchaser's interest is subject to all the burdens and incidents of the co-tenancy.¹ If the writ be against several defendants, and the levy is made upon their joint property as the property of one, the sale will carry only such one's interest.² If one of them holds a mortgage on the property levied on, the sale does not affect the lien, this being simply an incident, and transferable only by the proper proceeding for reaching the debt.³

d. TRUSTS.—The purchaser takes title subject to any trust that affects the property.⁴ The preponderance of the decisions is to the effect that the legal title held by a trustee is not subject to a levy and sale unless he has a beneficial interest in the subject of the trust.⁵ Ordinarily, any concomitant essential to the use and ment of the purchase money a sale thereof under fi. fa. against him, confers only the naked title; it does not vest in the purchaser any right to the purchase money. Tally v. Reed, 74 N. Car. 464. Nor does he acquire any interest, equitable or otherwise, in the notes given to secure the purchase money. Blackmer v. Phillips, 67 N. Car. 340.

In Texas, upon a sale under a judgment for the purchase money due to one vendor, on an executory contract of sale of the land, the other joint vendor having been paid, the purchaser takes title to the whole property, as against one having notice, and claiming under a mortgage executed by the original vendee. Turner v. Phelps, 46 Tex. 251.

A leased to B a newspaper office, contracting to convey on payment of several installments, the contract to be void and the lease to be ended on default thereof. This occurring, A got judgment, and under the execution, sold all B's interest, the purchaser to take subject to the conditions of the lease and agreement. It was held that the sale discharged any lien A had, and conveyed the title of both A and B, notwithstanding the terms of the sheriff's sale. McCay v. Forwood, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 137.

A executed to B a bond to convey land on payment of twelve cotton bales. B assigned the bond to C, and A conveyed his interest to C. Afterwards, D recovered a judgment against A and levied on the land, without notice of the deed, it being unrecorded. Held, that knowledge thereof obtained before the sale did not invalidate the priority of his lien. Taylor v. Lowen- stein, 50 Miss. 278. Compare Roper v. Hackney, 15 Fla. 323.

1. So held in a case of voluntary partition. Polhemus v. Empson, 27 N. J. Eq. 190. Also in case of a sale under a redemption by a judgment creditor of one of two tenants in common, both of whom had joined in the mortgage. Fischer v. Eslaman, 68 Ill. 78. So also where a co-tenant purchased at the sale his co-tenant's interest, it was held that the equity for a division under a covenant to sell and to divide the proceeds did not pass. Threadgill v. Redwine, 97 N. Car. 241. Compare Flaniken v. Neal, 67 Tex. 629.

Where the execution defendant is only the equitable owner of an undivided half interest in the land, the purchaser is entitled to a decree vesting the title in him; also to half the money received from the sale of timber cut therefrom. Thorn v. Weatherly (Ark. 1889) 12 S. W. Rep. 159.

5. In Mississippi, a purchaser under a judgment against a trustee of property in which there is an implied trust does not acquire the right of the cestui; Mississippi Code, 1880, § 1212, placing creditors without notice on the same footing as purchasers for value without notice, does not apply. Nugent v. Priebatsch, 61 Miss. 402.

In North Carolina (where the court is one both of equity and law), it has been held that a purchaser can acquire the title of a trustee, and be entitled to possession as against a defendant who failed to connect himself in any way benefit of the property, easements, fixtures and the like, passes with the sale.¹

e. NON-PARTNERSHIP.—The ultimate effect of a levy upon a partnership interest is to confer on the purchaser nothing more than the right to an accounting.² Some statutes make the good will of a business to be "property transferable like any other."³

f. EVIDENCE OF TITLE.—The requisites of the evidence to sustain the purchaser's title are analogous to those in case of voluntary transfers generally.⁴ It cannot be impeached by any declarations of the judgment debtor.⁵

The purchaser cannot be a partner by reason of the delectus personarum; but simply a claimant for a share of the surplus. Bates, Partn., § 1111; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 677.

This rule applies, even though the same purchaser has bought the separate interests of all the partners. Osborn v. McBride, 16 Nat. Bank Reg. 22.

The purchaser at a sale of partnership property under an execution upon a judgment for a firm debt, gets a perfect title, as against the lien of a judgment of prior date docketed against a partner for his individual debt. No presumption arises that there was a residuum or ratable share in him to be bound by the judgment against him, so as to subject the purchaser's title to contribution. Martin v. Wagener, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 509.

In ejectment by the purchaser, he must prove that the execution defendant had some interest in the land, on which the judgment could operate. Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597.

In Kentucky, the original judgment execution returned replevied, with the name of the surety, and the corresponding execution on the bond, are sufficient to establish the purchaser's title without producing the bond. Locke v. Coleman, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 315.

In some States, he, being the real party in interest, can sue on any covenant for seizin to any predecessor in the chain of title.¹

The English Property Act of 1881 [L. R. XVII. Stat. 119, § 7, (E) (6)] provides that the benefit of covenants to convey, of quiet enjoyment, freedom from incumbrances and further assurance "shall be annexed and incident to, and shall go with the estate or interest of the implied covenantee, and shall be capable of being enforced by every person in whom that estate or interest is, for the whole or any part of the time, vested."

For citations of conflicting decisions whether the covenant of seizin is present or future, see COVENANT, vol. 4, p. 478.

"It is a settled rule on both sides of the Atlantic that until breach the covenants for title, without distinction between them, run with the land to heirs and assigns. But a strong current of American authority has set in favor of the position that the covenants for seizin, for right to convey, and perhaps against incumbrances, are what are called covenants in præsenti—if broken at all, their breach occurs at the moment of their creation. . . .

"The question may be considered as at least temporarily settled in favor of the technical rule in Massachusetts, and most of the other States, except Maine, Colorado, Georgia, New York, Ohio, Minnesota, Missouri, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa, South Carolina, Vermont, and possibly Michigan, unless when the covenant against incumbrances is so linked to another covenant as to have a prospective operation and not be a covenant in præsenti." Rawle, Cov. (5th ed.) §§ 205, 212.

As to the distinction between covenants in præsenti and covenants in futuro, see 3 Washburn Real Prop. *649.

In Hayes v. New York Gold Min. Co., 2 Colo. 273, an action on a bond covenanting to surrender mill and fixtures in good repair at expiration of lease, the court, by Hallett, C. J., said: "I have not found any case in which the rule has been applied to a covenant which attached to the land after the sale, and before conveyance by the sheriff, as in this case. But it is believed that the principle is applicable to such covenants, and to whatever estate is acquired by the judgment debtor prior to the conveyance by the sheriff. Any other rule would divorce the covenant from the land for the benefit of which it was intended, and practically annul its obligation."

Under Colorado Annot. Stat., 1891, p. 586, § 436, covenants of seizin, peaceable possession, freedom from incumbrances and warranty run with the land, and inure to the benefit of subsequent purchasers.

In California, every covenant "made for the direct benefit of the property, or some part of it then in existence, runs with the land." California Civil Code, 1885, § 1462. This includes covenants of warranty or for quiet enjoyment or payment of taxes on the part of the grantee, § 1463. But a covenant to add some new thing, made for the assigns, "runs with the land so far only as the assigns thus mentioned are concerned." § 1464.

In Texas, where, at an execution sale, A purchased the interest of B, one of six judgment debtors, in a portion of the land held by them in common, equal to one-sixth of the whole, and C claimed through the other five, it was held that A was not entitled to have the entire portion so purchased by him allotted to him as vendee of B, since this was not a case of a sale by B of the whole interest which might create certain equities; A took only B's interest. Flaniken v. Neal, 67 Tex. 629.

So, also, in Georgia "unless the transmission of such covenants is expressly negatived in the covenant itself." Georgia Code, 1882, § 2702.

In Maine, the right passes to an assignee after eviction by a better title, and an action lies on release of covenants. Maine Rev. Stat. 1888, p. 697, § 18. See Trask v. Wilder, 50 Me. 453; Littlefield v. Pinkham, 72 Me. 369.

A covenant to insure passes with a leasehold interest, the sale operating as an assignment at law.¹ By some statutes, instruments essential to the title of real property, not kept in a public record office pursuant to law, belong to the person in whom for the time being such title may be vested, and pass with it.²

b. FIXTURES.—Ordinarily, upon a sheriff's seizure and sale of realty, only buildings having their foundation in the soil pass to the purchaser.³ Fallen timber, but, at the date of delivery of sheriff's deed, not converted into sawlogs, rails, etc., passes to the purchaser as part of the realty.⁴

c. IMPROVEMENTS BY LESSEE.—The purchaser, taking only the defendant's interest, would be bound by the covenants of a lease executed before the lien of the judgment or execution attached. Similarly, as to an execution of a leasehold interest.⁵

3. Equities Against the Owner—a. NOTICE IN GENERAL.—The purchaser is protected from claims acquired before the judgment,

In Connecticut, the leading case on the subject decides that an intermediate purchaser's right of action for breach of covenant of a prior vendor cannot be enforced until recovery of damages by a purchaser from himself. Booth v. Starr, 1 Conn. 244; 6 Am. Dec. 233. And this has been followed in New York. Withy v. Mumford, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 137.

In New York, the leading case thereon is Greenby v. Wilcocks, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 1. But see therein the opinion of Livingston, J., dissenting from that of Kent, C. J. And see Ernst v. Parsons, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 163.

In Indiana, the leading case was Martin v. Baker, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 232.

In Pennsylvania, on a judgment in covenant for ground rent reserved, the sheriff's deed discharges a mortgage on the premises subsequent to the ground rent deed; and this, though the purchaser is the husband of one of several heirs at law to the land who have suffered the ground rent to get in arrear. Rushton v. Lippincott, 119 Pa. St. 12.

An execution sale of lands of a tenant in tail, does not pass the heir's title, but it divests the wife's title to dower. Elliott v. Pearshall, 3 Pa. L. J. 157.

3. But under Louisiana Code, art. 464,—declaring all buildings to be immovables,—the nature of the foundation is immaterial, and the whole passes. Polhman v. De Bouchel, 32 La. Ann. 1158.

As to buildings, when and when not, of the realty, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. (5th ed.) 3.

In Colorado, fixtures erected by the execution defendant after the sale and before the deed, pass with the land to the grantee; so, also, as to fixtures purchased by the debtor from a tenant holding under him. Hayes v. New York Min. Co., 2 Colo. 273.

As to trees, when and when not, of the realty, see 1 Washburn, Real Prop. (5th ed.) p. 13.

5. In Tennessee, where a leasehold interest in a race track, etc., was purchased on execution by one who sought to repudiate the lease on the ground of its not being registered, and attempted to remove certain improvements, which he claimed to be personal property, although the lease stipulated that they should be removed, only on performance of specified conditions, it was held that if the purchaser repudiated the lease, he could not remove the property, and that, if he claimed under the lease, such performance was a prerequisite to the removal; and this, notwithstanding, by third persons from the execution defendant, whereof he had not actual nor constructive notice.¹ But ordinarily, if, at the time of the sale he knows of any legal or equitable right in a third person,² or if the instrument evidencing such right is properly of record,³ or if possession is held thereunder,⁴ his acquirement cannot prejudice such person's interests.⁵

in absence of express stipulation, the improvements might not be regarded as fixtures. Snowden v. Memphis Park Assoc., 7 Lea (Tenn.) 225.

1. He is entitled to the same extent as other purchasers to the benefit of the registration statutes. Jackson v. Chamberlain, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 625; Goepp v. Gartsier, 35 Pa. St. 130; Milner v. Hyland, 77 Ind. 458; Butterfield v. Walsh, 36 Iowa 534; Duke v. Clark, 58 Miss. 465; Lee v. Birmingham, 30 Kan. 312; Low v. Blinco, 10 Bush (Ky.) 331.

In Arkansas, the execution plaintiff also buys only subject to equities whereof he has notice, actual or constructive; not to any others. Newman v. Davis, 24 Fed. Rep. 609. So held, also, where a tract intended to be conveyed had been omitted from a trust deed. Allen v. McGaughey, 31 Ark. 252. Although chargeable with constructive notice of a latent equity or trust, he acquired all the rights of the execution defendant against whom a resulting trust in the land is asserted. Walker v. Elledge, 65 Ala. 51.

In Mississippi, in a contest of equities, the court will limit the execution lien to the defendant's actual interest. Walton v. Hargroves, 42 Miss. 18.

2. Hoy v. Allen, 27 Iowa 208; Boro v. Harris, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 36.

3. So held by the majority of the court where the deed was not recorded at date of the judgment. Valentine v. Havener, 20 Mo. 133.

4. Hood v. Fahnestock, 1 Pa. St. 470; 44 Am. Dec. 147.

5. By the registration statutes of some States, the judgment lien is superior to any unrecorded instrument of which the judgment creditor had no knowledge at date of the judgment. Guiteau v. Wisely, 47 Ill. 433; Kelly v. Mills, 41 Miss. 281; Johnson v. Robinson, 20 Minn. 189.

In Alabama, this holds, though the purchaser knew of the former deed. De Vendell v. Hamilton, 27 Ala. 156. So, also, in New Jersey. Sharp v. Shea, 32 N. J. Eq. 65.

And this, though there was, after the judgment lien attached but before the sale, a recording or actual notice of the deed. Fash v. Raviesies, 32 Ala. 451. Such subsequent registration does not relate back. Pollard v. Cocke, 19 Ala. 188.

In Alabama, it has also been held that the judgment lien will prevail at law over that of a vendee who at date of the judgment held the equitable title, and acquired before the sheriff's sale the legal title. Sellers v. Hayes, 17 Ala. 749.

In Georgia, also, a judgment creditor who is protected against a mere equity in his debtor's property for want of notice before his judgment lien attached, may at the execution sale thereof purchase and hold it, disincumbered of such equity, though meanwhile he received notice. Humphrey v. Copeland, 54 Ga. 543.

In South Carolina, the prior deed prevails over the judgment, if recorded before the sheriff's deed is executed. Leger v. Doyle, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 109; 70 Am. Dec. 240.

In New York, a purchaser was held to be bound by an agreement of the judgment creditor with a fourth mortgagee, whereof he had no notice to postpone the judgment lien. Frost v. Yonkers Sav. Bank, 70 N. Y. 553; 26 Am. Rep. 627. Compare the complicated case, Clute v. Emmerich, 99 N. Y. 350, wherein, applying the maxim caveat emptor, and placing the purchaser on the footing of the judgment creditor, the court, by Finch, J., remarked: "If more came by an enlargement of the lien, that was simply the creditor's good fortune; if it did not so come, the good fortune vanished, but no right of the creditor was invaded." So held also, where the execution creditor knew that the goods levied on had been fraudulently purchased by the debtor. Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462.

In Iowa, the right of a grantee failing to record before the sale a deed, given by the debtor after the judgment, of land wherein the grantee had, before the rendition a trust interest, was held to be subordinated to that of the judgment

b. LIS PENDENS.—In some States, the rights of a purchaser, whether at private or forced sale, pendente lite, are defined by statute.¹

creditor purchasing at his own sale. In Gower v. Doheney, 33 Iowa 40, the court, by Day, C. J., said: "It is a wholesome rule of equity that where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the loss will fall upon that party who has been guilty of the first negligence. Vigilantibus," etc.

Where A obtained a judgment against B, and caused levy on land whereof C, the owner of the equitable title, had long been in possession, the majority of the court presumed that C was holding under B's legal title and protected the execution purchaser accordingly. Bonnell v. Allerton, 51 Iowa 166.

In a complicated case of exchange of properties in Memphis, where the execution plaintiff died soon after purchasing at the sale, the court, by Ballard J., said that the purchaser will prevail at law over the owner of the junior legal title, even if it be founded on the older equity; this, notwithstanding a decree divesting the legal title before the execution sale. Doe v. Plunkett, 1 Flip. (U. S.) 427.

In Indiana, at the same term when Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137, was decided, but contrary thereto, yet without record of intent to overrule it, the court in Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 67, declared that an "execution creditor who bids off property, at a sale upon his own execution, and applies the bid to the payment of his own judgment, is not regarded as a bona fide or innocent purchaser;" citing Hermann, Ex., § 328; Freeman, Ex., § 300. In Rooker v. Rooker, 75 Ind. 579, Elliott, J., had argued (in his dissenting opinion): "It is incontestably true that a judgment in the hands of a judgment plaintiff is only a general lien on the actual interest of the judgment debtor and subject to all existing equities. . . . It seems to me, that giving to a judgment in the hands of an assignee a force so vastly increased as to compel existing equities to yield to it, is annexing to the fact of assignment an unreasonable importance." And in the Vitito case (where Niblack, J., also dissented) he remarked that the plaintiff's "title mounts no higher than his judgment." Compare Heck v. Fink, 85 Ind. 6.

In Texas, an execution creditor is not considered a bona fide purchaser. In Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 606; 86 Am. Dec. 657, the court, by Moore, J., said: "The consideration was not advanced on the faith of the purchase." In Orme v. Roberts, 33 Tex. 773, the court, by Walker, J., reaffirmed this, and approved the majority opinion (by Birchard, C. J.) in Boos v. Ewing, 17 Ohio 519; 49 Am. Dec. 478.

But see (in the Ohio case) the dissenting opinion of Hitchcock, J. And later also it is held that the plaintiff purchaser is chargeable with equities in favor of one in possession of land under a parol contract, who has paid purchase money and made valuable improvements. Barnett v. Vincent, 69 Tex. 685. Compare Oberthier v. Stroud, 33 Tex. 522.

The execution defendant, upon the plaintiff's purchase and reconveyance to him, retakes the estate subject to all trusts affecting his conscience before the execution sale. Ellis v. Singletary, 45 Tex. 27.

In North Carolina the plaintiff purchaser fares no better. In the case of the lost vend. exp., Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. Car. 342, 352, the court, by Rodman, J., said: "It is settled law in this State that he takes subject to all equities against the defendant in the execution, whether he has notice of them or not." So held, also, in Hicks v. Skinner, 71 N. Car. 539; 17 Am. Rep. 16.

In Pennsylvania, the plaintiff purchaser is bound by express notice of a reserved parol trust, if given him before the sale. Sill v. Swackhammer, 103 Pa. St. 7.

Where A conveyed to B his equitable title under contract for purchase of land from C, who made title to B, A taking contemporaneously a judgment bond, under which the land was finally sold, it was held that the sheriff's vendee took a good title free from all equitable claims by contract purchasers from A, prior to his conveyance to B. Barb v. Sayers, 107 Pa. St. 246.

4. Equities in Favor of the Owner.—In some States the Statute of Frauds makes an exception whereunder becomes valid one's parol promise to purchase land for the benefit of another and permit him to redeem.¹ In absence of covin on the part of the execution defendant such promise, in absence of direct statutory recognition, is enforceable on his behalf on the general principle of equity granting relief against fraud.²

tract antedating the judgment lien. Such vendee is not a lis pendens purchaser. So held in Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 442; 25 Am. Dec. 656, by nineteen judges; Walworth, Ch. dissenting, that equitable rights are not decidable in ejectment.

In this case, after citing Chancellor Kent's opinion in Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 556, on lis pendens, the court, by Seward, Sen., said: "Although this principle may sometimes operate harshly upon a purchaser who has no actual notice of the pending litigation, it seems to be essential to the due administration of justice;" and recommended certain legislation providing for filing notice of pendency of litigation. This has resulted in provisions not only for notice of suits to recover possession and use but also of other proceedings.

1. Brightly's Purdon's Pennsylvania Dig., 1885, p. 831, § 3. This proviso in the act of 1856 applies to trusts arising by implication and construction of law. Seichrist's Appeal, 66 Pa. St. 237.

As to resulting trusts, see Perry on Trusts, §§ 133, 181, 215.

In Morey v. Herrick, 18 Pa. St. 123, 128, the court, by Bell, J., said: "It is well settled that if one be induced to confide in the promise of another that he will hold in trust or that he will so purchase for one or both, and is thus led to do what otherwise he would have forbore, or to forbear what he contemplated to do, in the acquisition of an estate whereby the promisor becomes the holder of the legal title, an attempted denial of the confidence is such fraud as will operate to convert the purchaser into a trustee ex maleficio."

But in Dollar Sav. Bank v. Bennett, 76 Pa. St. 402, the court, by Sharswood, J., declared that a parol promise by a bank to purchase at foreclosure sale, then sell, cancel the debt, and pay over the surplus proceeds, was a mere nudum pactum, without consideration, and consequently not enforceable.

2. In North Carolina such aid is afforded when there has been no concealment or attempt thereby to overreach the defendant's creditors. Peebles v. Pate, 90 N. Car. 348. In Mulholland v. York, 82 N. Car. 510, such promisor, purchasing at a sale by the promisee's assignee in bankruptcy, was adjudged to hold the land subject to the promise; the court, by Smith, C. J., distinguishing such case as that of McKee v. Vail, 79 N. Car. 194, where there were no confidential relations, and the parol promise a mere gratuitous undertaking.

The promise will be enforced even after a deed executed by the sheriff to the purchaser. Byrnes v. Morris, 53 Tex. 213.

In New Jersey such reconveyance has been ordered on payment of the redemption money and fair compensation to the purchaser for his trouble and expense. Combs v. Little, 4 N. J. Eq. 310; 40 Am. Dec. 207.

In Kentucky, where A, the execution plaintiff's attorney, after such parol promise to let B, the defendant, redeem, purchased the land at one-third its value, and sold it to C (B's brother), who made a like promise to B, this was enforced, even after a lapse of five years. Martin v. Martin, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 8. As to what evidence was deemed sufficient to establish the trust under such oral agreement, after a lapse of fifteen years, see Williams v. Williams, 8 Bush (Ky.) 241.

Sometimes such tenure of title by the purchaser as trustee for the execution defendant has been declared to be upon the principle of equity, that instruments which would have been executed but for fraud, are to be treated as if actually existing.¹

Sometimes a sheriff's sale has thus been turned to consummate a mortgage.²

5. Prior Liens.—In some of the States, any senior liens are unaffected by the judgment and remain enforceable as before.³

1. Arnold v. Cord, 16 Ind. 177.

2. A, being embarrassed, agreed with B, his surety, that certain lien encumbered land be sold by the sheriff under one of the liens, to C. C, buying, conveyed it to D, who mortgaged it to C for a loan to pay the liens, D to hold for five years, appropriate the income to pay the liabilities, and convey to C on his paying any balance, including compensation, for D's trouble. It was held that the transaction was sustainable as a mortgage on parol evidence. Sweitzer's Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 264.

3. Rankin v. Scott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 177; Isler v. Colgrove, 75 N. Car. 334; Shotwell v. Murray, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 512.

Upon the enforcement, at law and in equity of mortgage and judgment liens upon the same property, see 2 Story Eq. Jur. (13th ed.) §§ 1216, 1216a-b-c; Jones, Mort. (4th ed.) §§ 665, 701, 1229.

In Massachusetts, the execution purchaser of an equity of redemption, can aver no seizin or title, against any other person than the execution debtor or his immediate tenants or assigns. Russell v. Dudley, 3 Met. (Mass.) 147.

The interest described in a second mortgage, fraudulent as to creditors, may be seized and sold, though the mortgagor has conveyed away the right to redeem both mortgages. The levy carries a superior title to the amount of the execution not exceeding the value of such interest. Verry v. Richardson, 5 Allen (Mass.) 107.

In Pennsylvania, the sheriff need not state the existence or extent of the prior liens. Carson's Sale, 6 Watts (Pa.) 140. Where, on a partition sale, he stated that the land was sold subject to a dower judgment, which was fully set forth in the records, the purchaser took subject thereto, and this, though the execution was for interest due her thereon. Tospon v. Sipe, 116 Pa. St. 588.

There, a purchaser at a sale under a judgment for purchase money, takes the whole estate, legal and equitable, and the vendor takes the proceeds regardless of the date of his judgment. Zeigler's Appeal, 69 Pa. St. 471.

A purchaser's agreement to take subject to prior incumbrances will be enforced. Randolph's Appeal, 5 Pa. St. 242.

An agreement among lien creditors as to purchasing at the sale, if without the defendant's privity, would not discharge his liability to them. Allen v. Rafsnyder, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 199.

A mortgage to the State is not released by the sale. Duncan v. Rieff, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 368.

A mortgage prior to all other liens except other mortgages, ground rents or sums due the State, is not affected by sale under vend. exp. or under lev. fac. in a suit on a subsequent mortgage, or by sale under executive process, except by decree of the Orphan's Court. Stimson, Am. Stat. Law, § 1862; B's P. Dig. p. 589, § 128.

The sale discharges the lien of annual interest due on a recognizance given to secure dower in the land but not the lien of accruing interest not then due. Luther v. Wagner, 107 Pa. St. 343. Otherwise as to lien of arrears of ground rent then due; a sale under a subsequent judgment against the covenantor for the arrears passes no title. Foulke v. Millard, 108 Pa. St. 230.

After A conveyed to his son B, subject to existing liens, land on which C had a judgment lien and the deed was recorded, D recovered a judgment against A; but before the execution issued thereon, by deed not recorded, B reconveyed to A, and, at D's execution sale, gave notice that he, B, still owned the land by the deed from A through which false declaration B purchased at a nominal sum, and received a deed from the sheriff. C then issued a sci. fa. to revive his judgment, and served it on B as terre tenant. It was held that B was estopped from insisting that C's judgment lien was discharged by the sheriff's sale. Hiestand v. Williamson, 128 Pa. St. 122.

An execution sale under a judgment upon a mortgage note or bond discharges the mortgage lien. Hartz v. Woods, 8 Pa. St. 471.

In New York, the purchaser may attack the validity of any prior mortgage whereto the sale was not made expressly subject. Wagner v. Jones, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 375. Compare Carpenter v. Simmons, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 12.

A purchaser at a sale subject to all incumbrances is not entitled to have the surplus proceeds applied to pay a recorded mortgage whose existence was, through an index error, unknown to all the parties. Buttron v. Tibbitts, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 41.

By New York, Code Civil Proc. § 1676, in partition, dower and foreclosure, "expenses of sale" include payments which the officer must first make from the proceeds for taxes and water rates and to redeem from unpaid tax sales.

Purchasers of lots have been ordered to contribute towards the satisfaction of a mortgage debt according to the relative value of the lots purchased by them, without regard to the purchase price at the sheriff's sale. Cheesebrough v. Millard, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 409; 7 Am. Dec. 494.

In Georgia, an execution sale under a judgment junior to an unforced mortgage, divests the lien of a judgment older than the mortgage, only upon that interest in the land which is sold. If the proceeds be insufficient to pay off the older judgment, an execution issued thereon may be levied upon the residue of the estate in the land, and the sale thereunder will pass title good against the mortgage. Tarver v. Ellison, 57 Ga. 54.

Therein was cited Harwell v. Fitts, 20 Ga. 723, an action by a sheriff to recover the purchase money on slaves he had sold under execution to a mortgagee whose mortgage thereon had been foreclosed, and who gave at the sale notice of claim thereunder, and on acceptance of his bid, paid the sheriff the balance over the mortgage debt. The court, by Lumpkin, J., said: "Denominate the interest or thing sold the equity of redemption, or any other name, the legal result and effects are precisely the same. The negroes being sold subject to the mortgage, we are bound to presume that the price at which they were knocked off, was their value only, above the sum for which they were mortgaged; and if the mortgage purchaser is permitted to retain the sum thus obtained it must be at the manifest injury and wrong of the common law creditor."

The sale frees the title from the lien of prior judgment. Dowdell v. Neal, 10 Ga. 148. But compare the complicated case of Studdard v. Lemmond, 48 Ga. 100.

The purchaser takes subject to a homestead, if notified of an application pending to have it set apart. Kilgore v. Beck, 40 Ga. 293.

In Missouri, the sale confers a better title than that under a deed of trust given after inception of the judgment lien, but before issuance of the execution. Durrett v. Hulse, 67 Mo. 201.

There a bill in equity by a purchaser of a definite portion of land subject to a vendor's lien, to subject the remainder to pay the lien, on the ground of mistake in not at first including the whole was dismissed. McCann v. White, 49 Mo. 96.

In Texas, the purchaser's title is not affected by a subsequent proceeding to enforce a vendor's lien, unless he be made a party thereto. Davis v. Rankin, 50 Tex. 279.

In Mississippi, the registration law does not protect him against an unrecorded vendor's lien. Lissa v. Posey, 64 Miss. 352.

In New Jersey, the purchaser takes title free from the lien of an unregistered mortgage antedating the judgment, whereof the execution plaintiff had no notice, but of which the purchaser had actual notice. Sharp v. Shea, 32 N. J. Eq. 65.

In Illinois, the purchaser's rights relate back to the attachment levy; thus taking precedence of an intervening tax warrant. Gaar v. Hurd, 92 Ill. 315.

There, a mortgagee purchasing upon the sheriff's announcement that the sale is subject to the mortgage, and forfeiting his title in default of redemption, not only extinguishes the lien of the mortgage, but loses his remedy on the note secured by it. Biggins v. Brockman, 63 Ill. 316.

A sold land to B, who assumed a prior mortgage and gave back his own; but before paying anything, B reconveyed to A and received satisfaction of the B mortgage. C, who meanwhile

In some States, an execution sale transfers the title regardless of both junior and senior liens; their holders being relegated to proceedings for distribution of the proceeds in the sheriff's hands.¹

The value of the paramount lien, when indeterminate would, as of course, remain a charge on the land; the proper deduction had obtained judgment, levied an execution on the land, and at the sale became the purchaser. On foreclosure suit by the original mortgagee, it was held that C acquired nothing but the right to fulfill B's undertaking. National Bank v. King, 110 Ill. 254.

In Kentucky, an execution plaintiff purchasing with notice of a prior mortgage lien, and suffering therefrom is estopped from moving to quash the levy and sale. Thomas v. McKay, 5 Bush (Ky.) 475.

There, if the sale occurs pending a suit to enforce a vendor's lien on the land which results in a decree and sale, the execution purchaser is entitled to have the decretal sale set aside on discharging the vendor's lien. Bush v. Williams, 6 Bush (Ky.) 405. Compare Campbell v. Wooldridge, 6 Bush (Ky.) 321.

In Florida, the rule subjecting the sale to prior liens applies to the sale of a franchise under statutory power. Holland v. State, 15 Fla. 455.

In South Carolina, a sale under a junior judgment discharges the premises from the lien of any prior judgment, and gives the purchaser a perfect title, notwithstanding an intervening mortgage which has been marked "satisfied." Blohme v. Lynch, 26 S. Car. 300.

In North Carolina, the code prescribes the rule. Perry v. Morris, 65 N. Car. 221; Woodley v. Gilliam, 67 N. Car. 237. Under court rule XIX. (Supp. 63 N. Car. 669), a junior judgment creditor may force a sale. The purchaser cannot demand that the money paid by him shall be applied to the discharge of paramount incumbrances; nor can he enjoin a sale thereunder. Fox v. Kline, 85 N. Car. 173.

As to the rule under the Iowa Code, see Holtzinger v. Edwards, 51 Iowa 383; and the complicated case of Teabout v. Jaffray, 74 Iowa 28.

In Indiana, on execution sale of an equity of redemption, the purchaser's title is not affected by notice of pendency of a suit to foreclose the mortgage. Shanklin v. Franklin L. Ins. Co., 77 Ind. 268. A delivery under Indiana Rev. St., § 722, only confers on the purchaser of the mortgaged chattels a title on satisfaction of the mortgage. Slifer v. State, 114 Ind. 291.

In Ohio, if a mortgagee recovers judgment for the mortgaged debt, a purchaser at the execution sale takes an indefeasible title, although the price does not satisfy the entire debt. Fosdick v. Risk, 15 Ohio 84; 45 Am. Dec. 562.

In Maryland, the execution purchaser of an equity of redemption may redeem, although the price paid by him was inadequate. Stockett v. Taylor, 3 Md. Ch. 537.

In Wisconsin, the purchaser may redeem from a prior mortgage by paying the amount thereof or his equitable proportion thereof, where the lands sold are only a part of those covered by the mortgage. Raymond v. Holborn, 23 Wis. 57; 99 Am. Dec. 105.

1. Farmers' Bank v. Wallace, 3 Harr. (Del.) 370; Foulke v. Millard, 108 Pa. St. 230.

One neglecting seasonably to present his claim would suffer the loss consequent upon consumption of the fund by paramount claims. See 1 Brightly Dig. Pa. Dec. 1101-6; 3 id. 3786.

A legacy charged on the land would be released as such. McLanahan v. Wyant, 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 112. But not a widow's dower interest. Schall's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 170.

In Lower Canada, "conditional hypotheca are collocated in the report according to their rank, but the amounts are made payable to subsequent creditors whose claims are exigible, or, in default of these, to the defendant upon his giving sufficient sureties for the return of the money in the event of the condition being fulfilled. . . . In case neither party furnishes the requisite security, the amount of the conditional claim may be placed in the hands of a sequestrator." Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 5947.

to be consequently made from the proceeds of the sale being incalculable.¹

6. Effect of Irregularities—a. AS AGAINST COLLATERAL ATTACK.—In general, the purchaser's title is unimpeachable by any error in the proceedings not occurring through his own fault. Such irregularities must be corrected by a direct proceeding therefor; they are of no avail in a collateral attack.²

b.* RELATION TO RETURN.—Ordinarily, a sheriff's sale of personal property is not affected by the fact that it came off after the return day, the seizure giving him a special property therein. So, also, in general, his sale of real property.³

1. So held, where a deed had been made subject to payment to children on death of a widow. Heist v. Baker, 49 Pa. St. 9. Also, where there was a lien of a sheriff's recognizance. In re McKenzey's Appropriation, 3 Pa. St. 156. Also, where there was a lien of unpaid purchase money, the interest payable to a widow during life. Lauman's Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 473.

Release of a lien for a definite amount is not avoided by the fact that the date for its payment is later than the sale. Lobach's Case, 6 Watts (Pa.) 167.

2. In Massachusetts, against such attack the sale is good if conducted according to law, though the judgment be irregular. Park v. Darling, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 197. As to the statutory notice to the creditor after levy and before sale that the land is held in trust by the debtor, the declaration whereof has not been recorded, see Colburn v. Jewell, 130 Mass. 182.

In Minnesota, similarly held, notwithstanding an execution's misrecital of the judgment, and also an irregularity in its issuance. Willis v. Lombard, 32 Minn. 259. Compare Ker v. Evershed, 41 La. Ann. 15.

In Maine, a purchaser's title was held to be unaffected by the fact that the sale was made after the statutory limit for the legal existence of the "plantation." Caldwell v. Blake, 69 Me. 458.

3. Supra, this title, The Time of Sale; Statutes Directory, etc.

This seems to come from a similar rule at common law, where a fi. fa. or ca. sa. had been issued post diem et an., without any revivor of the judgment by sci. fa. Patrick v. Johnson, 3 Lev. 403; Shirley v. Wright, 1 Salk. 273.

Thereupon, the defendant neglects at his peril to have the sale set aside.

Jackson v. Rosevelt, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 97; Jackson v. Robins, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 537; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 426.

So also in Missouri, as to a justice's execution returned unsatisfied sooner than authorized by law, before proceeding above. Norton v. Quimby, 45 Mo. 388.

So also in Kentucky, as to a mere failure of the return to state that the land had been sold at the time and place required by law. Bell v. Weatherford, 12 Bush (Ky.) 505.

In Mississippi, it is otherwise if the sale be in violation of expressly prescribed requisites. Leher v. Doe, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 468.

In Pennsylvania, a statute was declared unconstitutional in assuming to validate an execution sale made by consent of the defendant after the return day of the writ, as against a subsequent purchaser at sheriff's sale under an incumbrance which would have been discharged by the former sale. Dale v. Medcalf, 9 Pa. St. 108.

An execution returned is defunct, and a levy and sale upon its reissue are void. Paine v. Hoskins, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 284.

But in Iowa, after the life of the justice's execution under which the levy had been made, a valid sale may be made, without its renewal, under another execution issued compliant with Iowa Code, § 3086. Walton v. Wray, 54 Iowa 531.

In Kansas, the fact that the sale was made two days after the sheriff's term expired was held not to prevent the purchaser in possession from taking title under the deed. Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 1.

In Michigan, in absence of consequent injury to the defendant or to third persons, the purchaser's title is not affected by the sheriff's failure to

c. ERRONEOUS RETURN.—In most States, a defect in the return does not invalidate the purchaser's title.¹

d. DEFECTIVE NOTICE.—In many States, the purchaser's title is not defeated by a defect in the advertisement of sale, whereto he was not privy;² especially if there be an adequate remedy by recourse on the sheriff.³ So, also, as to a defect in the affidavit of publication.⁴

e. DEFECTIVE LEVY.—An irregularity in the levy is not necessarily fatal to the purchaser's title, if the description be sufficiently certain.⁵

file the certificate of sale within the ten days prescribed by Michigan Comp. L., § 4638.

1. See infra, this title, The Return.

In Illinois, the purchaser's title depends on a valid judgment levy and sheriff's deed appearing on its face to have been made by virtue of a sale under such judgment and execution. Kinney v. Knoebel, 47 Ill. 417. It is not defeated by a failure to make a proper return, or even by there being no return whatever. Holman v. Gill, 107 Ill. 467.

Similarly in Georgia. Compare dicta by Lumpkin, J., in Hollingsworth v. Dickey, 24 Ga. 434; and by McKay, J., in Rikeman v. Kohn, 48 Ga. 183—a case complicated by an injunction.

Similarly in New York; compare dicta of the court by Thompson, C. J., in Monell v. Lawrence, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 534, where there had been an interlocutory order to stay proceedings, and by Morgan, J., in Warner v. Blakeman, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 501.

In Indiana, the purchaser's title cannot be collaterally defeated by failure of the return to recite some statutory requisite, e. g., that the land was appraised, it being presumed that the sheriff did his duty. Talbott v. Hale, 72 Ind. 1. Or, e. g., to show that parcels sold in solido were first offered separately. Ferrier v. Deutchman, 81 Ind. 390.

In Vermont, the title depends on the sale and nothing subsequent; the sale may be proved by parol. Hill v. Kendall, 25 Vt. 528. And it is not defeated by failure of the return to recite demand and advertisement; the regularity of the sale being proven aliunde. Murray v. Chadwick, 52 Vt. 293.

In Maryland, the purchaser may deduce his title from any part of the sheriff's official proceedings that identifies with certainty the property actually seized and sold. Wright v. Orrell, 19 Md. 151.

2. Supra, this title, Effect of Want of Notice; Hering v. Chambers, 103 Pa. St. 172; Burton v. Spiers, 92 N. Car. 503; Kilby v. Haggin, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 213; Van Gelder v. Van Gelder, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 356.

3. White v. Cronkhite, 35 Ind. 483; Lenox v. Clarke, 52 Mo. 115. And see infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights and Liability—Liability to Third Parties.

4. Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282. So held even where the purchaser was the execution plaintiff, he not knowing of the defect. Humphrey v. McGill, 59 Ga. 649.

In Maine, the purchaser's title cannot be collaterally impeached by informalities in the notice not shown to defeat the purpose of the statute thereon. Ludden v. Kincaid, 45 Me. 411. Compare Newton v. State Bank, 14 Ark. 9. A levy "beginning at the southeast corner" of a lot was harmonized by the court substituting "southwest." Warren v. Ireland, 29 Me. 62.

In Vermont, so also, by substituting "southwest" for "northwest" corner. Barnard v. Russell, 19 Vt. 334.

5. Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 649.

In many States, the purchaser's contract is not by himself impeachable by a defect in the levy. In Cooper v. Borrall, 10 Pa. St. 494, where the levy stated land in Jackson township to be in Toboyn township, the court, by Rogers, J., said: "He cannot be permitted to fold his arms, and after suit point to irregularities in the process which do not affect the title, and which would have been instantly corrected . . . Sheriff's sales are not to be set aside on fanciful exceptions. . . . Speculators thereat are not to be encouraged." Compare Bush v. Glover, 47 Ala. 167.

So, also, where a Delaware statute

f. SELLING ABOVE LEVY.—The sheriff cannot sell a larger estate than that embraced in his levy.¹ A sale of less than the defendant's interest does not necessarily defeat the purchaser's title.²

g. CLERICAL BLUNDERS.—A failure to comply with a statute that is only directory is not necessarily fatal to the title of a purchaser without knowledge thereof.³

required the levy to state "a computed quantity," and 176 acres were put as "140 acres more or less." Swiggett v. Kollock, 3 Houst. (Del.) 326.

In Vermont, so, also, where a levy failed to state the amount of the debtor's interest. Hyde v. Barney, 17 Vt. 280; 44 Am. Dec. 335.

In Missouri, the purchaser's title cannot be collaterally defeated by an error in the fi. fa. issuing against other property than that attached. Cabell v. Grubbs, 48 Mo. 353.

In North Carolina, the purchaser's title cannot be collaterally impeached by an irregularity in adjourning the sale. Pope v. Bradley, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 16.

In Indiana, not by the clerk's having issued the order of sale without the plaintiff's direction. Sowles v. Harvey, 20 Ind. 217; 83 Am. Dec. 315.

In Tennessee, not by seizing, contrary to the Code, property of a surety before exhausting the principal's. Sellers v. Fite, 59 Tenn. 120. But a purchaser asserting title, must prove the judgment. Etheridge v. Edwards, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 426.

In Alabama, not by a discrepancy between a judgment minute and the writ in stating the plaintiff's representative capacity. Randolph v. Carlton, 8 Ala. 606.

In Texas, not by a want of certainty in the entry and return. Riddle v. Bush, 27 Tex. 675.

1. Thus he cannot consolidate three levies of three several executions, each against a different defendant so as to make a single act of sale under the whole pass title. Where a sheriff holding three executions against A, B, and C, respectively, levied on A's life estate in certain realty, and on B's undivided half in remainder in the same realty, and on C's undivided half in remainder therein, a sale of the realty under all the levies for a gross sum was held to give the purchaser no title nor right to possession. Bledsoe v. Willingham, 62 Ga. 550.

In Maine, a sale for a gross sum of all the debtor's right in equity to redeem a certain parcel from two or more mortgages, not being a sale of two or more equities when the mortgages severally covered only the same property, was held valid; a joint sale of distinct equities would have been invalid. Bartlett v. Stearns, 73 Me. 17.

2. E. g., only a life-estate in a slave. O'Conner v. Youngblood, 16 Ala. 718. As to a sheriff's sale of a vested remainder in a slave, see dicta of Gaston, J., in Knight v. Leak, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 133.

Otherwise in Pennsylvania, as to a sale of a tenancy by the curtesy instead of the fee. McLaughlin v. Shields, 12 Pa. St. 283.

In Kentucky, a sheriff's mistake in selling land for $23 more than debt, interest and costs, was held to be waived by the execution defendant's refusal to receive the excess, and directing its repayment to the purchaser. And the fact that the defendant had died did not prevent the sheriff's conveying to the purchaser after the redemption period expired. Thomas v. Thomas, 87 Ky. 343. Compare Heard v. Sack, 81 Mo. 610, where the purchaser knew not that, by reason of insanity, the defendant had failed to appear after personal service.

In North Carolina, where appraisers laid off a homestead to which the defendant had no right, and the sheriff proclaimed that without knowing the law in regard to homestead exemption, he sold such right as the defendant had, and that he had laid off his homestead which covered all the land offered for sale, it was held that the purchaser took a good title; the court, by Ashe, J., saying: "We have nothing to do with the hardship of the case. It is one of those quicksands of the law into which the defendant has fallen without power of the courts to rescue him." Grant v. Edwards, 86 N. Car. 513. Compare Boles v. Johnston, 23 Cal. 226; 83 Am. Dec. 111.

3. In Pennsylvania, so held, where an

h. REMEDIAL INCIDENTS—(1) Defendant's Laches.—Long neglect by the execution defendant to avail himself of an irregularity will be deemed a waiver thereof, especially where he fails to object until rights of innocent parties have intervened.¹

(2) Defendant's Mistakes.—The execution purchaser may take advantage of the defendant's errors to fortify his own title.²

i. VOID JUDGMENT.—The purchaser's title may be defeated by proof that the judgment on which the execution issued was on its face void,³ or had been satisfied by pay-execution was issued on an award before the twenty days for appeal had elapsed. Wilkinson's Appeal, 65 Pa. St. 189.

In Tennessee, so held upon a clerical misprision in reciting the judgment. Simpson v. Sparkman, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 360. Also as to a failure of the clerk to itemize the bill of costs, as required by statute. Meadows v. Earles, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 299.

In Indiana, a sale of real estate under an alias execution is not void because the writ was improvidently issued without an order from the judgment plaintiff. Johnson v. Murray, 112 Ind. 154. Nor would a sale be there invalidated by an omission to credit on the execution payments made on the judgment. Mulmine v. Bass, 29 Fed. Rep. 632.

In Louisiana, where the note on which executory process issued appeared on its face to be prescribed, and the administrator of the succession against which suit was brought failed to plead the prescription, the sheriff's sale was held valid. Munholland v. Scott, 23 La. Ann. 1043.

In Iowa, the rights of the purchaser would not be affected by his failure to obtain a deed after the redemption year had expired; nor would a premature deed defeat his equitable title. Conner v. Long, 63 Iowa 295.

Where one claims under two independent execution sales, one of which is regular, the court will not inquire into the other. Plant v. Anderson, 16 Fed. Rep. 614. Compare Kane v. Mackin, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 387; Herrick v. Graves, 16 Wis. 157.

In Nebraska, a sale of trespassing stock whose owner has refused to pay the damages, is valid, although the justice rendered a general "judgment," instead of issuing the execution directly as prescribed in Nebraska Comp. Stat., art. 3, ch. 2, § 4; Holmes v. Irwin, 17 Neb. 99.

1. See infra, this title, The Purchaser's Remedies—In Equity. See also Rigney v. Small, 60 Ill. 416.

2. In analogy to the well established rule, that the holder of an equitable title may baffle adverse equities by buying in the outstanding legal title, the execution purchaser may so perfect his title against a sale that had been made by the judgment debtor, where both sales have been ineffectual by reason of a misdescription. Whalen v. Bishop, 58 Ill. 162.

As to "tacking," see infra, this title, Bona Fides.

3. See JUDGMENTS, vol. 12, pp. 139, 147; and JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 311. See, also, Collins v. Miller, 64 Tex. 118; Roberts v. Stowers, 7 Bush (Ky.) 295; Grigsby v. Barr, 14 Bush (Ky.) 330; Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183; Sanders v. Rains, 10 Mo. 770; Hunter v. Stevenson, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 415.

In Indiana, a sale under writs simultaneously issued is void, if any of the judgments are void. Ferrier v. Deutchman, 111 Ind. 330. And, conversely, judgments valid on the face are prima facie sufficient to support the sale. Langsdale v. Woolen, 120 Ind. 16.

In Missouri, a sale under an execution issued upon a justice's judgment, gives no valid title if jurisdiction cannot be shown. So held where, in one proceeding, judgment was rendered against both the drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange for its amount, interest, and damages. York v. Roberts, 8 Mo. App. 140.

In Michigan, where land of A was assumed to be sold to B under an execution erroneously issued on a verdict, without a judgment, it was held that C, relying on the record and purchasing from A, could hold the land as against B, who long afterwards procured entry of judgment nunc pro tunc. Ninde v. Clark, 62 Mich. 124.

ment,¹ or by the defendant's imprisonment and discharge.² So, also, by proof that the lien of the judgment had expired.³

j. OTHER FATALITIES.—So, also, may his title be defeated by proof that the conduct of the sale was covinous;⁴ or, along with badges of fraud, brought inadequacy of price,⁵ or was otherwise in violation of a mandatory statute.⁶

In Illinois, issuance of execution pending appeal is an irregularity that will not defeat the title of a purchaser at sale thereunder, if not seasonably availed of by the defendant. Shirk v. Metropolis, etc., Gravel Road Co., 110 Ill. 661.

As to effect of reversal, see infra, this title, Effect of Reversal.

As to effect of assignment of the judgment, see Emory v. Joice, 70 Mo. 537; Southard v. McBrown, 63 Cal. 545.

1. No legal execution could issue on a paid judgment. Finley v. Gaut, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 148; Cameron v. Irwin, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 272. So, also, if the purchaser knew the judgment or execution had been paid. Kezar v. Elkins, 52 Vt. 119. Similarly, a tax sale after payment. Jackson v. Morse, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 441; 9 Am. Dec. 225.

In New Jersey, the satisfaction cannot be proven by parol evidence. Nichols v. Disner, 29 N. J. L. 293. Otherwise in South Carolina. Hunter v. Stevenson, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 415. And in Georgia. New England Mort. Sec. Co. v. Robson, 79 Ga. 757.

2. Kennedy v. Duncklee, 1 Gray (Mass.) 65.

In Loomis v. Storrs, 4 Conn. 440, the court, by Hosmer, C. J., said: "From the 28th of Car. II, it has been well established, if the body of the debtor has been taken in execution, and he is discharged from custody by the direction of the creditor, that the judgment is satisfied." But property tendered within a reasonable time of the levy on the body, the officer would be bound to receive. Hall v. Hall, 1 Root (Conn.) 124.

In Texas, one purchasing under an execution issued on an original judgment discoverable to be discharged in bankruptcy, acquires no title as against a former purchaser, of whose interest he had no actual notice. Hart v. McDade, 61 Tex. 208.

There, however, a sale under an execution issued on a dormant judgment is voidable only, and not subject to collateral attack. Hill v. Newman, 67 Tex. 265. This, too, where the plaintiff is purchaser. Riddle v. Turner, 52 Tex. 145.

3. Pierce v. Fuller, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 179.

See supra, this title, Time of Sale.

4. E. g., that it was made in the sheriff's interest after simulated assignment of judgments to his son. Carpenter v. Stilwell, 11 N. Y. 61. Compare Faust v. Haas, 73 Pa. St. 295; Turner v. Adams, 46 Mo. 95.

5. See infra, this title, Effect of Fraud and Inadequacy, etc. Curd v. Lackland, 49 Mo. 451.

6. E. g., of the Missouri statute commanding that the sale be public. Hutchinson v. Cassidy, 46 Mo. 431. Or of the Pennsylvania requirement of inquisition unless the defendant waive the appraisement. St. Bartholomew's Church v. Wood, 61 Pa. St. 96. Or, in order to issuance of execution after the defendant's death, that the personal representatives be warned. Cadmus v. Jackson, 52 Pa. St. 295. Or, in New Jersey, selling a tract not within the advertisement. Todd v. Philhower, 24 N. J. L. 796. Or a California tax sale not to the person who would take the least portion and pay judgment and costs, but to the highest bidder. French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 506.

A marshal's sale made under a wrong interpretation of the mandate was held invalid, although the record was confirmed by the court, whose attention was not specifically directed to the mistake. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Soutter, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 609.

In Georgia, if on a judgment against trustees, the execution fails to specify the property to be bound for its payment, and is levied on the trust estate, the sale will be enjoined. Clinch v. Ferril, 48 Ga. 365. Compare the case of a trust-deed or mortgage in Alabama. Whitfield v. Clark, 48 Ala. 555. And in Indiana, that of trustees' assignment of a leasehold to the cestui. Hollingsworth v. Trueblood, 59 Ind. 542.

7. Effect of Fraud—a. IN GENERAL.—A title acquired through false representation, trick, imposture, or other fraud upon the execution defendant by the purchaser is void.¹ So, also, if the fraud be practiced by the execution plaintiff with the purchaser's knowledge.²

A vendee of the fraudulent purchaser, if knowing of the fraud, will not be protected.³ Otherwise, as to an innocent purchaser's vendee with notice.⁴

In case of a conveyance within the statute, 13th Elizabeth, in fraud of creditors, if in a State where the judgment does not create a lien, the levy will do this, and equity may be invoked in aid of execution.⁵

b. HOLDING UP.—A junior execution plaintiff and his purchaser are protected against a prior execution fraudulently "held up."⁶

1. E. g., Fraudulent procurement of a judgment as to the homestead. Brown v. Thornton, 47 Ga. 474. Or agreement to deliver proceeds to some member of the defendant's family. Barton v. Hunter, 101 Pa. St. 406. Or a commissioner deceiving the judge through false recitals in drafting an order of sale. Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 94. Or a trustee unfairly buying the cestui's property at a foreclosure sale. Ogden v. Larrabee, 57 Ill. 389. Or an administrator so purchasing at his own sale. Taylor v. Walker, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 734. Or his announcing to bystanders that he was buying to aid the defendant's family; and after thereby purchasing much below value, violating his agreement to give the defendant a title-bond to reconvey. Griffith v. Judge, 49 Mo. 536.

2. As where he knew the plaintiff had fraudulently procured the judgment. Adams v. Secor, 6 Kan. 542; Snow v. Hawpe, 22 Tex. 168.

3. As where one had prevented laying off the homestead. Kilgore v. Beck, 40 Ga. 293.

4. A fraud committed by A in obtaining the sale, not participated in by B, the purchaser, will not impair the title of C, a vendee of B, although C knew thereof. Stewart v. Reed, 91 Pa. St. 287.

5. See Freeman Ex. (2d ed.), §§ 137, 430.

In some States, therefore, the execution must be returned nulla bona or be in the sheriff's hands for service. Adsit v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 585; Dana v. Haskell, 41 Me. 25.

Where A in fraud of his creditors conveyed land to B who mortgaged it to C, who, without notice of the fraud, paid a valuable consideration, it was held that a levy on and sale by A's creditor of "all the right, title, and interest of A in the land," were valid, the Massachusetts statute allowing the land as well as the equity of redemption to be sold. Cowles v. Dickinson, 140 Mass. 373.

In Missouri, a stranger purchasing in good faith and not participating in a fraudulent conveyance, will be protected on reversal. Gentry v. Robinson, 55 Mo. 260; Vogler v. Montgomery, 54 Mo. 577.

In Florida, conveyances of uses, etc., with clause of revocation, are void against subsequent sales. Florida Dig. Laws, 1881, p. 211, § 3.

In Pennsylvania, fraud will not be inferred from the fact that a junior judgment creditor bought up prior judgments, and at his execution sale became the purchaser at less than the value, allowed the defendant to remain in possession, and agreed to reconvey to him on reimbursement. Mead v. Conroe (Pa. 1886), 8 Atl. Rep. 374.

6. In England, where an execution plaintiff directed the sheriff simply to seize the goods and leave them in the defendant's custody, and would not let the sheriff proceed further, it was held that the sheriff could properly return nulla bona, and seize and sell the goods under the execution of another creditor. Rice v. Sarjeant, 7 Mod. 37.

In Pennsylvania, if a plaintiff put his execution in the sheriff's hands with any other view than that of having it executed in good faith, and it be not so executed, it is not good against subsequent executions; and this, though

Otherwise, in case the delay or indulgence is that of the sheriff and not of the plaintiff.¹

8. Effect of Reversal—a. WHEN A STRANGER PURCHASES.—Under a judgment absolutely void, no valid sale can be made. So, also, under one rendered where lienholders were not before the court.² An appellant from a judgment that is simply erroneous must, in order to prevent its execution, stay proceedings by giving the statutory undertaking. Otherwise an execution may be levied on his unexempt property, and the title of a stranger purchasing at the sale will be valid, whether the judgment be affirmed or reversed.³ And this, although he was notified of the

he has not communicated to the sheriff the fraudulent design. Weir v. Hale, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 285.

In Massachusetts, in the case of a collusive attachment tending to defeat by concealment of the property the rights of other creditors, an action on the case for conspiracy to abuse judicial process and obstruct other levy was held to be maintainable. Adams v. Paige, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 542.

In Missouri, a confession of judgment made with the understanding that the execution is to be "held up" until others come in, renders the execution dormant and fraudulent against subsequent executions, regardless of the motive. Field v. Liverman, 17 Mo. 218.

1. In New York, where A, the execution plaintiff told the sheriff to levy but not to take a receipt, as A did not wish to distress the defendant, who was A's father-in-law, and would not squander or conceal the property, and the sheriff complied until a second execution came to hand, when he sold on both, it was held that A did not lose the benefit of his execution; the court, however, remarking that had a long time intervened, the jury could infer the plaintiff's consent and fraud. Doty v. Turner, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 20.

So, also, in the case of growing wheat levied on in December, and cut and sold by the sheriff the following August. Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 418.

So, also, where a mare levied upon by one deputy was removed from the State, and afterward levied on by another deputy under another execution. Russell v. Gibbs, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 390.

See infra, this title, Grounds for Vacating.

2. So held, where the sale was void from being under an interlocutory decree that had been erroneously amended nunc pro tunc. Gray v. Brignardello, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 627.

In West Virginia, in such case, the purchaser was held not to be protected by West Virginia code, ch. 132, § 8: "If a sale of property be made under a decree on order of a court, and be confirmed, though such decree or order be reversed or set aside, the title of the purchaser shall not be affected thereby; but there may be restitution of the proceeds of the sale to those entitled." Underwood v. Pack, 23 W. Va. 704.

3. A party may justify under a regular execution until reversal; for an erroneous judgment is the act of the court; otherwise as to an irregularity to which the plaintiff is privy. Philips v. Biron, 1 Stra. 509; Gibson v. Lyon, 115 U. S. 439; Stinson v. Ross, 51 Me. 556; 81 Am. Dec. 591; Kissock v. Grant, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 144; Shultz v. Sanders, 38 N. J. Eq. 154; Jernon v. Lyon, 81 Pa. St. 107; Dorsey v. Thompson, 37 Md. 25; Sutton v. Schonwald, 86 N. Car. 198; 41 Am. Rep. 455; Storm v. Smith, 43 Miss. 497; Feaster v. Fleming, 56 Ill. 457; Frost v. McLeod, 19 La. Ann. 69; Kramer v. Wellendorff (Pa. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 892. See a case of sale under a second decree, after reversal of the first. Wambaugh v. Gates, 8 N. Y. 144.

So, also, where part was sold to the execution plaintiff and part to a stranger. Corwith v. State Bank, 18 Wis. 560; 86 Am. Dec. 793. So held where the defendant's remedy was through the attachment bond. Estes v. Boothe, 20 Ark. 583.

So held, as to a foreclosure decree involving rights of infant defendants affecting the purchaser's title. Eisberg v. Shultz, 38 N. J. Eq. 293.

So held, also, where the decree had appeal.¹ Similarly is the purchaser protected on a vacating otherwise than by appeal.²

In some States the purchaser is, on reversal, protected by statute.³

b. WHEN THE PLAINTIFF PURCHASES—(1) Under Fieri Facias Generally.—The effect of a reversal when the plaintiff is the purchaser varies with the different statutory provisions for enforcement of the judgment. Ordinarily, he purchases at the risk of losing title by a subsequent reversal; it being his duty to make restitution of all things⁴ in his control thereby acquired. And this, whether he be the original plaintiff⁵ or an been destroyed by burning of the court house. Garrett v. Lynch, 45 Ala. 204.

The California statute—that, on reversal, “the court may make complete restitution of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order”—does not apply to a judgment for recovery of money; it only operates on specific property so the title is not changed. Farmer v. Rogers, 10 Cal. 335.

In Manning's Case, 4 Coke R. (Pt. 8), fol. 96 b, the court, with subsequent affirmance by Sir Christopher Wray, said: “Although the judgment which was the warrant of the fi. fa. be reversed, yet the sale, which was a collateral act done by the sheriff by force of the fi. fa., shall not be avoided; for the judgment was that the plaintiff should recover his debt. If the sale should be avoided, the vendee would lose his property and his money too, and thereupon great inconvenience would follow, that none would buy of the sheriff goods and chattels in such cases, and so execution of judgments, which is the life of the law, would not be done.”

And this, moreover, as errors in a judgment or decree are not subject to collateral attack. McCahill v. Equitable L. A. Soc., 26 N. J. Eq. 531.

The title of a purchaser of slaves was held not to be affected by a subsequent reversal. Ponder v. Moseley, 2 Fla. 207.

3. In Iowa, a purchaser who had not paid the entire amount of his bid, is not entitled to the benefit of McClain's Iowa Rev. Stat. 1888, § 4429. “Property acquired by a purchaser in good faith, under a judgment subsequently reversed, shall not be affected by such reversal.” Mere payment of costs is not sufficient. O'Brien v. Harrison, 57 Iowa 686. But compare Zimmerman v. National Bank, 56 Iowa 133.

In Nebraska, reversal shall not defeat the purchaser's title, but restitution be made by the judgment creditor of the price paid with lawful interest from the day of sale. Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1889, p. 923; Civil Code, § 508. Compare p. 863, § 82, providing for the opening of a judgment had on mere constructive service, and for protection of one in good faith meanwhile purchasing thereunder. He will be protected though the judgment be afterwards vacated. Keene v. Sallenbach, 15 Neb. 200. He is not a purchaser pendente lite, though purchasing after the motion to open is filed. Scudder v. Sargent, 15 Neb. 102.

In Pennsylvania, reversal shall not avoid the sale. B. P. Dig. Pennsylvania Laws, 1885, p. 759, § 93. The fact that some months after the judgment the defendant was declared a lunatic from before its entry, was held not to avoid the title of a bona fide purchaser. Shannon v. Newton, 132 Pa. St. 375.

So held, where the defendant paid to the plaintiff's agents the amount of the debt and gave notice of suing out a writ of error. Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 8.

In Wisconsin, the land still remaining in the plaintiff purchaser's hands,

(2) Under Elegit.—In England, and in those States whose statutes continue the practice of extent under an elegit, the land is not sold but given directly to the plaintiff in satisfaction. If the judgment is reversed, the title reverts in the defendant; and this, whether the plaintiff has meanwhile conveyed or not.⁴

c. WHEN A LIENHOLDER PURCHASES.—A lienholder is sometimes made a party to the judgment or decree, with a right the sale was, on reversal set aside on the defendant's motion. Corwith v. State Bank, 15 Wis. 289; 18 Wis. 560; 86 Am. Dec. 793.

In Ohio, a mortgagee purchasing, continued to own the property. Hubbell v. Broadwell, 8 Ohio 127.

In Missouri, a plaintiff in an execution issued on an irregular judgment, will, on purchasing, hold the title subject to divestiture by a subsequent reversal of the judgment. Holland v. Adair, 55 Mo. 40.

In Illinois, his title fails on reversal, even though he obtain a subsequent judgment on the same demand. Kingsbury v. Stoltz, 23 Ill. App. 411. But a reversal of a decree does not, ipso facto, vacate a sale to him thereunder. Puterbaugh v. Moss (Ill. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 197.

In Pennsylvania, upon a sale to an execution plaintiff who thereupon conveyed the land to the defendant's wife, it was held that a subsequent sale under a prior judgment vested no title; the deed not having been contested for fraud. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 91 Pa. St. 462.

The Kansas provision (Comp. Laws, 664, § 467) that reversal shall not defeat the purchaser's title, does not apply to one obtaining an erroneous judgment and becoming the purchaser thereunder. Hubbard v. Ogden, 22 Kan. 671.

In Louisiana, the title of a plaintiff purchasing pending a devolutive appeal, is not affected by the appellate court's reduction of the amount of the judgment; he is only bound to restore the excess. Pasley v. McConnell, 38 La. Ann. 470.

In Kentucky, the rule that the purchaser's title is unaffected by reversal applies where the plaintiff buys. Yocum v. Foreman, 14 Bush (Ky.) 494; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 350.

But this would not apply to a sale under a decree absolutely void. Gossom v. Donaldson, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 230; 68 Am. Dec. 723.

In Nevada, where the plaintiff was the purchaser, the fact that owing to mistake in computation on the appeal, seventy dollars was deducted from the judgment was held to be no ground for setting aside the sale. Martin v. Victor Mill, etc., Co., 19 Nev. 197.

In Missouri, no suit would be required to set aside the deed to the attorney. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 43 Mo. 294.

So held in New Hampshire, where the plaintiff had conveyed his title to his attorney who had conducted the case. Mullin v. Atherton, 61 N. H. 20.

In Virginia, the creditor stands as if he had taken a lease for years in satisfaction of his debt, and his rights may be adjudicated in the court of appeals as a controversy concerning the title to land. Lyons v. McGuire, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 202.

to a part of the proceeds, if the property sells for more than enough to satisfy all prior liens. It seems that on his purchasing he will hold the property notwithstanding reversal, if the proceeds were distributed among the other lienholders.¹

d. RESTITUTION.—On reversal of the judgment, it is the plaintiff's duty to restore all he has acquired thereunder; and, without demand, an action would lie for continued withholding.² Where he has received the proceeds, the defendant may recover them in an action for money had and received.³ Where the record does not show such receiving, redress may, in some States, be obtained by the old writ of sci. fa. quare rest. non.⁴

It is questioned whether upon a reversal of the judgment and order for restitution, the plaintiff should be compelled to account with the defendant for the real value of the property sold, or for the sum which it brought at the sheriff's sale. The latter view is supported by the weight of authority.⁵

9. Shares in Corporations.—A corporation is only a creature of statute.⁶ The franchise, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.⁷ Only when it is authorized by statute can certificates of stock be transferred under execution, they being as choses in action.⁸ In most of

In some States, the plaintiff may exonerate himself by reimbursing the price of the sale with interest therefrom. Bryant v. Fairfield, 51 Me. 154; McGuire v. Ely, Wright (Ohio) 520.

Trespass will not lie to recover the difference between the amount and the value. Gay v. Smith, 38 N. H. 171.

In California, the defendant can recover damages. Reynolds v. Hosmer, 45 Cal. 616.

N. H. 361. But in California, an action for damages will, it seems, be sustained. Reynolds v. Hosmer, 45 Cal. 616. In that case the court, by Belcher, J., said: "If the plaintiff in the judgment be himself the purchaser, the former owner, after reversal, may, at his election, either have the sale set aside and be restored to the possession, or have his action for damages."

the States, methods of levy and sale of stock have been prescribed:¹

The purchaser takes thereunder subject to all transfers and liens known to him, whether on the books or not.² But from transfers not registered nor known he is protected.³

10. Bona Fides—a. IN GENERAL.—One who, whether upon a voluntary or an involuntary sale in good faith, purchases the legal title to property, and pays therefor a valuable consideration, will be protected against equities whereof he had no actual or constructive notice. One's honest motive or good faith is determinable from his doings and the circumstances. Thus the fact that the consideration was greatly inadequate may justify inference that an ordinarily prudent buyer would be so put on guard as to inquire into and ascertain a defect in the seller's title.⁴

The adequacy of the consideration is not measured entirely by the amount of money or property paid. A resultant release of some valuable security or a deprivation of some advantage may enter into or become a valid consideration.¹ By the preponderance of decisions the purchaser, at an ordinary sale, may pay with a pre-existing debt, or the execution plaintiff may purchase, crediting the amount of his bid upon the writ.²

b. SECRET VITIATIONS IN OWNER'S TITLE.—The title of the purchaser is not impaired by any fraud wherein he did not participate, nor by any irregularity whereof he was not cognizant.³

c. CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.—Notice may consist of actual knowledge of any record or instrument whereunder the title is deraigned, or of any information thereon, whether derived from parties interested or from any other credible source. The rule of constructive notice is this: the purchaser is chargeable with a knowledge of all facts, which an inquiry, suggested by whatever facts he is already informed of, prosecuted with due diligence would have disclosed to him.⁴

In West Virginia, the purchaser is bound to take notice of all errors in the proceedings apparent on the record. Hall v. Hall, 30 W. Va. 779. Compare Durling v. Hammar, 20 N. J. Eq. 220.

In Missouri, a plaintiff purchasing under his judgment against an individual partner, is affected with notice received after its rendition that the property was held only in trust for the firm. Crow v. Drace, 61 Mo. 225.

In Minnesota, it has been held that the conditions announced at the opening of the sale affect a purchaser arriving afterwards. Cable v. Byrne, 38 Minn. 629.

A purchaser of an outstanding legal title is, in legal effect, a purchaser with notice of every pre-existing equity. Elstner v. Fife, 32 Ohio St. 373; Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 244.

Otherwise in Pennsylvania, in case of the holder of an accommodation note pledged as collateral security for an antecedent debt. Cummings v. Boyd, 83 Pa. St. 372. And in New York, in the case of a time draft that had been fraudulently diverted from the object for which it was made and accepted, Moore v. Ryder, 65 N. Y. 438. And in North Carolina, in the case of one taking an assignment of property to secure his debt, and neither advancing money nor releasing his debt. Harris v. Horner, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 455; 30 Am. Dec. 182.

In Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 120, 90 Am. Dec. 230, the court, by Cooley, J., added this restriction: "But he cannot be bound to do more than to apply to the party in interest for information, and will not be responsible for not pushing his inquiries further, unless the answer which he receives corroborates the prior statements, or reveals the existence of other sources of information." See Holmes v. Stout, 10 N. J. Eq. 419; Lodge v. Simonton, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 439; 23 Am. Dec. 36. Also Kennedy v. Green, 3 M. & K. 720, the case of a solicitor's fraud (in drawing a deed purporting to be an assignment of a mortgage) that would have excited the suspicion of a professional man.

In Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354, the court, by Seldon, J., said: "The presumption that he inquired and ascertained the prior right may be rebutted by proof that he exercised due diligence and failed to discover it."

Chancellor Kent says the doctrine of notice rests on the question: "What evidence is necessary to infer fraud?" Whatever puts a party upon inquiry amounts to notice, provided that inquiry became a duty, and would lead to knowledge of the requisite facts by the exercise of ordinary diligence and understanding. The inference of a fraudulent intent affecting the conscience must be founded on clear and strong circumstances in absence of actual notice. 4 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 172.

In Pennsylvania, an execution plaintiff, seeing no other bystanders present at the sale is put on inquiry whether the Pennsylvania statute (requiring the sheriff to give notice "during at least six days by no fewer than six handbills") has been complied with; and his purchase would be fraudulent and void. Michael v. McDermott, 17 Pa. St. 353; 55 Am. Dec. 560.

Bidders would be put on inquiry by a declaration made to them by the defendant's wife that she held the title; and this, though she omitted to say that she claimed not through a certain deed made in fraud of creditors, but through a valid resulting trust under an earlier deed. Hay v. Martin (Pa.), 14 Atl. Rep. 333.

Tender, by a leaseholder or other third party, of the debt, interest, and costs with demand for assignment of the writ, would not, if the plaintiff had refused the same, affect the bona fides or rights of the purchaser. Forest Oil Co.'s Appeal, 118 Pa. St. 138.

In North Carolina, if the execution recites the date the judgment was docketed, the purchaser is affected with notice of expiration of the judgment lien. Lyon v. Russ, 84 N. Car. 588; also with notice that the defendant only holds as agent of another. Richardson v. Wicker, 74 N. Car. 278.

In South Carolina, the purchaser is not affected by the fact that the execution plaintiff had notice of an unrecorded mortgage. Miles v. King, 5 S. Car. 146. As to a bond payable in installments and reciting that one has been paid, see Cox v. Edwards, 8 S. Car. 1.

In Alabama, it is held that a purchaser is not protected against an unrecorded deed, whereunder tenants of defendant's vendee are in possession of the land at the time of the sale; he being put on inquiry by the defendant's want of possession. Tutwiler v. Montgomery, 73 Ala. 263.

In Duke v. Clark, 58 Miss. 476, the court—in deciding that the execution purchaser is, to the same extent as any other purchaser, entitled to the benefit of the registry acts—by Campbell, J., remarked: "Good faith is so highly esteemed that its existence with the vendor or vendee will protect the title."

In Texas, the levy fixing the lien, the purchaser is not affected by notice of an unrecorded deed derived after the levy and before the sale. Borden v. McRae, 46 Tex. 396. Otherwise in Arkansas. Apperson v. Burgett, 33 Ark. 328.

Where land, a supposed deed of which from A to B, misstated the township and range, was levied on by a creditor of A, but not sold until he had executed a corrective deed to B, it was held that a purchaser with notice of the correction acquired no title. Howell v. Rye, 35 Ark. 470. So also as to a correction inserting "south" before "west quarter." Williams v. McIlroy, 34 Ark. 85.

In Indiana, where a foreclosure judgment directed sale of part of the land to meet installments due, but the sheriff sold the whole, and the mortgagee became the purchaser, it was held that he was not a bona fide purchaser without notice of the mistake, and that the court might confirm his title to the portion directed to be sold, and adjudge the rest to the defendant. Bole v. Newberger, 81 Ind. 274.

A executed to B a mortgage of bridge shares, which, not being sworn to or recorded, as prescribed by statute, was invalid as against attaching creditors without notice. C, a creditor of A, without notice of the mortgage, began levy of execution thereon, and the sheriff sold them "subject to all legal claims on said bridge," to D, who then had notice of the mortgage. It was held that D took them unincumbered by the mortgage. Piper v. Hilliard, 52 N. H. 209. Compare Henderson v. Downing, 24 Miss. 106. Notice to the attorney is notice to the client. Jennings v. Carter, 53 Ark. 242.

In Wood v. Moorhouse, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 405, a case where the sheriff's posting was briefer than prescribed, and where the defendant died between the levy and the sale, the court, by Mullen, J. (protecting the purchaser, though the plaintiff), said: "A bona fide purchaser is one who purchases for an honest, legitimate purpose, as contradistinguished from one who purchases for some fraudulent or improper purpose; hence every person buying at a sheriff's sale for the purpose of satisfying an honest debt is a bona fide purchaser.

The presumption of title from adverse possession, etc., is not merely that of due performance of official duty; it is this together with the presumption of loss of evidence by death, destruction of papers, and other casualties." Compare Love v. Cherry, 24 Iowa 204.

In Parler v. Johnson, 81 Ga. 251 (sub. nom., Porter v. Johnson (Ga. 1888)), 7 S. E. Rep. 317, the court, by Bleckley, C. J., said that the sheriff's entry and deed pursuant thereto were, after lapse of over twenty years, better evidence as to what property was sold than parol testimony of a witness. It was immaterial that, after the land was bid off and before deed executed or money paid, the purchaser consented that another person take his place, make the payment, and receive the deed; the latter would thereupon succeed to all his rights.

And where the sale has been made after regular proceedings, the deed cannot on mere motion be canceled for alleged fraudulent collusion between the sheriff and the purchaser. Harrell v. Wood, 54 Ga. 649.

In Vanscoyoc v. Kimler, 77 Ill. 151—where the execution plaintiff, on bid of his attorney, who was deceived by the sheriff's misrepresentation, became the purchaser of land that had been turned out by the defendant, but was, in fact incumbered in excess of its value—on refusing to set aside the sale, the court, by Breese, J., said that the defendant, having made no representations of any kind as to the title, was under no legal or moral obligation to redeem.

In New York, where the execution plaintiffs, through their attorney, became the purchasers of a farm, it was held that the fact that he, through recent illness, failed to recollect that there were two incumbrances thereon, was not a ground for setting aside the sale. Benedict v. Jones, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 527.

In New Jersey, an attorney of the judgment creditor may, after purchasing at the execution sale, maintain an action to compel delivery of the sheriff's deed, without liability for champerty. Whitney v. Kirtland, 27 N. J. Eq. 333.

In Pennsylvania, it has been held, that a levy on property which has been sold to a bona fide purchaser, is not inconsistent with an attachment against the proceeds of the sale of the property in the hands of a fraudulent grantee holding as trustee ex maleficio, of the grantor's creditors. Heath v. Page, 63 Pa. St. 108. An application to avoid the sale by cross-complaint, in ejectment brought by a successor of the purchaser over three years after the sale, was held to come too late. Vigoureux v. Murphy, 54 Cal. 346.

Appellee bought land sold under execution upon replevin bond, which was the property of one of the principals on the bond, without inquiry as to liens upon the land. Held—that he bid, in the absence of fraud, at his own risk, and cannot recover the loss incurred by his bid from appellant, the surety on the replevin bond. Anderson v. West, 80 Ky. 171.

Under the Louisiana Code, § 2621, an evicted purchaser may have recourse against the judgment debtor, and on return nulla bona, take out execution against the creditor (both being called in warranty under § 714); and this, though the purchaser knew at the time of sale, that the title was not in the judgment debtor. But he can by stipulation be precluded therefrom. Citizens' Bank v. Freitag, 37 La. Ann. 271.

2. Intervening Legislation.—The inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts demands that the substantial rights of the purchaser be determined by the law in force at the creation of the contract.¹ But this does not extend to laws conferring remedies, and, though the debtor may not be deprived of all remedy, yet a statute making changes in the law giving the remedy may apply to antecedent obligations.² "Hence, as a general rule, a sale must be conducted, and the rights of the purchaser and others must be determined, by the law in force at the time the sale is made, and not by the law in force when the obligation to be enforced by the sale was created."³ The time to redeem may be changed.⁴ Statutes tending to prevent a sacrifice of the property may be retroactive.⁵

A purchaser claiming the fruits of the sale, is precluded from questioning the validity of the decree ordering the immovables by destination to be sold with the mortgaged property. Howe v. Whited, 21 La. Ann. 495.

Thus, a sale made after the Iowa code took effect, on a debt contracted theretofore, must be conducted in accordance with the code. Babcock v. Gurney, 42 Iowa 154.

The appraisalment required by the Indiana act of 1843 was necessary to the validity of an execution sale under a judgment rendered in 1844, whatever might have been the date of the contract whereon it was recovered. Morss v. Doe, 2 Ind. 65.

The Massachusetts statute of 1834, allowing a writ to be amended by striking out some of the defendants' names, was held remedial and applicable to actions pending. Knight v. Dorr, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 48.

The Wisconsin "Mortgage Stay Law" of 1856 was held applicable to judgments previously rendered. Starkweather v. Hawes, 10 Wis. 125.

The Maine statute of 1848, requiring that a special promise of a discharged bankrupt to pay the debt be in writing, signed, etc., was held to be remedial and constitutional. Kingley v. Cousins, 47 Me. 91.

Mr. Freeman well adverts to the difficulty of determining the precise point "beyond which the power of the legislature to prejudice antecedent obligations, while assuming only to alter the remedies for their enforcement, cannot be maintained." Ex. (2d ed.), § 294.

And in Tuolumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 515—in deciding that the California redemption act of 1859 applied to execution sales theretofore made on judgments rendered theretofore, and overruling two prior California decisions—the court, by Baldwin, J., remarked: that cases hereon in the U. S. Supreme Court, have given rise to much discussion; doubtless referring to Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311—wherein the opinion of Taney, C. erty for a debt contracted before April 10, 1865, when requested by the debtor, to sell on a year's credit, was held to be constitutional. Garland v. Brown, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 173.

So also the Pennsylvania act of 1842, suspending for a year a sale on execution for less than two-thirds the appraised value. Chadwick v. Moore, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 49; 42 Am. Dec. 267.

In Alabama, it was held that an attachment, etc., lay against a foreign corporation on a cause of action arising before the Alabama act of 1854, giving an additional remedy. Coosa River Steamboat Co. v. Barclay, 30 Ala. 120.

The New York act of 1820, allowing lien creditors to redeem in fifteen months, etc., was upheld in the supreme court's response to the sheriff of Albany for advice. Van Rensselaer v. Sheriff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 501.

1. Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 544.

In Tennessee, the purchaser at a chancery sale is entitled to rent only from the time when the right of possession attaches; and this may be postponed by the decree of confirmation. Latta v. Pierce, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 267.

2. See B's Purdon's Dig. Pennsylvania Laws, 1885, p. 824, § 13; 828, § 36. If the rent is yet becoming due out of a term that is not completed when the execution sale is made, it is rent "thereafter accruing," within the Pennsylvania execution act of 1836, and passes thereby. Borrell v. De-wart, 37 Pa. St. 134.

A sheriff's purchaser who has notified the tenant to quit, may claim for the use and occupation from acknowledgment of the deed to date of removal. Stockton's Appeal, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 320.

In Delaware, the purchaser has the rents from the day of the execution sale. Delaware Laws, 1874, p. 680, § 28.

By Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 1010, § 18, the lessee must pay rent to the execution creditor from the time of levy on the reversion.

In Vermont, the debtor is responsible for the rents, profits and improvements for the time he remains in possession without redeeming. Their value is appraised at his expense, and a tender of the sum certified bars an action therefor. In default of payment the creditor may recover in an action on the case. Vermont Rev. Laws 1880, §§ 1579, et. seq.

In Maine "when the estate cannot be described as provided in section three, the execution may be levied on its rents and profits, and the officer may give seisin thereof to the creditor, and cause a person in possession to become tenant to him; or on his refusal, may turn him out and give possession to the creditor." Maine Rev. Stat. 1883, p. 615, § 9.

As to the Rhode Island practice in tax sale of rents and profits, see Rhode Island Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 128, § 6.

In Connecticut, appraisers set off to the creditor sufficient land to satisfy the execution. Connecticut Gen. Stat. 1882, § 1182. By § 1191, a leasehold interest may be sold.

In Kentucky, "courts of equity shall have the control of all incumbered property sold under execution, and the power to make all needful orders for the preservation and forthcoming of the property and its issues and profits to satisfy the incumbrance, and to secure the rights of others." Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 580, § 5.

Under California Code Civil Proc. 1885, § 707, the purchaser, from the time of sale until a redemption, is entitled to receive from the tenant in possession the rent, or the value of the use and occupation. And if the tenant in possession pay the rent in advance to the execution defendant after the sale, he is still liable to pay it to the purchaser. The right begins at the time of purchase and continues until a redemption is made, or if there be no redemption, until the redemption period has expired. Walker v. McCusker, 71 Cal. 594. Compare McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592.

The execution purchaser of a possessory claim of a settler was held to be entitled to the rents and profits for so long as the settler occupied the land intermediate the sheriff's deed and homestead entry. Emerson v. Sansome, 41 Cal. 552.

A tenant in possession may be compelled to pay rent to the purchaser whenever it falls due. The sale acts for the time as an assignment of the lease. Raynolds v. Lathrop, 7 Cal. 43.

The California provision (§ 707, supra) does not apply to tax sales. Mayo v. Woods, 31 Cal. 269.

In Indiana, "The estate or interest of the judgment debtor in any real estate shall not be sold on execution until the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years shall have been first offered for sale at public auction; but if the same shall not sell for a sum sufficient to satisfy the execution, then the estate or interest of the judgment debtor shall be sold by virtue of the execution." Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 753. And by § 539, the sale must be for the least lease term that will satisfy the execution. Under section 767, allowing the judgment debtor the possession, neither he nor his grantee is liable to the purchaser for the rents during the year succeeding the sale. Wilson v. Powers, 66 Ind. 75.

The perfected title relates back to date of the sheriff's sale. A statutory assignment by the debtor creates no right in the assignee or the creditors for whom he is trustee that can exclude equitable claims of others, in origin antedating the assignment. The purchaser can recover the rents and profits from an assignee who has collected them for the year after the sale. Davis v. Newcomb, 72 Ind. 413.

The sheriff cannot limit a sale of the land levied on by announcing that the rent of the current year is reserved. Frost v. Render, 65 Ga. 15.

In Arkansas, an execution purchaser of the equity of redemption under a deed of trust does not acquire such an interest in the land as entitles him to maintain an action for the rents. And his tender of the debt will stop accrual of interest from date thereof. Turner v. Watkins, 31 Ark. 429.

The provision of the Tennessee Code, § 2135, that the debtor permitted to remain "shall not be liable for rent from the date of the sale to the time of redemption," applies only to cases of actual redemption. An execution debtor remaining for the two years without redeeming is liable to the purchaser for rent; and this although the sheriff's deed was not delivered until the two years expired. Wright v. Williams, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 700. In the case of the execution sale of the leasehold of the Olympic Park race-track, it was held that a purchaser to avoid liability for rent, must disclaim all interest in the lease, improvements, etc. Snowden v. Memphis Park Assoc., 7 Lea (Tenn.) 235.

1. In general, Stimson Am. Stat. Law, § 1882; writ of estrepement, etc., §§ 1343, 1931; against waste by a dowress, § 3231; by tenant by curtesy, § 3408.

In New York, during the redemption period, fifteen months, the court may restrain waste. But it is not waste to continue to use the property as previously, or in the ordinary course of husbandry, or to make necessary repairs, cutting timber therefor, or wood for fences and fuel. B.'s New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 1079, § 82. By § 83, the purchaser may have an order therefor. He has a remedy in the nature of trover, or an action on the case for waste; but not replevin in the capit. Rich v. Baker, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 79.

The California statute (California Code. Civ. Proc. 1885, § 706) provides for restraining waste during the redemption period, six months, as does that of New York. And the purchaser is allowed an action therefor under section 745. This is available at any time during six months. Duprey v. Moran, 4 Cal. 196.

Under Michigan Annot. Stat. 1882, § 6138—allowing the purchaser, as if absolute owner, to sue the execution defendant or a third person for waste or injury to "buildings, fences, or other fixtures"—he may recover for timber wrongfully severed from the freehold. Marquette, etc., R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 Mich. 166.

In New Jersey, if a judgment debtor has committed waste of premises held by him and another person as tenants in common thereof, the purchaser at the sale of his interest in the property under execution must in equity accept the position of the debtor in respect to

4. Products and Growing Crops—a. IN GENERAL.—Ordinarily, growing crops pass to the execution purchaser thereof as personalty, with a right to enter on the land and gather them.¹ This constructively operates a severance.² If there be no severance, the execution purchaser of the land is entitled to the crops growing thereon.³ Sometimes the rights of the pur-

In Minnesota, the execution purchaser may, after the redemption period, maintain trover against the debtor's vendee of timber cut and removed after the execution sale. Whitney v. Huntington, 34 Minn. 458; 57 Am. Rep. 68.

In Arkansas, the execution purchaser of the interest of the equitable owner of an undivided half interest in land, may have a decree vesting in him the title and half the proceeds of a sale of timber cut from the land. Thorn v. Weatherly (Ark. 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 159.

In Alabama, rails and brick do not become fixtures until annexed to the realty either actually or constructively. Thweat v. Stamps, 67 Ala. 96.

In Illinois, rails, once of a fence, when temporarily severed but still remaining on the land, are part of the realty. McLanglin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163.

In Pennsylvania, fragments of a building blown down by a tempest, pass with the freehold. Rogers v. Gillingen, 30 Pa. St. 185; 72 Am. Dec. 694.

Otherwise in England, both as to such fragments and to dottards when blown down. Herlakenden's Case, 2 Coke, pt. 4, fol. 62 a.

In Davidson v. Waldron, 31 Ill. 130; 83 Am. Dec. 206, the court, by Breese, J., said: "It would be prudential in the officer to call some one or more of the neighborhood to witness he had taken it in execution, and he should indorse the fact on the writ."

2. Where, after a fi. fa. in favor of A had been levied on the land and returned, wheat was sown on it, and after the wheat had been levied on and sold under a fi. fa. in favor of B, the land was sold on A's vend. exp., it was held that B could hold the proceeds of the wheat. Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161.

3. See CROPS, vol. 4, p. 892. As to when growing crops are of the realty and when not, see 1 Washburn on Real Prop. (5th ed.) 411.

In Alabama, no execution or other legal process must be levied upon a growing or ungathered crop, except for the purpose of enforcing liens thereon for rent advances, or labor as prescribed by law. Alabama Code, 1886, § 2893. Such crop passes as part of the realty to the execution purchaser of the land. Thweat v. Stamps, 67 Ala. 96.

In Thomas v. Noel, 81 Ind. 382, the court, by Woods, J., said: "While the general rule adopted for the promotion of agriculture and husbandry is that the one who sows shall reap, it is equally well settled that the tenant who sows, knowing that he cannot reap before the expiration of his tenancy and right of possession, does it at his peril. The position of one whose land has been sold on execution, and whose right of possession must expire at the end of a year from the sale, unless he redeems, cannot be better."

In Georgia, "No sheriff, or other officer shall levy on any growing crop . . . nor sell the same until such crop shall be matured and fit to be gathered" . . . (except in case of an absconding debtor). Georgia Code, 1882, § 3642. An execution sale of the land carries with it the crop growing thereon. The sheriff cannot by an ex parte announcement change the rule. Frost v. Render, 65 Ga. 15.

In Pennsylvania, the execution purchaser of the land takes the unsevered growing crops; otherwise as to the severed ones. Hershey v. Metzgar, 90 Pa. St. 217. And it is held that a purchaser entering upon the defendant's abandonment of the premises (after sale and before deed) and erecting tanks is entitled to the flow of oil. In Hardenburg v. Beecher, 104 Pa. St. 20, the court, by Clark, J., said: "If the deed be subsequently acknowledged, the vendee has such inceptive title by his mere purchase as will be bound by the lien of a judgment, whilst chaser have been made to depend on condition of the crop.¹ If a statute provides that the land shall bring a specified proportion—e. g. two-thirds of its appraised value—the growing crops being excluded from the appraisalment will not pass upon the sale.²

the debtor has no such title remedy as will support a lien. If, however, the acknowledgment be refused, the vendee's contract is rescinded, and the debtor's title remains as if no sale had been made. The debtor is, however, entitled to the possession until the acknowledgment; the purchaser has by his mere purchase acquired no title to the present enjoyment. This right of possession carries with it its attendant advantages, the right to the growing crops as they may mature, the right to an ordinary use of a mine, or to the flow from an oil well. . . . But he loses these if he voluntarily abandons the possession."

In Kentucky "no crop of any description shall be levied on or sold under execution unless it shall have been severed from the ground, until after the first day of October in each year. But if the estate of the defendant in land is liable to be sold, the title to the growing crop may pass by such sale." Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 570, § 5.

In Minnesota, "A levy may be made upon grain or grass while growing, and upon any other unharvested crops; but no sale thereof shall be made under such levy until the same is ripe, or fit to be harvested." Minnesota Stat. 1891, § 4929.

As to the Oregon practice thereon, see Cartwright v. Savage, 5 Oregon 397.

In New Mexico, on redemption by the defendant, "the purchaser shall have the growing crops, and shall not be responsible for the rents and profits, but he shall account for wastes." New Mexico Comp. Laws, 1884, § 2178.

1. In Iowa, it has been held that, as against a foreclosure purchaser, a tenant of the mortgagor is entitled to such of his crops as were matured at the time the sheriff's deed was executed, though still unsevered. Hecht v. Dettman, 56 Iowa 679. Thereon were cited 1 Schouler on Pers. Prop. 125; and Bingham on Real Prop. 180.

Subsequently, it was also held, that, as immature crops belong to the land, a purchaser of the land from the judgment debtor would hold them against one who had purchased them at execution sale as personal property. Ellithorpe v. Reidesil, 71 Iowa 315.

In North Carolina, since the act of 1844, not allowing growing crops to be subject to levy till matured, the execution purchaser of the land acquires no title to them. Accordingly, where, at the time of levy and sale of A's land, his tenant, B, had a crop growing thereon, and A, as agent for C, the original owner, collected from B the net proceeds of the rent from the crop, and, under agreement with C, kept it for his services as agent, it was held that the title to the growing crop was in B and did not pass to the execution purchaser. Kesler v. Cornelison, 98 N. Car. 383.

In New York, where a sheriff, in December, levied on wheat in the ground, and in the next August cut and carried it away and sold it, but while it was in the sheaf and unmoved, an execution was issued, it was held that the first levy was not dormant or fraudulent. Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 418.

A growing crop of rye, sown by a mortgagor while in default, was, on his death, held to pass to a purchaser at his administrator's sale, and not to a foreclosure purchaser with notice. Sherman v. Willett, 42 N. Y. 146.

In New Jersey, on an execution sale of land, it was held that one whose tenancy expired at the end of the agricultural year, had no right to a return for spring crops (as oats), unless sown by consent of his landlord. Howell v. Schenck, 24 N. J. L. 89.

2. So in Ohio, on foreclosure sale the lessee's emblements do not pass. Cassidy v. Rhodes, 12 Ohio, 88. Or on partition sale. Houts v. Showalter, 10 Ohio St. 144. So also does not pass against a landlord his share of a crop put in by a tenant. Albin v. Riegel, 40 Ohio St. 339. But in Kansas (where also is the restriction to two thirds value), in Smith v. Hague, 25 Kan. 246—in deciding that a vendor repurchasing at an execution sale upon a judgment against the vendee for the purchase money, was entitled to the crops—the court by Horton, C. J., declined fully to assent to the decision in Cassidy v. Rhodes, 12 Ohio 88.

b. FORECLOSURE SALES.—Ordinarily a foreclosure purchaser of land, on completion of his title and right of possession, may remove the crops then growing thereon.¹ But in those States where the mortgage confers only a lien, and not the estate, the mortgagor or his tenant may hold the crops he hath sown that are growing at the foreclosure time.²

If practicable, the purchaser may enter peaceably;⁴ but he cannot take forcible possession without due process of law.⁵

So also now in Indiana where is the like restriction. Heavilon v. Farmers' Bank, 81 Ind. 249; overruling Jones v. Thomas, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 428.

In Pennsylvania, where land is let upon shares an execution sale of the landlord's share of the growing grain before actual severance does not, of itself, work such an implied severance as will pass his title to the purchaser, as against a subsequent purchaser of the land at sheriff's sale, who obtains his deed before the rent falls due. Long v. Seavers, 103 Pa. St. 517.

In Texas, the execution purchaser of a growing cotton crop, made by a tenant who, besides the landlord's lien, had mortgaged the crop, was held to take the crop with right to gather and market it, and appropriate the surplus proceeds after satisfying such liens. Davis v. Goldberg, 75 Tex. 48.

In Louisiana, where a lessee of a cotton plantation under a lease made in January, 1867, mortgaged that year's crop to secure the rent, it was held that although the seed of that crop had not yet been sown, an execution purchaser of the land could charge, as trustee of it for him, a person to whom the tenant transferred the crop, after it was gathered, with notice of the landlord's mortgage. The sheriff's deed conveyed the reversion, and the rent followed as an incident; and the mortgage became a lien to secure the rent when the crop was grown. Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 544.

In Massachusetts the execution purchaser of an equity of redemption, by making open and peaceable entry under his deed, becomes seized and possessed of the land as against the former owners, and is entitled to the growing crops. His replevin of hay thereafter cut by them and stored in barns would not be defeated merely by proof that after it was cut the plaintiff brought writs of entry under which he obtained judgment for possession with nominal damages for mesne profits. Nichols v. Dewey, 4 Allen (Mass.) 386.

1. Perley v. Chase, 79 Me. 519; Anderson v. Strauss, 98 Ill. 485; Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432.

In New York, a mortgagor removing crops during suspension of a foreclosure sale by injunction, must on its dissolution, pay therefor as part of the injunction damages. Aldrich v. Reynolds, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) Ch. 613.

The foreclosure purchaser may have an injunction to restrain the mortgagor and those claiming under him from meddling with the crops; confirmation relating back to the sale, and entitling him to the crops if no equities nor express reservations prevent, and due notice be given to interested parties. Ruggles v. First Nat. Bank, 43 Mich. 192; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Bigler, 79 N. Y. 568.

2. Heavilon v. Farmers' Bank, 81 Ind. 249; Allen v. Elderkin, 62 Wis. 627. So also as to ice stored on the premises, in case of the mortgagor's lease of a pond and ice-houses. Gregory v. Rosenkrans, 72 Wis. 220.

In Indiana, the owner is expressly entitled to possession for one year from date of the sale. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 767. Under section 722 an execution purchaser of mortgaged chattels is "entitled to possession on complying with the conditions of the mortgage," and not otherwise. State v. Milligan, 106 Ind. 109. An execution

b. EJECTMENT.—Ordinarily, the purchaser's means of obtaining possession forcibly withheld, is by ejectment or by an equivalent remedy substituted by code.¹

In order to maintain ejectment, he must show the judgment,² the execution, the sheriff's deed, and the defendant's possession.³

purchaser, who redeems a prior mortgage, is not entitled to possession of the land, after redemption from the execution sale by the debtor, but has a lien. Rice v. Puett, 81 Ind. 230.

If pending the execution defendant's application under Georgia Code, § 2013, to have a homestead assigned to him, the sheriff sells the land, equity will enjoin eviction until the parties can be heard and their rights adjudicated. Kilgore v. Beck, 40 Ga. 293.

In Alabama, in case of an execution purchaser's voluntary conveyance, the rule has been applied, that a conveyance of lands which are at the time in the adverse possession of a third person, under claim of ownership, though without color of title, is void as against the adverse holder, and the grantee cannot recover against him in ejectment. Bernstein v. Humes, 60 Ala. 582; 31 Am. Dec. 52.

Under Alabama Code, 1886, § 1880, requiring, in case of a levy on an undivided interest, that the execution defendant deliver the land to the purchaser within ten days, the purchaser is not entitled to sole possession. Hanna v. Steele, 84 Ala. 305.

In Georgia, the execution purchaser of an estate in remainder is not entitled to possession till after the death of the tenant for life. Hence if the defendant had an estate not in remainder, but in fee simple, and if only a remainder was levied on and sold, he cannot be turned out of possession so long as the person named in the levy as tenant for life (though not such in fact) is in existence. Bledsoe v. Willingham, 62 Ga. 550.

In Texas, an execution purchaser of mortgaged chattels may, with the debtor, be made a party defendant to a sequestration suit by the mortgagee, to determine possessory rights, etc. Sparks v. Pace, 60 Tex. 298.

As to property in custodia legis, see EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 129.

1. Morton v. Sanders, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 192; 19 Am. Dec. 128.

In Upper Canada, in Moran v. Patton, 10 U. C. Q. B. 640, the court, by Robinson, C. J., said: "The rule is laid down without any qualification as to whether the debtor was in actual, visible occupation at the time of the sale or otherwise, that in an action of ejectment upon elegit, or a sheriff's sale under a fi. fa., which may take place in England, in the case of a term for years, if the action be against the debtor in the fi. fa. no evidence need be given of the title."

In Lower Canada, the purchaser may obtain an order for the sheriff to dispossess the debtor with recourse for damages from the debtor's refusal. Rev. Stat. P. Quebec, 1888, § 5945.

2. See infra, this title, Purchaser's Rights—Proof of the Judgment. As to requisites of the evidence in ejectment generally see 2 Greenleaf on Ev. (14th ed.) § 304.

3. In Georgia, formerly, proof of these four facts cast the onus probandi upon the opposite party. Whatley v. Newsom, 10 Ga. 74. Now, it is the duty of the sheriff to put the purchaser in possession; but he must "not turn out any other person than the defendant, his heirs, or their tenants or assigns since the judgment." Georgia Code, 1882, § 3651. He cannot turn out a purchaser from the execution defendant whose title is anterior to the date of the judgment, although for some reason it was a lien previous to its date, so he gets a good title. Seymour v. Morgan, 45 Ga. 201.

In case of a sale under a levy on one's life-interest only, she cannot as tenant in common in fee simple, retain the possession by setting up such misdescription of her interest in answer to the purchaser's rule, upon the sheriff to have the possession delivered. Bledsoe v. Willingham, 62 Ga. 550.

An execution plaintiff purchasing under a mortgage fi. fa. may maintain ejectment for the land, although no deed has been made by the sheriff to him. Skinner v. Willis, 54 Ga. 192.

In Florida, the purchaser may either prove title in the execution defendant, or possession since the rendition of the judgment. Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 374. And he may recover in ejectment against the execution defendant's tenant, at the end of his term. Donald v. McKinnon, 17 Fla. 746.

In Iowa, if these four facts be established, an innocent purchaser is not affected by other irregularities. Shaffer v. Bolander, 4 Greene (Iowa) 201.

In North Carolina, he need not show the levy. McEntire v. Durham, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 151. In case of return of a justice's judgment, execution and levy into county court, the purchaser need only show the judgment of the county court, the execution sale, and the sheriff's deed. Davis v. Baker, 67 N. Car. 288. The defendant's wife may intervene and set up title in herself through a prior sale under a senior judgment. Young v. Greenlee, 82 N. Car. 346. As to sale of vested remainder in a slave, see dicta of the court, by Gaston, J., in Knight v. Leak, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 133.

In Indiana, the plaintiff himself the purchaser, without notice of an agreement between the execution defendant and a third person, cannot be required to make a demand before bringing suit for the possession. Hays v. Wilstach, 82 Ind. 13.

In South Carolina, the purchaser's complaint need not allege a return nulla bona. And it may both assail for fraud a prior conveyance by the judgment debtor, and pray that the prior deed be set aside. Burch v. Brantley, 20 S. Car. 503.

In case of a judgment rendered in a summary process, he need only produce the original docket entry and the execution. Bull v. Rowe, 13 S. Car. 355.

In Louisiana, the purchaser cannot maintain a petitory action to recover the property, where it has not been actually taken possession of by the sheriff in making the seizure. Cronan v. Cochran, 27 La. Ann. 120.

The Pennsylvania act of 1836 (B. P. Pennsylvania Dig. 1885, p. 768, §§ 143, et seq.) providing for a proceeding before two justices on three months' notice, etc., is in addition to the right to take peaceable possession or bring ejectment. And one who has given the notice and entered within the three months, without violence, but without consent of the former owner who remained in possession, is not liable to him in trespass. Leidy v. Proctor, 97 Pa. St. 486. A person in possession claiming under a third party is entitled to the three months' notice. Com. v. McClintock, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 326.

One purchasing under a levari fa., issued on a judgment to enforce a mechanic's lien, may avail himself of this provision of 1836. Walbridge's Appeal, 95 Pa. St. 466.

Under the Pennsylvania act of 1879 (B. P. Pennsylvania Dig. 1885, p. 641, § 27), a claimant in possession may rule the purchaser to bring ejectment within ninety days, and on default thereof may obtain judgment in bar of further proceedings. But after the rule is made absolute he must proceed to judgment; otherwise the purchaser may bring ejectment after the ninety days. Letchford v. Dewees, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 108.

A plaintiff's prior mortgage sale of the land would not operate as an estoppel, if the execution sale be with notice thereof. Green v. Watrous, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 393.

In Delaware, the purchaser will not be put in possession, if, at the time of the sale, the title of the execution defendant was in dispute, and he was out of possession. Wright v. Rodney, 5 Del. 573.

In Kentucky, the purchaser may, after deed and on ten days' written notice to the defendant, enter a motion on the docket judgment, and after the hearing a writ of possession may issue. Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1881, p. 429, § 9. An act passed in 1882, gives the form of the notice. No further particularity is necessary than as thereby prescribed. McGhee v. Sutherland, 84 Ky. 198.

e. WRIT OF ENTRY.—Some statutes allow the purchaser to get possession through a writ of entry.¹

f. PROOF OF THE JUDGMENT.—By the preponderance of decisions, the purchaser must prove the judgment on which the execution issued.² The defendant may have believed the judgment to be so absolutely void as to justify his inattention to the levy and sale. But where the action is against the execution defendant, it has, in not a few cases, been held that the production of the judgment may be dispensed with.³

g. DEFENSES.—It is a valid defense against giving possession to the purchaser under the sale, that the execution defendant had no leviable interest in the property,⁴ or that he held posses-than thirty days. Maryland Pub. Gen. Laws, 1888, p. 1138, § 88. The writ may issue although an ejectment suit involving the title is pending in a Federal court. So, also, although the execution defendant's title is an equitable one only, provided he was entitled to the possession. Deakins v. Rex, 60 Md. 593.

Further, as to the Maryland practice, see McMechen v. Marman, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 57; Dorsey v. Campbell, 1 Bland (Md.) 356.

In Kentucky, the sheriff "in execution of a writ of habere facias possessionem, or writ of seisin, may break open either the outer or inner door of a dwelling during the daytime." Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1881, p. 784, § 29.

1. As to some English writs of entry superseded in American practice, see Roscoe's Ac. Real Prop., p. 3.

In Massachusetts, the demandant can maintain a real action only on showing a right of entry. Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 1018, § 3. Such right is given to the execution plaintiff by the proceedings in extent. Blood v. Wood, 1 Met. (Mass.) 534.

On execution sale against A, if the legal title is fraudulently in B, and the purchaser conveys the land to C, without having taken possession, C cannot, in his own name, maintain a writ of entry to recover possession. Hunt v. Mann, 132 Mass. 53.

Although A's general attachment of land fraudulently conveyed by the defendant to B, is not valid against C, who makes a subsequent special attachment, yet where the land is sold on an execution obtained by A, and the proceeds are applied first in satisfaction of his judgment and then in satisfaction of C's with his consent, and both judgments are fully satisfied, the Massachu- setts statute thereon is no defense to a writ of entry brought by the purchaser to recover possession. Owen v. Neveau, 128 Mass. 427.

A's wife bringing a libel for divorce, attached his land, and at the execution sale became the purchaser. Before A's redemption year expired, he sold his interest to B, who brought a suit in equity against the wife to redeem, and obtained a decree. Pending the suit, the wife on a decree for further alimony, levied an execution against A's right to redeem, and again became the purchaser. Held, that she could not maintain a writ of entry against B, even though the conveyance to him was in fraud of creditors. Sewall v. Sewall, 139 Mass. 157.

sion under a title not by the State statutes made subject to execution, being either a merely equitable one,¹ or as tenant at will, or by sufferance,² or that the whole property was exempt, being a homestead, and the wife not included in the decree of sale;³ or that either the judgment execution or proceedings were so defective as to avoid the sale.⁴

Ordinarily, he cannot deny his own title in order to defeat the purchaser's action for possession.⁵ Otherwise, as to a public land occupant, who, since the sale, has acquired a homestead under the General Government; its power over the public domain must not be so interfered with.⁶

h. WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.—A purchaser under a decree in chancery may generally get possession through a writ of assistance.⁷ But, of course, all the parties to be affected by the writ, as also the subject-matter, must be fully within the jurisdiction of the court;⁸ if there be a stranger in adverse possession without collusion of any of the parties the purchaser must resort to some other remedy.⁹

6. Ratification.—Ordinarily, the execution defendant's ratification cannot confirm a void estate.¹⁰ But on the principle that where one of two innocent persons must suffer, it shall be he who caused the injury; he may become estopped to deny the validity of the sale.¹¹ His acceptance of the surplus proceeds is an irrevocable confirmation thereof.¹²

XV. THE PURCHASER'S REMEDIES—1. Failure of Title.—Ordinarily, where the execution defendant had no title divestible by regular proceedings, the plaintiff, if purchaser, can vacate the apparent satisfaction and get a new execution.¹ If his title fails through the sheriff's misdoings, he can recover against him in an action on the case.² And, this, though it was the fault of the deputy.³

2. Recourse on the Plaintiff.—In some States, a stranger purchasing under void proceedings, has been allowed to recover from the execution plaintiff.⁴

where the proceeds received arise from a sale by authority of law as where they spring from the act of the party." Com. v. Shuman, 18 Pa. St. 346.

In Smith v. Warden, 19 Pa. St. 430, the court, by Lewis, J., said: "The application of this principle does not depend upon any supposed distinction between a void and a voidable sale. The receipt of the money, with the knowledge that the purchaser is paying it upon an understanding that he is purchasing a good title, touches the conscience, and therefore binds the right of the party in one case as well as the other."

So was held estopped an execution defendant who received the surplus on a sale made upon a defective notice. Huffman v. Gaines, 47 Ark. 226.

So also one receiving a surplus of the proceeds of an execution sale of slaves. Sittig v. Morgan, 5 La. Ann. 574. So also upon a foreclosure sale. Southard v. Perry, 21 Iowa, 488; 89 Am. Dec. 587.

A trustee may be so estopped by his cestui's receipt of proceeds of an irregular sheriff's sale. Crowell v. Meconkey, 5 Pa. St. 168. So also a guardian who received the proceeds of a partition sale. Merritt v. Horne, 5 Ohio St. 307; 67 Am. Dec. 298. So also minors who received the proceeds of a guardian's irregular sale. Deford v. Mercer, 24 Iowa 118.

the wife's land wherein he had not joined. Johnson v. Fritz, 44 Pa. St. 449.

1. So held, in case of seizure of exempt property. Piper v. Elwood, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 165. Also in case of an execution against a fraudulent vendee. Sargent v. Sturm, 23 Cal. 359; 83 Am. Dec. 118. Also in case of sale of an unleviable right of redemption. Watson v. Reissig, 24 Ill. 281; 76 Am. Dec. 746. Also where the real owner had recovered the value in a joint action against plaintiff and sheriff. Adams v. Smith, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 280.

2. So where the grantee of an equity of redemption, in order to strengthen his title, caused the equity to be sold on an execution which he held against the grantor became the purchaser, took deed, and paid the sheriff his fees and expenses, but through the sheriff's failure to post the statutory notices the sale was ineffectual, yet his title valid independently thereof, it was held that he could recover his expenses with interest. Sexton v. Nevers, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 451; 32 Am. Dec. 225.

3. Draper v. Arnold, 12 Mass. 449.

4. E. g., upon a sale under a judgment for a foreclosure deficiency, void for want of notice to the mortgagor. Schwinger v. Hickok, 53 N. Y. 280. The court, by Andrews, J., put the decision on the ground of total failure of consideration, quoting Lord Mansfield's words in Moses v. Macpherlan, 2 Burr. 1005, "Undue advantage taken of a party's situation," etc. But if the maxim caveat emptor applies, it is not easy to define an "undue" advantage. See also the opinion of the court, by Catron, J., in the complicated case of Henderson v. Overton, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 394; 24 Am. Dec. 492.

3. Recourse on the Defendant.—In some States, the purchaser getting no title, yet having contributed by his payment to satisfy the judgment, is treated as a trustee, and will not be compelled to surrender until reimbursed by the defendant.¹

4. Recourse on the Sheriff.—In some States, to avoid circuity of actions, the purchaser may in certain cases, sue the sheriff directly.²

5. In Equity.—In case of fraud, and in absence of adequate remedy at law, equity will relieve the purchaser.³ Equity will also relieve against mistake, where there is no adequate remedy at law by amendment or otherwise.⁴

In Texas, the elaborate opinion of the court, by Hemphill, J., in Howard v. North, 5 Tex. 316, has been approved in Johnson v. Caldwell, 38 Tex. 218.

In North Carolina, a damnified bona fide purchaser may maintain an action against the execution defendant to recover the sum paid. North Carolina Code, 1883, § 468.

In Iowa, where the sale has been set aside because the land was a homestead, a fact not known to the purchaser, he has no right to have the judgment assigned to him, although, under Iowa Code, § 3090, he is entitled to recover the amount paid on his purchase. Jones v. Blumenstein, 77 Iowa 361.

2. Under the Kentucky statutes, the execution purchaser of personal property may sue either upon the indemnifying bond, or upon the sheriff's official bond, if the latter has failed to take good security. Chisholm v. Gooch, 79 Ky. 468. The execution purchaser of a chattel was held entitled to recover of the sheriff who took no indemnifying bond and failed to inform him of the real owner's adverse claim. Harrison v. Shanks, 13 Bush (Ky.) 620.

3. See EQUITY, vol. 6, p. 717.

A, an administrator, who, on B's withdrawal of B's senior fi. fa. against C from the sheriff's hands, became the purchaser at the sale under A's junior fi. fa., which was void, was held not to be entitled to maintain a bill in equity against B, C and the sheriff for the proceeds of such void sale, charging collusion and fraud in the withdrawal. Edenfield v. McLeod, 66 Ga. 11.

Where a money recovery was had in trover against the execution purchaser of exempt cattle, it was held that he had no equity to insist that the money should be invested for the beneficiaries who were entitled to their possession. Harrell v. Harrell, 77 Ga. 130.

In Alabama, where the plaintiff is the purchaser, his crediting the amount of his bid is, pro tanto, a satisfaction of his judgment, and a court of equity will not vacate the sale on the ground that the execution defendant had no title. Goodbar v. Daniel, 88 Ala. 583.

In South Carolina, the plaintiff purchasing for less than the amount of his execution may have the price credited thereon, and though not receiving a deed, may set up his equitable title in an action brought for the partition of the land in which he is a defendant. Small v. Small, 16 S. Car. 64.

In Pennsylvania, the remedy in ejectment is considered adequate. Small's Appeal (Pa. 1887), 9 Atl. Rep. 337.

In Missouri, where the sheriff described the northwest quarter of section thirty-five as the "northeast quarter of section twenty-five," and the defendant surrendered the possession of this land to the purchaser, who moved thereon and made improvements, but the defendant discovering the misdescription, regained possession, it was held that the purchaser could maintain an action to recover the purchase money. McLean v. Martin, 45 Mo. 393. So, also, where he had not

6. Amendment.—In some States the purchaser may, as if an original party, remedy a defect in his title through an amendment of the process or of the record.¹

made improvements, but the sheriff had paid over the money to the plaintiff. Wilchinsky v. Cavender, 72 Mo. 192.

1. In Maine, the purchaser may get the execution amended; e. g., a clerical error, real estate "of" instead of "situated in," etc. Caldwell v. Blake, 69 Me. 458.

So also, in Tennessee, a clerical error in the teste and signature of the vend. exp. Perkins v. Woodfolk, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 480.

So also in other States, may the purchaser get an amendment, provided no complications have arisen to necessitate a resort to equity to adjust any intervening rights of third parties. See AMENDMENT, vol. 1, pp. 552, 553.

2. In Louisiana, as to "conventional" and "legal" payors, etc., see Louisiana Rev. Code, 1889, p. 400, §§ 2159, et seq. Only the original purchaser can bring an action against the recorder for an erroneous certificate of mortgages. Morans v. Shaw, 23 La. Ann. 379.

In Indiana, "if, upon the sale of property, real or personal, the title of the purchaser is invalid as to all or any part thereof, by reason of any defect in the proceedings or want of title, the purchaser may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the debtor, to the extent of the money paid and applied to the debtor's benefit; and where the judgment is entered satisfied in whole or in part, by reason of such sale, such purchaser, upon notice to the parties to the proceeding, and upon motion, may have such satisfaction of the judgment vacated in whole or in part. Such purchaser, when the proceedings are defective, or the description of the property sold is imperfect, shall also have a lien to the same extent on the property sold as against all persons except bona fide purchasers without notice; but this section shall not be construed to require the creditor to refund the purchase money by reason of the invalidity of any such sale." Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 765.

This statute being remedial, must be liberally construed. Short v. Sears, 93 Ind. 505. The Indiana courts had previously restricted subrogation to sureties, etc. Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134—decided in 1866.

Though the sale be void for want of notice, the deed gives color of title, and the purchaser's grantee is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor. Ray v. Detchon, 79 Ind. 56.

Such, also, is the Ohio statute. Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, §§ 5410, 5412.

Before this enactment, it has been held in a "Western Reserve Case" that the purchaser at an administrator's sale, assumed to be made under an order of a Connecticut probate court and invalid, could not recover of the heirs; that when they came into equity to disincumber their title, they must merely reimburse the taxes paid, with interest and expenses. Nowler v. Coit, 1 Ohio 523; 13 Am. Dec. 640—decided in 1824.

In California, as to the purchaser's remedy by notice and motion, see California Code Civil Proc., § 708.

In Iowa, also, by notice and motion, see McClain's Iowa Code, 1888, § 4319; Miller's Iowa Code, 1888, § 3090.

In North Carolina, by action against the execution defendant, see North Carolina Code, 1883, § 468.

In Alabama: "When any interest less than the absolute title is sold, the purchaser is subrogated to all the rights of the defendant, and subject to all his disabilities." Alabama Code, 1886, § 2892. He may impeach a deed by the defendant, for fraud, in any case where the plaintiff in execution could have done so. McCoy v. Watson, 51 Ala. 466.

In Texas, where the sale was invalid through the sheriff's misdescription of the land, the purchaser was subrogated to the judgment lien. Jones v. Smith, 55 Tex. 383. Compare French v. Grenet, 57 Tex. 273.

In Georgia, the purchaser may contend against the debtor's claim of homestead

As a part of the practice under this principle the courts in the States recognizing this remedy will protect the purchaser in his possession until he has been reimbursed his payment.¹

XVI. THE PURCHASER'S LIABILITIES—1. In General.—Ordinarily, the law governing the liabilities or the exemptions therefrom of purchasers in general, applies to a sheriff's vendee. He buys² subject to the liens against the execution defendant, and with whatever immunities the statutes afford him.³ He is liable in replevin or trover, if the property be personalty exempt from execution,⁴ or the title and right of possession be in another than the execution defendant.⁵

on the same grounds that the execution creditor could have urged—e. g., a waiver by contract with him. Tappan v. Hunt, 74 Ga. 545.

In Missouri, in Lionberger v. Baker, 88 Mo. 456, the court, by Black, J., said: "Where a debtor conveys his land in fraud of creditors, the creditor may institute his suit to set aside the fraudulent deed and subject the land to the payment of the debt by thus first ascertaining the interest of the debtor therein, or he may sell the land under execution before ascertainment of the debtor's interest, and then set aside the fraudulent deed. The purchaser at the execution sale will occupy the same position as if he were the creditor. It is to be regretted that the former course is not more frequently pursued; thereby avoiding the sacrifice of property and the speculation attending such execution sales, of which this case is no exception; but the right of the creditor to pursue either course is well established in this State." Compare Morgan v. Bouse, 53 Mo. 219; Ryland v. Callison, 54 Mo. 513; Rinehart v. Lang, 95 Mo. 396.

In Illinois, the maxim caveat emptor has been applied against subrogation, save in favor of sureties, guarantors, insurer's and junior lienholders compelled in self-protection to remove a senior lien. Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 431. Compare the case of an equitable assignee, Smith v. Dinsmoor, 119 Ill. 665. Also a case defining a mere volunteer. Suppiger v. Garrels, 20 Ill. App. 625.

In Mississippi, a recovery in ejectment against a purchaser has been enjoined until he be reimbursed his purchase-money. McGee v. Wallace, 57 Miss. 638; 34 Am. Rep. 484.

So, also, in Alabama is one precluded from asserting his legal title to the prejudice of an innocent purchaser. Robertson v. Bradford, 73 Ala. 116.

As to the like South Carolina rule thereon, see Cathcart v. Sugenhimer, 18 S. Car. 123.

In New Jersey, the court, in ordering a reconveyance, will allow a fair compensation for the purchaser's time, trouble and expenses. Combs v. Little, 4 N. J. Eq. 310; 40 Am. Dec. 207.

2. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 233.

3. E. g., in California: "No one, merely by reason of having acquired an estate subject to a covenant running with the land, is liable for a breach of the covenant before he acquired the estate, or after he has parted with it." California Civil Code, 1885, § 1466.

In Rhode Island, the purchaser's failure to hear the terms of sale, or his ignorance of the law as to his buying only the defendant's interest, will not relieve him from liability. Upham v. Hamill, 11 R. I. 565; 23 Am. Rep. 525.

4. Johnson v. Babcock, 8 Allen (Mass.) 583; Buckley v. Wheeler, 52 Mich. 1.

5. Coombs v. Gorden, 59 Me. 111; Buffum v. Deane, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 41.

In Pennsylvania, tender by a leaseholder or other third party of debt, interest and costs, with demand for assignment of the writ, does not affect the purchaser, if the plaintiff refused it. Forest Oil Co.'s Appeal, 118 Pa. St. 138.

The purchaser is not liable in covenant for the ground rent becoming due after the sale, and before acknowledgment of the deed. Thomas v. Connell, 1 Pa. L. J. 319.

As to the purchaser's liability to account for mortgaged property sold, see Milmine v. Bass, 29 Fed. Rep. 632.

2. As Trustee.—He may, by written or oral agreement, have rendered himself liable as a trustee of the execution plaintiff,¹ or of the defendant.²

3. Covin and Fraud.—By the preponderance of decisions, the title obtained through the purchaser's trickery and fraud is, while in his hands, resistible both at law and in equity.³

If a bona fide purchaser he may avail himself of the rule of trover exempting one from surrender until demand. Rowley v. Brown, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 456.

A mala fide purchaser is liable for the revenues of the property while in his possession. And he is not entitled to a tender of the price before suit to recover the property. Germaine v. Mallerich, 31 La. Ann. 371.

As to replevin in such case under the Upper Canada Insolvent act of 1869, see Burke v. McWhirter, 35 U. C. Q. B. 1.

As to the English practice, see Shaw v. Tunbridge, 2 W. Bl. (2d ed.) 1064, note.

As to attachment by the owner, see Sanborn v. Kittredge, 20 Vt. 632; 1 Am. Rep. 58.

In Illinois, the purchaser is chargeable with notice of the value of the property and of its situation, and of the legal rules bearing upon the transaction. Morris v. Robey, 73 Ill. 462.

In Connecticut, while the money paid by A, the purchaser, for a horse mortgaged in another State, was in the sheriff's hands, it was held that A could recover of the sheriff in an action for money had and received. Bartholomew v. Warner, 32 Conn. 98; 85 Am. Dec. 251.

1. If he bids under an agreement with A, the plaintiff, that the purchase shall be for A, he holds the title in trust for A, though the deed be made in his own name. Byrnes v. Morris, 53 Tex. 213.

2. In absence of fraud on creditors, the courts will enforce one's agreement with the execution defendant to bid off and hold the land for him under the sheriff's deed until repaid the purchase money. Peebles v. Pate, 90 N. Car. 348.

Where A had become involved in certain domestic and financial embarrassments, and arranged with his cousin B that certain property going under execution be bid off by B and held for A till A could get extricated, the court enforced the trust in a suit brought after a lapse of fifteen years.

Williams v. Williams, 8 Bush (Ky.) 241.

The court will recognize the correlative obligation of the defendant to repay such trustee. Cook v. Cook, 69 Pa. St. 443.

3. In an ejectment suit, Abbey v. Dewey, 25 Pa. St. 416, the court, by Black, J., said: "A purchaser at sheriff's sale who practices any deceit or imposture, or who is guilty of any trick or device, the object of which is to get the property at an undervalue, thereby renders the title so acquired utterly void and worthless in his hands. But it must be shown also that he did actually get it for less than it was worth, or less than what it would have sold for at a fair sale." His title might be defeated on a subsequent sale under another's execution. But an agreement not to bid is not presumptively fraudulent. Barton v. Hunter, 101 Pa. St. 406.

So, also, as to one's combination with bystanders to prevent competition. Flemming v. Hutchinson, 36 Iowa 523.

Collusion with the sheriff would render the sale absolutely void; but if the plaintiff himself alone suppress notice, etc., and become the purchaser, his title is good until set aside in equity. The act of his attorney, in placing a senior execution in the sheriff's hands on the eve of a sale advertised under junior ones, thus having the sale by virtue of all, in order to render a second sale unnecessary, has been held not to be improper. Burton v. Spiers, 92 N. Car. 503.

An agreement of parties that only one person shall bid is not necessarily adjudged to be covinous, though tending prejudicially against strangers or other creditors. Where the equity of redemption of property of a corporation was levied on, and under agreement bid in by A as trustee for the plaintiff creditors at a stated price, nothing to be paid except the costs, the defendant to have a specified time to redeem, it was held that other creditors could not maintain a bill in equity against A to compel payment of the bid. Cureton v. Wright, 73 Ga. 8.

4. Non-payment.—Ordinarily, a purchaser failing to complete the sale, becomes liable to the sheriff for the deficiency upon a resale.¹ In some States, the purchaser's liability for non-payment is defined by statute.²

A purchaser who has not offered to comply with his bid acquires no interest in the property or right of proceeding in regard thereto.³

1. See supra, this title, Resale; Sheriff's Action for Deficiency.

2. In Iowa, if he fails to pay, "the plaintiff or his attorney may elect to proceed against him for the amount; otherwise the sheriff may treat the sale as a nullity and resell." McClain's Iowa Stat. 1888, § 3089; Miller's Iowa Stat., § 4318; Swortzell v. Martin, 16 Iowa 519.

Under the Kansas Code (not requiring joinder of the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted), the sheriff may recover of the purchaser refusing to pay the amount bid; and this, though the execution be returned and the notice of sale defective, provided the execution debtor and creditor have approved the sale. Walker v. Braden, 34 Kan. 660.

In Indiana, he is "liable, on motion to be made by the sheriff or the execution plaintiff or defendant, in the proper court, five days' notice being given, to a judgment for the amount of the purchase money, and damages not exceeding ten per cent. and interest, with costs; and no stay of execution shall be allowed upon the judgment." Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, § 760.

After the sheriff's deed, payment will be presumed. Meikel v. Meikel, 119 Ind. 421.

In Missouri, the sheriff may recover the resale deficiency by motion. Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4946.

Where A, on the morning following his purchase, informed the sheriff that he bought as the agent of B, and the sheriff entered B's name on the sale-book as purchaser, with a memorandum of the facts, it was held that this completed the contract of sale, and A was liable for the purchase money. Gray v. Case, 51 Mo. 463.

A purchased land by the execution defendant held under a bond for title from B, but for which he had not paid. C under an agreement with A to pay the sheriff A's bid, paid the purchase money to B, and obtained the legal title, but refused to pay the sheriff, and judgment was obtained against A for the amount of his bid. Held, that A, on paying the amount paid by C to B, was entitled to be decreed investiture of the legal title. Bibb v. Means, 61 Mo. 284.

In Georgia, on the purchaser's default, a conveyance to another by transfer of his bid several days afterwards without readvertisement, passes the title. Williams v. Barlow, 49 Ga. 530.

In Illinois, a purchaser who refuses to complete the sale is not liable for the loss on a resale unless he had notice of the resale, and that he would be held liable. Maulding v. Steele, 105 Ill. 644.

In North Carolina, in absence of any order from the court, the sheriff may refuse to credit on the execution a bid made by the execution creditor in lieu of cash. Isler v. Andrews, 66 N. Car. 552.

If, on the purchaser's default, the sheriff does not elect to rescind, he may, on tender of deed, and even before making the return, maintain an action for the amount of the bid. McKee v. Lineberger, 69 N. Car. 217.

In Kentucky, the sheriff may sell on credit, on the purchaser's giving bond as prescribed in Kentucky Stat. 1881, § 424, art. 10, § 1.

If, after payment of the bid, a return has been recorded by the clerk, the sheriff has no power to withdraw the sale bond and accept others in lieu thereof. Such bonds cannot support an execution. Spradlin v. Pieratt, 12 Bush (Kv.) 496.

3. Askew v. Ebbarts, 22 Cal. 263; Leach v. Koenig, 55 Mo. 451; Hardesty v. Wilson, 2 Gill (Md.) 481; 41 Am. Dec. 439.

In Mississippi, the sheriff is not bound to make a deed until the whole purchase money is paid. Davis v. Pryor, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 114.

XVII VACATING SALES—1. By Motion to Quash—a. WHEN TO BE MADE.—The court that issued the writ may, on motion seasonably made, set aside a sale thereunder for any essential irregularity therein or in the sheriff's proceedings in execution thereof.¹ Ordinarily the motion comes too late if made after the redemption period has expired.²

b. BY WHOM MADE.—The motion must be made by some person injuriously affected, whether the plaintiff, the defendant, his wife, his assignee, the purchaser, a junior lienholder, a real owner or a wronged bidder.³

1. In Kentucky, "sales made under execution by fraud, covin, or collusion, may be set aside on motion of any person aggrieved, or by petition in equity. If by motion, it must be within one year of the sale." Kentucky Gen. Stat., p. 581, § 1.

A court of law is the tribunal to set aside an execution sale. Cassiday v. McDaniel, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 519. In equity the remedy is by appeal to the court in which decree was made. Brown v. Frost, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 243.

In New York, rights acquired under a levy partly made may be divested by the action of the court in setting aside the judgment and execution and whether upon motion to strike out or upon appeal. May v. Cooper, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 7.

In Missouri, the court can set aside the sale on the return day when, by an oversight of the officer, it has resulted injuriously. McKee v. Logan, 82 Mo. 524.

In Dakota, judgment on a motion to set aside is not a final order, or appealable; until the order of confirmation, the legality of the sale is controvertible. Bond v. Charleen, 1 Dak. Ter. 224.

In Kansas, before confirmation of the sale, a motion may be entertained to set aside the judgment for want of service of summons. Johnson v. Lindsay, 27 Kan. 514.

2. Love v. Cherry, 24 Iowa, 210; Raymond v. Holborn, 23 Wis. 57; 99 Am. Dec. 105; Fahinger v. Fahinger, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 622. As to estoppel by acquiescence and delay, see JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 237.

In Illinois, on reversal, the sale may be vacated on motion, even after the year to redeem has expired, provided the deed has not been executed, and the execution defendant be still in possession. Hays v. Cassell, 70 Ill. 669.

So, also, in Alabama. Abercrombie v. Connor, 10 Ala. 293. In Cowan v. Sapp, 81 Ala. 526, the court by Clifton, J., said: "Ordinarily, proceedings should be instituted before the purchaser obtains possession, or improvements are made, or third parties have acquired rights, or any change in the situation of the parties rendering it difficult to put the purchaser in statu quo. . . . In all cases, reasonable promptness, diligence and good faith will be exacted to be determined on the particular circumstances of each case—whether they are such as to have induced inaction, or ought to have quickened vigilance." Compare Aderholt v. Henry, 82 Ala. 541.

In Wisconsin, a delay of twenty months after the sale, without excuse, is, on appeal, ground for reversing the order granting the motion to set aside. Foster v. Hall, 44 Wis. 568.

3. Galbreath v. Drought, 29 Kan. 711; Harrison v. Andrews, 18 Kan. 535; Cravens v. Wilson, 48 Tex. 324; Smith v. Fletcher (Ark. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 824; Beckwith v. King's Mountain Min. Co., 87 N. Car. 155.

In New York, so, also, was sustained in foreclosure, after a sale ill timed and whereat the sheriff used a diagram erroneously locating buildings, a motion by a creditor of the mortgagor. Gould v. Mortimer, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 167. Also one by a junior judgment creditor without notice of a foreclosure sale that had been made at an inadequate price. American Ins. Co. v. Oakley, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 259.

So also was sustained a motion by one whose bid the officer fraudulently refused to recognize. U. S. v. Vestal, 4 Hughes (U. S.) 467.

The defendant cannot maintain the motion after his assignment in bankruptcy. Laird v. Laird, 4 Pa. L. J. 474; Gridley v. Duncan, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 456.

c. NOTICE.—Rules of court usually require that all parties directly interested be notified of the motion and permitted to be

It has been held that one claiming adversely to the defendant should not be heard to object to the sale. Glassell v. Wilson, 4 Wash. (U.S.) 59; McLaughlin v. Bradford, 82 Ala. 431; Bachle v. Webb, 11 Neb. 423. So also a mere mortgagee must contest otherwise. Frink v. Morrison, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 80.

In Georgia, if a partner's individual property be levied upon for a firm debt, he may alone, by affidavit and certiorari, contest the legality of the proceeding. Smith v. Bryan, 60 Ga. 628.

In Kansas, where, before the sale, the wife of the execution defendant had claimed the property as a homestead, but received none of the purchase money, it was set aside after it had been, on his motion, confirmed; but this, without taxing any costs against him. Adams v. Devalley, 40 Kan. 486. And the plaintiff was required to pay the costs accruing since issuance of execution, the sale being set aside as contrary to statute upon his motion. Jenkins v. Green, 24 Kan. 493. Wherein the motion does not operate as a waiver, see De Jarnette v. Verner (Kan.), 19 Pac. 256.

In Texas the defendant's children, to whom he had assigned his interest after the judgment, being interested in any surplus, may have the sale set aside for fraud or irregularity. Flanagan v. Pearson, 50 Tex. 383.

A defendant's vendee cannot have the sale set aside as to himself and affirmed in part. Puterbaugh v. Moss (Ill. 1887), 11 N. E. Rep. 197.

In Louisiana, the decision of a motion for injunction and to set aside the sale, rests in the discretion of the court, and is not conclusive on the ultimate rights of the parties. Drouet v. Lacroix, 28 La. Ann. 126. The party moving must have used due diligence to prevent the injury. Jouet v. Mortimer, 29 La. Ann. 206.

In Pennsylvania, after the sheriff's deed has been acknowledged the sale will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price. Cooper v. Wilson, 96 Pa. St. 409. But compare Shakespeare v. Fisher, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 251, where the application was entertained though the deed had been acknowledged but not recorded.

After delivery of the deed and possession taken thereunder, one alleging fraud cannot have a rule to show cause; the title can only be divested in ejectment or by bill in equity. Evans v. Maury, 112 Pa. St. 300.

After the sale, the plaintiff cannot countermand it, because of irregularities in it or in the original attachment. Thomas v. Bogert, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 11.

In Indiana, the sale will be set aside for fraud and gross inadequacy of price, even after the year allowed for redemption, the execution defendant being ignorant of essential facts, and the purchaser knowing this and not seasonably putting him on his guard. Fletcher v. McGill, 110 Ind. 395.

In Kentucky, a sale made four years after a judgment entry foreclosing a lien was held not to import such laches as would destroy the lien, there having been an order for filing away, "subject to being redocketed," etc. Pittman v. Wakefield (Ky. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 525. Compare Black v. Steele (Ky. 1887), 6 S. W. Rep. 23.

Ordinarily, the application is considered as addressed to the power of the court to correct its own records. After the property has been successfully replevied by the real owner, the execution plaintiff may have the levy, sale and satisfaction vacated and a new execution awarded. Zeigler v. McCormick, 13 Neb. 25. But compare Thomas v. Bogert, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 11.

On application for inadequacy of price the affidavit must state the value and the price; an averment that the lands "sold for greatly less than their value" is insufficient. Holly v. Bass, 68 Ala. 206.

A caused a levy to be made on property of B then worth but little more than the amount of A's judgment (which was about $800, including costs). C became the purchaser at $300. On increase of the value to nearly $1,600, A and C moved to be allowed to increase C's bid to the amount of the judgment, and to have the sale confirmed. B, who before this had tendered the amount, now moved to set aside the sale. Held, that his motion came too late. McGeorge v. Sease, 32 Kan. 387.

heard.¹ The motion should be accompanied by a tender of whatever fruits of the sale have been received.² In some States the statutes prescribe the proceedings upon such motion.³

2. By Suit to Set Aside—a. JURISDICTION.—Where the ground for annulling the sale is any matter not apparent from the record, and the circumstances admit no speedy and adequate remedy at law, the proper method is by suit in equity.⁴

1. This includes the plaintiff. Good v. Coombs, 28 Tex. 34. Also the defendant. Chambers v. Hays, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 115. Also the purchaser. Wilkie v. Ingham Co. Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 641. Compare Baker v. Hall, 29 Kan. 617.

If the purchaser be out of the State, the ordinary practice in constructive service of notice is proper. Eckstein v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 658; Lyster v. Brewer, 13 Iowa 461. In case of two defendants, one must have notice of the other's motion to vacate. Stark v. Mitchel, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 16; Beach v. Dennis, 47 Ala. 262.

The sheriff need not be notified unless directly interested. McKee v. Logan, 82 Mo. 524; Mobile Cotton Press, etc., Co. v. Moore, 9 Port. (Ala.) 579.

See, also, JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 239.

2. Johnson v. Caldwell, 38 Tex. 217.

In Louisiana, an execution defendant who seeks to vacate a sale made to an innocent stranger, must tender the consideration paid. Tarleton v. Kennedy, 21 La. Ann. 500. Otherwise, where he seeks to restrain the sheriff and a pretended purchaser from consummating the sale. Drouet v. Lacroix, 28 La. Ann. 126.

3. In Pennsylvania, on affidavit of irregularity, the court may set aside a sale of personal property, after directing an issue for trial of questions of fact whenever the circumstances require, and order meanwhile a sale of all perishable property. B. P. Dig. Law, Pennsylvania, 1885, p. 750, § 55.

In Massachusetts, if the levy proves to be invalid, the creditor may have a sci. fa. for a new execution. Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 1015, § 53.

In Vermont, where the title after the extent on real estate is rendered doubtful, owing to some irregularity, the court may, on petition of either party, vacate the extent, "and issue execution anew; but no such petition shall be sustained unless the same, with a certified copy of the judgment, execution and extent, is filed in such court within two years from the time such extent was returned, and notice thereof given to the adverse party." Vermont Rev. Laws, 1880, § 1596.

As to necessity of notice within two years to prevent the statute from running, see opinions in Phelps v. Laird, 51 Vt. 285. The remedy does not apply to avoid levy; e. g., where the execution has not been recorded in the town clerk's office or returned within sixty days. Parker v. Parker, 54 Vt. 341.

In Kentucky, the purchaser may, before redemption, docket a motion for possession, and if, on trial, it appears that the defendant had no title to the land, "the court shall have power to set aside and quash the return of the officer, as if no sale had been made." Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 566, § 10. And this, too, when the plaintiff was the purchaser. Bent v. Maupin, 86 Ky. 271.

In Iowa, a sale assumed to be under a second execution before a return of the first, will be set aside; the Iowa Code, § 3025, allowing but one to exist at the same time. Merritt v. Grover, 57 Iowa 493.

4. In Day v. Graham, 6 Ill. 435, the court, by Scates, J., said: "Where the plaintiff in the execution is the purchaser, and before he conveys to another, the court would set aside the sale upon a motion. But after he conveys to a third person, who becomes a purchaser, the court will not determine in this summary way questions which may affect the rights of others not before the court, and without opportunity of explaining away those circumstances which might destroy his title. Although the purchaser here was the attorney, and will be chargeable with notice of all irregularities, if any, yet he is a third person, and did not purchase as an attorney, but in his own right." This decision was approved in Jenkins v. Merriweather, 109 Ill. 647.

The remedy is in equity where one

In cases of fraud, accident or mistake, the remedies at law and in equity are concurrent.¹

b. LACHES.—Under the maxim of public policy that the law favors the vigilant, the party damnified by the sale must not so delay to assert his rights as to import acquiescence, and render its annulment an injustice to innocent third parties.²

c. PARTIES.—Ordinarily, all persons having any legal or beneficial interest in the sale of property should be made parties plaintiff or defendant.³

seeks to have the sale set aside on the ground that the purchaser agreed to convey to him. Hausling v. Hausman, 73 Cal. 276. Or on the ground of inadequacy of price, not by cross-complaint in ejectment three years afterwards. Vigoureux v. Murphy, 54 Cal. 346.

1. See JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 293. See, also, a threefold classification by States: EQUITY, vol. 6, p. 697.

As to concurrent remedies by summary application in equity, of a party injuriously affected by the sale, see Jackson v. Roberts, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 83.

In Louisiana, an action to annul the sale need not be brought in the same court that granted the order of seizure and sale. Stapleton v. Butterfield, 34 La. Ann. 822. So also where the judgment was void by reason of a defective citation. Bledsoe v. Erwin, 33 La. Ann. 615.

2. See LACHES, vol. 12, pp. 540, 600.

In Minnesota, in a suit brought after the redemption period, to set aside the sale, the complaint must set forth a good excuse for the delay. Abbott v. Peck, 35 Minn. 499.

In Alabama, a delay of three years was held to be sufficiently explained by the circumstances that a settlement had been agreed to in ignorance of existing facts; that the judgment was paid to the plaintiff in Tennessee on the day of the sale in Alabama, and the plaintiff as purchaser made no effort to take possession till six months before proceedings to vacate. Cowan v. Sapp, 74 Ala. 44; 81 Ala. 525. The defendant may by delay lose the right to object to a sale to the sheriff's wife. Dexter v. Strobach, 56 Ala. 233.

One holding land under an oral gift and unrecorded tax-deed filed, but did not prosecute, a bill to enjoin the sale, on the ground that his title was merely equitable. Ten years afterwards, the donor gave him a deed, and two years thereafter he sued to set aside the sale. This was held to be laches fatal. Richards v. Mackall, 124 U. S. 183.

3. See EQUITY PLEADINGS, vol. 6, pp. 731, 738.

In Texas, a creditor interested in a junior execution may maintain a suit to set aside a sale made under an execution that was a prior lien, when, through the sheriff's fault, the property brought considerably less than if at a fair sale. Crarens v. Wilson, 48 Tex. 324.

In Iowa, a mortgagee cannot, after the mortgage has been declared to be fraudulent, maintain an action to set aside an execution sale. McDonald v. Johnson, 48 Iowa 72.

In Illinois, after death of the judgment debtor, the suit may be brought by his executor and legatee, and a creditor, if it appears that his personal estate is insufficient to pay his debts. Cohen v. Menard (Ill. 1890), 24 N. E. Rep. 604.

On a bill to set aside a sale of property acquired by a defendant after his discharge in bankruptcy, it was held that notice must be served on his co-defendant; otherwise a sci. fa. to revive the judgment as to him could not be sustained. Lackey v. Steere, 121 Ill. 598.

In Kentucky, where A was surety for a debt, whereon B obtained judgment, it was held that equity would not entertain a bill by A to set aside B's execution sale and allow A's lien on the property sold equal with B, and setting out an agreement between them that executions should simultaneously issue on the two judgments. Robbins v. Lebus (Ky. 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 898.

In Maryland, a sale subject to taxes, at which their amount was made known, cannot be set aside by the defaulting taxpayer. Hall v. Claggett, 63 Md. 57.

d. PREREQUISITES.—In such suit, the fundamental maxims of equity govern—e. g., “He who seeks equity must do equity.”¹

e. PROCEEDINGS.—In such suit, even in those States where the practice is defined by code, the principles govern that have been determined by established precedents.²

f. RELIEF.—As to the relief afforded, the forms prescribed both by the codes and the older equity rules “are flexible and may be suited to the different postures of cases.” The court “may vary, qualify, restrain, and model the remedy so as to suit it to mutual and adverse claims, controlling equities and the real and substantial rights of all the parties.”³

In New Jersey, it has been held that a sale to A, a creditor under an execution issued on a judgment confessed by B, should not be set aside in favor of C, a creditor who, before such judgment, had begun suit against B, in absence of evidence that A participated in B's design, by giving him the preference, to defeat C. Goodwin v. Hamill, 26 N. J. Eq. 24.

1. See collation of these maxims, EQUITY, vol. 6, pp. 704, et seq.

A party may, by his contribution to the injury, be estopped to insist that the sale be set aside; e. g., improperly objecting to the sale. Atcheson v. Hutchison, 51 Tex. 234.

The execution defendant must show that he used due diligence to prevent a damnifying sale. So held where one failed to notify the sheriff of an agreement that it should be stopped. Carden v. Lane, 48 Ark. 216.

A judgment debtor who, without objection, has allowed his merely equitable interest to be levied on and sold, and afterwards rents the land of the execution creditor who had become the purchaser, cannot in another suit brought long afterwards have the levy and sale set aside, except on condition of satisfying the judgment. Blackburn v. Clarke, 85 Tenn. 506.

In setting aside an execution sale of land that belonged to the defendant's grantee, the satisfaction of the judgment should be canceled. Keith v. Proctor, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 189.

In Louisiana, a claimant of the property sold under a null judgment must first proceed by a direct action. Gillis v. Carter, 29 La. Ann. 698.

In Nebraska, one may sue to set aside the sale, notwithstanding the overruling of a motion made by him five years before to vacate the order confirming it. Wills v. Chandler, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 276.

2. See EQUITY PLEADINGS, vol. 6, p. 726.

In Indiana, the burden of proof is on the applicant. Maynes v. Moore, 16 Ind. 116; Ferrier v. Deutchman, 81 Ind. 390. In a suit to set aside a sale of exempt property, the complainant may adduce the execution, advertisement and appraisal, but not a mere copy of the sheriff's certificate, though on failure to produce on proper notice, parol evidence of the contents would be admissible. Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101. He must allege and show that the statutory schedule was filed. Guerin v. Kraner, 97 Ind. 533.

In South Carolina, one seeking to recover land sold on execution against him may dispute the validity of the judgment and sale; but he cannot assert title in a trustee, and deny the existence of an interest subject to levy. Crenshaw v. Julian, 26 S. Car. 283.

In Louisiana, an order of seizure and sale must be supported exclusively by authentic evidence; not by matters in pais. Van Raalte v. Mission Congregation, 39 La. Ann. 617.

Equity will set aside a sale of a corporation share, made under a void execution. Seligman v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 22 Fed. Rep. 39.

Equity will relieve where the purchaser has procured the sheriff to give him a deed in fee of property sold subject to the homestead exemption. New England Mort. Sec. Co. v. Robson, 79 Ga. 757.

In Illinois, in setting aside a sale made en masse of land that was parcelable, equity will protect the purchaser against intervening liens. McHany v. Schenk, 88 Ill. 357.

cured the sheriff to levy on A's land, and, at the sale, procured C to bid the land in for B, equity decreed surrender of the certificate of purchase, and ordered that C's payment be credited on the amount due from B. Goldsborough v. Darst, 9 Ill. App. 205.

Where, on foreclosure of a mortgage of 100 acres upon an order to sell 60 acres to satisfy unpaid installments, the plaintiff purchased the whole 100 acres, the court confirmed his title to 60 acres, and adjudged the rest to the defendant. Bole v. Newberger, 8 Ind. 274.

In Tennessee, where a massed sale of land has been declared void, the effect of setting aside the entry of satisfaction of the judgment is to revive the judgment, but not the levy. Pendency of the creditor's bill to set aside such entry, and to subject the same land by the decree, gives him a lien superior to that of a subsequent judgment creditor, although the land may have been previously sold and conveyed under the execution of a third creditor. Mays v. Wherry, 3 Tenn. Ch. 80.

A sale otherwise regular will not be set aside because there were no bidders present other than the execution plaintiff. Learned v. Geer, 139 Mass. 31. "The competition may be as active and spirited between two or three as a dozen." Hudgins v. Lanier, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 506. Otherwise where attendance is prevented by extreme inclemency of the weather. Roberts v. Roberts, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 639; Johnson v. Crawl, 55 Tex. 571.

In the Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 616, 648—a case of a marshal's sale of a bad lot of tobacco by sample seroons that were undamaged, the whole being accessible—the court, by Thompson, J., said: "The rule caveat emptor must necessarily apply, from the nature of the transaction; there being no one to whom recourse can be had for indemnity against any loss which may be sustained."

Otherwise, as to a sale by mistake in the numbers of lots of land as timbered which were mere sandbanks on the Missouri river. Frasher v. Ingham, 4 Neb. 531.

A foreclosure sale was set aside, where the plaintiff had written to a reliable agent, used due diligence, was unable to attend, and the price was inadequate. Hoppock v. Conklin, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 582. So, also, where one was mistaken as to discharge of a lien. Cummings' Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 509. So, also, where a return had not been indorsed, and the plaintiff was not informed of the sale. Allen v. Clark, 36 Wis. 101. So, also, as to a misapprehension of the terms of sale. Hey v. Schooley, 7 Ohio 48. So, also, as to a mistaken representation of the quality of the land sold: Lowndes case; so, also, as to ignoring a bid. Roper's case. [These two unreported cases are cited in Gordon v. Saunders, 2 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 159.]

In Iowa, a sale of real estate will be set aside if, at the time of the levy, the judgment was not a lien, and this fact was unknown to the purchaser. Iowa Rev. Stat. 1888, § 4319.

There, an execution must be regarded as existing until it is returned. A sale, assumed to be made under a second execution before a return of the first, will be set aside. Merritt v. Grover, 57 Iowa 493.

In Pennsylvania, where a purchaser had been misled by a judgment index entry to suppose the purchase necessary to protect his interests as incumbrancer, the court, on his motion, set aside the sale, canceled the deed, and struck out the erroneous entry. Shakespeare v. Delany, 86 Pa. St. 108.

In Illinois, where, without any misrepresentation as to the title or condition, the defendant turned out land incumbered in excess of its real value and the plaintiff's attorneys bid it off in satisfaction of the execution, it was held that caveat emptor applied, and it was error on the plaintiffs to set aside the sale. Vancoyoc v. Kimler, 77 Ill. 151. Compare Finley v. Thayer, 42 Ill. 350.

b. MISCONDUCT OF THE SHERIFF.—The sale will be set aside for the sheriff's disobedience of a mandatory statute, or for any damnifying consequences of his disobedience of a directory statute in absence of the defendant's waiver thereof.¹

Ordinarily, a sale to a stranger will not be set aside for an irregularity whereof he had not actual notice. Sheppard v. Bland, 87 N. Car. 163.

The fact that the execution was made returnable in more than the prescribed number of days does not invalidate a sale made within the statutory time. Youngblood v. Cunningham, 38 Ark. 571.

Nor the fact that the judgment was for more than the amount declared for. Buice v. Lowman Gold, etc., M. Co., 64 Ga. 769.

Nor a variance between the execution and the judgment as to the sum due. Hinton v. Roach, 95 N. Car. 106.

Nor the fact that in the judgment and execution, the defendant's name was misspelled; e. g., "Kuhn" misspelled "Coons." Kuhn v. Kilmer, 16 Neb. 699.

Nor an incorrect naming of a defendant corporation—e. g., "Algona College" instead of "Trustees of Algona College." Wilson v. Baker, 52 Iowa 423. But in Texas a sale under execution issued against "William V." on a judgment rendered against H. W. V., levied on the property of H. W. V., whose Christian name was Hiram Watkins, was held to be absolutely void. Morris v. Balkham, 75 Tex. 111.

Nor an announcement by one believing himself to have an equitable interest, tending to chill the biddings. Reagan v. Bishop, 25 S. Car. 585.

Nor the fact of an atmospheric obstruction of a telegram from the plaintiff to the sheriff. So held where five months elapsed before action to set the sale aside. Central Pac. R. Co. v. Creed, 70 Cal. 497.

In Texas, a purchase, at an execution sale for costs, by a stranger who conveyed to the defendant and his wife solely as a compromise of a claim of title, was held to be properly left undisturbed. Jones v. Pratt, 77 Tex. 210.

In Indiana, a purchaser's want of actual knowledge of a prior judgment, levy, and sale was held to afford no ground of relief. Taylor v. Morgan, 86 Ind. 295; Caley v. Morgan, 114

Ind. 350. So, also, the mere fact that an alias execution was issued without the plaintiff's written præcipe required by Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 678. Johnson v. Murray, 112 Ind. 154.

So also as to a sale of land that had been sold by the defendant; the vendee having failed to ask for the order that other property be first exhausted. Sansberry v. Lord, 82 Ind. 521.

Selling on insufficient notice. Supra, this title, The Notice.

A sale without notice to the creditors, at which the property was bid in by one of the judgment debtors at a grossly inadequate price, was set aside. Weir v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 32 Kan. 325.

Ordinarily, the sale will not be set aside unless the sheriff has abused the discretion vested in him to the substantial injury of the execution defendant.¹

c. MISCONDUCT OF PLAINTIFF OR ATTORNEY.—An execution plaintiff and his attorney must be considered to know of any infirmities in the proceedings.² "Full and free competition implies that all parties have equal knowledge of the state of the title;" any device that tends to defeat fair competition invalidates the sale.³

$16.35, the amount of the fees and costs. Sioux City, etc., Land Co. v. Walker, 78 Iowa 476.

1. Nix v. Williams, 110 Ind. 234.

In Louisiana, neither mere informalities nor grounds for pursuing the sheriff to fulfillment of his duty are necessarily causes for setting aside the sale. Gusman v. Le Blanc, 27 La. Ann. 280.

The sale should not be set aside merely for his failure to deliver a certificate of sale required by the New York Code. O'Brien v. Hashagen, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 564. Nor for his neglect to levy until more than 120 days after issuance of the execution. McIntyre v. Sanford, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 21.

Nor for his indorsing the levy with an impossible date—e. g., a year before the issuance. White v. Farley, 81 Ala. 563.

This presumption of notice extends to a bidder simply and secretly the plaintiff's agent. Barber v. Reynolds, 44 Cal. 519.

A purchase by the plaintiff's attorney from a grantee of a purchaser who had not paid the full amount of the bid was set aside. O'Brien v. Harrison, 59 Iowa 686.

A statute aiming to inspire confidence in purchasers was held not to extend to the plaintiff. Pettingill v. Moss, 3 Minn. 222; 74 Am. Dec. 747.

3. Opinion of the court, by Cooley, J., in Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 563, upon setting aside a sale of an equity of redemption bid off by the execution plaintiff, without informing other bidders that the mortgage was in fraud of creditors, and that he intended to contest it.

In Kansas, it was held to be ground for vacating the sale, that the plaintiff's attorney misled one who wished to purchase, by telling him an incorrect date for the sale; and, moreover, that the sheriff failed to deposit a copy of the appraisal in the office of the clerk of the district court. Jones v. Carr, 41 Kan. 329.

If the plaintiff releases a levy made on land sufficient to satisfy a small part only of the writ, and causes a levy and sale of other land, the sale will not be deemed void; but it may be set aside, if necessary, in order to do equity between all parties concerned. Milmine v. Bass, 29 Fed. Rep. 632.

A collusive agreement between A, the execution plaintiff, and B, the defendant, that if B would not hinder the partition sale, A would pay him, was held to constitute a fraud upon other creditors of B; but not to affect the title of the purchaser, the proceeds being in the hands of the court. Horsely v. Beveridge, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 291.

Where the plaintiff had promised to notify A, who was interested in the property, of the time and place of the sale, and forgot to do so, and A not being present, property worth $900 went for $160, the sale was set aside. Pell v. Vreeland, 35 N. J. Eq. 22.

But in Missouri the court refused to set aside a sale for the plaintiff's failure to keep a promise to notify the defendant, where both resided in the county, and the promise was a mere gratuity, supported by no consideration; the evidence being conflicting as to the defendant's having said he would, if so notified, make the tract bring the amount of the judgment. Bailey v. Smock, 61 Mo. 220.

Where the plaintiff's attorney promised B, the defendant, not to proceed without notice to B or to B's attorneys, but afterwards, without notice, had an execution issued and levied on B's land worth $10,000, and the plaintiff became the purchaser at $103, and after fifteen months obtained the sheriff's deed without the knowledge of B, then absent in Europe, it was held that the sale should be set aside, and B be allowed to redeem. Mathison v. Prescott, 86 Ill. 493.

In North Carolina, a sale was set aside where the execution plaintiff caused a temporary suspension thereof and meanwhile deceived the defendant's attorney, and became the purchaser at an inconsiderable sum. Currie v. Clark, 90 N. Car. 355.

In New York, a purchase by the execution plaintiff's agent, who was a receiver appointed by the court, charged with the duty of applying the defendant's property to the payment of the debts, made at a price less than he was instructed to bid, and for his individual benefit, was set aside. Sheldon v. Saenz, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 377.

At a sale under A's execution of $260, against B, by a conspiracy between C who was A's attorney, D, who was the sheriff's clerk, and E, land of B, worth $1,000, was bid off by D, without competition, for $47, and his bid transferred to E. The value was concealed from the sheriff. Upon a bill in equity by B against A, C and E, it was held that the sale should be set aside, leaving both A and B where they were before the levy. Massey v. Young, 73 Mo. 260.

After A's execution against B had been returned unsatisfied, he assigned the judgment to C, his attorney, to secure costs due him. A died. Nearly seventeen years after the rendition of the judgment, C, without application to the court, took out a second execution, indorsed it as plaintiff's attorney, and caused certain land to be levied on and sold that B, shortly before its issuance, had sold to D. Held, that D was entitled to have the execution sale set aside; and this, without considering whether B's conveyance to D was made to defraud B's creditors. Duryee v. Botsford, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 317.

A agreed with B's judgment creditors to purchase at execution sale B's property if not going beyond $13,000, and if the sum bid be not sufficient to pay off all the judgments, then to pay them off and take an assignment thereof. A bid off the property worth over $60,000 for $4,605. At the suit of B and his other creditors, the sale was set aside. Barrett v. Bath Paper Co., 13 S. Car. 128.

A sale of the defendant's homestead, during his absence, after publication in a remote newspaper of small circulation, and posting of notices in obscure places, was set aside. Jennings v. Carter, 53 Ark. 242. Compare the execution plaintiff's rascality in Fletcher v. McGill, 110 Ind. 395.

In West Virginia, the plaintiff's omission to give the statutory bond in case of a foreign attachment caused the sale to be set aside. Hall v. Lowther, 22 W. Va. 570.

In Kentucky, a sale to the plaintiff

The execution defendant may, by inaction, lose the right to have a sale to the plaintiff set aside. The tendency of the recent decisions in order to promote confidence in the titles derived from such sales is to abridge the time in which the party attacking the sale must act.¹

d. MISCONDUCT OF THE DEFENDANT.—The execution defendant is precluded from having the sale set aside for inadequacy of price consequent upon his own wrong sayings or doings.² But was set aside because a credit to which the defendant was entitled was not indorsed on the writ. Davie v. Long, 4 Bush (Ky.) 574.

In Kansas, a sale at an inadequate price was set aside, where the execution plaintiff's attorney misled one by telling him an incorrect date of sale. Jones v. Carr, 41 Kan. 329.

1. See supra, this title, The Purchaser's Liabilities; Laches.

Where the execution defendant, on learning that the plaintiff's attorney had broken an agreement to postpone the sale, made no attempt to be present at the sale to an innocent purchaser, the sale, although at a grossly inadequate price, was left undisturbed. Carden v. Lane, 48 Ark. 216.

A, a senior judgment creditor of B, agreed with B that A should bid a certain sum at the execution sale, and B have the privilege of selling the land, paying the amount of the judgment, and retaining the balance. To keep C, a junior judgment creditor, from bidding, A and B each gave him $100. A bid in the land, and eighteen months afterwards, B having done nothing, A ordered him off. Held, that B could not maintain ejectment, not having tendered the amount of A's judgment. Phillips v. Hull, 101 Pa. St. 567.

An execution defendant seeking to quiet title against A, a purchaser for value from the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, on the ground of collusion and bad faith of attorneys, must show guilty knowledge on the part of A. Lavender v. Holmes, 23 Neb. 345.

In Texas, in the purchaser's title suit against the execution defendant, it was held that the latter could set up the misconduct of the execution plaintiff inducing the sheriff to forego levying on personal property, as required by the Texas Code, before touching improved real estate. Stone v. Day, 69 Tex. 13.

In Nebraska, where, five months before the judgment was recovered, the plaintiff published in a newspaper a statement that the defendant's title was fraudulent, and cautioned the public against purchasing from him, this was held to be no ground for setting the sale aside, it not appearing that such publication was made for the purpose of preventing competition. Runge v. Brown, 29 Neb. 116.

See supra, this title, The Purchaser's Liabilities—Relief.

2. Weaver v. Nugent, 72 Tex. 272. Deceiving the plaintiff and the officer as to the locality of the land, thus getting an excessive bid. Mulks v. Allen, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 253.

Where the defendant was present and forbade the sale, proclaiming that the lot was his wife's separate property, and exempt as a homestead, and threatening to sue any purchaser, it was held that the sale should not be set aside for consequent inadequacy of price obtained. Blum v. Rogers, 71 Tex. 668.

A verbally agreed with B to exchange certain mortgaged land for land owned by B, who assumed payment of the mortgage. B took possession, improved the land, and paid the mortgage. A judgment afterwards rendered against A as principal, and C as surety, was made a lien on B's land. B then conveyed to A, and A, at B's request conveyed to D, who purchased from B. The land was sold to C on an execution against A and C, C knowing D's title and B's possession. Held, that D was entitled to have the sale set aside. Armstrong v. Fearnaw, 67 Ind. 429.

In Mississippi, where the plaintiff had not ordered the execution to be issued nor the levy to be made, pending a trust sale, a sale of land worth $6,000 for $2 to the defendant's brother as agent for the defendant's wife was set aside. Taylor v. Eckford, 11 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 21.

In Alabama, an application of the execution defendant and his wife to have the sale set aside, on the ground in absence of any showing of fraud upon his creditors, arrangements made in his interest will not be disturbed.¹

e. MISCONDUCT OF THE PURCHASER.—The fact that the purchaser, whether party or stranger, procured by confederation or otherwise, a sale oppressive to the defendant or unjust to creditors, is a ground for annulling it.²

f. INADEQUACY OF PRICE.—As a general rule, inadequacy of price, however gross, is no ground for setting aside the sale, if accompanied by no circumstance of unfairness, fraud, chicanery, misapprehension, indiscretion, or abuse of trust.³

that at a prior sale of the same land under execution, she had become the purchaser, was refused. Sheffey v. Davis, 60 Ala. 548.

1. E. g., his agreement for the purchaser to hold the property for him until repaid the purchase money. Peebles v. Pate, 90 N. Car. 348. Compare Pentz v. Clark, 100 Pa. St. 446.

The facts that a debtor, desiring to prefer one of two judgment creditors, failed to make a defense to which he was entitled, and brought certain goods within reach of the execution just before the sale, and very soon thereafter, a petition in bankruptcy was filed, were held not to invalidate the sale. Louchheim v. Henzey, 86 Pa. St. 350; 18 Bankr. Reg. 173.

Where, after A's execution against B and C is returned satisfied, A assigns the judgment to B, a sale of C's property under a second execution issued at B's instance, is void. French v. Edwards, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 266.

A sale of A's property under an execution against A and B will not be set aside merely because B became the purchaser thereof and subsequently became the assignee of the unsatisfied portion of the judgment. Windle v. Brandt, 55 Iowa 221.

An agreement of the plaintiff to enforce the execution only against certain property, in consideration of the defendant's agreement to be defaulted, and not to set up a discharge in insolvency, was held valid. Whitney v. Haverhill Mut. F. Ins. Co., 9 Allen (Mass.) 35.

2. See supra, this title, To Whom—The Highest Bidder. Combinations to Depress; The Purchaser's Title—Bona Fides; The Purchaser's Liabilities, etc.

It must be shown that the property was thereby obtained at less than its value. So held on setting aside a sale, even after the statutory period of redemption, by reason of the purchaser's preventing competition, through false representations as to incumbrances. Lynch v. Reese, 97 Ind. 360.

So, also, through procuring the sheriff to violate the statutory requirement to levy on personal property before seizing improved real estate. Stone v. Day, 69 Tex. 13.

So, also, through combining with the assignor of the judgment to circulate a false rumor that another owned the judgment and was determined to bid in the land for himself. The assignor is obligated to do no act inconsistent with his changed relation to the judgment. Where once a fraud has been committed, not only the perpetrator but also everybody else is precluded from deriving any benefit therefrom, unless one has innocently acquired a subsequent interest. Hudson v. Morriss, 55 Tex. 595. So, also, where a deputy clerk improperly issued an execution on a judgment for costs (for less than $3, after deducting illegal fees) and combined with the deputy recorder to purchase 240 acres of land worth $2,400 at less than seven cents an acre. Beedle v. Mead, 81 Mo. 297.

So, also, where one combined with a sheriff and an executor to have sold en masse, under a judgment against the testator, parcelable land worth $60,000 for $600. Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112.

So also, where the purchaser knew that competition was prevented by a purchaser in possession under a tax deed, representing himself to hold under a deed from the owner. Taylor v. Courtney, 15 Neb. 190.

3. This principle of public policy has become embodied in some statutes.—e. g., in Georgia: "Inadequacy of price is no ground for rescission of a contract of sale, unless it is so gross as, combined with other circumstances, to amount to a fraud." Georgia Code,

And thus in the absence of statute it is held that a sheriff's sale shall not be set aside for inadequacy of price "unless so gross as to amount to a fraud."¹

1882, § 2647. Accordingly fraud must be alleged and proved before a sheriff's sale will be set aside for gross inadequacy of price. Gunn v. Slaughter, 83 Ga. 124.

In Irby v. Irby, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 165, the court, by Cooper, J., said: "It is no ground of exception to a sale in invitum that the price obtained was inadequate; the only test of value is what the property will bring." Compare Beckwith v. King's M. Min. Co., 87 N. Car. 155; Allen v. Pierson, 60 Tex. 604; Sigerson v. Sigerson, 71 Iowa 476; Coolbaugh v. Roemer, 32 Minn. 445; Kerr v. Haverstick, 94 Ind. 178; Craig v. Garnett, 9 Bush (Ky.) 97; Clement v. Reid, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 535; Watt v. McGalliard, 67 Ill. 513; O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan, 91 Ill. 228; Tripp v. Cook, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 143; Campau v. Godfrey, 18 Mich. 27; 100 Am. Dec. 133; Cushwa v. Cushwa, 5 Md. 55; Cloeman v. Bank of Hamburg, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. Car.) 285; 49 Am. Dec. 671.

1. A sale en masse of two Chicago lots worth $8,000 for $65.38, was set aside therefor. Berry v. Lovi, 107 Ill. 612. But whereupon an offer of land worth $2,000 en masse the highest bid was $1,200, and on being offered in parcels brought in the aggregate $1,900, the court refused to set the sale aside. Duncan v. Sanders, 50 Ill. 475.

The sale cannot be collaterally avoided for the inadequacy. Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426; 51 Am. Rep. 754.

The fact that the sale was for less than the value of the goods, and that they were allowed to remain in the defendant's possession was held not to establish fraud. Boyce v. Cannon, 5 Del. 409.

The rule that mere inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground for setting aside a sale was applied in a suit for title to the possession of certain land alleged to be worth $30,000 purchased for $1,200. Assoc. v. Brewster, 51 Tex. 257.

In Cummins v. Little, 16 N. J. Eq. 51, the court by Green, Ch., said: "If mere inadequacy of price were a ground of relief, the principle would operate as a stay law." . . . "While this is not of itself a ground of relief, it is always a circumstance which quickens the diligence of the court in investigating the conduct of the officer, and calls into prompt and vigorous exercise its protecting agency against abuse of power."

After citing, with approval, the opinion of the court, by Kent, Ch., in Tiernan v. Wilson, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 413, Chancellor Green proceeded: "An entire farm of 165 acres, worth $9,000, incumbered for less than half its value, is put up to satisfy a claim of $81.41, including debt, interest, costs, and sheriff's fees. Any five acres would have sold for enough to satisfy the demand. The fact that the whole farm was offered for sale to pay so paltry a sum was in itself calculated to excite distrust. No honest purchaser would have bid with an expectation of buying. He must have believed either that the property was incumbered, or that there was a defect of title, or the plaintiff being a sister of the defendant and the principal bidder his brother-in-law, that it was a mere formality by way of cover or perfecting a title. Not only so, but the sheriff announces to the bidders that if $80.41 are bid, he will strike the property off; if not, the sale will be adjourned. That was the instruction he had received from the attorney."

The comment of Chancellor Kent was equally forcible: "Such a sale carries an abuse on the very face of it, and leads to the most oppressive speculation." In a previous case, Howell v. Baker, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 122, a sale on a stormy day at a grossly inadequate price, to the only person present other than the officer, he said: "The most reasonable conclusion, and the only one honorable to the defendant, is, that the purchase was intentionally made at the time in trust for the respective interests of the parties to the execution."

In Pennsylvania, at an execution sale of a portable steam sawmill worth $1,400, the deputy marshal being present, his crier was the only bidder, and after a week's adjournment, his bid of $20 was accepted. In holding them not guilty of trespass, the court, by Woodward, J., said: "Property lawfully exposed to public sale must take its chances. Courts having control of writs of execution, do some-

Inadequacy of price justifies the court, in exercise of its discretion, to lay hold of any irregularity however slight and technical.¹ Sometimes a sale has been set aside for nothing else than times treat gross inadequacy of price as a reason for setting aside sales of real estate, but personal property fairly advertised, fairly cried, and fairly knocked down, must go for what it will fetch. Assuredly the only bidder is not to be accounted guilty of a fraud because others were not venturous enough to outbid him." Swires v. Brotherline, 41 Pa. St. 140.

In Warfield v. Ross, 38 Md. 85, in declining to vacate a sale of property in Baltimore county, worth $8,000, for $4,450, after "both the attorney and the purchaser had manifested an anxious and laudable readiness to relinquish the purchase and restore the property to the mortgagors, the court, by Bowie, J., said: "Standing alone, inadequacy of price is insufficient to authorize interference with a sale, unless it is so inordinate as to indicate some mistake or unfairness, for which the purchaser is responsible, or misconduct or fraud in the trustee, to whom the management of the sale has been committed."

In New York, it has been held that the inadequacy may be so gross as, while not rendering the sale void, to justify relief on that ground alone, where no rights of third parties have intervened—e. g., where land worth $30,000 was sold for $190. Chapman v. Boetcher, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 606.

1. E. g., omission of the sheriff to file a duplicate certificate of the sale in the proper register's office was deemed sufficient occasion to vacate a sale of property worth $1,100 for $186; this, on terms of paying the amount bid and costs. Grede v. Dannenfelser, 42 Wis. 78. Similarly an omission of the sheriff's report to show sale during session of court. Cubbage v. Franklin, 62 Mo. 364. So, also, the clerk's issuance of an order of sale without the plaintiff's knowledge, the price being about one-fortieth of the value. Hughes v. Duncan, 60 Tex. 72.

Omission of demand and notice, in case of a defendant having available personal property, was deemed occasion to vacate a sale of a block of real estate worth $350,000 for $17.25, amount of judgment, interest and costs. Davis v. Chicago Dock Co., 129 Ill. 180.

In another Illinois case, even after the redemption period, omission of personal notice was deemed occasion to vacate a sale of land for the amount of the judgment, one-twentieth of the value, under execution issued on the transcript of a justice's judgment filed in the circuit court. Hobson v. McCambridge, 130 Ill. 367.

Omission to make demand on sureties, caused to be vacated a sale of land worth $7,000 for $10. Weaver v. Nugent, 72 Tex. 272.

In California a sale en masse of property worth $20,000 for $1,755, the sheriff and the purchaser not knowing that it was parcelable. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47; 65 Am. Dec. 475.

In Kloepking v. Stellmacher, 21 N. J. Eq. 328, the court set aside a chancery sale of land worth $1,500 for $52, of defendant's "ignorant, stupid, perverse and poor," "though the information was given and understood." In Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 192, on setting aside a sale of real estate worth $10,000 for $81.21, on a claim of $200 against a defendant who had sufficient available personal property, the court, by Bradley, J., said: "From the cases here cited, we may draw the general conclusion, that if the inadequacy of price is so gross as to shock the conscience, or if in addition to gross inadequacy, the purchaser has been guilty of any unfairness, or has taken any undue advantage, or if the owner of the property or party interested in it has been for any other reason misled or surprised, then the sale will be regarded as fraudulent and void, or the party injured will be permitted to redeem the property sold. Great inadequacy requires only slight circumstances of unfairness in the conduct of the party benefited by the sale to raise the presumption of fraud." Compare Hunt v. Fisher, 29 Fed. Rep. 801; Schilling v. Lintner, 43 N. J. Eq. 444; Teele v. Yancey, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 691; Sinnett v. Cralle, 4 W. Va. 600.

In Delaware, an execution sale of land worth $25,000 for $17,500 was set aside for the fact that a bystander would have bid $25,000, had he not been prevented by deafness from hearing the biddings, and had his agent obeyed his instructions. Broomall v. Reybold, 5 Del. 435.

"shocking inadequacy of price."¹ The statutes of some States fix a minimum limit of price, a prescribed ratio of the valuation, generally two-thirds thereof.²

Inadequacy of price is never per se a ground for granting the defendant's prayer to have the sale annulled, if the right of redemption exists, and he gives no good excuse for not having exercised it.³ So, also, may he be precluded by laches importing acquiescence.⁴ So, also, may he be estopped by his own direct agency in the result.⁵

XVIII. THE RETURN—1. Requisites.⁶

2. Between Whom Conclusive.—Between the parties to the suit, and "those claiming under them as privies, and all others whose rights and liabilities are dependent upon the suit as bail and indorsers, the return of the sheriff of matters material to be

1. In Henderson v. Sublett, 21 Ala. 630, the court, by Ligon, J., said: "When the inadequacy is so glaring and gross as at once to shock the understanding and conscience of an honest and just man, it will of itself authorize the court to set aside the sale. For instance, if, as in the case under consideration, a tract of land of the value of $1,800 is sold for $5, the court out of which the execution issued should not hesitate to set aside the sale for this cause alone."

In another Alabama case, of land of A worth $1,800, mortgaged to B for $400, the equity of redemption was sold to B for $200, the amount of the execution debt, twenty times the sum bid by him shortly before, at another execution sale against A, for an adjoining tract of the same size and of nearly the same value and unincumbered, the two constituting an entire plantation. The court set aside both sales. Ray v. Womble, 56 Ala. 32. Compare Lankford v. Jackson, 21 Ala. 650, where was vacated a sale of land worth $1,000, at $600.

In Kentucky, the defendant has the right to redeem, if the land brings less than two-thirds of its valuation. Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1887, p. 563, § 4.

Where many lots of land were sold to the agent of all the judgment creditors, and few bids made except by him, and eight lots went at less than two-thirds their appraised value, some at only one-fourth, the sale was set aside, except as to lots transferred to innocent purchasers for value. Capital Bank v. Huntoon, 35 Kan. 577.

3. Mixer v. Sibley, 53 Ill. 61; Peterson v. Little, 74 Iowa 223; Black v. Steele (Ky. 1887), 6 S. W. Rep. 23.

In Louisiana, he cannot attack the sale on the ground that the price does not exceed a prior conventional incumbrance, where the holders have filed a third opposition claiming to be paid out of the proceeds. Lane v. Cameron, 36 La. Ann. 773.

4. Supra, this title, Vacating Sales—Laches.

Where the assignee of a mortgage debt unlawfully caused the mortgaged property to be sold to satisfy the same debt, it was held that after four years' acquiescence of the owner, an innocent purchaser from the execution purchaser should not be disturbed. Waller v. Tate, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 529.

5. Supra, this title, Vacating Sales—Misconduct of the Defendant.

So held where he caused the land to bring less than one-tenth of its value. Atcheson v. Hutchison, 51 Tex. 223; So, also, where land alleged to be worth $4,000 was sold en masse for $77.60. Pearson v. Flanagan, 52 Tex. 266.

So, also, are estopped both he and one to whom he had conveyed the property in fraud of creditors. Miller v. Koertge, 70 Tex. 162. McCanless v. Flinchum, 98 N. Car. 358.

6. See EXECUTIONS, vol. 7, p. 155.

As to the effect of the time of the return upon the validity of the sale, see supra, this title, The Time, etc.—If After Return Day.

returned is so far conclusive evidence, that it cannot be contradicted for the purpose of invalidating the sheriff's proceedings, or defeating any right acquired under them. But such return is not conclusive as to third persons whose interests are not connected with the suit, but may be affected by the proceedings of the sheriff, or matters not necessary or proper to be returned."¹

In most of the New England States, under an extent on real estate, a correct return is an indispensable muniment of the plaintiff's title.²

3. Practice.—The practice as to traversing the return depends, of course, on the system of pleading peculiar to each State.³ So also as to amendments and relation back.⁴ Ordinarily, parties and privies may controvert the return only in an action against

The purchaser is not bound by the return. Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 428; Wyatt v. Stewart, 34 Ala. 716.

The purchaser, having no control over the sheriff, is not to be prejudiced by any incorrectness or want of return; his title does not depend thereon. Brooks v. Rooney, 11 Ga. 423; 56 Am. Dec. 430; Forrest v. Camp, 16 Ala. 642.

A recital in the return may be proved by the sheriff to have been made inadvertently. King v. Russell, 40 Tex. 124. But in general the return cannot be varied or contradicted by his parol testimony. Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 593; 86 Am. Dec. 657.

In Louisiana, the recitals in the return are only prima facie evidence of the facts stated in it between the parties. Grant v. Harris, 16 La. Ann. 323.

In Michigan, where a purchaser of goods at an execution sale colluded with the sheriff to have the return falsely state the date of the levy, in order to defraud a mortgagee, it was held that the return might be contradicted by parol testimony. Nall v. Granger, 8 Mich. 450; 77 Am. Dec. 462.

In Pennsylvania, the sheriff may deny the truth of his return as against a person who fraudulently procured him to make it. Evans v. Matson, 51 Pa. St. 366; 88 Am. Dec. 584.

The fact that a return to a notice of inquisition did not fully show legal notice to the defendant, was held not to be fatal to the purchaser's title. Atkinson v. Tomlinson, 91 Pa. St. 284.

In Mississippi, where the plaintiff was the purchaser, and receipted for part of his bid as money, it was held that the sheriff might show that the sum stated in the return had not been actually received by himself. Shotwell v. Hamblin, 23 Miss. 156; 55 Am. Dec. 83.

As to control of the recitals in the return by those in the deed, see infra, this title, Variance from The Return.

2. In Massachusetts, as to its force, see opinion by Story, J., in U. S. v. Slade, 2 Mason (U. S.) 76.

In Rhode Island, an essential defect in the return cannot be remedied by evidence aliunde. Wilcox v. Emerson, 10 R. I. 270; 14 Am. Rep. 683.

In Vermont, one claiming title to personal property by virtue of an execution sale, may show that it was made in a different manner from that stated in the return. Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617; 76 Am. Dec. 145.

3. Spring v. Frank, 81 Ga. 162; Egery v. Buchanan, 5 Cal. 53.

In Pennsylvania, the sheriff cannot be compelled to alter his return as to a matter of fact. Vastine v. Fury, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 426; Boas v. Updegrove, 5 Pa. St. 516; 47 Am. Dec. 425.

the sheriff for a false return.¹ Proceedings upon the return, are generally prescribed by statute.²

XIX. CONFIRMATION—1. At Law—a. NECESSITY AND EFFECT.—A few States have statutes prescribing a formal confirmation of the sale.³ Some statutes recognize it as a prerequisite of the deed, without formally directing it.⁴

In the absence of a contrary provision, the order has the force of a judgment.⁵ Whenever a statute requires the sale to be reported to and approved by the court, a conveyance without confirmation is void.⁶

1. Bean v. Parker, 17 Mass. 591; Stewart v. Stringer, 41 Mo. 400; 97 Am. Dec. 278; Hallowell v. Paige, 24 Mo. 590; Clough v. Monroe, 34 N. H. 381; Witherell v. Goss, 26 Vt. 748; Castner v. Styer, 23 N. J. L. 236; Phillips v. Elwell, 14 Ohio St. 240; 84 Am. Dec. 373; Paxson's Appeal, 49 Pa. St. 195.

As to remedies against the sheriff for a false return, see infra, this title, Sheriff's Rights, etc.—Amercement.

2. In Alabama, on return that goods levied on remain unsold, the clerk must issue a writ for their sale, in form prescribed by Alabama Civil Code, 1886, § 2915. See supra, this title, Disposal of Proceeds.

3. In Ohio, if it be found by the court "that the sale has been made in all respect in conformity to the provisions of this title, the clerk shall be directed to make an entry," etc. Ohio Rev. Stat., 1890, § 5398.

The sheriff should keep the proceeds until the confirmation. Stone v. Ruffin, 2 Ohio 503.

In Oregon, "An order confirming a sale shall be a conclusive determination of the regularity of the proceedings concerning such sale, as to all persons, in any other action, suit, or proceeding whatever." Oregon Annot. Laws, 1887, § 296, p. 4.

The Kansas law is like that of Ohio. Kansas Gen. Stat., 1889, § 4556.

An ex parte confirmation is not conclusive evidence, binding upon all parties that may possibly be affected by it, that the land ordered to be sold was that sold, or was legally sold. Rice v. Poynter, 15 Kan. 263.

4. Delaware Laws, 1874, p. 680, § 26.

The Nebraska statute is like that of Kansas. Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1889, p. 921, § 498.

In absence of any showing of fraud, the confirmation gives a good title, notwithstanding failure to publish notice thirty days before the sale. Wyant v. Tuthill, 17 Neb. 495. But where the confirmation, after being entered, is at the same term set aside before a transfer of the property by the purchaser, his vendee acquires no title. Young v. DePutron, 37 Fed. Rep. 46.

The Minnesota foreclosure statute provides for a like entry of confirmation. Minnesota Stat., 1891, § 5390. The confirmation raises a presumption that the statutory prerequisites were complied with. Closen v. Whitney, 39 Minn. 50.

The Dakota territorial statute was like that of Ohio. Dakota Comp. Laws, 1887, § 5149.

5. Infra, this title, Confirmation—Proceedings.

In Louisiana, ordinarily, a judgment in motion approving the sale, operates as a bar to any further proceedings touching its validity. Willis v. Nicholson, 24 La. Ann. 545. Compare the Maryland foreclosure practice. Cockey v. Cole, 28 Md. 276; 92 Am. Dec. 684.

6. Curtis v. Norton, 1 Ohio 278.

Reversal of the order of confirmation after execution of the sheriff's deed, divests any title thereby acquired. McBain v. McBain, 15 Ohio St. 337; 86 Am. Dec. 478.

It is error to confirm a sheriff's sale against objection of a defendant who has paid the decree or judgment in full. Reed v. Radigan, 42 Ohio St. 292.

Under the Maryland act of 1831, ch. 290, requiring confirmation of a constable's sale of realty by the county court, the justice's judgment cannot otherwise become a lien thereon. Candler v. Fisher, 11 Md. 332. If the judgment be void ab initio, the confirmation vests no title. Koechlept v. Hook, 10 Md. 173; 69 Am. Dec. 133.

b. PROCEEDINGS.—The sale may be confirmed on motion by any person interested, or by the court on its own motion.¹ The court cannot modify the terms of sale; it must either confirm or reject.²

c. GROUNDS FOR REFUSING.—Whatever would require that a sale be set aside, is, a fortiori, ground for refusing its confirmation.³ If the officer has failed to comply with the plain letter of a mandatory statute, the court will disaffirm the sale and order a new one.⁴ So, also, if, with apparently damnifying consequence, he has violated the spirit of the statute.⁵

2. In Chancery and Probate.—In decretal sales, the purchaser is ordinarily considered a mere preferred bidder.⁶ The court may refuse to accept his bid for many reasons which do not apply to a common execution sale.⁷ In those States, however, where a foreclosure sale is made by a special writ of execution, no report or confirmation is required.⁸

A decree authorizing a trustee, commissioner, or sheriff to sell, must also require a report and confirmation.⁹ After confirmation, a foreclosure sale "will not be set aside for inadequacy of price unless it be also shown that the sale was unfairly conducted, or there was fraud or surprise,¹⁰ or mistake, which prevented the

The purchaser is a party entitled to make the motion, or to proceed in order to reverse an order overruling it. Cowdin v. Cowdin, 31 Kan. 528.

So also as to the action of the Maryland court of appeals upon a confirmation, by the county court of a constable's sale of realty under a justice's execution. Kinnear v. Lee, 28 Md. 488.

If any objection properly available upon the hearing be not then interposed, or if then made be overruled, it can never be asserted collaterally; the order having the effect of an ordinary judgment. Mayer v. Wick, 15 Ohio St. 548. It seems that in Ohio the remedy would be by writ of error. Reeves v. Skerrett, 13 Ohio St. 574.

Such is the practice under the Minnesota foreclosure law. Hotchkiss v. Cutting, 14 Minn. 537.

In Kansas, the order is reviewable by petition in error. Moore v. Pye, 10 Kan. 246.

obtaining of any adequate price, or the party had no notice of the order of sale,¹ or of the confirmation thereof."²

The confirmation does not divest title nor dispense with the necessity of the officer's conveyance.³ As the title does not vest until after the confirmation, a defendant in possession may meanwhile remove whatever crops are in a condition to be cut "in the usual course of good farming."⁴

XX. REDEMPTION.⁵

XXI. THE DEED—1. Ministerial Necessity.—In Canada,⁶ and in most of the States, the purchaser's title to real estate is inchoate, until the sheriff has executed and delivered to him a formal conveyance.⁷ Indeed, in many States, until this, the title and right of possession are deemed to be in the execution defendant.⁸ In a few States the deed has been declared not to be a necessary ministerial act of title, its execution and delivery being merely a ministerial act of the sheriff.⁹ In the New England and other

Miller*, 10 U. C., Q. B. 65, 72, wherein the court, by Robinson, C. J., said: "All are agreed that without a conveyance by deed following a sale of real property by the sheriff, the title of the purchaser is not complete, even where a term only has been sold."

In New York, a foreclosure deed vests title unaffected by intervening acts of the mortgagor. Rector, etc., v. Mack, 93 N. Y. 488; Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 31.

In Illinois, after a foreclosure decree, the mortgagor has no such ownership as will support a mechanics' lien. Davis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 84 Ill. 508.

States where land is extended, as under an elegit, the setting off obviates the necessity of a deed.¹

In absence of statutory provision a decree in equity cannot, per se, divest the legal title; it can only compel the defendant to convey, or direct a commissioner so to do.²

2. Compelling Its Delivery.—In case the sheriff refuses to convey, the purchaser has three available remedies: he may move for a rule to show cause,³ or he may proceed in equity,⁴ or he may proceed by mandamus.⁵

3. When to be Made.—In those States in which the defendant has no right of redemption, the deed can be made upon the purchaser's paying the price; so, also, where, though such right exists, the conveyance is allowed immediately.⁶ A deed executed before expiration of the redemption period is absolutely void.⁷

In New Jersey, the purchaser's title is co-extensive with the mortgage description, the bill and the fi. fa. McGee v. Smith, 16 N. J. Eq. 462.

1. In Rhode Island, "if no person appear to redeem," etc., the sheriff shall sell sufficient to satisfy the judgment and the deed shall vest in the purchaser all the interest the debtor had at the time of the attachment or levy. Rhode Island Pub. Stat., 1882, p. 615, § 14.

In Massachusetts, if the creditor has elected to have the land sold, the sheriff must execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed, "which, being recorded within three months after the sale in the registry of deeds," etc., gives title. Massachusetts Pub. Stat., 1882, p. 1012, § 28. Compare Maine Rev. Stat., 1883, p. 620, § 42.

Delivering and recording the deed passes no title unless the officer makes a return on the execution. Walsh v. Anderson, 135 Mass. 65.

In Vermont, if it be not redeemed within six months, "the person to whom the same was appraised may enter and take possession thereof, without giving previous notice," etc. Vermont Rev. Laws, 1880, § 1578. In Connecticut, it is absolutely "set out to the creditor by metes and bounds." Connecticut Gen. Stat., 1888, § 1182. Compare New Hampshire Gen. Laws, 1878, p. 548, § 9.

As to the English practice on elegit, see 1 & 2 Vict. ch. 6, and ch. 110, § 11.

4. In Upper Canada, making the execution defendant also a party. Witham v. Smith, 5 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 203.

In New Jersey, after the sheriff has delivered the deed to the plaintiff's attorney and taken a receipt in full, he is not a necessary party to the purchaser's suit against the attorney to compel delivery. Whitney v. Kirtland, 27 N. J. Eq. 333.

5. People v. Fleming, 2 N. Y. 484; People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 428.

In Louisiana, one of three purchasers in indivision, who had paid his share of the adjudicated price, was held to have a right to demand from the sheriff a deed of sale for his undivided portion; and no one of the co-proprietors was entitled to oppose on the ground that the taxes had not been paid. Montross v. Jamison, 30 La. Ann., pt. 1, 172.

6. In Alabama, the sheriff must execute and deliver the deed within five days after consummation of the sale. Alabama Civil Code, 1886, § 2917.

7. Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 486; Perham v. Kuper, 61 Cal. 331. Such deed would not even constitute color of title. Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 668.

As to the reckoning of the period, see REDEMPTION; JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 220. Freeman Ex. (2d ed.), § 316.

In case of disputed title, it seems that a court of equity may extend the period until determination of the issues. Carroll v. McCullough, 63 N. H. 95.

4. By Whom.—In absence of a statute to the contrary, the sheriff who made the sale is the proper person to convey, even after discontinuing in the office.¹ It being a mere ministerial act, the deputy may convey;² and this, though appointed by parol only.³ But a deed not signed in the name of his principal would be void.⁴

The deputy may convey after the principal is out of office, his authority being shown.⁵ Though the sale was made by a deputy, the principal may convey.⁶ Some statutes provide for execution of the deed by the successor, when the sheriff who made the sale is dead or disabled.⁷ Sometimes the court will appoint a person to execute the deed.⁸ Some statutes require it to be executed by the person in office when the certificate is returned.⁹

5. To Whom.—The deed can only be made to a purchaser,¹⁰ or to Limitations has not intervened, nor the rights of any innocent purchaser for value, nor other circumstance to render it inequitable, equity will at the latest, grant the purchaser's application for a conveyance after the time of the judgment lien plus the redemption period. In Illinois, this would be eight years and three months. Shrader v. Peach, 77 Ill. 615.

The Illinois act of 1872, requiring the deed to issue within five years, does not apply to a bill filed prior thereto. Hawley v. Simons (Ill. 1887), 14 N. E. Rep. 7.

A statute empowering the successor to execute the deed is construed exclusively. Wortham v. Cherry, 3 Head (Tenn.) 468.

In Clerk v. Withers, 6 Mod. 295, the court, by Holt, C. J., said: "The sheriff out of office may sell without a vend. exp.; . . . a distingas does not give him authority to sell, but is compulsive upon him to sell."

his assignee,¹ or at his death to his heirs,² or devisees,³ or to his executors or administrators in trust therefor.⁴ In some States the sheriff's deed to the executor or administrator is expressly provided for by statute.⁵

6. Requisites—a. IN GENERAL.—The deed must comply with existing statutory conditions.⁶ The sheriff must have power to make it. The land conveyed must be within his jurisdictional territory.⁷ The judgment must be valid,⁸ also the execution,⁹ the levy and the sale unannulled.¹⁰ The period must have expired without redemption.¹¹

b.* RECITALS—(1) Statutes Mandatory or Directory.—In some States the statutes prescribe the essential recitals.¹² Ordinarily Nor to a stranger to the record. Johnson v. Adleman, 35 Ill. 265; Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571; Davis v. McVickers, 11 Ill. 327. A purchaser accepting the money tendered may waive a defect in an attempted redemption and the payor be subrogated to his right to a deed. In re Eleventh Ave., 81 N. Y. 436.

The deed may be made to a person substituted for the bidder by mutual consent. Parler v. Johnson, 81 Ga. 254; (sub nom. Porter v. Johnson (Ga. 1888), 7 S. E. Rep. 317); Smith v. Kelly, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 507. But the deed must show that the purchaser authorized the substitution. Morgan v. Hannah, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 122.

1. Supra, this title, Certificate of Sale; Assignments.

In New York, the sheriff may execute a deed to the assignee even of a certificate of sale that has not been acknowledged or filed. Chautauqua Co. Bank v. Risley, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 480.

The deed's recital of an assignment of the certificate is prima facie evidence thereof. Messerschmidt v. Baker, 22 Minn. 81; Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Ind. 19. But compare Carpenter v. Sherby, 71 Ill. 427.

2. Swink v. Thompson, 31 Mo. 336.

3. Where twelve years after a purchaser's death, his devisee for life released to A, the remainderman, giving him an order on the sheriff to make title, it was held that a deed to A from the incumbent, successor of the sheriff who made the sale, was valid. Sumner v. Palmer, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 38.

4. After a testatrix had obtained a foreclosure decree and before its execution, she died, and an alias execution was issued in her name. At the sale an executor was the purchaser, and took title in his own name, in trust for the estate. Held, that a deed executed by himself, his wife and his co-executor would pass a good title. Banta v. School Dist. No. 3, 39 N. J. Eq. 123.

An officer appointed under the Missouri statute to execute and acknowledge a deed upon the sheriff's decease or removal has only the powers the late sheriff would have had. The court will not compel him to execute a deed to the grantees of a purchaser who has died; but will permit him to execute the deed to the purchaser's legal representatives without naming them. In re Guenzler, 70 Mo. 39.

5. E. g., B's New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 1084, § 114.

6. See JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 12, p. 221. Some statutes prescribe the form—e. g., Rhode Island Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 615; Colorado Annot. Stat. 1891, § 2553.

Failure to comply with a directory statute may not be fatal. So held as to the Oregon requirement that the approval of the court be indorsed on the writ. Wright v. Young, 6 Oregon 87.

In Louisiana, as to the requisites of a proces verbal to have the legal value of a formal deed, see Strauss v. Soye, 29 La. Ann. 270. Omission of the adjudicatee's signature is not fatal. Carroll v. Scheen, 34 La. Ann. 423; Nesom v. Weis, 34 La. Ann. 1009.

these are: the date and amount of the judgment; the name of the court and parties; the date of the execution and of its reception; the levy; the notice; the sale on the day designated; the name of the highest bidder; the prices, and the expiration of the period without redemption.¹ These provisions are generally deemed merely directory.²

Accordingly, in some States, non-compliance with the statute in minor formal or evidential matters, may not invalidate the deed, where the fact in question can be determined through reference to the records or files of the court from data furnished in the advertisement, and in the rest of the deed.³

"But when the requisitions prescribed are intended for the protection of the citizen, and to prevent a sacrifice of his property, and by a disregard of which his rights generally would be injuriously affected, they are not directory but mandatory."⁴

3. Missouri reports numerous illustrations:

Omission to state the original levy. Foulk v. Colburn, 48 Mo. 225. Or why the sale was not made at first term. Groner v. Smith, 49 Mo. 318. Omission to state the day of the month when the sale was made. Strain v. Murphy, 49 Mo. 337. Omission to say the county court granted an order of sale. Warner v. Sharp, 53 Mo. 598. Lumping recital of judgments without clearly designating the parties. Allen v. Sales, 56 Mo. 28. Omission to state return of a justice's execution nulla bona, before issuing the one upon the transcript. Perkins v. Quigley, 62 Mo. 498. Omission to repeat names. Gaines v. Fender, 82 Mo. 497. Omission to state the day of rendition of judgment. Lewis v. Morrow, 89 Mo. 174. Omission to state whether the newspaper was daily or weekly. Chandler v. Bailey, 89 Mo. 641. Omission to state that the posting was at the front door of the courthouse. Evans v. Robberson, 92 Mo. 192. Omission to state the city of the justice. Karnes v. Alexander, 92 Mo. 660.

A deed reciting a judgment against "Smith & Haliburton" was held not to be invalid, the record showing one against "Jacob Smith and Wesley Haliburton." Union Bank v. McWharters, 52 Mo. 34.

But in Illinois, where a judgment was in favor of "Jacob Helbig," recital of it as in favor of "John Helbig" was held fatal, in absence of amendatory evidence. Johnson v. Adleman, 35 Ill. 265.

Where a statute—e. g., Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4954—requires the deed to recite the names of the parties and the dates of judgment and execution, with such recital it may be shown by evidence aliunde that these were special and against the property sold. Hall v. Klepzig, 99 Mo. 83.

A deed conforming to the execution and otherwise regular, will pass title, though there be a variance between the judgment record and the execution, if not such as would avoid the execution. Davis v. Kline, 76 Mo. 310.

Where a deed recited a judgment against A, B and C, issuance of an execution thereon, another judgment against A and B, issuance of an alias execution thereon, and a levy and sale thereunder of the right, title and interest of A and B in certain land, but assumed to convey all the right, title and interest of A, B and C therein which the sheriff might sell by virtue of the execution, it was held that C's title thereto did not pass. Julian v. Boren, 55 Mo. 110.

4. The court by Field, J., in French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 511. Herein it was held, that under the California statute, authorizing a tax sale for only the smallest quantity which any one would take and pay the judgment and costs, a deed reciting a sale to the highest bidder was void on its face. But Miller, J., dissenting, did not deem the sale "open to all the rigid rules which apply to tax sales made ex parte and without the aid of such judgment.

(2) Variance from the Judgment.—The decisions are not uniform as to the effect of a discrepancy between a recital in the deed and the record of the judgment. Ordinarily a mere clerical mispision in the deed in this regard, is not fatal.¹

(3) Variance from the Execution.—The deed need recite only the material portions of the execution. Ordinarily a variance therefrom is not fatal.² Some States make statutory provision for this.³

. . . The law contemplated that if no one would take any less than the whole of the land and pay the judgment and costs, then that it should be sold to the highest bidder. If this were not so, the State could not collect the taxes in half the cases, because the right of redemption left no inducement to bidders for a smaller amount than the whole. It is, therefore, a fair presumption from the recital in the deed, that, although the sheriff sold the land to the highest bidder, it was because no one would take less than the whole and pay the taxes and costs. And the recital that is made, as well as that which is omitted, are neither of them necessary to the validity of a deed made in a judicial sale."

In Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 469, "where a deed misrecited a foreclosure sale of a farm as made in bulk, and, ten months later, a new deed representing the sale as made in parcels was antedated and filed, the court by Graves, J., said: "The complainant was entitled to have the files identify the very deed to be wholly or in part canceled in case of redemption, and to be recorded as a conveyance if not canceled by redemption. The law required this and did not contemplate extrinsic inquiries to settle such matters." The sale was set aside and the complainant allowed to redeem.

1. In Missouri, where a judgment was rendered against A alone, a deed reciting that the judgment was against A and B, and also misreciting the amount, was held to pass title. Wilhite v. Wilhite, 53 Mo. 71. This decision overrules Crittenden v. Leitensdorfer, 35 Mo. 239.

In Michigan, conversely, a deed was sustained using the word "person" in reference to the two defendants. Johnson v. Crispell, 39 Mich. 82.

As to what is a sufficient expression of the "cause of the sale," within the Maine statute, see Caldwell v. Blake, 69 Me. 458.

In Kansas, also, the maxim, de minimis non, is applied to the judgment and the deed. Dickens v. Crane, 33 Kan. 344.

In Louisiana, misnaming the court was held not to invalidate the deed. Stackhouse v. Zuntz, 41 La. Ann. 415.

In Florida, recital of an estate as defendant (instead of its administrator previously named), was held to convey all the interest of the decedent's estate. Adams v. Higgins, 23 Fla. 13.

In Tennessee, a deed failing to recite the existence of the judgment, execution and levy is fatally defective. In Byers v. Wheatley, 59 Tenn. 163, the court, by McFarland, J., said: "It would be no answer to this to show that in fact there was a judgment, execution and levy. Their existence must be assumed in the deed, and when produced, they must correspond with the recitals of the deed."

2. Henley v. Branch Bank, 16 Ala. 552; Zabriskie v. Meade, 2 Nev. 285; 90 Am. Dec. 542.

3. The New Jersey act of 1831 is declared authoritative in Den v. Sayre, 16 N. J. L. 532.

"The deed shall be good and valid, and received in evidence as such, notwithstanding any variance between the recital in said deed and the execution by virtue of which the sale was made, and notwithstanding any variance between said execution and the judgment." . . . New Jersey Rev. 1877, p. 1043, § 8.

A sheriff had five executions in hand against B. Enjoined from selling under one, he sold under the other four. Held, that he need not recite the former. Gifford v. Alexander, 84 N. Car. 330.

(4) Variance from the Return.—In case of a discrepancy between the recitals in the deed and the return, the recitals in the deed govern.¹

(5) Omnia Rite.—In deraigning the title from the deed after long lapse of time, the maxim, omnia rite præsumentur esse acta, is applied to sustain the deed, notwithstanding some defective or omitted recitals.² Silence as to the levy may import that it was waived; or, in absence of objection seasonably interposed, it will be considered to have been regular.³ So, also, as to the appraisement,⁴ the place of sale,⁵ the publication⁶ and the notice.⁷

c. DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPERTY.—The requisites of the notice in designating the property apply also in the deed.⁸ As in voluntary conveyances, references to other documents and to maps and records are allowable in aid therein.⁹ Parol evidence

And a misrecital of the execution, or even a failure to recite any at all, will not vitiate a sale made under a valid execution. Jones v. Scott, 71 N. Car. 192.

In New Jersey, the deed shall recite the writ, and it may be good, notwithstanding a variance. New Jersey Rev., 1877, p. 1043, § 8.

In Armstrong v. McCoy, 8 Ohio 136; 31 Am. Dec. 435, the court, by Grimke, J., said: "It is true, our statute declares that the execution shall be recited. It is often very difficult to distinguish between those ceremonies which are directory to the officer and those which are essential to the title. If any one general rule may be laid down it is, that every prerequisite, which can be considered as constituting the foundation of title, is essential and indispensable, and that whatever does not partake of that character is merely directory."

In Smith v. Kelly, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 510—in sustaining a deed to Kelly, made at the request of the bank which was named in the return as purchaser—the court, by Taylor, C. J., said: "A return is nothing but the sheriff's answer relative to that which he is commanded to do by the writ; and is intended to inform the court of that alone which it concerns them to know."

2. After forty years had elapsed, and both the execution and the execution docket were lost, the regularity of the deed and proceedings was presumed from acquiescence of heirs of parties meanwhile. Logan v. Pierce, 66 Tex. 126.

Upon some points, the presumption may be indulged even before long lapse of time—e. g., that the sheriff had an appraisement duly made, though not mentioned in his return. Talbott v. Hale, 72 Ind. 1.

3. Hartwell v. Root, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 345; 10 Am. Dec. 282; Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 649; 99 Am. Dec. 441. Coker v. Dawkins, 20 Fla. 141.

In support of an actual sale, evidence of intent to seize will sufficiently establish a levy. Hamblen v. Hamblen, 33 Miss. 455; 69 Am. Dec. 358; Gassawa v. Hall, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 289.

A variance between the deed and the levy indorsed on the execution may be explained by parol evidence. Mathers v. Thompson, 3 Ohio 272.

8. Supra, this title, The Notice—Describing the Property.

9. If a reference to a map is equally applicable to two different maps, the deed is void for uncertainty; the sheriff may not by parol identify the map intended. Cadwalader v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43. In another California case it was held that upon a decretal sale, the is admissible to explain and identify names and locations.¹ Any essential ambiguity that cannot be so remedied renders the deed void for uncertainty.² If the description be sufficient, inconsistent particulars will not avoid the deed.³ A variance in the description between the certificate of sale and the deed is not fatal.⁴

d. THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—In some States, the acknowledgment of the deed is treated as a part of its execution, and made indispensable.⁵

description must be perfect in itself. Crosby v. Dowd, 61 Cal. 557.

1. As a general rule, where the property is not ascertainable from the description, the deed cannot be supported by showing by the sheriff what he intended to sell. Mason v. White, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 173.

2. The fact that the purchaser had taken, and for many years held, possession of a particular tract, has been held proper for the jury's consideration. St. Clair v. Shale, 20 Pa. St. 105.

If the terms employed, as commonly understood in the neighborhood, clearly designate the property levied upon or sold, the description must be regarded as sufficient. Hedge v. Drew, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 141; 22 Am. Dec. 416; Jackson v. Walker, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 462; Christian v. Mynatt, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 615; Bates v. Bank of Mo., 15 Mo. 309; Laughlin v. Hawley, 9 Colo. 270.

Where the county is given a description in form: "A tract on which A B now lives adjoining C D, and supposed to contain eighty acres," has been sustained; the premises being made certain on parol explanation. Webb v. Bumpass, 9 Port. (Ala.) 201; 33 Am. Dec. 310; compare Randolph v. Carlton, 8 Ala. 606; Swartz v. Moore, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 257; Hyskill v. Givin, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 369; Balch v. Zentmeyer, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 267.

A description establishing three sides of the land levied on has been held to be sufficient. In Stephens v. Taylor, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 311, the court, by Ewing, Sp. J., said: "If nobody owned on the fourth side, a straight line would close the hiatus; if any one did own on that side, the boundary would be controlled by that ownership."

In Missouri, the following description supplemented by parol explanation was held sufficient to sustain the levy and deed: "A tract containing 240 arpents, more or less, bounded on the south by the land of A and B, on the west by land of C, and on the east by land of D and others, and includes the Hammond Spring." Hammond v. Johnston, 93 Mo. 198.

A deed describing land by metes and bounds "and all ways, passages, easements," was held not to include land adjoining used as a way, which was purchased by a distinct title, but not embraced in the metes and bounds set forth in the sheriff's deed. Jackson v. Striker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 284.

The law regulating the sheriff's duty may be looked to in ascertaining his intention as to the quantity. Spiller v. Nye, 16 Ohio 16.

In most States the deed is not invalidated by want of an acknowledgment.¹

entry on record is presumed to have been made on motion. Robb v. Ankeny, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 128.

In Missouri, the deed is invalid without the acknowledgment. "The conveyance is the act of the law, and the law must be strictly complied with." Ryan v. Carr, 46 Mo. 483. A defective acknowledgment—e. g., one made by a deputy sheriff in his own name—is not aided by the record. Samuels v. Shelton, 48 Mo. 444; compare Adams v. Buchanan, 49 Mo. 64.

The clerk's omission to recite that the acknowledgment was "before me," or that the sheriff personally appeared or was personally known to the court to be the sheriff who executed the conveyance, was held not to be fatal. Bray v. Marshall, 75 Mo. 327. The certificate should be brief; only the entry on the record should contain the names of parties and description of property. Lincoln v. Thompson, 75 Mo. 613.

In Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 467, the court by Graves, J., said: "Although no acknowledgment is, in terms, required by the chapter regulating foreclosures, still the profession have always considered that the general statute applied and rendered it necessary that the execution should be regularly authenticated to complete the deed for record."

In Arkansas, the certificate of acknowledgment may be appended when the deed is offered in evidence. Hutchinson v. Kelly, 10 Ark. 178.

The Kansas statute prescribes that the deed shall be "acknowledged and recorded as is provided by law to perfect the conveyance of real estate in other cases." Kansas Gen. Stat.

1889, § 4557. Thereunder, it seems, the deed would be valid without any acknowledgment. Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 291.

In Texas, the deputy is the proper person to acknowledge his own execution of the deed. Terrell v. Martin, 64 Tex. 121.

2. In Iowa the deed need not be recorded for sixty days. McClain's Iowa Stat. 1888, § 4354. A purchaser, however, who fails to record his deed within the statutory period, does not forfeit his rights as against a purchaser from one not having the record title. Lindley v. Mays, 66 Iowa, 265.

In North Carolina, "no conveyance shall be good and available in law unless the same shall be acknowledged by the grantor and be registered in the county where the land shall lie within two years after the date."

. . . North Carolina Code, 1883, § 1245.

There it has been held that the title does not pass until the registration. McMillan v. Edwards, 75 N. Car. 81.

In Maine, in absence of any intermediate conveyance, the purchaser's failure to place his deed on record for more than nine months after the sale, will not vitiate his title. Caldwell v. Blake, 69 Me. 458.

The title, though not passing till the deed be recorded, relates back to its execution, and will prevail in ejectment brought before the registration. Wallace v. Lawrence, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 503.

The Massachusetts statute, that the sheriff's deed of an equity of redemption, being recorded "within three months after the sale, shall give to the purchaser all the debtor's right of redemption," has been held not to render the recording within that time a prerequisite to the vesting of the title in the purchaser. Owen v. Neveau, 128 Mass. 427.

In Missouri, a deed from a widow to her late husband's heirs will not prevail as against a sheriff's deed executed in the husband's lifetime, though

8. Effect—a. RELATION BACK.—The deed must be given such effect as will consummate the lien under which the sale was made, whether created by attachment, by docketing the judgment, by issuance of the execution, or by the levy.¹

b. CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECITAL—(1) Upon the Parties.—In general, the recitals of the deed, as to rendition of a judgment, issuance of an execution, regularity of a levy, proceedings of a sale and fact of a confirmation, are conclusive upon the defendant,² the plaintiff, the grantee, and all persons claiming title thereunder.³

In some States the statutes declare what recitals are necessary, and what the effect thereof upon the title.⁴

the former be recorded before the latter. Bailey v. Winn, 101 Mo. 649.

In Iowa, where land is sold in one county under execution issued on a judgment rendered in another, the recording of the deed is constructive notice, although no transcript of the judgment was filed in the former county. Foreman v. Higham, 35 Iowa 382.

1. See RELATION.

2. The deed, whether with warranty or not, does not bar the defendant from claiming the land under an after-acquired title. Bigelow's Estop. (5th ed.), p. 396; Emerson v. Sansome, 41 Cal. 552.

In those States where equity has jurisdiction to reform a deed at the instance of the defendant as well as of the plaintiff, the defendant may defeat ejectment by proving that the land, though embraced in the deed, was in fact excepted from the sale. Bartlett v. Judd, 21 N. Y. 200; 78 Am. Dec. 131; McDaniel v. Bryan, 8 Ill. App. 273.

The recitals are to be regarded only as inducement; the sheriff cannot bind a party whose land he may have improperly sold. Leland v. Wilson, 34 Tex. 79.

3. French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 506; Zabriskie v. Meade, 2 Nev. 285; 90 Am. Dec. 542.

4. In Colorado the deed shall be prima facie evidence of the facts recited. Colorado Annot. Stat., 1891, § 2555.

In Iowa, the deed shall be conclusive evidence that all the prerequisites of the law were complied with, from the listing up to its execution, both inclusive.

McClain's Iowa Rev. Stat., 1888, p. 344, § 1382.

The California statutes are only intended to make them evidence of the facts recited without having to introduce the judgment and execution; so far as requiring anything beyond what is necessary to show the sheriff's authority to sell, they are merely directory. Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133; Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 649; 99 Am. Dec. 441.

In Missouri, the deed shall recite "the names of the parties to the execution, the date when issued, the date of the judgment, order or decree, and other particulars as recited in the execution; also a description of the property, the time, place, and manner of the sale, which recital shall be received as evidence of the facts therein stated." Missouri Rev. Stat., 1889, § 4954.

The Mississippi statute prescribes the form of the deed at large. Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 1241. So does that of Illinois. Illinois Rev. Stat. of 1887, p. 868, § 31. Also that of Rhode Island. Rhode Island Pub. Stat., 1882, p. 615, § 116.

In Minnesota, the certificate of sale "shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated," and shall, upon "expiration of the time for redemption, operate as a conveyance." Minnesota Stat., 1891, §§ 4936, 4937.

In Nebraska, the deed shall recite "the substance" of the execution, the names of the parties, and the date of term of rendition of the judgment; "the deed shall be sufficient evidence of the legality of such sale and the proceedings therein until the contrary be proved." Nebraska Comp. Stat. 1889, p. 921, § 500.

The Kansas statute is like that of Nebraska. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4557.

In Ohio "the deed shall be prima facie evidence of the legality and regularity of the sale." Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5402.

In Wisconsin, "a deed shall be executed in pursuance of a sale," and be "a proper conveyance." Wisconsin Annot. Stat. 1889, §§ 3016, 3017.

In Pennsylvania, the purchaser may "cause the judgment, and all' and singular the process issued thereon, under which such estate may have been seised and sold, together with all and singular the returns of such process, made by the officer executing the same, to be recited and set forth fully and at large in the deed." B. P. Dig. Laws Pennsylvania, p. 765, § 129.

1. See supra, this title, The Return.

In Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 288, the court, by Shafter, J., said: "The power to sell, to recite, and to deed having its origin in the judgment and execution, must be proved by a production of both under the rule of best evidence; but when the power has become so proved, the sheriff becomes, so to speak, the accredited historian of his acts under it. He may narrate his proceedings on the back of the execution, and return it into court, and with or without that he may issue a certificate to the purchaser, and both the certificate and return, if made, would, within the limits of the authority delegated to him, be evidence against all persons of the facts stated or recited therein." "It is also the official duty of the sheriff to make a like statement or recital in his deed, and it follows that a recital so made must be entitled to the same effect as an instrument of evidence, as all the authorities concede to be due to an official return on execution if one be made."

In California, a constable's deed is not admissible in evidence of title, without proof of the judgment and execution. Peterson v. Weissbein, 80 Cal. 38.

In Louisiana, in a petitory action involving the issue whether the purchaser had failed to comply with the conditions of sale, it was held that under Louisiana Code, art. 702, prescribing the contents of the return, the deed must control the return. McCall v. Irion, 41 La. Ann. 1126.

The question as to what sold is determined by the adjudication and not by the deed. Herriman v. Janney, 31 La. Ann. 276.

An adjudicatee in undisturbed possession for ten years after getting his deed, has an indefeasible title against all the world. Stackhouse v. Zuntz, 41 La. Ann. 415.

Under the Rhode Island statute, making the deed vest title in the purchaser, no return is necessary for its validity. Foster v. Berry, 14 R. I. 601.

So also, in Missouri. Bray v. Marshall, 75 Mo. 327.

So, also, in North Carolina, if the return be imperfect. Miller v. Miller, 89 N. Car. 402.

So in general. Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 477.

2. Durette v. Briggs, 47 Mo. 356; Union Bank v. Manard, 51 Mo. 548; McKee v. Lineberger, 87 N. Car. 181.

In Missouri, so held, to defeat a collateral attack, based on a defect in the verification of the original petition. Gilkeson v. Knight, 71 Mo. 403.

In North Carolina, parol evidence was held admissible to show that the land was sold as one tract, though described in the deed as two. Peebles v. Pate, 90 N. Car. 348.

As between the purchaser and third persons recitals in a deed given by the succeeding sheriff are not conclusive as to what was sold by the predecessor. Edwards v. Tipton, 77 N. Car. 222. The fact that the grantor had gone out of office made his subsequent deed no less prima facie evidence of execution and sale. Curlee v. Smith, 91 N. Car. 172.

Under the Nebraska Code the sheriff's deed vests in the purchaser any estate that the debtor had at the time the land became liable to satisfy the judgment and any which he may acquire up to the time of sale. If the debtor had no interest the purchaser acquires no title. Mansfield v. Gregory, 8 Neb. 432.

So, also, in Missouri. White v. Davis, 50 Mo. 333.

the deed alone will not establish title in certain cases without proof of the judgment and execution.¹

9. Reforming or Renewing.—As a general rule equity will not aid a defective execution of a sheriff's deed.² In some States,

So, also, in Kansas. Shields v. Miller, 9 Kan. 390.

Here a deed void—e. g., by a sheriff of one county conveying land situated in another—reciting an order of confirmation, is no evidence of the alleged fact. Morrell v. Ingle, 23 Kan. 32.

In Georgia, a deed void—e. g., by a sheriff making himself and his wife usees—is inadmissible, even with parol evidence offered that the execution defendant pointed out the property, saw it sold and the deed executed. Morrison v. Knight, 82 Ga. 96.

In Tennessee, the presumption of the validity of the deed and the reliability of its recitals, are not overcome by proof that the land was sold without first laying off the homestead. Burnett v. Austin, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 564.

In Pennsylvania, the record of proclamation of acknowledgment of the deed in open court does not import such a res adjudicata as precludes inquiry into the legality of the proceedings by which the sale was made. Braddee v. Brownfield, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 271.

After such acknowledgment, the validity of the grantee's title cannot be questioned in any collateral proceeding involving it, except for absence of authority or presence of fraud. Cock v. Thornton, 108 Pa. St. 637.

Where the return and the deed show that the sale was under one writ only, parol evidence was (by the majority of the judges) held inadmissible to prove that the sale was also made under another writ in the sheriff's possession at the same time. Hare v. Bedell, 98 Pa. St. 485.

The New Jersey rule that a sheriff's deed carries no title unless it appears affirmatively by recitals in the deed, or by proof aliunde, that the sale was advertised according to law, has not been changed by the act of 1864. Henderson v. Hays, 41 N. J. L. 387.

In Arkansas, the deed is not valid unless there were a regular judgment, execution, levy, advertisement and sale. Hughes v. Watt, 26 Ark. 228.

In Illinois, the deed is prima facie evidence that the grantee paid value. Shelton v. Blake, 115 Ill. 275.

Recitals of the certificate of purchase, without proof of the judgment, are not sufficient to sustain title under the deed. Carbine v. Morris, 92 Ill. 555.

1. Hasbrouck v. Burhans, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 376; Leland v. Wilson, 34 Tex. 79; Peterson v. Weissbein, 80 Cal. 38.

In New York, after lapse of many years, the deed recitals together with testimony of the sheriff that he sold the land under the execution corroborated by his register, are sufficient. Phillips v. Shiffer, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 101. The New York act of 1886, making the deed presumptive evidence after lapse of twenty years, applies only to sales made after Sept. 1, 1887. Goldman v. Kennedy, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 157.

In Texas, in an action to recover land, a party offering a sheriff's deed in evidence must prove the judgment and execution, or state a purpose other than to prove title. Tudor v. Hodges, 71 Tex. 392.

In Alabama, a defendant in chancery, claiming title under a sheriff's sale but not in response to the allegations of the bill, must not only make the deed an exhibit, but also show the judgment, execution and levy. Gordon v. Bell, 50 Ala. 213.

2. "It may be stated as generally, though not universally true, that the remedial power of courts of equity does not extend to the supplying of any circumstance for the want of which the legislature has declared the instrument void; for otherwise equity would defeat the very policy of the legislative enactments." 1 Story's Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 177. "There may be exceptions to this rule." Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story (U. S.) 487.

In Indiana, a mistake in description will be corrected, if in the deed only. So held as to a probate sale. Johns v. DeRoine, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 421. Otherwise, if the mistake extends through the sheriff's previous proceedings. Rogers v. Abbott, 37 Ind. 138. Compare Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 137; Lewis v. Owen, 64 Ind. 446.

In Ohio, a like distinction is made. Dickey v. Beatty, 14 Ohio St. 389.

however, a sheriff's deed will be corrected in equity for fraud or mistake.¹

10. Canceling.—Ordinarily, grounds for vacating the sale are also grounds for canceling the deed.² Equity will annul a deed obtained by fraud, there being no adequate remedy at law.³ So, also, in case of mistaken and illegal proceedings.⁴

In Ohio and Indiana, after foreclosure of a mortgage including land not belonging to the mortgagor, a new action lies to reform the mortgage and to foreclose it as reformed. Strang v. Beach, 11 Ohio St. 283; 78 Am. Dec. 308; Conyers v. Mericles, 75 Ind. 443.

In Missouri, the rule that equity will not aid the imperfect execution of a statutory power has been applied to a false description in a sheriff's deed, and the only remedy declared to be to get a new deed in the court whence the process issued. Ware v. Johnson, 55 Mo. 500; Hall v. Klepzig, 99 Mo. 83.

Where the deed erroneously recited the dates of the judgment and sale, and an amended deed was lost in a cyclone before its registration, proof of these facts was held to establish the purchaser's title. Dollarhide v. Parks, 92 Mo. 178.

In Virginia, one who has bought one parcel of land cannot maintain a suit against one who has bought another, to compel a conveyance of part of the latter on the ground of a mistake in the officer's deed, there being no privity between them. Garnett v. Loven, 80 Va. 456.

In Bartlett v. Judd, 21 N. Y. 203; 78 Am. Dec. 131, on reforming the deed, the court, by Bacon, J., said: "The statute only makes the certificate presumptive evidence of the facts stated in it, and it clearly appears that the certificate recites a fact either falsely or mistakenly . . . The plaintiff was the purchaser. He stood by and heard the proclamation of the sheriff, that the sixty-three acres were excepted from the sale, and he purchased knowing that he was not bidding up this land, and that he was to have no title to it. Being chargeable with notice before he received his deed, it is both dishonest and inequitable for him to lay by for fourteen years after he has received his deed, during all which time the property has been constantly occupied by others, under a title which no one pretended to question, and then seek to recover."

Conversely, in another New York case, the execution defendants were restrained from asserting claim to a portion omitted in the deed. De Riemer v. De Cantillon, 4 Johns. Ch. (N.Y.) 85.

In North Carolina, where the title does not pass until the registration, if the deed be lost meanwhile, the purchaser's remedy is by an action against the sheriff and the execution defendant for a new deed and for possession. McMillan v. Edwards, 75 N. Car. 81.

The Alabama statute providing for obtaining an order upon the sheriff's successor to execute a new deed, does not authorize the court to order the reforming of a defective conveyance. McCall v. White, 73 Ala. 562.

In Canada, a sheriff in 1839, having conveyed more land than was sold, a new deed, executed in 1849, was held to be valid. Doe v. Miller, 10 U. C. Q. B. 65.

In Illinois, in analogy to the Statute of Limitations, a rule prevails to refuse a new deed after lapse of twenty years. Rucker v. Dooley, 49 Ill. 377; 95 Am. Dec. 614.

So also in Missouri. In re Guenzler, 6 Mo. App. 96.

1. In Arkansas, although the deed be bad for uncertainty, yet if all the proceedings else are regular, and the purchaser has paid, he has an equitable title as against the execution defendant, and the deed will be reformed. Williams v. McIlroy, 34 Ark. 85.

In New Jersey, equity will correct a misdescription in the sheriff's deed whereby part of the premises were omitted. Zingssem v. Kidd, 29 N. J. Eq. 516. So held, also, in case of an execution sale of a curtesy estate in lots 35 and 37, misdescribed as 39 and 41. Vanderbeck v. Perry, 28 N. J. Eq. 367.

2. See supra, this title, Grounds for Vacating.

4. In Mississippi, the deed may be canceled as to a homestead wrongly included in the sale, and maintained as to the other portion of the lands. Semmes v. Wheatley (Miss. 1890), 7 So. Rep. 430.

XXII. PLAINTIFF'S RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.—The plaintiff's rights under an ordinary execution proceeding may differ from those under an extent.¹ He may forfeit rights by misconduct.² He may by his presence, advice or direction at a wrongful levy or sale, become liable as a joint trespasser with the sheriff.³ So, also, may his sureties in an indemnity bond.⁴ The plaintiff may maintain a bill in equity to cancel a deed fraudulently executed and antedated by the defendant.⁵ He may be protected as an innocent purchaser for value at his own sale, if without notice of an outstanding equity.⁶

In New York, where, after proceedings failing to follow the statute in getting service by publication, an execution is obtained against an absconding debtor, the sale and the deed thereunder will be set aside. Place v. Riley, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 17.

Where the execution defendant has got the deed set aside, the grantee cannot recover the price under the New York statute as to reimbursement, if he colluded with the sheriff, or abused legal process. McIntyre v. Sanford, 89 N. Y. 634.

In Illinois, the deed cannot be attacked collaterally for mere inadequacy of price, although no order has been made confirming the report thereof. McHany v. Schenk, 88 Ill. 357.

Under a rule in analogy to the Statute of Limitation of twenty years, a deed was canceled that was executed twenty-nine years after the sale, the rights of innocent grantees intervening. Rucker v. Dooley, 49 Ill. 377; 95 Am. Dec. 614.

The deed cannot be set aside on motion. Jenkins v. Merriwethen, 109 Ill. 647.

In North Carolina, under an execution regularly issued in favor of a corporation, land was sold for enough to pay off the judgment and costs, but the purchaser was not required to pay his bid, upon a mistaken belief that at least that much of the corporation's assets would belong to the purchaser who received a deed for the land. The corporation was afterwards declared insolvent, and placed in the hands of a receiver who moved to set aside the sale, rescind the receipt on the execution and cancel the deed. It was held that, in absence of fraud, the sale was regular and the deed should not be annulled; the receiver's remedy, if any, was to pursue the land, and charge it with the unpaid purchase money as assets. Bank of Statesville v. Graham, 82 N. Car. 489.

6. But where the sheriff made a sale of chattels in terms, but without authority, "subject" to a certain mortgage, the execution creditor, having purchased under that condition, was held to be precluded from denying its effect. Cable v. Byrne, 38 Minn. 534.

The plaintiff is liable for proceeding to sell upon a satisfied judgment,¹ or after a full tender.² If his execution be issued on a void judgment, he is liable for proceeds of sale appropriated.³

XXIII. SHERIFF'S RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES—1. Fees and Poundage.—The sheriff's fees and poundage are fixed by statute; so, also, ordinarily, are his commissions upon decretal sales.⁴

2. Liability to the Plaintiff.—The sheriff is liable to the execution plaintiff for any unreasonably long refusal or neglect to sell. In some States this liability is defined by statute.⁵ So, also, as to

1. Brown v. Feeter, 7 Wend. 1 (N.Y.) 301.

Where the plaintiff and defendant set up that a judgment already paid was unsatisfied, caused execution to issue thereon, and land to be sold which, after the judgment had been conveyed away by the defendant, it was held that the grantee could, in an action on the case, recover of them for the consequent trouble and expense, without showing actual specific damage. *Swan v. After the sale and a reversal of the judgment, the plaintiff is bound to restore only so much as he has received upon the execution. Peck v. McLean, 36 Minn. 228.

3. In Minnesota, where property levied on under a judgment in favor of A, void for want of jurisdiction, was already in the sheriff's hands under a prior levy on valid process in favor of B, and was sold for a gross sum, out of which both executions were satisfied, it was held that A was liable only for the proceeds of the sale received by him. Gunz v. Heffner, 33 Minn. 215.

In Missouri, he can recover from his attorney proceeds of a sale under a void judgment, withheld under claim of a purchaser who, knowing all the facts, procured issuance of the execution. Hendrix v. Wright, 50 Mo. 311. Compare a complicated Texas case: Burns v. Ledbetter, 56 Tex. 282.

4. See SHERIFFS; and supra, this title, By Whom—Auctioneers.

In absence of authority from the execution defendant, the sheriff has no right to employ an auctioneer; he could not charge therefor within the New York statute prescribing fees and poundage. Wallis v. Shelly, 30 Fed. Rep. 747.

Under the Iowa statute, he is entitled to a percentage where the execution plaintiff is the purchaser, and the amount of the bid is not paid to the sheriff but credited upon the judgment. Litchfield v. Ashford, 70 Iowa 393.

In Alabama, if, after issuance of execution, the judgment be paid to the clerk of court, "he must collect the costs and commissions of the sheriff." Alabama Civil Code, 1886, § 771.

The percentage under the Alabama statute, taxable when the party obtaining a stay is successful, is not allowable where the defendant thereupon gets a reversal, and, on a new trial, the plaintiff recovers judgment for a less amount. Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. East Alabama R. Co., 81 Ala. 94.

Within the meaning of the Oregon act of 1885, p. 121, the amount of the plaintiff's bid credited on the execution is not "money actually made," on which the sheriff is entitled to a commission. Coleman v. Ross, 14 Oregon 549.

In California, if he neglects to sell after being required by the creditor or attorney, he is liable to the creditor for the value of the property. California Pol. Code, 1889, § 4180. The court cannot require constables to sell property held by them under a justices' levy, and pay proceeds into court. Brown v. Moore, 61 Cal. 432.

If the sheriff refuses to sell on the ground of insufficiency of an undertaking on appeal, the court may make an ex parte order for him to proceed. La Société Française v. McHenry, 49 Cal. 351.

As to his rights in Indiana, to be subrogated to the plaintiff after default

The sheriff is also answerable to the plaintiff for damages from inadequacy of price consequent upon the sheriff's misdoings, without any fault of the plaintiff.² So also for failure to make return.³

and payment, see Burbank v. Slinkard, 53 Ind. 493.

In England, the sheriff is liable if he fails "to use reasonable expedition" in selling. Aireton v. Davis, 9 Bing. 740. And a promise by the defendant's attorney to pay affords no excuse. Jacobs v. Humphrey, 4 Tvr. 272. (As to the English measure of damages, see infra, this title, Amercement.)

So, also, in Indiana. State v. Herod, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 444.

The sheriff and his sureties are not liable if, after the levy, the plaintiff has negotiations with the defendant resulting in loss of the debt. Dorrance v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 160.

Proof that the goods levied on did not belong to the defendant, constitutes a good defense to the execution plaintiff's action for not selling. Harris v. Kirkpatrick, 35 N. J. L. 392; Union Bank v. Benham, 23 Ala. 143; Mason v. Watts, 7 Ala. 703; Snoddy v. Foster, 1 Met. (Ky.) 160.

1. See infra, this title, Amercement. In New York, the sheriff must bring the money into court or pay it over to the plaintiff or his attorney by the return day; he need not sooner, though he may have collected it before. For money returned thereafter he is liable to pay interest. Crane v. Dygert, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 675.

If after the sale, a third person sues for the property and recovers an amount exceeding that made on the execution, the sheriff will not be liable to the plaintiff for the money collected. So held, even where a constable had taken an indemnity bond and brought suit thereon. Newland v. Baker, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 264.

The New York Code has not changed the rule that no demand is prerequisite to an action for withholding money collected. Nelson v. Kerr, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 209.

In an action against a sheriff for a false return, it was held that the sheriff on the trial could not go behind the execution to show that it was void or voidable by reason of being irregularly and prematurely issued. Blivin v. Bleakley, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 124.

If after an authorized levy, the plaintiff takes the execution out of the sheriff's hands and keeps it until after the day fixed for sale, the sheriff and his sureties are not liable for the failure to sell; and this, though the sheriff suspend all further proceedings and deliver the property to the defendant before the day of sale. Smith v. Martin, 54 Ga. 600.

If the sheriff allows the administrators of a deceased execution defendant to sell personally levied on, he is liable to the plaintiff who cannot impeach the title of the purchaser. Massey v. Farmers' Bank, 1 Del. Ch. 399; 1 Harr. (Del.) 186.

2. E. g., if he misinforms the plaintiff or his attorney of the place of sale, disregards the risk of sacrifice, and does not adjourn the sale. State v. Moore, 72 Mo. 285.

So also if, without payment of the bid, he surrenders the property to the purchaser, or otherwise treats the sale as consummated. McCluskey v. McNeely, 8 Ill. 578. Compare Roberts v. Westbrook, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 115.

But this may be excused by the plaintiff's own act or waiver. Granberry v. Crosby, 7 Helsk. (Tenn.) 579; Robertson v. Coker, 11 Ala. 466; Norris v. State, 22 Ark. 524; Shannon v. Clarke, 3 Dana (Ky.) 152; McKinley v. Tucker, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 214.

The sheriff cannot avail himself of a defect in the execution—e. g., more than ninety days between the teste and return—to excuse failure to fulfill its mandates. Wilson v. Huston, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 332. Compare Milburn v. State, 11 Mo. 188; 47 Am. Dec. 148.

3. Liability to the Defendant.—It is a general rule that the sheriff may justify seizure and sale by an execution regular upon its face.¹ But this excuses no abuse of process, and many States have statutes jealously providing for the defendant's protection.²

In the absence of other executions in hand, the sheriff is liable to the defendant for failure to pay over to him any excess of the money collected after satisfaction.³

The sheriff is liable to the defendant for selling realty before personalty, or conversely, against the statute.⁴ So also, for any misconduct of sale causing gross and needless sacrifice; as by unlawfully massing or parceling,⁵ or selling real or personal property together,⁶ or not allowing his right of election of the portion to be sold.⁷

The sheriff is liable to the defendant for a wantonly excessive levy and sale,⁸ for selling after being served with an injunc-

4. Liability to Third Parties.—The sheriff is liable to the real owner for chattels taken and sold under an execution against another person.⁶ But he is not liable for goods intermingled with the defendant's until the owner points them out and demands them.⁷

Many States have special statutes to relieve the sheriff's embarrassment upon claim intervention.⁸ In most States the

1. Distinguished from Other Warrants.—In Lauman v. Thomas, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 51, Tilghman, C. J., says: "Warrants or locations may be divided into several classes. The first are descriptive of the land intended to be surveyed, either precisely or with such reasonable certainty as is sufficient to designate it. If due diligence is used in obtaining a survey the title under these warrants attaches from the date. The second class comprehends those which give but a loose description of the land applied for. I take the warrant in question to be of this nature. It fixes no precise spot, but allows a scope of several miles. The title under such a warrant cannot attach until the survey is made, for, till then, it cannot be certainly known where the land lies. I believe that a very large proportion of the location entered on the opening of the land office in the year 1769, was of this class. Great allowance must be made for looseness of description in a country very little explored. The third class consists of what are called shifted warrants or locations—that is to say, where the survey is made on land different from that described. These surveys have no validity, except against persons having notice of them, until the time of their acceptance in the office of the surveyor-general, for very obvious reasons. Being an alteration of the contract, they can have no force till accepted, because the proprietary was under no obligation to keep the land vacant, and may have suffered some other person to appropriate it before the return of the shifted survey. Indeed it was only by courtesy and the custom of the land office that such surveys were accepted at all.

Effect.—"The title on a shifted location does not, unless against a person having actual notice, attach before return of survey." Boyles v. Kelly, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 214; Fox v. Lyon, 33 Pa. St. 474. "A shifted survey if fairly made, returned, and accepted by the proper authority, when there is no intervening opposing right, will hold and secure the lands." Irwin v. Moore, 2 Smith's Law (Pa.) 187; Smith v. Walker, 98 Pa. St. 141. See generally Moore v. Shaver, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 130; Miles v. Potter, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 65; Mix v. Smith, 7 Pa. St. 77; *Keble v. I. DEFINITION.—In a technical sense a ship is a three-masted vessel navigated with sails,¹ but as employed in law the term includes all navigable structures propelled with sails as well as with steam.²

II. SHIPPING REGULATIONS—1. In General.—Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.³ This power is complete in itself and has no limit other

1. See Black's L. Dict., p. 1092; 4 Wash. (U. S.) 530.

2. Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co., 119 U. S. 629.

By the Roman law the word "ship" apparently included everything which floated upon the waters and was accessory to commerce. Under the French law the definition is almost equally broad. The word ship includes every vessel of timber work able to float and to be carried upon the water. Boats and the smallest barks are comprehended in the same definition; even rafts are included. A Raft of Cypress Logs, 1 Flip. (U. S.) 545.

By the act of 17 and 18 Vict. 1854, ch. 100, § 2, "ship" includes every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars. Ex parte Ferguson, L. R., 6 Q. B. 291.

In Yarnberg v. Watson, 13 Oregon 11, a vessel is defined to be any structure made to float upon the water for the purpose of commerce or war, whether impelled by wind, steam or oars. Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 611.

A torpedo steam launch attached to a division of a naval squadron, though not proved to have had any books, is a ship within the meaning of the prize act of June 30, 1864, ch. 174, § 10, rules 4 and 5. U. S. v. Steever, 113 U. S. 747.

A floating elevator was held to be a "ship" or "vessel" within the meaning of a certain statute. The Hezekiah Baldwin, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 556.

The term as used in the California Code includes steamboats, sailing vessels, canal boats, barges, and every structure adapted or intended to be navigated from place to place for the transportation of merchandise or persons. California Civ. Code, § 960.

The following have been held not within the meaning of the term:

A rowboat, Fisher v. Camden, etc., Ferry Co., 124 Pa. St. 154.

An open boat, U. S. v. An Open Boat, 5 Mason (U. S.) 120.

A canal boat, Hicks v. Williams, 17

A ferry-boat, Burkbeck v. Hoboken Ferry-boat Co., 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 54.

Coal barges or flat boats used to transport goods down a river and sold for lumber at their destination, Jones v. Coal Barges, 3 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 53.

Fishing vessels, Simpson v. Story, 145 Mass. 497; 1 Am. St. Rep. 480.

And small undecked boats which do not go out of sight of land, Farmer's Delight v. Lawrence, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 564.

Vessel in Unfinished State.—A boat in an unfinished state and wholly unfit for carriage of men or goods on water, or for any purpose for which such a vehicle is intended, is not a vessel. Yarnberg v. Watson, 13 Oregon 11; The Vermont, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 115.

In Northup v. The Pilot, 6 Oregon 298, the court, by Boyce, J., said: "The hull of a boat without the other parts necessary to its use is not a boat within the meaning of the statute to which the lien created by the statute could attach."

The materials which constitute a ship become one as soon as she leaves the ways and her keel strikes the element for which she was originally designed. The Eliza Ladd, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 519.

than that prescribed by the court.¹ It includes the power to prescribe what shall constitute American vessels, the national character of the seamen who shall navigate them, the rules and regulations for the intercourse and navigation of such vessels;² and, in fact, every subject of commerce to which legal discretion may apply.³ This power may be exercised wherever the subject exists even though it be within the territorial jurisdiction of several States.⁴ And when it is thus called into exercise, it is not only paramount but exclusive and cannot lawfully be interfered with to any extent.⁵

The power of Congress comprehends navigation within the limits of every State in the Union so far as that navigation may be in any manner connected "with commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes."⁶ If the commerce is purely internal commerce of a State, it is not included within this power.⁷ Each State has undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to its own internal police. It can establish and regulate ferries across its rivers, control the moving of vessels in harbors within its borders, and enact health and inspection laws which by quarantine or otherwise may operate on persons brought within its jurisdiction in the course of commercial operation.¹ This power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States does not, however, absolutely prohibit a State from legislating concerning commerce that is connected with foreign nations or among the several States.² Where this power is not exercised or lies dormant, a State may legislate. Inspection laws, quarantine, pilotage, port regulations, ferry laws, etc., enacted by a State, will not be invalid if no law which Congress has passed upon the same subject is violated.³ Where Congress does not act, the States must legislate on local and appropriate matters though they may be connected with commerce.⁴ But in case an act of the legislature of the State prescribes a regulation of the subject of commerce repugnant to and inconsistent with the regulation of Congress, the State law must give way.⁵ (See NAVIGATION, vol. 16, p. 275; PILOTS, vol. 18, p. 444.)

2. Registration and Enrollment.—Every vessel of the United States which is afloat is bound to have with her from the officers of her home port, either a register or an enrollment. The former is used when she is engaged in a foreign voyage or trade, and the latter when she is engaged in domestic commerce, usually called coasting trade.⁶ The purpose of a register is to declare the nationality of a vessel engaged in trade with foreign nations, and to enable her to assert that nationality wherever found. The purpose of an enrollment is to evidence the national character of a vessel engaged in the coasting trade or home traffic, and to enable such vessel to procure a coasting license.¹ If found afloat, whether by steam or sail, without one or the other of these, and without the right one with reference to the trade she is engaged in, or the place where she is found, she is not entitled to protection under the laws of the United States, but is liable to seizure for such violation of the law, and in a foreign jurisdiction or on the high seas can claim no rights as an American vessel.²

3. What Vessels Entitled to Register.—Under the statute only vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof, and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States, may be registered.³ Vessels running on the ocean between ports of the same States carrying merchandise or passengers destined to foreign States,⁴ and foreign vessels wrecked on the coast of the United States may be registered if they are purchased and repaired by citizens thereof, providing it is satisfactorily proven that the repairs are equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when repaired.⁵ If the person who owns the vessel either in whole or in part, is a citizen of the United States who usually resides in a foreign country, he is not entitled to the benefits of registry during the continuance of such residence, unless he be a consul of the United States or an agent or partner in some house of trade consisting of citizens of the United States actually carrying on trade within the United States.⁶

4. Place of Registration.—The registry is required to be made at the home port of the vessel.⁷ The home port is the place where or nearest to which the owner, or if more than one, the managing owner resides, and that continues to be the home port until another has been established by a change of the owner's residence.⁸ If the owner's residence is in one district and the vessel is built in another, the place where the vessel is built is the home port until after her delivery and her first voyage.¹ So if a citizen of the United States becomes the owner by purchase of a vessel entitled to be registered while the vessel is in a district other than the one where the purchaser resides, the vessel may be registered by the collector of the district where she may be at the time of the conveyance; and whenever she arrives within the district comprehending the port to which she belongs, the certificate of registry obtained may be delivered up to the collector who may grant a new one in lieu of the first.²

The former registry is temporary and the latter permanent. But the words permanent and temporary do not imply that they are co-existent but successive. A vessel cannot have two registers at the same time.³ If a vessel is temporarily registered at a port other than that to which she belongs and she afterwards arrives at her home port and is registered anew, the temporary register is to be delivered up.⁴

5. Mode of Registration.—A registry is granted on condition that an oath declaring the name of the vessel, her burden, etc., be taken and subscribed by the owner before the officer authorized to make the registry.⁵ A bond is always required to be given by the husband or managing owner of the vessel conditioned that the certificate of registry shall be used solely for the vessel for which it is granted.⁶ If the registry is obtained by false swearing,⁷ or if a certificate of registry is fraudulently used for a vessel not entitled thereto, the vessel may be forfeited.⁸

If one of two partners in a house of trade in this country obtain a United States register for a ship by swearing that he, together with his partner of the city of New York, are the sole owners of the vessel for which the registry is obtained, when in fact his partner is domiciled in England, the vessel is liable to forfeiture under the Registry Act of Dec. 31, 1792, § 4, although such statement is made in good faith and under a misconception of the real character which a foreign domicile impresses upon an owner residing abroad. The Venus, 8 Cranch (U. U. S. Rev. St., § 4189, which declares that for fraudulently obtaining a certificate of registration, etc., a vessel "shall be liable to forfeiture," does not effect a present absolute forfeiture, but only gives a right to have the vessel declared forfeited upon due process of law, and the property in the same remains in the owner until seizure and condemnation, which latter relates back to the time of seizure, and invalidates all intermediate sales. The Kate Heron, 6 Sawy. 6. When New Registry Required.—A new register must be obtained upon the sale or alteration of the vessel.¹ If not registered anew as described by the statute, the vessel forfeits her national character and the privileges attached to it.² The question at what time the new register is to be obtained and at what time the vessel shall be affected by the failure to obtain it, is susceptible of some doubt. By a fair and natural construction of the statute, it would seem, however, that the new register should be obtained at the time of delivering up her formal certificate of registry.³

7. Enrollment of Vessels.—The provision of the statute regulating the enrollment of vessels is the same as that providing for registration in similar cases,⁴ and it applies to sloops of over fifty tons' burden on the Hudson river,⁵ but not to canal boats without oars, masts or steam power,⁶ nor to open boats.⁷ The enrollment and license of a vessel gives it the right to carry on the coasting trade and land persons and property in the course of her commercial navigation⁸ or to carry passengers between the several States,⁹ but it does not confer the right to encroach upon the ferry privileges of others.¹⁰

8. Registry and Enrollment as Evidence.—The registry is not of itself evidence of ownership except so far as it is confirmed by some auxiliary circumstance showing that it was made by the authority or assent of the person named in it, and who is sought to be charged as owner.¹¹ Without such connecting proof the register has been held not to be even prima facie evidence to charge a person as owner, and even with such proof, it is not conclusive evidence of ownership.¹² When the register is obtained on the oath of one of several part owners, it has been held prima facie evidence to charge them where no notice of an intent to deny the ownership was previously given.¹ So, where the question of ownership is merely incidental, the registry alone has been deemed sufficient prima facie evidence.² It may be admitted as one item in connection with other evidence to establish ownership.³ It may also be admitted against the person on whose affidavit it is obtained.⁴ But in favor of the person claiming as owner, it is no evidence at all, being nothing more than his own declaration.⁵ It is conclusive evidence that she was in a fit state to be registered;⁶ and it is also conclusive evidence as to who is master,⁷ and as to the vessel being insured.⁸ The registry or enrollment of a vessel is prima facie evidence of the port to which the vessel belongs.⁹ The enrollment is conclusive to show her character as a domestic vessel,¹⁰ but not her ownership.¹¹ It is competent for the real owner to show by parol evidence that his claim is well founded, and that the certificate of registry or enrollment had been fraudulently made and issued in the name of another.¹² See BOOKS AS EVIDENCE, vol. 2, p. 467j.

9. License for Coasting Trade.—A license under the act of Congress to prosecute the coasting trade is a warrant to traverse the waters washing or bounding the coast of the United States,¹ or to employ the vessel in trade between one State and the interior of another. The authority conferred is paramount to any privileges that may be obtained under State legislation.² But such a license gives a vessel no right to use, free of tolls or of any condition whatsoever, the canals constructed by a State or the water-courses partaking of the character of canals exclusively within the interior of a State, and made practicable for navigation by the funds of the State or by privileges that may have been conferred for the accomplishment of the same end.³ Nor is such a license to be construed as impairing the power of the State to obstruct the navigable waters within its limits, but to confer upon the vessel only the right to navigate the waters so far as navigable.⁴

Vessels must pursue the proper business for which they are licensed.⁵ A vessel licensed for the codfishery is not authorized by her license to engage in the mackerel fishery.⁶ So if a licensed vessel proceeds upon a foreign voyage without first giving up her enrollment of license and being duly registered, she is liable to seizure and forfeiture.⁷ If a vessel licensed for the coasting

The power of Congress to require licenses from vessels carrying on the coasting trade is derived from its power to regulate commerce among the States. Although a vessel navigates only from port to port in the same State, if its employment constitutes a link in a chain of commerce among the States, it will be considered as in the coasting trade. Otherwise, as to a ferry across a river within the limits of one State. As far as regards the authority of the State and general governments, such ferry does not differ from a toll bridge. U. S. v. In rendering judgment in this case, the court by Clifford, J., said: "Undoubtedly a vessel licensed for the codfishery may take mackerel for bait and for consumption by the crew, as provisions during the trip; and as fresh mackerel make the best bait, the crew may take them as frequently and in such quantities as it may be reasonably necessary for them to do for those purposes; and where it appears that they pursued the proper business for which the vessel was licensed, in good faith, and on the return of the vessel, or at the time of her seizure, have only such quantity of mackerel on hand as may reasonably be inferred from the circumstances to have been taken in the fair exercise of that legitimate right, the law does not authorize the forfeiture of the vessel because there happens to be some excess."

trade engages in any illegal traffic,¹ or any employment beyond the scope of the license, it works a forfeiture.²

10. Inspection Laws.—The statute imposes on the owners of steam vessels the duty of applying annually for inspection.³ The boiler and hull must be inspected in order to determine whether the vessel is suitable for the services in which it is employed.⁴ If it is a passenger steamer, it must be furnished with life-preservers, and it must also have a certificate from the inspectors specifying the number of passengers that may lawfully be carried.⁵ Steam vessels belonging to a State and used by its officers to enforce the State fishery laws,⁶ and ferryboats engaged in transporting, upon a river within the limits of a single State, passengers received on board, in consequence of which an excessive number are carried, warrants a conviction. A master may be fined, although he did not in fact know that he had on board more than the lawful number.¹ Where the evidence is conflicting and doubtful as to whether a steamer in fact carried more than the number allowed; the penalty is not incurred.² So where a passenger steamer does not carry or purpose to carry a number of passengers additional to the number authorized by its certificate, and does not go or purpose to go out of the waters where it is authorized by its certificate to ply, it is not a violation of the statute.³ The penalty is not incurred by a ferryboat, though temporarily employed as an excursion boat.⁴ Nor is it incurred by a tugboat employed exclusively within the limits of a State.⁵ Nor by a tugboat carrying as passengers a few friends of the owner to witness the test of her machinery.⁶

In an action to enforce a lien upon a steamboat for carrying passengers on a certain trip in excess of the number allowed by law, two disinterested witnesses who were passengers on the boat on the trip in question, swore that they took up a position at the gangways by which the passengers passed off the boat and made an actual count as they were passing off, the count being written down at the time, and that the number so ascertained exceeded by 777 the number allowed by law. The agent of the steamboat testified that during the trip, in going from one landing to another, he saw some one counting the passengers, and he went to the purser's office and found there a certain number of bunches of tickets taken from the passengers; that on the supposition that there were 100 tickets in a bunch, as it was usual to so bunch them, he estimated that they could still take on 786 passengers at the next landing, and that he so reported to the owner, but he did not count the tickets nor did he know that the bunches which he saw contained all the tickets that had been taken. Notwithstanding the report of the agent, the owner directed that only 700 passengers should be taken on at the next landing. It further appeared that some of the passengers did not have tickets, but paid their fare on the boat. Held, that the testimony of the witness on behalf of libellant must be taken as true. The Columbia, 39 Fed. Rep. 617.

In New York, the duty of examining damaged vessels or cargoes is imposed upon a board entitled "The Port Wardens of the Port of New York" and composed of nine members, three of whom shall be nautical men. New York Laws, 1857, ch. 405, §§ 1, 3.

The employment of a private individual to survey a vessel just arrived from a foreign port, in a damaged condition, before the discharge of her cargo, or any measures taken for a future voyage, and on such survey to determine what repairs were necessary, and his performance of that duty, are not a violation of the laws of that State, which confer upon the port wardens of the city of New York the exclusive power to make surveys of vessels deemed unfit to proceed to sea, and to judge of the repairs which may ship that is unseaworthy,¹ and to assist the judgment of the master as to his proceeding to repair or sell the ship, and protect him in the fair discharge of his difficult and often critically responsible duty in great emergencies, by giving him the aid of the opinion of other men of sound judgment, intelligence and skill in nautical affairs.² Although surveys are and may be ordered by courts of admiralty, yet it is not an indispensable requisite. A survey may be made upon the mere private application of the master directly to the surveyors, or an American consul may interpose in behalf of the master and appoint the surveyors at his request.³ (See also SEAMEN.)

III. OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL—1. Generally.—The owners of a ship may hold the property in partnership,⁴ or as tenants in common.⁵ When the owners hold a vessel in partnership the rules be necessary for the safety of such vessels on their intended voyage. Port Wardens of New York v. Cartwright, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 236.

English Statutes.—In England, a surveyor's certificate is prerequisite to registration of the ship; Merchant's Shipping Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict., ch. 104, § 36; and no passenger ship shall proceed to sea unless she shall have been surveyed under the direction of the emigration officer at the port of clearance, but at the expense of the owner or charterer thereof, by two or more competent surveyors to be appointed by the emigration commissioners. Passengers' Act 1855, 18 & 19 Vict., ch. 119, § 19. But any steamer may carry passengers not exceeding twelve in number, although she has not been surveyed by the board of trade as a passenger steamer, and does not carry a board of trade certificate as provided by the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1854 with respect to passenger steamers; Merchants' Shipping Act 1876, 39 & 40 Vict., ch. 80, § 160; and the board of trade, if satisfied with the foreign certificate of survey, may dispense with any further survey of a foreign passenger steamer or emigration ship. Merchants' Shipping Act 1876, 39 & 40 Vict., ch. 80, § 19.

governing ordinary partnerships apply.¹ One partner may bind the firm by chartering the ship on its behalf,² or he may sell³ or mortgage⁴ the entire interest of the firm in the vessel, and it is immaterial whether this is done by signing the firm's name or the name of each copartner separately.⁵

So a majority of the part owners of a ship can employ her against the will of the others, upon giving them security to the value of their shares.⁶ Where a ship is sent on a voyage by some of the part owners against the will of the others, the dissentients are not entitled to share the profits of the voyage;⁷ nor are they liable to contribute to its losses.⁸ But where a ship is employed by all the part owners or by some of them, but not against the will of the others,⁹ they all share in the gross earnings and contribute to the expenses incurred in obtaining them. And in such a case there is little, if any, difference between the account which is taken between the part owners and that which would be taken if they were actually partners.¹⁰ Before any division of profits is made amongst the part owners, the gross freight or earnings of the adventure must be applied in payment of the expenses of the voyage yielding them, including the cost of repairs and outfit for that voyage.¹¹

in common.¹ A partnership relation cannot be presumed.² It cannot ordinarily exist without an express contract to that effect.³ It is the established rule that where two or three persons not partners in trade and not purchasing with partnership names become the owners of a vessel they are considered tenants in common, and upon the death of any of them, the interest of the decedent goes to his representatives, and not to the owners by right of survivorship.⁴ If they purchase or agree to have a ship built, and there is nothing in the instrument, transfer or written evidence of ownership defining the proportion in which the owners are to hold the property, they will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have equal shares.⁵

2. Powers of Part Owners—a. GENERALLY.—If a part-owner of a ship takes possession and uses it on a foreign voyage, no action will lie; but if, after taking possession, he destroys the property, or the vessel is lost at sea, he is then liable, because the joint ownership does not empower him to destroy the property of the other.⁶ And so, generally, if a tenant in common, though rightfully in possession, yet by negligence causes the destruction of the property, an action will lie against him.⁷ A part owner may sell the whole ship or the share of another part owner, but the sale will be void unless it is confirmed and ratified by those whose shares are sold.⁸ And if an unauthorized sale is carried into effect, it is held to be a constructive destruction of the property, for which trover may be maintained by the owners against the seller, or against the purchaser, if he also sells the property as his own.⁹

b. MANAGEMENT OF THE VESSEL.—In the management of the vessel the opinion of the majority of the owners prevails unless it forbids its employment, in which case it yields to the minority who desire its employment, because the public interest must be protected in securing employment to the vessel.¹ The majority may employ or dismiss the master and crew;² they may direct repairs and supplies,³ and they may change her employment from the performance of foreign voyages to the coasting trade, and also to the fishing business, if the vessel be of a suitable character for such employment.⁴

If the minority oppose a voyage, they may compel the other owners to give security to the amount of their respective shares before the vessel sails,⁵ but they cannot exact bonds to cover the indebtedness of the vessel, nor to indemnify them against loss in her future employment.⁶ A part owner will be deemed to have consented unless he prohibits the voyage or expressly notifies the other part owners that he will not be responsible for losses incurred.⁷ So, a part owner in the absence of the other part owners may represent them in the management of the vessel, and they will be bound by his acts and contracts.⁸

3. The propeller ferry-boat New York, after getting 100 feet from her landing, undertook to back in for a passenger, and in doing so drifted broadside on the wire cable of the ferry-boat Albina. The river was much swollen, and, owing to the pressure of the current and wind on the Albina, her cable was held up at or near the surface of the water, so that it caught the New York just under her guards, and held her there as on a pivot, while the pressure of the current on her hull forced it down stream until she capsized up stream, and then washed down stream under the wire. As the boat careened, Samuel Taylor, a passenger in the forward cabin, jumped out of the down-stream window, and was caught between the cable and the boat, as the latter passed under the former, and received injuries of which he died the same day. Held, the death of Taylor was caused by the negligent and unskilled handling of the New York in conjunction with the cable of the Albina, which, stretched as it was, on the surface of the water, was an unlawful obstruction to navigation, and that both were liable. neglect.¹ But the owner of a vessel is never made liable as a carrier merely by virtue of his ownership. The vessel must also have been in his employment so as to make him a party to the contract for carriage. Thus, if the owner charters his vessel to another, the charterer alone is liable. The criterion of liability, therefore, is not ownership, but employment. The party who has the control of the vessel and in whose absence it is engaged is regarded as the owner pro hac vice, and as such is answerable to the freighter.² Part owners of a vessel are not liable as co-partners for the loss of goods shipped on board of it, unless the employment of the vessel is also for their joint benefit, by her earnings.³ They may well be and generally are partners as to the freighting business carried on by means of their steamers, and if they are, their contracts relating thereto will be governed by the law of partnership.⁴

4. Liability of Owners for Repairs and Supplies.—There is a treble security for one who repairs a ship or supplies it with necessities: 1, the person of the master; 2, the specific ship; 3, the personal security of the owners.⁵ The master carries with him authority from the owners to contract for labor and supplies which may be necessary to the safe prosecution of the voyage.⁶ If he procures necessary repairs to be done without any express contract, an implied obligation arises as well against the owners as against

The owner of a vessel under a charter, the hirer having the whole control of the vessel for the time, to victual and man her, and pay over a portion of the net proceeds to the owner for the use of the vessel, is not liable to the shippers of goods on board the vessel, which had been embezzled, or otherwise not accounted for by the master. Reynolds v. Toppan, 15 Mass. 370; 8 Am. Dec. 110; Cutler v. Winsor, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 335; 17 Am. Dec. 385; Perry v. Osborne, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 422; Thorn v. Hicks, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 697.

The same principle is applicable to a contract of hire of the vessel which existed only in parol. Taggard v. Loring, 16 Mass. 336; 8 Am. Dec. 140.

A vessel being chartered by a minor does not render the general owner liable to shippers, the contract being only voidable by the minor. Thompson v. Hamilton, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 425; 23 Am. Dec. 619.

The general owner is owner for the voyage, notwithstanding a charter-party, where the vessel is navigated at his expense, and by his master and crew, and where he retains the possession and management of her during the voyage, and a part of the vessel for his own use. himself.¹ He is not personally liable unless he subjects them to an expense when forbidden so to do,² or unless there is a special promise by the master.³ If the vessel is chartered by the master, he is deemed the owner pro hac vice, and like any other charterer is alone responsible for the supplies furnished for the intended voyage, and he is not restricted, in making his purchases, to the port where the vessel lies, but he may purchase in a neighboring port if he thinks proper.⁴

Where a materialman furnishes supplies in a foreign port or to a foreign ship, the presumption is that he relies on the ship itself for security.⁵ Where credit is thus given to a vessel for advances made to furnish supplies, it constitutes a lien that can only be removed by positive evidence showing that the master was in possession of funds applicable to the expenses, or of a credit of his own or of the owners of his vessel.⁶

The owners of a vessel may be liable for supplies upon the ground of agency,⁷ or on the ground of a special promise.⁸ The owners are not liable where the supplies are furnished and the repairs made on the credit of the vessel or ship's agents.⁹ It results, therefore, that the obligation to pay rests upon the person to whom the credit is given. If the master employs workmen, he is answerable because of his contract, and the owner is answerable because of his relation to the property and the authority he is supposed to give the master. If no contract at all should be proved, but the work was proved to be done within the knowledge of the owner, he would be answerable on account of the benefit he received, and it would be presumed that the work was done at his instance and request.¹⁰

a. PART OWNERS.—One part owner may bind the other part owners for necessary repairs and supplies.¹ If the repairs become necessary in a foreign port and are made to enable the ship to perform the voyage upon which she had been dispatched by all concerned, a contribution may be called for by the one who advances his money for the purpose.² One part owner will not, however, be liable to another part owner for repairs made by him at the home port, unless they are made with the knowledge and consent of the one sought to be charged.³ Where one of several part owners of a vessel is the master or ship's husband, in the absence of any special agreement he is presumed to have authority to do everything necessary to be done for the employment of the vessel, and has authority to make repairs and bind the vessel for the same; but as between the owners, he cannot subject them to expense, when forbidden so to do, and such expenses may be charged to his own share.⁴

In Starr v. Knox, 2 Conn. 221, the court by Swift, C. J., said: "It is a general right that the owners of vessels are liable for necessary disbursements and repairs and supplies procured by the master during a voyage. Though in some instances this may be very hard on the master, as where he has chartered the vessel, yet it is for the advantage of shipowners that this rule should be adopted; otherwise, vessels might be lost for want of power in the master to pledge the credit of the owners for necessary repairs and supplies."

possession of a vessel and holds himself out as absolute owner, he is liable for supplies and repairs,¹ though his relation to the ship was unknown to the creditor when the demand arose;² but he is not liable for repairs made to the vessel on the credit of the mortgagor, or other person having the equitable title.³ A mortgagee of a vessel, not in possession, and not exercising any control over her management, or receiving any part of her earnings, cannot be held liable for supplies and repairs furnished to her.⁴ So where the person furnishing supplies consults the record at the customhouse and finds that a person has taken a bill of sale of a vessel absolute in its terms, and is registered as owner, such owner will not be liable if the bill of sale was only intended as collateral security, and it is shown that he never took the vessel into his possession or control, or exercised any rights of ownership.⁵ But if a mortgagee out of possession orders goods or services as for himself, or agrees to pay for them if supplied to the ship, he will be bound to pay for them without any reference to his interest in the ship.⁶

The mortgagee of a vessel, although he is the legal owner, is not liable for repairs made on the credit of the mortgagor alone, where the vessel is navigated for the exclusive benefit of the mortgagor, and is under his entire control. And the mortgagee, if he is sought to be charged in such a case, may give in evidence his private transactions or course of business in reference to the vessel, in order to show that his connection with her was that of agent or consignee, and that it was not under his control, or navigated for his benefit. *Cordray v. 5. Limitation of Liability.—By the ancient law of the sea there was no limitation as to the law of a wrongdoer.¹ The owner's liability has been changed by statute.² When a shipowner sends his ship to sea, his responsibility for collisions and other losses, happening through the fault of those in charge of her and without his privity and knowledge, is limited to the capital embarked in the adventure, and the profit he may gain from it in the form of freight or its equivalent. If the ship is sunk or destroyed and no freight earned, his whole responsibility is at an end. If either or both are saved in whole or part, to that extent his liability remains.³

The act limiting the liability of shipowners is not retroactive.⁴ It applies to torts, to embezzlement,⁵ loss by fire,⁶ damage, or injury incurred, occasioned, or done without their privity or knowledge⁷ and not to responsibility for obligations ex

If the mortgagee of a vessel appears, from the register and papers to be the absolute, unconditional owner of a vessel, he is bound by such evidence, and will be liable for the necessary disbursements in repairs and supplies, procured by the master during the voyage, if the individuals so making the advances make them on the credit of such evidence. *Starr v. The proof showed that the master had, as carrier, under a charter-party with a charterer who claimed a right to take the guano, received it on board at the island, without any knowledge of libellant's claim, and had delivered it to the consignees in Philadelphia, in accordance with his charter-party, without notice or information of any other claimant or ownership. Held, that the schooner was not liable. *The B. contractu.¹ An amendment extending the benefits of limited liability legislation to "all vessels used on lakes and rivers or in inland navigation, including canal boats, barges, and lighters" has been held valid. A railway company, carrying passengers and goods partly by railway and partly by its own ships, is entitled to the limitations of the liability of shipowners imposed by the merchants' wise entitled to it) in respect to the balance which he is decreed to pay.¹ Where several vessels are in fault for collision, the damages should be divided between them pro rata, subject to the limitation of liability prescribed by the statute. If the money recoverable from either vessel is less than her share of the loss of the cargo, such money should be first applied on account of the cargo; and the other vessels or their owners are chargeable pro rata, up to their limit of liability for the balance of the whole loss of the cargo belonging to a third person not in fault, and for their proportion of the loss of any other vessel; but the latter, to make good the loss of cargo, must apply thereto any moneys coming to her from her own loss, so far as necessary to make good her share of the cargo lost. Either vessel thus paying more than her share of the whole loss, is entitled to the benefit of the judgment against any other party, up to the limit of his liability, for any excess paid in the first instance on his account.² The point of time for taking the value of the owner's interest in the vessel as the measure of his liability is at the termination of the voyage, whether by the arrival of the ship in port or by her loss at sea.³ If the vessel is sunk the value to be taken is her value as she lies sunk, which is the value of the wreck when raised, less the expense of raising; the expense of subsequent repairs or insurance moneys received by the owners cannot be added.⁴

6. Ship's Agent.—The owners generally appoint some person, usually one of their number, to be manager. IV. SALE AND TRANSFER—1. By Parol.—A vessel is personal property, and is governed by the laws regulating personal property in respect to mere questions of ownership and incumbrances.⁴ Like any other personal chattel, the title of a vessel may pass by parol.⁵ Where the property in the vessel is transferred without a bill of sale or other written evidence, there must be proof of an agreement to sell and purchase; and also proof of a valuable consideration when the title is asserted against creditors of the vendor, and a delivery of the vessel in port at the time of the sale.⁶

Delivery of a vessel to the agent of the person for whom it was built, unaccompanied by any written conveyance, and with no intent on the part of the agent to appropriate the property to his own use, must be understood as vesting the title in the owner, and the subsequent act of the agent in taking the bill of sale to himself from the builders, four months afterwards, would not divest the owner's title and vest it in the agent.¹ The national character is not ipso facto lost by a parol transfer, but the American registry act makes the production of a bill of sale requisite to entitle the ship to be registered anew, and the want of such new registry, forfeits the national character.² Under the English registry acts, all transfers, or agreements for transfers, made without reciting the certificate of registry at length in the bill or instrument of sale or agreement for transfer, are void.³

2. By Bill of Sale.—A bill of sale only prima facie shows a transfer of title.⁴ In order to constitute a full right under it, the transfer should be bona fide and for a valuable consideration.⁵ If bona fide, it is good as against creditors although the possession of the ship is not taken by the purchaser.⁶ Parol evidence may be given to vary its terms. If it expresses a certain sum as the consideration, the vendor may prove an oral agreement to pay an additional sum upon a certain contingency, and recover such sum upon the happening of the event, though the bill of sale be absolute in its terms;⁷ or it may be shown by parol evidence to be only a mortgage.⁸ But an absolute bill of sale of a vessel will be construed as a mortgage only upon the clearest proof that it was intended as security.⁹ The fact that a bill of sale of a vessel was merely intended as a mortgage will not prevent the holders from maintaining an action for the conversion of the vessel against a person claiming under a barratrous sale by the master.¹⁰ So one who

Where a bill of sale of a vessel is absolute on its face, but the registry pursuant thereto was made a long time after the date of the bill, evidence to show that the bill of sale was by way of mortgage, and did not take effect absolutely till the latter date, and that the buyer did not enter into possession until such latter date, is proper, and should be admitted to rebut the presumption of ownership, in an action to charge the mortgagee as owner of the ship. *Bryan v. has taken and caused to be recorded a bill of sale of the vessel absolute in form, but intended only as collateral security, and who has never taken the control of her, can recover on a policy insuring against "barratry of the master, unless the insurer be owner of the vessel," although he has charged the premiums to the real owner, if such charge has been without the owner's authority.¹

Where the execution of a bill of sale is made a condition precedent to the payment of any portion of the subscription raised by a joint stock company for the purchase of a vessel, it is at the risk of the owners until the bill of sale is executed, or the vessel itself is delivered to the stockholders. If it is burned before such conditions are performed, a subscriber who has paid a portion of his stock may recover back the money so advanced.² So where a sale of a vessel is made part cash, and the balance of the purchase money to be paid upon delivery by the vendor to the vendee of a bill of sale, the plaintiff cannot recover the balance until the condition precedent is performed.³

By the law of the United States relating to the registering and enrollment of vessels, the inaccurate recital⁴ or the omission of the certificate of registry in a bill of sale, does not, as in England, avoid the sale, but merely deprives the vessel of her American character.⁵ A bill of sale is good though it does not recite the certificate prescribed by the registry act.⁶ If a bill of sale of a ship containing blanks for the recital of the register is executed and delivered, and afterwards the blanks are filled up by the consent of the vendor and vendee, it will be good.⁷

3. Sale by the Builder.—Where a ship builder agrees to construct a vessel for the purchaser, no property is vested in the party for whom it is constructed until it is finished or delivered,⁸ though it be agreed that payment shall be made to the builder during the progress of the work, and such payments are made accordingly.⁹ But this general rule does not prevail where the vessel is constructed under the superintendence of the party for whom she is

In the Sam Slick, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 289, it is held that the vessel in process of construction under a contract between the merchant and the builder, does not usually, at least against third persons, become the property of the merchant upon his making the first payment.

A ship was built upon a special contract providing that certain portions of the price should be paid according to built or his agent, and payments for her based upon the progress of the work are to be made by installments as the work is done. In such cases, the person for whom the vessel is built is regarded as the real owner.¹ Nor does this rule apply to a conveyance of the keel and other parts of the unfinished vessel; such a conveyance vests the property in the vendee and draws after it all subsequent additions.²

If the parties agree that the vessel shall be built of a certain kind of material, the purchaser assumes the risk of defects which are naturally incident to such material.³ But if a ship is ordered for a special and designated purpose, there is an implied warranty of fitness for that purpose.⁴

Where the contract has been completed and the vessel has been finished and delivered to the party for whom she was built, and has been approved by him, the property vests in such party.⁵ Delivery of a vessel to the agent of the person for whom she was built unaccompanied by any written conveyance and with no intent on the part of the agent to appropriate the property to his own use, must be understood as vesting the title in the owner.⁶ Where it is stipulated that the vessel shall be built, calked, finished, and ready for the rigger to complete his work, launched and delivered afloat in the harbor at a certain time, the builder is bound to have the vessel ready for the rigger so that she may be completed and launched on the day specified.⁷ So, where it is stipulated that a vessel shall be delivered at one of two places at the option of the purchaser, it is the duty of the vendor to give notice to the purchaser when the vessel is completed that he might make the election.⁸

4. Sale Under Decree of Admiralty.—The sale of a vessel under a decree in rem by a court of admiralty passes the title as to all the

the progress of the work; part when the keel was laid, and part when they were at the light plank. The builder signed his certificate to enable the purchaser to have the ship registered in his own name. Held, that the property vested in the latter from the time of the registry. Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; 7 E. C. L. 310. See Battersby v. Gale, 4 A. & E. 458; Atkinson v. Bell, 8 B. & C. 277; 15 E. C. L. 216.

For a rule contrary to that stated in the text, see Moody v. Brown, 34 Me. 107; 56 Am. Dec. 640, where it is held that payments made by installments passed the property.

What Is Sufficient Delivery.—Where a vessel is sold to be delivered to the buyer in a certain city, and the buyer does not designate a particular place for delivery, the seller is justified in tendering a delivery at safe anchorage in the harbor. He cannot be called upon to place the vessel in a dry dock, in order that the purchaser may there examine her. Lincoln v. Gallagher, 79 Me. 189.

world if it is a condemnation as prize, or for forfeiture as contraband, or for smuggling, or to pay salvage, or discharge a bottomry bond, or to satisfy any of the liens known to maritime law.¹ But if the ship is sold for unseaworthiness, the validity of the sale will depend upon the actual facts; if it is shown to have been necessary and justified, the sale will be valid, but if unnecessary the sale will be void.² To invalidate the sale of a vessel, under the decree of a court of admiralty, on the ground of fraud, it must appear that the proceedings were both collusive and fraudulent, and that the purchaser was cognizant of the fraud.³

5. Transfer Without Delivery.—If a ship be at sea,⁴ or abroad, a transfer by mortgage,⁵ or bill of sale without delivery,⁶ or a delivery without a bill of sale, is good as against all persons.⁷ But

An American vessel was captured by a French privateer and carried into a Spanish port where she was dismantled and abandoned. The vessel having stranded upon the beach was some months after sold at auction by the commanding officer of the port, and purchased by an American, who afterwards repaired her at great expense and brought her to New York, where she was claimed by the original owner. In an action of trover brought by the original owner, it was held that the vessel, being abandoned and a wreck, and having been sold according to the laws of Spain, in cases of wreck or derelict, the property was transferred by the sale to the purchaser, who thereby acquired a valid title against all the world. *Grant v. the transferee must take possession on her return,¹ for the title of a vessel transferred in this way is subject to be defeated if there should be negligence in not taking possession of her within a reasonable time after her return to port.² The same doctrine is applicable to goods which, while at sea, are the subject of a bona fide sale; all the interests of the vendor becoming vested in the vendee, and the captain becoming his agent respecting them or their proceeds as soon as he receives notice of the transfer.³ The sale of a vessel⁴ and cargo abroad at the time, by bona fide bill of sale, is valid against the vendor's creditors, provided the vendee takes possession thereof without delay upon the return of the vessel.⁵

In Gardner v. Howland, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 601, the court by Parker, C. J., said: "Indeed it is a well-known principle in the law-merchant, that the sale of a vessel at sea with a delivery over to the vendee of such evidence of title as may be in possession of the vendor, is sufficient to pass the property in the vessel against creditors, provided there be no such negligence in regard to possession when the vessel arrives as will give ground for presumption of fraud."

The owners of one-half of a vessel, some months previous to their bankruptcy, conveyed by a bill of sale, as security for a debt of $2,000, their half, the other half being owned by the master, and agreed to assign all future policies of insurance thereon as further security for the same debt, which was done, it being agreed that the mortgagors might use the vessel for their own benefit until default of payment. The bill of sale was not recorded. The vessel, at the time of sale, was at sea in possession of the master. Between that time and the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the vessel came once to Boston, the place of business and residence of the mortgagors, and twice to Bath, the place of business and residence of the master, but the mortgagees did not take possession. Five days before filing the petition, they sent notice to the masters of the bill of sale, the said mortgaged moiety of the vessel having been sold by direction of the assignee. Held, that the proceeds of the sale should be paid to the mortgagee. *Winsor v. 7. What Property Passes to Purchaser.—Whatever is on board a ship for the object of the voyage and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging to the owners and constituting a part of the ship and her appurtenances, passes with a sale thereof.¹ A chronometer designed to discover the longitude at sea;² a rudder and cordage purchased for a ship;³ sails and rigging, though detached;⁴ fishing stores of a vessel engaged in the fisheries,⁵ and provisions, have been held to pass as appurtenances.⁶ So, upon the sale or transfer of a vessel, the certificates of registry or enrollment pass to the purchaser.⁷

8. Rules Regulating Sales of Ships.—If a builder constructs a ship by order of the purchaser, there is an implied warranty on the part of the builder that it shall be, both as to workmanship and as to the materials used in its construction, fit for the service for which it was ordered.⁸ Where a purchaser buys a ship already constructed, he must examine, judge and test it for himself, and is ordinarily bound to discover any obvious defects or imperfections.⁹ The sale may, however, be effected by representation.¹⁰ But if it is reduced to writing, new stipulations or representations cannot generally be shown by parol evidence.¹¹ A seller of a ship "with all faults" is not liable for latent defects, unless he has used some artifice to conceal them from the buyer.¹² If he knew of secret defects in her and used means to prevent the purchaser from discovering them, or makes a fraudulent representation of her condition at the time of the sale, he cannot avail himself of the stipulation "sold with all faults."¹

What is necessary to make a sale complete is a question of law, but whether the necessary facts exist or not is for the jury to determine. If the parties do not themselves understand the trade to be completed, but that some other material thing is to be done before the rights of either can be changed, it cannot be so treated by others.² The title does not ordinarily vest on a first payment.³ If the sale is unconditional, the purchaser is liable for repairs and supplies, though he may never have taken possession of the vessel, and though neither the master nor the merchant furnishing the supplies had any knowledge of the sale.⁴ Where one advances money to enable another to buy the vessel and takes a power of attorney to sell her and deposits the bill of sale received by the purchaser as security for the advance, the party holding such bill of sale acquires, by its delivery to him, no hypothecation of the vessel or the interest in her enabling him to maintain a petitory or possessory action; he takes only a naked power to sell.⁵

9. Mortgages.—The mortgage of a ship is in some respects

The vendor of a ship represented her to have been built in 1816, when in fact she had been launched the year before. Held, the vendee was entitled to recover damages as it was a false representation, although it was agreed that the ship should be taken "with all faults." Fletcher v. Bowsher, 2 Stark. 561.

Where an advertisement for the sale of a ship described her as "a copper fastened vessel," adding that she was to be taken with all faults without any allowance for any defects whatsoever, and it appeared that she was only partially copper fastened, held, notwithstanding the words "with all faults without any allowance for any defects" the vendor was liable for the breach of warranty. Shepherd v. Kain, 5 B. & Ald. 240; 7 E. C. L. 82.

But where one sold a vessel and in the bill of sale described her as of certain dimensions and burden, when in truth she was of less dimensions and burden, it was held that the purchaser could not maintain an action of the case against the seller as for a false affirmation and promise. Dyer v. Huntington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 298.

A, the sole owner of a ship, made a written contract to convey her to B upon payment of his note for the price. From that time B had exclusive control of her, appointed the master, etc. Held, that A was not liable for money furnished to the master to pay for repairs. Tyler v. Holmes, 38 Me. 258.

analogous to a bottomry bond, but in others wholly different.¹ It has none of the characteristics or attendants of a maritime loan, and is entered into without reference to navigation or perils of the sea.² A court of admiralty has no power to decree the sale of a mortgage, nor on that account can it declare the ship to be the property of the mortgagee and decree the possession to be given to him.³ In order, however, to give validity to a mortgage upon a vessel alleged to be a vessel of the United States employed in the coasting trade, as against the State statute, it must be made to appear that she was registered and also that she was enrolled and licensed as required by the act of Congress.⁴

Where there is no language in the mortgage, and no other agreement to constrain or control it, the mortgagee has the right of immediate possession.⁵ If he fails to take possession as soon as he reasonably can, he is liable to have his title defeated by any third party who acquires a right to the ship in ignorance of the mortgagee's prior title, and in good faith, unless protected by some agreement or the provisions of some statute in his behalf.⁶ Where a vessel mortgaged to secure a debt remains in the mortgagor's possession, a mortgagee has no lien upon her earnings, and cannot compel a specific appropriation of them to the payment of the debt.⁷ If he takes possession, or does any act which can be deemed in some degree equivalent to public notice that he is owner, this actual or apparently actual possession, added to his legal title as owner, seems to confer upon him the responsibilities and liabilities of an owner.⁸

If a mortgagor of a vessel sells it without authority from the mortgagee, a bill in equity will lie against the mortgagor's estate, to subject the proceeds of the sale, existing in the form of notes, to the payment of the mortgage.¹ So, where a part owner of a vessel and cargo mortgages his share thereof, and afterwards he and the other owners appoint an agent to sell the whole cargo, such agent after selling the cargo and receiving the proceeds is liable to the mortgagee in an action for money had and received of the mortgagor's share of those proceeds.²

10. Registration.—The subject of the registration of sales and mortgages of vessels is regulated by the laws of Congress.³ The requirements of these laws cannot be superseded or supplied by those of a State law.⁴ If the vessel transferred is one to which the laws of Congress do not apply, the conveyance may be recorded according to the provisions of the statute of the State where she belongs.⁵ Registered, licensed or enrolled vessels are those whose transfers are required to be recorded by the act in question.⁶ The authorities do not agree as to the place where such conveyances should be recorded.⁷ The object of the

The statutes of Alabama requiring the registration of mortgages, deeds of trusts, etc., on personal property, do not apply to vessels for the navigation of the ocean. The evidence of title in them is to be looked for in their ship-papers and registration, according to the act of Congress. Fontaine v. Beers, 19 Ala. 422.

5. 1 Parsons Shipp. & Adm. 62; Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen (Mass.) 280; Best v. Staple, 61 N. Y. 71.

A canal boat or scow is not a "vessel of the United States" within the meaning of the act of Congress declaring that no bill of sale, mortgage, etc., of any vessel, or part of a vessel, of the United States, shall be valid, unless the same shall be recorded in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is registered and enrolled. Hicks v. Williams, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 523.

6. U. S. Stat. 1850, ch. 27.

7. The following cases hold that a bill of sale in order to be valid need not be enrolled in the customhouse; the enrollment secures the privileges of an American vessel. Hozey v. Buchanan, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 215; Wendover v. Hogeboom, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 308; Ring v. Franklin, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 1; Weston v. Penniman, 1 Mason (U. S.) 306.

But in Potter v. Irish, 10 Gray (Mass.) 416, it is held that the record must be made in the customhouse in the district of the last registry and enrollment, though not the home port of the vessel. See Chadwick v. Baker, 54 Me. 9.

So according to Lawrence v. Hodges, 92 N. Car. 672; 53 Am. Rep. 436, a vessel, although used wholly within the navigable waters of a single State, if enrolled, is within the provision of the Federal statute requiring a mortgage on her to be recorded in the customhouse.

In The Martha Washington, 25 L. R. 22, it is held that conveyances must be recorded at the home port of the vessel.

So in Foster v. Chamberlain, 41 Ala. 158, it is held that a mortgage of a vessel, to be valid against a subsequent purchaser or creditor of the mortga-statute requiring sales and mortgages to be recorded is for the purpose of giving notice to other parties than those connected with the transaction. The mortgage of a vessel of the United States is not, therefore, as against the parties and such persons as have actual notice thereof, rendered invalid by the failure to record it.¹

Delivery of Goods to the Vessel.—The liability of the vessel for the safe carriage and delivery of goods, commences when they are received by the master or by any person authorized to receive them on board the ship or at the wharf near the ship for the purpose of carriage thereon.⁴ When the captain and the owners employ a stevedore to load their vessel they are liable for his acts.⁵ So when lightermen are employed by the captain to convey the cargo in lighters to the vessel, delivery to them is delivery to the vessel, but if they are employed by the owner of the goods, the goods are not delivered until put on board of the vessel.⁶ In the first instance the responsibility of the vessel

Notice in the newspapers of the time or place of landing goods from a vessel, is not such a notice as places goods at the risk of the consignee, unless knowledge of that notice be brought home to him. Kohn v. Packard, 3 La. 224; Caruana v. British, etc., Steam Packet Co., 6 Ben. (U. S.) 517.

Where goods were put on board the vessel of the defendant to be carried to Albany, and on arriving there, were, by the defendant's direction, put on the wharf—held that this was not a delivery to the consignee, although the goods were taken away (without the direction of the consignee) by a carter usually employed to transport his goods, and the greater part actually received by the consignee; and that the defendant was liable for the goods not actually delivered. Ostrander v. Brown, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 39.

A delivery of a cargo on the wharf in New York, with notice to the owners of the time and place of unloading, places the goods at their risk, and discharges the ship from liability. The Grafton, Olc. Adm. 43.

Delivery Into Customhouse.—The shipowners agreed to deliver the cargo at the ship's tackles at Rio. Held, that a delivery into the customhouse there under the order of the officers, and the payment of duties by the consignees, was not enough; that the bill is not ready to receive them and the carrier's vessel is destroyed while waiting for an opportunity to discharge her cargo,¹ or if the consignee is unable to receive them by reason of the action or prohibition of the government, the shipowner is entitled to freight.² But if the ship is obliged by perils of the sea to put back to her port of departure and it is there found that the cargo has been rendered worthless,³ or if the ship is prevented from arriving at its place of destination by blockade or any similar of lading contemplated a delivery into the power and possession of the consignees, and therefore that the ship was responsible for a seizure by the Brazilian customhouse officers by reason of the imperfect manifest made by the master, it appearing that the error arose from the inattention of the master who was informed of the law by the officers. Howland v. Greenway, 22 How. (U. S.) 491.

Leaving goods on the wharf, although according to the usual course of business and in a part of the wharf appropriated to goods awaiting inspection by the customhouse officers and suitably fenced and protected—held, no sufficient delivery to the consignees. The Ville de Paris, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 276.

Delivery to Wharf-master.—Though a wharf-boat is the customary place for discharging a cargo, yet a delivery to the wharf-master is not a delivery to the consignee, unless there is a special authority in the former, or a ratification of his receipt of the goods, express or implied. Nor can a local custom, which would substitute another contract for that of the bill of lading, and make the wharf-master consignee of all freight landed at the port, overrule the law nor be heeded. Harkness v. Church, 10 La. Ann. 64.

Delivery to Agent of Consignee.—If the consignee sends a person to take care of the goods at his own expense, and he neglects to do so, the master is not responsible for any damage arising from sending them on shore. Rice v. Clendinning, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 183.

When Notice Not Necessary.—Where the contract in terms or as affected by the usage of trade, is to deliver the goods at the wharf, notice to the consignee of their arrival is not necessary. Ely v. New Haven S. Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 207; The Boskenna Bay, 40 Fed. Rep. 91.

Where a bill of lading provides that the consignee is bound to be ready to receive his goods on ship's readiness to discharge, otherwise that they may be landed without notice, and at his risk, after they leave the deck of the ship, and the consignee is not ready to receive on ship's readiness to discharge, the ship may land the goods, without notice; and if landed in suitable weather, with opportunity to remove them without injury, the vessel is absolved from all further liability. The Surrey, 40 Fed. Vessels Quarantined.—Where a vessel, on her arrival in port, is ordered to perform quarantine, and the cargo is landed and stored at the quarantine grounds, the shipper or consignee of the goods is bound to pay the expense of landing and storing. Rice v. Clendinning, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 183.

A shipped goods on board a vessel, the captain undertaking, by the bill of lading (the dangers of the sea only excepted), to deliver them at a designated place, for which freight was to be paid at stipulated prices. The vessel, having received damage from a gale, put into a port short of the port of destination, where, upon examination, it was found that a portion of the goods were damaged, which were then sold for the benefit of the owners. In an action by the captain against the cause, no claim for freight can be maintained by the shipowner against the shipper.¹ The owner or his agent may, however, waive a completion or a further prosecution of the voyage by accepting the goods at any other port than that from which they were shipped.² If the owner is forced to pay damages for goods lost by stress of weather, it is the same as if they had been delivered, and he is entitled to a recovery of his freight.³ If, after notice of the arrival of the goods, the consignee refuses to receive them, it is the duty of the carrier to take care of them for the owner.⁴ If the carrier, upon due and diligent inquiry, is unable to find any consignee, or person representing the owner, to whom he can deliver the goods or give notice of their arrival, he is not obliged to take them again on board his vessel or retain them in shipper, to recover the balance due for freight, held that it could not be recovered, the goods not having been delivered at their port of destination. Halwerson v. Cole, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 321; 40 Am. Dec. 603.

Where a vessel puts in at an intermediate port in distress, and it is there found that a portion of the cargo has been rendered worthless by perils of the sea, while the residue is not of sufficient value to warrant continuing the voyage, and such portion is therefore sold by the master, and the voyage broken up, no claim for freight, either in full or pro rata, or upon a quantum meruit, can be maintained by the shipowner against the shipper. The Ann D. Richardson, Abb. Adm. 499.

A merchantman having letters of marque, and having taken goods on freight, may chase an enemy in sight, but cannot cruise out of her course to look for one. If, therefore, she is injured in an action with an enemy in sight whom she chased, by which she is forced into a port different from that of her destination, she is entitled to freight. But if the goods are not afterwards sent to the port of delivery, she is entitled only to freight pro rata itineris, unless prevented from sending them by the freighter. Hooe v. Mason, 1 Wash. his own possession and at his own risk and charge for an unlimited period. But he may, after a reasonable time has expired, store the goods for the owner with some suitable and responsible warehouseman and thereby discharge himself from further liability.¹

When the bill of lading is silent as to the place and mode of delivery intended, the consignees of goods have a right to expect a delivery according to the established custom and usage of the port, and in that part of the port customarily used for the discharge of such goods, and the vessel is bound and has a right to make delivery accordingly.² If she goes elsewhere, she must make good the additional expense thereby caused to the consignees.³ But the customary discharge of goods by a carrier at its own wharf, however, imports no obligation to discharge there

It had long been the custom to deliver teas on the New York side between piers 16 and 47, East River. The vessel might have obtained a berth at pier 47 on the following day. For her convenience and on promise of indemnity by warehousemen in Brooklyn, she discharged her cargo in Brooklyn, against the protest of many consignees. Held, that the latter should recover their extra expense of cartage, freightage, etc., from Brooklyn to New York.

if the dock is full or there be other good reason to discharge elsewhere.¹

The wharf on which the goods are delivered must be fit and safe for the deposit of them, and they must be discharged with all proper care and skill.² If the cargo is not safely unladen in a safe and proper place, the vessel is liable for damage which may be sustained by reason of the insufficiency of the wharf.³ Where the consignee is authorized to select a wharf, and one is selected by his agent, the ship is not answerable for a loss caused by its breaking down, unless the loss arises from some unreasonable or improper use of the wharf.⁴ If the cargo consists of a number of consignments, it must be put upon the wharf in such a way as to render, as far as possible, the different consignments accessible to their respective owners.⁵ And if by the negligence of the captain the goods are confused so that an excess is delivered to one consignee at the expense of another, the ship is liable.⁶ So where the bill of lading does not specify any time for the delivery of the goods at the port of destination, the delivery must be made within a reasonable time and with reasonable expedition.⁷ The consignees are entitled to a reasonable opportunity to ascertain whether goods delivered to them correspond in quantity and condition with the description given in the shipping documents, and the liability of the master and owner remains undischarged during such period.⁸ The owner of the vessel takes the risk of working weather during the time required for the unloading of the cargo.⁹ The consignee takes the risk of roads and means of transportation from the dock, and is bound to take the cargo as delivered to him at the vessel's side and to remove it as fast as the vessel can be reasonably discharged.¹⁰ The cargo must be discharged at a suitable time. A discharge at a time when, for want of notice, the goods cannot be removed by the consignee before they would be destroyed by frost, is not a discharge at a suitable time.¹¹ A holiday will not, however, interfere with the continuation or completion of the discharge of cargo, where the work was commenced prior to the occurrence of that day and there is no statute or general usage to the contrary.¹

6. Forwarding by Other Carriers.—When a cargo is once shipped on board, the carrier has a right to carry it to its destination.² The shipper cannot intervene and demand the goods at any intermediate port without paying the full freight for the voyage, even though circumstances may occur which will cause great delay and perhaps great diminution of value.³ But the carrier must, however, transship goods in cases of necessity.⁴ Where no damage to the cargo is to be reasonably apprehended from remaining on board during the probable delay of a few days, the vessel is not required to transship.⁵ When a vessel is driven into port for repairs, the books are not very definite as to the time allowable to the master to repair and go on with the voyage.⁶ But if the ship is capable of being repaired in a reasonable time, the owner ought to repair her, and continue his voyage, so as to claim his freight.⁷ If it is a perishable cargo which may be a total loss by reason of the delay, it has been held to be the imperative duty of the master to forward the cargo in another vessel.⁸ Where there is no necessity for transshipping goods, the carrier is liable for all loss.⁹

The master of a ship driven into an intermediate port by stress of weather should take a bill of lading of the goods transferred to another vessel, for their delivery to the original consignee.¹ The owner of the cargo will be liable for any increased freight arising from the hire of another vessel.² But he cannot be held answerable both for the whole freight originally contracted for and the freight paid on the transshipped goods.³ If the master refuses to hire another vessel or refuses to forward the goods, the shipper is entitled to receive them without making any payment of freight.⁴

7. Transshipment of Goods.—Where goods are shipped on one line to be transferred to another, the owner is chargeable with the responsibility of a common carrier for goods transshipped.⁵ He does not lessen his liability by reshipping, but is responsible for the delivery of the goods unless they are lost or so injured as to prevent their delivery by unavoidable accidents.⁶

Goods bought in Connecticut and delivered by the vendor on board a vessel at New York to be carried to England, were receipted for, the receipt specifying the price of freight; but before bills of lading were executed, and before the ship sailed, she was burnt with the goods on board without any actual negligence on the defendants' part. Held, that they were liable as common carriers for the loss of the goods. Lake-man v. Grinnell, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 625.

The proprietor of a steamboat is liable for cotton carried by him, which is destroyed by fire on board his boat, unless he can show a well-known, recognized and established usage to exempt such carriers from such liability, except in cases where a higher rate of freight is paid, or unless a general and well-understood notice to that effect has been given by this particular carrier, so as to constitute a part of the implied contract; and even in those cases the carrier should be held to strict proof of diligence and care. Singleton v. Hilliard, 1 Strobb. (S. Car.) 203.

Loss by Collisions.—A common carrier by water is not liable for the loss of cargo by collision at sea. The New Jersey, Olc. Adm. 415.

The owners of a steamboat, being a common carrier, are liable for a shipment on board of her, lost by means of a collision with another vessel at sea, without fault imputable to either, where there was no express stipulation between the owners of the steamboat and the owners of the goods exempting them from the perils of the sea. *Plaisted v. When casks of wine are injured by grease washed up from the ship's hold which is attributed to her defective condition, she will be liable for the damage caused thereby. Tennessee v. Tardos, 7 La. Ann. 28.

Where the master of a coasting vessel anchored in a harbor, consented to the absence of the crew, and he alone remained on board and the vessel was stranded on a ledge by a gale, which arose after the crew left, held that the vessel was liable for the damage done by the stranding of the cargo, the absence of the crew rendering the vessel unseaworthy. A vessel shipped two consignments of scrap iron. The master apprehended shortage in weight but did not keep the lots distinct, and discharging in the inverse order of receiving, delivered first to one consignee his exact weight, leaving a large shortage to fall on the other. Held, that it was the master's duty to have kept the lots separate or else to have taken security before delivering the whole weight to the first consignee, that he would make good his proportion of any deficiency in the whole bulk, and that the ship was liable as for a misdelivery in delivering to the first consignee more than his proportion of the whole weight shipped. Schultz v. The Pietro G., 38 Fed. Rep. 148.

A vessel had a consignment of iron rails for two several consignees. The discharge was made direct from the ship into cars of a railroad company, authorized by the consignees to accept delivery, the master indicating respondents' rails as they were put on the cars, but by a mistake, in which respondents' agent participated, one carload was forwarded to the wrong consignee. Held, that it was not the duty of the master to act as forwarder, and as the vessel properly delivered the rails, she was entitled to freight without rebate. Eaton v. Neumark, 33 Fed. Rep. 891.

The steamship A arrived in New York in February with one hold filled with green fruit, and general merchandise in the others. The 16th was a warm day, and the ship commenced to discharge the fruit, but stopped by request of certain consignees, with the assent of the libellant. All the fruit could have been discharged that day. The following three days were cold, and no fruit was discharged until the 20th and 21st, when, the weather having moderated, the discharge was completed and the fruit transferred to a warehouse. It was afterwards found to be frozen. The bill of lading excepted liability for damage to the fruit by frost, unless caused by negligence of the ship. Held, that opening the hatches on the 16th was not negligence, and that the fruit was frozen in the vessel, and not in the warehouse or on the passage thereto, and from such liability the vessel was protected by the exceptions in her bills of lading. Goods were shipped from New York to Rio Janeiro but not delivered to consignee because, through the neglect of the master of the vessel, they were not entered on the manifest or declared at the time of the delivery of the manifest to the customhouse officers, and were seized by the Brazilian government and forfeited for such omission. Held, that the vessel was liable for the value of the goods to the consignee. The Griffin, 4 Blatchf. In a contract by a common carrier by water, he impliedly undertakes that he has a competent knowledge of the navigation, and he will be liable for a loss occasioned by a want of such knowledge. Morel v. Roe, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 19.

A steamship running past Old Providence Island in mild weather had the land in sight for forty minutes. A slight haze rendered distances deceptive, and the master supposed himself some seven miles off shore. No soundings were taken and no calculations made to verify the supposed distance. In fact, the vessel was within a mile and a half of the shore, and afterwards struck upon a coral reef located on the charts with which the vessel was provided. Held, that such navigation was negligent. In re The City of Para, 44 Fed. Rep. 689.

In an action against the owner of a steamboat to recover the value of a span of horses which were lost by the sinking of the vessel in the river while being transported from Albany to New York, it appeared that the immediate cause of the accident and loss was the contact of the steamboat with the mast of a sloop which had been sunk in a squall two days before, which mast was out of the water 15 or 16 feet at low water, and was visible the day before and the same day of the accident. Held, that the loss was not caused by the inevitable accident, or act of God, but might have been avoided. *Merritt v. relation he bears to the transaction, is supposed to be possessed of the necessary knowledge to have avoided the difficulty.¹ But if the loss was attributable to both parties, it may be equally divided between them.² The measure of care against accidents which carriers in vessels must take to avoid responsibility is that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution would use if his own interests were to be affected and the whole risk were his own.³ As to the cargo delivered at its destination but injured through negligence, the measure of damages is the difference of the market price there in sound and in damaged condition.⁴

Carriers by water are required to remain by the ship in case it is captured or seized until a condemnation or all hope of recovery is gone.⁵ If the cargo is seized by failure of the carrier to give prompt notice of an attachment to the consignees, or to take legal means to secure the consignee's interests, he will be liable to the consignor for non-delivery.⁶ It is proper to give notice of an auction sale of damaged goods, but the failure to do so will not preclude the owner from recovering, when the proof of damage is corroborated by independent testimony, and there is no pretense of any bad faith or sacrifice of the goods, which have been sold by a duly licensed auctioneer.⁷

a. LOSS BY IMPROPER STOWAGE.—Carriers are liable for losses arising from a failure to exercise reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the stowage of the cargo.⁸ They must stow securely, keeping on the hatches during the last three days of the voyage. Held, that the burden was on those who owned the cargo, to show negligence in the vessel, and without such proof the ship was protected from liability by the exceptions of her bill of lading. The Portuense, 35 Fed. Rep. 670.

Crates of crockery were shipped from Liverpool to New Orleans, where they arrived in apparently good order; but on being opened many articles, the paper in which they were packed being wet with salt water, were found broken. They had been well stowed in a part of the vessel where damage from leakage was impossible; there had been no stress of weather; the vessel had shipped no water, and by regular pumping had been kept clear of ordinary leakage. BY JETTISON.—Where a jettison of cargo becomes necessary for the safety of the vessel, the owner and vessel are liable for the loss, if the peril of the ship is directly attributable to the want of diligence or skill upon the part of the master or crew.² On the question of whether a jettison was necessary, the court will determine whether the owner appointed a competent master, and whether he exercised reasonable skill and judgment.³ See JETTISON, vol. 11, p. 970.

d. DELAY IN DELIVERY.—A vessel is liable for the loss of a market,⁴ or diminution in value of the goods during a period of negligent delay after they have been taken on board.⁵ If a vessel is compelled to stop at an intermediate port to repair, the owner will be responsible for any damage from the delay in the delivery of freight where she is kept much longer than is necessary.⁶ But where the damage is caused by a delay coming within the exceptions in the bill of lading, the vessel is not liable if the delay is not caused by negligence.⁷ Nor will a vessel be liable for occupying double the time it ordinarily takes to make a voyage without some evidence showing culpable negligence on the part of the master or owner.⁸ If the consignee offers to receive goods at an intermediate port and tenders payment of full freight together

A steamboat is responsible to the consignees for the damage to goods shipped for transportation to them on board the steamboat and which became nearly valueless by the delay in transportation. Mahan v. The Olive Branch, 20 La. Ann. 257.

The master of a steamboat contracted with the plaintiff to transport merchandise from A to B within a reasonable time after its delivery at A. Owing to a fall of the river Missouri, the master could not navigate it with his own boat the space of two months, during which time merchandise was delivered at A. The river, in the meantime, was navigable by smaller boats. Held, that the master was not excused for delaying to transport the merchandise until the river was navigable by his own boat. *Collier v. with all incidental expenses, and the shipowner without a reasonable excuse, refuses to make such delivery, but, on the contrary, holds the goods in the ship until her arrival at the port of destination, the ship will be liable for all damages caused by reason of the detention.¹ The difference in the market value at the time of the delivery and the time when the goods should have been delivered, is the measure of damages for delay.²

c. NON-DELIVERY.—A carrier is prima facie liable for the non-delivery of goods.³ But in order to charge him, some evidence must be given on the part of the shipper or owner, of the non-delivery of the goods according to the requirement of the bill of lading.⁴ Very slight evidence will be sufficient to throw upon the carrier the burden of showing that the goods have been delivered.⁵ The master of a vessel may lawfully refuse to deliver goods to the consignee which, having been attached on his vessel, are carried to the port of consignment under an agreement with the sheriff that they should be returned.⁶ The rule of damages in cases where the shipper's goods are lost is that the carrier shall pay for the goods not delivered their net value at the port of delivery.⁷ He is not liable for any speculation or possible profits

In ascertaining the amount of damage sustained by a cargo of fruit, the best method, in the absence of direct evidence, is by a comparison of the price brought by the damaged fruit at a fair sale, with the market value of sound fruit of the same brands, sold at the same time; or if that is not obtainable, then by a comparison of the price brought by the damaged goods with the prices brought within a week before or after by other brands of the same invoice value at the place of export as the damaged fruit; or next, proof of the value abroad would be competent, with additions for differences in market. In re The Boskenna Bay, 31 Fed. If the owners of a vessel send her to a foreign port for a cargo, which the master procures by barter, the damages for a loss of the cargo are what the master paid for it to the person of whom he bought, and not what it cost the owners, on the whole, to obtain it by the adventure. To this may be added an allowance in the nature of freight for the voyage from the port, which has increased the value of the goods, and has been destroyed by the collision. The Glaucus, 1 Low. (U. f. PRESUMPTION IN CASE OF LOSS OR DAMAGE.—When goods in the custody of a common carrier are lost or damaged after their reception and before their delivery, the prima facie presumption is that the loss or injury is occasioned by the default of the carrier, and the burden is upon him to prove that it arose from a cause for which he was not responsible.² When he cannot make good his defense on some of the exceptions to his liability, he must pay the loss though chargeable with no negligence, and even when he has exercised every possible diligence to prevent it.³ If it appears that the injury is caused by the dangers of navigation or some cause within the exception of the bill of lading, then it devolves upon the shipper to make out that the damage might have been avoided

The carriers might easily have communicated with the owners of the cargo, and sought instructions as to the disposal of it; but they neglected to do so and sold the cargo upon their own authority at auction; after which the vessel sailed, and in due time arrived at the port of delivery. Held, that the owners of the cargo were entitled to recover the value of the cargo at the port of delivery, deducting freight and charges, and adding interest on the balance. The Joshua Barker, Abb. Where gold dust is received at San Francisco by a common carrier from that place to the city of New York, to be delivered by him at the latter place, and on receiving it he delivers to the shipper a bill of lading, which states that it is received on the Antelope at San Francisco, and that "on arrival at Panama the same is to be forwarded across the isthmus, and to be reshipped by one of the United States Mail Steamboat Company's ships to New York . . . and to be delivered in like good order and condition at the port of New York, dangers of the seas (land carriage and river navigation, thieves and robbers) excepted," and the gold dust is not delivered, the carrier is liable unless he shows that he was prevented from delivering it by some of these causes. *Simmons v. by the exercise of reasonable care and skill upon the part of the carrier.¹

Merchandise will be presumed properly packed unless there is something in the appearance or condition of the goods on their being opened after delivery affording ground for reasonable inference that they were packed in an unfit state for transportation, or some evidence is given to that effect.² So, where goods are shipped under a common bill of lading, it will be presumed that they will be stowed in the ordinary mode unless there is a positive agreement to the contrary, or circumstances from which this may be inferred.³ If the bill of lading contains a clause "not accountable for leakage, dust, or breakage, if properly stowed," the burden of proof is upon the carrier to show proper stowage.⁴

Proof that some part of the cargo endured the voyage without damage does not raise the presumption that damage to another part of the same cargo during the same voyage was occasioned by bad stowage. Motion of the ship sufficient to account for the damage being proved to have occurred during the voyage, the presumption in absence of other proof is that such motion caused the damage and when the motion of the ship is shown to have been caused by the sea, the exception of the bill of lading exempts

Where goods stowed near the deck are more liable to the sweating of the hold than those stowed low, and the goods in question, the character of which was known to the master, are peculiarly susceptible of injury from that cause, while others of the same kind on the same voyage and vessel are received uninjured, it will be presumed that the injury was caused by bad stowage, and the vessel, having receipted for the goods in good condition, will be liable. Montgomery v. The Abby Platt, 6 La. Ann. 410.

Where the shipper of goods took a bill of lading with the indorsement on the margin, "Weight and contents unknown," and on the arrival of the vessel at New Orleans they were condemned by the portwarden to be sold as damaged—held, that, under such a bill of lading, the common carrier had complied with his contract when he had delivered the box in externally good order and condition; and that the burden of proof rested on the consignor to show that the contents of the box were in good order and condition at the time of the shipment. Wentworth v. The Bealm, 16 La. Ann. 18.

If sufficiently heavy weather is experienced by a vessel to account for damage to cargo by motion of the ship, the presumption is that the damage was so caused, and not by bad stowage; and the fact that part of a cargo endures the voyage without damage raises no presumption that damage to other parts was caused by bad stowage. The Polynesia, 30 Fed. VIII. CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.—All who offer are entitled to passage on board a ship engaged in the carriage of passengers.³ But this right is subject to such reasonable regulations as the proprietors may prescribe. They are not bound to admit passengers on board who refuse to obey these regulations of the ship, or who are guilty of gross and vulgar habits, or whose characters are doubtful or dissolute or suspicious.⁴ Nor are they bound to admit passengers on board whose object is to interfere with the interests or patronage of the proprietors so as to make the business less lucrative to them.⁵ A refusal, however, should precede the sailing of the ship. After the ship has started upon its voyage, it is too late to take exceptions to the character of the passenger or to his peculiar business, provided he violates no flexible rule of the vessel in getting on board.⁶ The master cannot lawfully remove from his vessel a passenger whose behavior is proper, and who has tendered his fare.⁷

Where a common carrier gives public notice that he will receive passengers for transportation, he contracts an engagement with the public which his duty as a common carrier binds him to perform.⁸ Thus, where by public notice or established usage a common carrier by water has a place of starting, the hour of starting, the course to be pursued, etc., damages arising from a non-compliance with such regulations cannot be excused by stress of weather.⁹ If the weather prevent

The owner of a ship bound from New York to California, agreed with C, at New York, to take him as a cabin passenger, with his luggage, at $300; not more than fifty cabin passengers to be received, for which reason the fare was raised from $250, the usual charge; a vessel from arriving at a port where she has contracted to be at a specified time to receive passengers, a carrier may be required to return the passage money.¹ The carrier may be liable for damages arising from unreasonable delay along the route, occasioned by the fault or neglect of those legitimately engaged in the line of transportation.² If the performance of the engagement is rendered impossible by reason of stress of weather or other cause, the passenger cannot be called upon to pay his passage money if not already paid. If he has paid it, he can recover it back from the master or shipowner.³

state-rooms to be fitted up between decks on each side, with a free passage between, disincumbered with freight, for ventilation and exercise; and the vessel to sail on the 5th of January. C paid his passage money on the 2d. He lived in Massachusetts, and prepared for the voyage at considerable expense, and went to New York at the time appointed for sailing, when he found that the state-rooms had no space between them for ventilation or exercise, in consequence of the increased number of them, and that 72 cabin passengers had been engaged, many at $275 each, so that the vessel was overcrowded with passengers and cargo, and incommmodious, and dangerous to health. C refused to embark, and demanded back his passage money, which was refused. He then, on the 20th of January, filed a libel in rem against the ship, for the return of the passage money and for his damages. Held, that the admiralty had jurisdiction of the case, and that the ship was liable. The Pacific, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 569.

Libelant purchased a passage ticket on steamer Chateau Margaux from New York to Bordeaux. The ticket, like the company's prospectus, expressly stated that the passage would be direct. After the sale of the ticket, the steamer took cargo for Santander, Spain, and sailed direct for that port, without notice to libelant, and was consequently six days longer in reaching Bordeaux. Libelant proved no special damage arising from the delay, except loss of time and the annoyance incident thereto. Held, on suit brought to recover damages for the delay, that the deviation was a breach of the contract, and that libelant should recover the amount of passage money paid. De Colange v. The Chateau Margaux, 37 Fed. Rep. 157.

1. Loss of Baggage and Other Property.—The master of a vessel engaged in carrying passengers for hire is responsible as a common carrier for their baggage if lost.¹ He will not, however, incur this responsibility unless the baggage is delivered to him or his servants.² If delivered to his servant, it must be to such servant as is intrusted to receive the goods and not to one engaged in other duties.³ What shall be deemed baggage within the rule of the carrier's liability is not clearly defined.⁴ It ordinarily includes such things as the traveler usually has with him as part of his baggage,⁵ wearing apparel and bed and bedding.⁶

A vessel may be held responsible for money or jewelry deposited by travelers with the captain, when the deposit is a necessary one.¹ But where the property is taken from a stateroom or stolen from the pocket of a passenger, in the absence of proof that the robbery was committed by one of the employés, the ship will not be liable.² If a passenger loses his ticket while on board a steamboat which requires passengers to buy tickets before going on board and to deliver them up on landing, the loss falls on himself and not on the carriers, and it is his duty on landing to pay the amount of his fare.³

2. Injuries and Wrongs to Passengers.—A vessel is liable for injuries to passengers resulting from the acts of the owner or any of his servants while acting within the scope of their employment.⁴ If a passenger is injured through negligence of those in charge

Merchandise.—The owners of a steamboat are not liable for trunks containing nothing but merchandise. Pardee v. Drew, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 459.

1. Dunn v. Branner, 13 La. Ann. 452.

The owners are responsible as common carriers, for specie received on board by the master, on proof either that he received it as freight to be transported and delivered at the port of destination, or that he received it and afterwards applied it to the payment of the expenses of the vessel on the trip. Sulakowski v. Flint, 22 La. Ann. 6.

2. Abbott v. Bradstreet, 55 Me. 530; McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 115; Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 275.

A passenger on board a steamboat, a common carrier of passengers, occupied a state room with a fellow-passenger, a stranger, which was assigned to them by the officers of the boat. The state-room window was broken, and the attention of the stewardess was called to it. When the first passenger retired for the night, she rolled up her dress, in the pocket of which were about $30, and a gold chain, and placed it at the foot of the upper berth. Early in the morning she found the dress unrolled, that the money and chain had disappeared, and that a pillow which had been placed in the window was not in it. She testified that the woman with her could not have taken the property without awakening her, as they occupied the same berth. Held, that the owners of the boat were not liable for the loss, because the money and chain were not in their custody. McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 115.

A ship is liable for injuries inflicted by the bite of a dog, on board by consent of the master and owners, upon a person lawfully on board, and entitled to be carried safely. The Lord Derby, 17 Fed. Rep. 265.

Where a passenger was injured by an explosion of a boiler, the steamboat proprietors were held liable for damages, although the inspector, exercising his office in pursuance of the above act, had certified that the conditions of the act were complied with. Swart-hout v. New Jersey, etc., Co., 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 222.

In an action by T against a steamboat company, to recover for personal the vessel is liable.¹ The fact that no fare is paid will not free the owner from the obligations of a carrier of passengers.² In case the life of a passenger is lost by reason of the negligence of those in charge, the vessel is liable in damages.³ But a vessel is not liable if the injury happens from sheer accident or misfortune, where there is no negligence or fault, or where no reasonable caution, foresight, or judgment of those in charge would have prevented the injury.⁴ Nor is a ship responsible for any injury resulting from a latent defect in the machinery which could not have been avoided by the exercise of the highest degree of care.⁵ Nor is a ship liable where the passenger's negligence contributes to the injury.⁶ The passengers are also entitled to respectable treatment from those in charge, and there is an implied stipula-injuries from being struck by the handle of a loaded box of coal, while he was a passenger on a boat which was then stopping at a point on the Mississippi River two hours, which point was not his destination, there was evidence that the servants bringing coal on board, came on the forward staging and went off on the after staging placed near; that T, while following servants thus going off, was struck by such handle in the hands of servants rushing on; and that T used ordinary care. There was no proof of any rule or regulation requiring passengers to a more distant point to remain in the cabin, and not go on the staging. Held, that the company was liable for the injury. Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. True, 88 Ill. 608.

1. The Nederland, 15 Fed. Rep. 63. A custom to permit persons usually employed on steamboats to go free of charge from place to place is a reasonable one, and the master has power to act under it and bind the owner, and a person of this description who had obtained a free passage on a steamboat by the master's permission was lawfully on board under this custom, and the owners of the boat were liable to him for any damage by a want of proper care on the part of themselves or their agents. *The New World v. A child three years old was left to itself by its nurse when on board a steamship, and, wandering to a part where it had no right to be, was injured by the rudder chain which ran in an open box on the main deck. Held, that the ship was not liable. The Burgundia, 29 Fed. Rep. 465.

Libelant, a steerage passenger on the steamship F, in coming down from the deck to go to his quarters, fell through the fore hatch in the lower between-decks, breaking his leg. The hatch was ordinarily kept covered, and the passengers were in the habit of walking over it. It had probably been opened to bring up provisions, but there was no light to enable libelant to see whether it was open, nor was there any rail or guard around it. Libelant testified that he had never seen the hatch open, and did not know that it was liable to be open. No caution had even been given to the passengers in regard to it. Held, that the vessel was liable for libelant's injury, his damages being fixed at $1,600. Behrens v. the Furnessia, 35 Fed. Rep. 798.

Where there was an open doorway from which steep stairs descended to the hold which was in such a location that it was liable to be mistaken by a passenger for the stairs which ascended to the upper deck, held that the owners of the boat were guilty of negligence in not having it so effectually lighted as to warrant a passenger making such a mistake as soon as he faced and was about to step into the opening. The Pilot Boy, 23 Fed. Rep. 103.

tion that female passengers shall be protected against obscene conduct, lascivious behavior and every immodest approach.¹ The utmost vigilance and care must be exercised in maintaining order on board a ship, in guarding the passengers against violence from whatever source arising which might reasonably be anticipated and naturally be expected to occur in view of all the circumstances and of the number and character of the persons on board.² Reasonable means and opportunity of leaving the boat must also be provided.³ These duties which the law imposes in relation to the treatment and accommodation of passengers during the voyage necessarily ceases on the termination of the voyage. If during the voyage a contagious disease breaks out in the vessel, and on her arrival in port the city authorities find it necessary, in order to prevent the spreading of the infection, to have her sick passengers sent to the hospital to be treated, the owners of the vessel cannot be made liable for the expenses incurred thereby.⁴

IX. FREIGHT—1. In General.—The general rule is that freight for the entire voyage can only be earned by due performance of the voyage.⁵ Where there is no default or inability of the carrier-ship to perform the voyage and the shipowner is ready

1. Nieto v. Clark, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 145; Flint v. Norwich, etc., Transp. Co., 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 158.

The owners of a steamboat, who undertake to transport passengers, are bound to take such precautions as will protect their passengers from the violence which may reasonably be expected from disorderly persons on board, even though such disorderly persons are soldiers, and are carried by compulsion. Flint v. Norwich, etc., Transp. Co., 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 158.

Liability for Assault and Battery.—A passenger, assaulted and beaten by the master, may recover damages therefor of the owner of the ship; but actual damages only, not punitive, should be allowed. McGuire v. The Golden Gate, 1 McAll. (U. S.) 104; Loy v. The F. K. Aubury, 28 Ill. 412; 81 Am. Dec. 792.

When the master assaults a passenger and turns him out of the cabin into the steerage, compelling him to remain there during the voyage, and permitting him to be robbed and treated with indignity by the other passengers, he will be responsible not only for the actual loss, but also the mental and bodily suffering to which the passenger has been exposed. Block v. Bannerman, 10 La. Ann. 1.

A rule or custom of a steamboat requiring persons of color who are passengers thereon to be excluded from the regular table, and take their meals upon the guards of the boat or in the pantry, is not a reasonable one, and cannot be enforced in Iowa. In this case, the officers of the boat were held liable for assault and battery for forcibly removing from the table a quadroon who had embarked at Burlington to be transported to Quincy, Ill., where she was engaged as teacher. Coger v. North Western Union Packet Co., 37 Iowa 145.

The officers of a steamship have a right to reserve a table in the dinner cabin for their own use, and to cause an intruder thereat to be removed by force, so far as force may be necessary. Ellis v. Narragansett Steamship Co., 111 Mass. 146.

A bill of lading recited that additional freight should be payable on the total value of certain precious stones, should their real value be discovered to be greater than was declared in the bill of lading; and the consignee received the goods and paid the freight according to the value stated in the bill of lading, and entered them at the customhouse under the bill of lading, and under an invoice that stated their value at a much greater sum than that made in the bill of lading. Held, that the stipulation for additional freight upon the actual value was valid, and that the consignee was liable for the additional freight, though he was but an agent employed by the shipper to sell the goods on commission. North-German Lloyd v. Heule, 44 Fed. Rep. 100.

Owing to a quarrel between the master of a canal boat and stevedores employed on a ship, caused by the improper discharge of iron ore into the canal boat from the ship, two days were lost in the discharge of the ore. By the loss of this time all the ore could not be forwarded on canal boats before the canal closed, and this action was brought against the owner of the vessel by the owner of the ore to recover the extra freight paid. Held, that the ship was liable for the misconduct of the stevedore's men, as its agents, in the improper discharge; and the libellant was also at fault through the delay of the boatman, affreightment. At most it only suspends it, and when restitution takes place, the parties are also restored to their antecedent rights.¹ If no restitution is made, the captor acquires all the rights of the owner, and among them, the right to freight; but on the same conditions, that is, by completing the voyage, safe delivery, etc.²

2. Freight Pro Rata.—If a ship on her way is disabled by the perils of the sea or is prevented by any other cause from further proceeding, the master may tender the goods to the shipper at an intermediate port; and if the shipper is willing to receive them, the ship is entitled to freight pro rata itineris.³ Acceptance of part of the property at the end of the voyage, the other part being lost, will also entitle the ship to freight pro rata.⁴ But the acceptance must be voluntary.⁵ If the master refuses to repair his vessel and send on the goods or to procure other its agent, in securing a proper adjustment of the difficulty; that the libellant, therefore, should recover half its damages, each side looking for further indemnity to the respective agents employed. Kalion Chemical Co. v. The Iroquois, 38 Fed. Rep. 151.

Freight pro rata itineris is not earned where, from necessity, cargo is accepted before arrival at the port of destination. The Joseph Farwell, 31 Fed. Rep. 844.

Acceptance May be Inferred.—Where the consent of the consignee to accept his goods at an intermediate port may be inferred from his actions, freight pro rata is due. Gray v. Waln, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 229; 7 Am. Dec. 642.

Acceptance by Insurers.—Where there has been a voluntary acceptance by the insurers of a damaged cargo, at an intermediate place before its arrival at the place of destination, the master is entitled to freight pro rata itineris. The Mohawk, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 153.

vessels for that purpose and the owner of the goods then receives them, this is not such a voluntary acceptance as will render him liable for freight pro rata.¹ A claim of the proceeds of the sale of the cargo by the master does not amount to a voluntary acceptance.² So when, by capture, the owner of the vessel has been incapable of performing the voyage and the shipper has been compelled to receive his goods at the hands of the admiralty, freight pro rata is not due.³ And where an entire freight is payable for an entire cargo and a part is destroyed during the course of the voyage, a refusal by the consignee to receive the part offered to him will free the consignor from the obligation to pay freight pro rata.⁴

3. Liability for Freight.—Where goods are shipped by the consignor under a contract or for his benefit, he is originally liable for freight.⁵ But whenever the consignee engages to pay it, he also may become responsible. It is usual for bills of lading to state that the goods are to be delivered to the consignee or to his

Where a vessel was captured and carried into Halifax, and libeled, and A in Halifax obtained an appraisal of the vessel and cargo, and, on giving a bond for the amount, received the property, which he sent consigned to his agent in New York, with directions to deliver the cargo to the owner on his indemnifying A for his bond and all expenses, but which the owner refused to do, held, that no pro rata freight was due. Marine Ins. Co. v. United Ins. Co., 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 186.

The owner of a vessel, immediately after her capture, abandoned her to the insurers, and claimed for a total loss, which was paid to him. The vessel and cargo were afterwards restored, and freight was paid to the underwriters. Held, that the freight, before and after the capture, was susceptible of apportionment, and that the owner was entitled to all the freight earned to the time of the capture. Kennedy v. Baltimore Ins. Co., 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 367.

A neutral vessel was chartered to take on board a cargo in the river Thames, and deliver it at Amelia Island, freight free, and there to take on board a return cargo for which a sum specified in the charter-party was to be paid as freight, which exceeded the freight which would have been paid on the return cargo alone, had it been totally unconnected with the outward voyage. The vessel was captured on the outward voyage, and the cargo condemned as enemy's property. Held, the freight pro rata itineris should be allowed on the outward voyage as on a quantum meruit. 5. Holt v. Westcott, 43 Me. 445; 69 Am. Dec. 74; Hayward v. Middleton, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 121; 15 Am. Dec. 615.

The original shipper, unless he appears to act as agent for others, is bound, by the ordinary bill of lading, to pay the freight money. This is the original bargain made, and does not cease to bind the shipper until it is discharged by actual payment, where freight is once earned and becomes due. Gilson v. Madden, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 172.

The shipper, being the owner of goods sent by a generalship, is liable for the freight at all events, independassigns, "he or they paying the freight," in which case the consignee and his assigns, by accepting the goods, become by implication bound to pay the freight.¹ The carrier need not deliver the goods until the freight is paid.² The clause in bills of lading that the cargo is to be delivered to the person named or his assignees, "he or they paying the freight," is only inserted as a recognition or assertion of the right of the master to retain the goods carried until his lien is satisfied by payment of the freight, but it imposes no obligation on him to insist on payment before delivery of the cargo. If he sees fit to waive his right of lien and to deliver the goods without payment of the freight, his right to resort to the shipper for compensation still remains.³ The consignee has a right to examine the goods and see that the obligations of the bill of lading have been fulfilled by the ently of the bill of lading; and it is immaterial whether the ownership appears on the bill of lading, or not. Grant v. Wood, 21 N. J. L. 292; 47 Am. Dec. 162.

Consignees of a cargo are liable for freight upon delivery, though but agents to sell. Gates v. Ryan, 37 Fed. Rep. 154.

They are liable, though without fault of the ship's crew it has, by exposure to severe weather before shipment, become worthless at the time of the delivery. Seaman v. Adler, 37 Fed. Rep. 268.

A consignee is liable for the freight of goods carried, delivered and accepted, although the master has receipted in the bill of lading for a larger amount of goods than was actually put on board; especially if it appears that the consignee has an agreement with the shippers, by which he is only to pay them for what he received, unless he can recover of the master the difference between this amount and the amount named in the bill of lading. Ryder v. Hall, 7 Allen (Mass.) 456.

If a consignee have notice that the freight is payable to the master and not the charterer, he is bound thereby. Shaw v. Thompson, Olc. Adm. 144.

A consignee is not liable for the freight of property never delivered to him, where it is not shown that he ever accepted the consignment, or authorized its entry at the customhouse by the consignor who took possession of it. Perret v. Sauvinet, 2 La. Ann. 559.

Assignees.—Under an ordinary bill of lading, the assignee of the bill of lading is bound to pay the freight. Trask v. Duvall, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 181; Merian v. Funck, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 110. He is bound to pay it unless the assignee has bound himself by an express agreement to pay it as surety for the assignor. Trask v. Duvall, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 181.

If the assignee of a bill of lading, in his capacity of assignee, receives goods, he is liable for the freight upon them, even though the assignment to him was made after the goods had been sent to a public warehouse under the general delivery order. New York, etc., Nav. Co. v. Young, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 187.

A person to whom a bill of lading is assigned as security for the payment of the price of goods purchased of him by the shipper of such goods under such bill of lading, is not liable to the shipowner for the freight. Swett v. Black, 2 Sprague (U. S.) 49.

3. Wooster v. Tarr, 8 Allen (Mass.) 270.

If goods shipped, by a general ship, by bill of lading, to be delivered to a specified consignee, "he paying the freight," are delivered by the captain to the consignee without payment of the freight, the owner who shipped the goods is not thereby discharged from his liability to pay freight. Holt v. Westcott, 43 Me. 445; 69 Am. Dec. 74; Spencer v. White, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 236.

shipper.¹ If there are any losses properly chargeable to the carrier, the consignee of the property may recoup from the freight earned.² If part of the goods are destroyed or damaged during the voyage, the carrier will be entitled to full freight by delivering the part uninjured and paying for the rest, provided the consignee receives the part delivered.³

If all the goods are lost and the carrier pays their full value, he will be entitled to have his freight deducted.⁴ If the vessel is prevented from commencing her voyage, and the goods are never delivered, no freight can be claimed.⁵ But after the voyage is begun any delay by perils of the sea, and without any default of the master, will not defeat a claim for freight if the vessel finally arrives and delivers the cargo.⁶

If the goods are so injured as to have lost their mercantile value when they reach the port of destination, the shipper cannot abandon them to the master and pay no freight. Freight must be paid though the goods are rendered worthless.⁷ He may, however, be held responsible for the loss where the damage is caused by his negligence.⁸ If the abandonment occurs at an intermediate port where the voyage is broken up by the stranding

5. Shooting at a Mark.—The defendants went into a field in proximity to certain roads and houses, taking with them a rifle which would be deadly at a mile, and set up a mark at which they all fired shots from a distance of about a hundred yards. No precautions of any kind were taken to prevent danger from such firing. One of the shots thus fired killed a boy in a tree at a distance of three hundred and ninety-three yards from the firing point. Held, that the defendants had been guilty of a breach of duty in firing at the spot in question without taking proper precautions to prevent injury to others, and that they were guilty of manslaughter. *Reg. v. 3. "A 'shop,' in the sense of the statute (one defining arson) implies a house or building in which small quantities of goods, wares, or drugs and the like are sold, or in which mechanics labor and sometimes keep their manufactures for sale." An act which made it a felony to break and enter into a dwelling, shop, warehouse, or countinghouse, was held not to include a workshop, but only that kind of shop which has some analogy with a warehouse; that is, one for the sale of goods. Reg. v. Saunders, 9 C. & P. 79; 38 E. C. L. 42.

Examples.—An English Market act provided that "every person, other than a licensed hawker, who shall sell or expose for sale in any place within the prescribed limits, except in his own dwelling place or shop, any articles in respect of which tolls are by the special act authorized to be taken in the market, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty." "Shop," within this exception, has been held to include a wooden shed affixed to a house and supported on wooden posts. Ashworth v. Heyworth, 10 B. & S. 309. It does not include a vessel moored in a canal. 4. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 424; quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

The seashore must be understood to be the margin of the sea in its usual and ordinary state. Thus, when the tide is out, the low-water mark is the margin of the sea; when the sea is full, the margin is the high-water mark. The seashore is, therefore, all the ground between the ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark. Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 439; 4 Am. Dec. 155; Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.) 257; Doane v. SHORT—SHORT ENTRY.

Definition.

A river, in which the tide does not ebb and flow, or other non-tidal water, has no shores in the technical sense of that term. But the expression, when applied to such river or water, means those portions of the bank which touch the margin or edge of the stream at low water.¹

SHORT.—See GAMBLING CONTRACTS, vol. 8, pp. 1004, 1011.

SHORT ENTRY.—See ENTRY, vol. 6, p. 649.

U. S. v. Pacheco, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 587; Cutts v. Hussey, 15 Me. 241.

More Extended Meanings.—But in Matthew v. Chaplin, 40 Conn. 400, where defendant contended that the word "shore" has a definite and inflexible meaning in law, denoting the space between ordinary high and low water mark, it was said: "It is true that the word 'shore' is now generally used in treatises on navigable waters in that sense; but Lord Hale says there be three kinds of shore (Hale's De Jure Maris, ch. 6). One of these three kinds is a space between high and low water mark. Both the other kinds embrace portions of the land above ordinary high-water mark. Webster, in his dictionary, defines 'shore' thus: 'The coast or land adjacent to the ocean, sea, or a large lake or river.' He says we use the word to express the land near the border of the sea or of a great lake for an indefinite extent; as, when we say 'a town stands on the shore.' Bouvier defines 'shore' as 'land on the side of the sea, or a lake or a river.' He gives to the compound word 'seashore' the more limited meaning of land between high and low water mark." And it was held accordingly, where a deed of land reserved the privilege "of piling up seaweed on the shore," that the word "shore" was not used in the strict sense contended for by the defendant, and that the right was reserved to pile seaweed upon the adjoining upland. See also People v. Jones, 112 N. Y. 605.

The westerly terminus of a tunnel was defined in a certificate filed under the New Jersey general railroad law to be on the "western shore of the Hudson River and within or near Jersey City or Hoboken." It was held that the word "shore" was "not used in its strictest sense to mean the land between the limits of ordinary high and low water, but in the more extended and popular sense. In the latter signification of the word, Jersey City is built upon the western shore of the Hudson River." State v. Hudson River Tunnel R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 548. See also Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. St. 519.

Ordinary Tides—Greatest Tide.—Although it appears from the above cases that by the common-law definition the "shore" is the "ground between the ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark," the definition of the civil law is "all that tract of land over which the greatest water flood extends itself." Morgan v. Negodish, 40 La. Ann. 246; Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 358. And see also upon the common-law definition, Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. St. 519.

"In a conveyance, when a line of 'shore' is used as an abuttal unexplained by circumstances, it may be ambiguous, leaving it doubtful whether the seaside or the land side of the shore is intended. In general, it will appear by the context which." Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray (Mass.) 335; 66 Am. Dec. 369. But in general the boundary is the land side. See BOUNDARIES, vol. 2, p. 504; Long Beach Land, etc., Co. v. Richardson, 70 Cal. 206; More v. Massini, 37 Cal. 432; U. S. v. Pacheco, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 587. Compare Hathaway v. Wilson, 123 Mass. 359.

Sides of a Railroad.—“Sides,” as used in a Missouri statute requiring fences to be erected on the sides of a railroad, means the vacant spaces between the roadbed and the outer lines of the company’s land—not necessarily the dividing line itself. Marshall v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 51 Mo. 138.

“The side or sides of any carriage-way or cartway,” § 51, 27 & 28 Vict., ch. 101, means any land forming part of the highway, though not part of the metaled road; but does not include land not part of the highway, though by the side of the road. Easton v. Richmond, L. R., 7 Q. B. 69.

“In the primary sense of the word, a person signs a document when he writes or marks something on it in token of his intention to be bound by its contents. In the case of an ordinary person, signature is commonly performed by subscribing his name to the document, and, hence, ‘signature,’ is frequently used as equivalent to ‘subscription;’ but any mark is sufficient if it shows an intention to be bound by the document. Illiterate persons commonly sign by making a cross.” Sweet’s L. Dict.

“A signature consists both of the act of writing a party’s name, and of the intention of thereby finally authenticating the instrument. It is not necessary that a testator should write his entire name. His mark is now held sufficient. And if the signature is made by another guiding his hand with his consent, it is held sufficient.” 2 Greenl. Ev. 674, followed in Watson v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 466; Vines v. Clingfost, 21 Ark. 312. See also WILLS.

Signature Includes a Mark—(See also MARK, vol. 14, p. 457).—All the definitions include a mark, and no dictionary limits a signature to a written name. BAIL, vol. 2, p. 21; BILLS AND NOTES, vol. 2, p. 318; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, vol. 8, p. 717. Knox’s Estate, 131 Pa. L. 335, and in the last case it was held that the fact that the person signing by a mark could write would not weaken the force of a mark as his signature.

Initials.—In Origet v. U. S., 125 U. S. 240, it was held that the initials of a judge were not his signature, within a statute requiring a bill of exceptions to be authenticated by the signature of the presiding judge. But initials have in many cases been held to constitute ments. These references should all be consulted, as it is obvious that authorities upon the signature of a deed may apply as well to wills, to the memorandum in writing required by the Statute of Frauds, etc., etc.

SIGNING JUDGMENT—I. IN ENGLISH PRACTICE.—Judgments, like the pleadings, were formerly pronounced in open court, and are still always supposed to be so; and they are consequently always considered as taking place in term time. But, by a relaxation of practice, there is now in general, except in the case of an issue at law, no actual delivery of judgment, either in court or elsewhere. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause is in such a state that by the course of practice he is entitled to a valid signature. See BAIL, vol. 2, p. 21; BILLS AND NOTES, vol. 2, p. 318; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, vol. 8, p. 717.

Christian name held a sufficient signature to a will. Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. St. 220.

Indorsement Upon a Promissory Note.—Within the meaning of a statute, making it a crime to obtain "the signature of any person to any written instrument" by false tokens or pretenses, an indorsement to a negotiable promissory note was held to be a "signature to a written instrument." People v. Chapman, 4 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 58.

Obtaining a Signature by False Pretenses.—See FALSE PRETENSES, vol. 7, p. 742.

Signature Not Necessarily at the End of an Instrument—Signed Distinguished from Subscribed.—(See also SUBSCRIBE).—"The word 'signed' in reference to a contract or other instrument in writing, is generally understood as a writing of the name at the bottom; yet now, neither in its ordinary nor legal use, is it confined to that office; but the word 'subscribed' in its habitual use, and according both to its popular and literary signification, is limited to a signature at the end of a printed or written instrument." James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 13; 55 Am. Dec. 376; People v. Murray, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 468; Miller v. Pelletier, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 102; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, vol. 8, p. 717; WILLS.

Printed Signature.—In general where a signature is required, the party's name printed upon the instrument with his sanction will suffice. Mezchen v. More, 54 Wis. 214; Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 62; Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286; Brown v. Butchers', etc., Bank, 6 Hill (N. Y.)

An indictment is sufficiently "signed" by the prosecuting attorney, when his name with his official title is printed at the bottom with his sanction. Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96; 53 Am. Rep. 491.

Signatures of Public Officers.—See PUBLIC OFFICERS, vol. 19, p. 378; PROCESS, vol. 19, p. 222.

Countersign (see also COUNTERSIGN, vol. 4, p. 342) means to sign what has already been signed by a superior; to authenticate by an additional signature. Gurnee v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 167. In that case it was held, where the signatures of several city officers were required by statute to a warrant, that the prefix "countersign" placed before one of the names did not invalidate the signature.

judgment, obtains the signature or allowance of the proper officer of the court, expressing generally that judgment is given in his favor, and this is called signing judgment, and stands in the place of its actual delivery by the judges themselves.¹

II. IN AMERICAN PRACTICE.—Signing judgment is an actual signing of the judgment on the record, by the judge or other officer duly authorized.²

SILVER PLATE.—See note 3.

SIMILAR.—(Compare SIMILITUDE).—The word “similar” is often used to denote a partial resemblance only, but it is also often used to denote sameness in all essential particulars.⁴

SIMILITER.—In pleading, likewise; the like; the name of the short formula used either at the end of pleadings, or by itself, expressive of the acceptance of an issue of fact tendered by the opposing party; otherwise termed a joinder in issue.⁵

I. 184, it was held, where a testator after making bequests to particular charitable institutions by name, provided for the accumulation of a trust fund, one-fourth of the income of which was to go to “charitable institutions similar to those mentioned,” that the institutions named were not “similar,” and were not entitled to take any part of the trust income.

Similar Jurisdiction.—See JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 316.

5. Burr. L. Dict. “The acceptance of the issue in case of a conclusion to the country—i. e., of trial by jury—is called the similiter, that word, when the pleadings were in Latin, being a prominent one in the formula. . . . As the party has no option in accepting the issue when well tendered, and as the similiter may, in that case, be added for him, the acceptance of the issue, when well tendered, is so much a matter of form that by the statute of jeofails, the omission of the similiter is, as we have seen, after verdict, cured (Virginia Code 1873, ch. 177, § 3); and perhaps it is so at common law independently of any statute. (Bennett v. Holbech, 3 Saund. 319a, n. (6); Sayer v. Pocock, Cowp. 407; Grundy v. Mell, 1 B. & P. 28; Nadenbousch v. McRae, Gilmer (Va.) 230). . . .

It will be observed that the rule expresses that the issue must be accepted only when it is well tendered. For if the opposite party thinks the traverse bad in substance or in form, or objects to the mode of trial proposed, in either case he is not obliged to add the similiter but may demur. (Stephen Pl. 238.) The similiter serves a twofold purpose. It not only marks the acceptance of the question itself, but also of the mode of trial proposed. It seems to have been introduced originally with a view to the latter point only; for in ancient times, the resort to a jury could in general be had only by the mutual consent of each party, and the similiter imported that consent. Accordingly, no similiter, or other acceptance of issue, is necessary when recourse is had to any of the other modes of trial, and the rule in question does not extend to these.” 4 Minor’s Ins. (2d ed.) 924.

6. Similar Distinguished from “in the Similitude of.”—In State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 392, it was held that the word “similar” was not equivalent to “in the similitude of” within the meaning of a statute respecting counterfeit money. The court, by Tenney, J., said: “The word ‘similitude’ is derived from the Latin similitudo, which is translated ‘similitude, likeness, resemblance.’ It

Definition. SIMPLE CONTRACT—SIMPLE TRUSTS. Definition.

SIMPLE CONTRACT—(See also CONTRACT, vol. 3, pp. 825, 830).—A contract which is not under seal nor of record; not a specialty.

SIMPLE LARCENY—(See also LARCENY, vol. 12, pp. 791, 793).—Simple larceny is plain theft, without any circumstances of aggravation, as opposed to compound, usually termed aggravated larceny, or larceny accompanied by circumstances which tend to increase the heinousness of the offense, as larceny from the person, larceny from a house,—taking property from under the protection of a person or house being justly considered as indicating a greater degree of depravity in the thief than the taking of the same article when not under such protection.¹

SIMPLE TRUSTS—(See also TRUSTS).—A simple trust, sometimes called a passive trust, corresponds with the ancient use and is where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settler, is left to the construction of law.²

is manifest from the same section of the statute that the word 'similitude' was designed to be used as synonymous with the word 'forge' or 'counterfeit.' The meaning given to the words 'to forge,' is 'to make in the likeness of something else;' and 'to counterfeit' is 'to make in imitation of something else, with a view to defraud, by passing the false copy for genuine or original.' Webster's Dict." See generally COUNTERFEITING, vol. 4, p. 333; FORGERY, vol. 8, p. 452; Brown v. Com., 8 Mass. 59.

A United States statute (§ 4557 of the Rev. Sts., as amended by the act of January 16, 1887) enacts that every person who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any coin "in resemblance or similitude" of the silver coins of the United States, shall be guilty of a felony. In U. S. v. Otey, 31 Fed. Rep. 68, it was held that an indictment under this statute might omit the words "in resemblance or similitude." The court, by Deady, J., said: "The words of the statute, 'in resemblance or similitude,' are a mere variation or exposition of the principal and preceding words thereof, 'falsely make, forge, or counterfeit,' each of which means to make something in the resemblance or similitude of another. If they were dropped out of the statute, its legal signification and effect would not be modified or restrained. To falsely make, forge, or counterfeit a silver coin of the coinage of the United States is to make something in the 'resemblance or similitude' of such coin. The explanatory words add nothing to the legal sense and common acceptation of the principal ones. Therefore the former are necessarily included in the latter. It is an instance of tautology and verbosity, inherited from the past, in which the statute abounds." See generally FORGERY, vol. 8, p. 495.

Distinguished from Special Trust.—Trusts are of two kinds, simple and special. Vaux v. Parke, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 25. In the former, the trustee is passive and performs no duty, and the trust is there purely technical. In the latter he is active, being an agent to execute the donor's will; and the trust is operative. A simple trust gives to the cestui que trust a right to the possession, control, and disposal of the property, and the legal estate becomes executed in him, unless when it is necessary to remain in the trustee to preserve the estate for the cestui que trust, or to pass it to others. A special trust, on the other hand, maintains the legal estate in the trustee to enable him to perform the duties devolved on him by the donor, and gives to the cestui que trust only a right in equity to enforce a performance of the trust. Vaux v. Parke, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 25. See also Barnet's Appeal, 46 Pa. St. 392; Rife v. Geyer, 59 Pa. St. 393; 98 Am. Dec. 351; Dodson v. Ball, 60 Pa. St. 496; 100 Am. Dec. 586.

Definition.

SINCE—(See also SUBSEQUENTLY).—The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time.¹

SINE DIE.—Without day; indefinitely; without a day appointed for a further meeting or hearing. The term is applied to the final adjournment of an assembly, for whatever purpose called, or to the final dismissal of a defendant.

"Since" a day named does not ordinarily include that day. Monroe v. Acworth, 41 N. H. 201.

2. Single Man, Single Woman.—Acts which gave a "single woman" who had a bastard child the right to sue the putative father for its maintenance have been held to include in that expression, not only a widow (Anthony v. Cardenham, 2 Bott. 194; Reg. v. Wymondham, 2 Q. B. 541; 42 E. C. L. 798), but a married woman living apart from her husband. Rex v. Pilkington, 2 E. & B. 546; 75 E. C. L. 546; Reg. v. Collingwood, 12 Q. B. 681; 64 E. C. L. 681; Rex v. Luffe, 8 East 193. Compare Stacey v. Lintell, 4 Q. B. Div. 291.

But the term will not include a woman single at the birth of her child but who has since married. Stacey v. Lintel, 4 Q. B. Div. 291; Tozer v. Lake, 4 C. P. Div. 322.

And it has been held, where the object and context of the statute required it, that the phrase "single man" included a single woman. Silver v. Ladd, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 217. And see for a fuller statement of that case MAN, vol. 14, p. 86.

Single Tenement.—Where a part of an entire tract of land upon which plaintiff's mill was built, including the pond or water-basin which was a necessary adjunct or appurtenance to the mill, was in a certain county, the remainder being in another, it was held that this was a "single tenement" within the meaning of the Pennsylvania statute giving jurisdiction to the court of either county. Finney v. Somerville, 80 Pa. St. 59.

Single Sitting.—"It seems to have been once thought, that, in the act of Anne, which gave the loser at play a right to recover by action his losses above 10*l.*, when lost at a single sitting, and gave an informer the right to recover them and treble value besides, if the loser did not take proceedings in time, the expression 'a single sitting' might receive two different meanings according as the plaintiff was a loser or an informer; that is, that a sitting suspended for dinner should be held single and continuous when the loser sued, but be broken into two sittings when the action was brought by the informer, on the ground that in one case the act was remedial and therefore entitled to a beneficial construction, while in the latter it was penal and therefore was to be construed strictly." Endlich on Statutes, § 387; citing Bones v. Booth, 2 W. Bl. 1226.

3. Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 483.

4. Singular and Plural.—The rule of construction that "words importing the singular number only may also be applied to the plural of persons and things" (Code, § 798) is only to be applied to the words of a statute or instrument when the plain and evident sense and meaning of the words, derived from the context, render such a construction necessary to effect the intention of the maker of the statute or instrument. *Garrigus v. SISTER—(See also BROTHER, vol. 2, p. 599; STATUTES OF DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION).—A woman who has the same father and mother with another, or one of them only. In the first case she is called sister simply; in the second, half-sister.²

SITTINGS.—In practice, the holding of a court, with full form, and before all the judges, as a sitting in banc; the holding of a court of nisi prius by one or more of the judges of a superior court instead of the ordinary nisi prius judge.⁶

A gift to "sisters" may include half-sisters. Luce v. Harris, 79 Pa. St. 432.

But, if, by holding sisters in a will to include half-sisters, the testator's property would be diverted to strangers, that construction will not be adopted, owing to the familiar rule that where a will is capable of two interpretations that one should be adopted which prefers those of the blood of the testator to strangers. Wood v. Mitcham, 92 N. Y. 379. See also WILLS.

3. Sit in any Case.—See CASE, vol. 3, p. 30.

4. The charter of Jersey City empowers the board of public works to purchase "sites" for certain necessary public buildings. In State v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 168, the court, by Woodhull, J., said: "A site, in the sense of the act, means only so much land as is reasonably required or needed for the location and convenient use of some particular necessary building, . . . not a tract of unlimited extent, designated for the location and use of such buildings as might, in the near or distant future, become necessary, but only so much land as in the judgment of the board was reasonably required for the purposes of that one building." Accordingly, it was held that a purchase of nine acres of land for a city hall was unauthorized, there being no determination of the board that so large a tract was needed for the city hall.

5. By the constitution of Maryland, it is provided that the party against whom a decision is made, may have the point or question reserved for the consideration of the court in banc; but the motion for the reservation of the point, must be entered of record during the "sitting" at which the decision was made. It was held that the word "sitting" as here used, was not synonymous with "term" of the court, but only includes the time between the decision and the adjournment of the court for the day. Costigin v. Bond, 65 Md. 122. Compare SITTINGS.

6. Stephen's Com. 422, 423.

Sittings Equivalent to Term.—An Oregon act provided for the holding of a district court in one place in each judicial district, and for "sittings" in each county for the trial of issues of fact. It was held that the word "sittings" may be regarded as signifying "term." The court by Wait, C. J., said: "The district judges in their 'sittings' in the several counties for the trial of issues of fact, attended as they were by clerks, sheriffs, juries, and all the paraphernalia of courts of record, were holding district courts, and the duration of each of these sittings was a 'term' of court." Gird v. State, 1 Oregon 311. Compare SITTING.

Sittings in Bank or Banc.—The sessions of a court, with the full bench present, for the purpose of determining matters of law argued before them. Black's L. Dict.

SITUATE—(Compare SITUS).—To have a situs; a place or position.¹

SITUATION.—See note 2.

SITUS.—Site; location; situation. A place where a thing is. Real property has always a fixed situs; and so, of course, the actual situs of tangible chattels can always be readily determined. But it is obvious that the situs of intangible chattels, such as choses in action, must be conventional. At common law, however, rules have been established which assign a situs or locality to every subject of personal property for the purposes of administration and probate; and there seems to be no reason why these rules should not be extended to cases arising under the recording acts.³

1. And. L. Dict. Anderson says that in the United States, the term "situated" has been more commonly used than "situate" in such expressions as "all that tract of land situated," etc. The term "situate" is, however, still very common.

"Generally speaking, a house may be said to be situate on all the land within the same inclosure, necessary for its proper enjoyment, and actually so used and occupied." Orr v. Baker, 4 Ind. 86.

2. An action was brought by the plaintiff for the death of her husband caused by a fall into an excavation, dug by the defendant, adjoining the highway. It was claimed for the defense that plaintiff's husband was drunk. The trial court instructed that "ordinary care means that degree of care which may reasonably be expected of a person in the situation of plaintiff's husband at the time the accident occurred." It was held that the word "situation," as here used, had reference to the probable surroundings of the plaintiff's husband at the time of the accident, and not to his physical and mental condition, and therefore there was no error in the charge. Buesching v. St. Louis Gas-Light Co., 73 Mo. 219; 39 Am. Rep. 503.

I. DEFINITION.—Slavery is properly a state of involuntary servitude for life.¹ A slave is a person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no freedom of action, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another.²

II. INCAPACITY TO TAKE OR HOLD PROPERTY.—The peculiar relations of slaves to each other and to the white population of the South produced different rules of property from those belonging to any other class of people, and dissimilar to the other disabilities. It was a universal rule that the property of the slave was that of his master, and that he could neither take nor hold property.³

A conveyance in trust to slaves to cultivate and receive the profits, was held void.⁴ Following the same rule, a bequest to a

The United States, in their sovereign capacity, have no particular domicile, but possess, in contemplation of law, an ubiquity throughout the Union; and the debts due by them are not to be treated like the debts of a private debtor, which constitute local assets in his own domicile." slave was void,¹ and he could not take in such a case even through the interposition of a trustee.²

III. MARRIAGE.—The practical questions which arise to-day from the defunct institution of slavery, are those growing out of slave marriages, and relating to the rights of the children of such marriages. The customary slave marriage was for most purposes a nullity and was not governed by the rules of law applicable to free marriages; yet where it did not interfere with the doctrines of slavery and the rights of the master, effect was given to it so far as possible.³

Bequests in Contemplation of Emancipation.—But where a testator provided for certain slaves serving his children until such slaves were thirty years old, and then each was to have twenty-five acres of land, neither the conversion of the land into money nor release of such service before the time fixed will defeat the trust. Clement v. Riley, 33 S. Car. 66. And in general, trusts for the benefit of slaves in contemplation of emancipation were upheld. Hoover v. Brem, 43 Miss. 603; Estill v. Deckerd, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 497; Brown v. Brown, 12 Md. 87; Cowan v. Stamps, 46 Miss. 435.

Thus, in Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 990, it was held that slaves cohabiting as husband and wife might be witnesses for and against each other. But in Georgia the rule was otherwise. Williams v. State, 33 Ga. Supp. 85. In Andrews v. Page, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 653, it was said by the court that there were "circumstances under which the courts of this State recognized the relation of husband and wife, and the ties of consanguinity, as existing among slaves, as well as among free persons and free persons of color; and we hold that a marriage between slaves, with the consent of their owners, whether contracted in common law form or celebrated under the statute, always was a valid marriage in this State, and that the issue of such marriages were not illegitimates. We do not hold that such marriages were followed by all the legal consequences resulting from the marriage of white persons."

Mr. Bishop well states the effect of a slave marriage. "Since there was recognized among slaves the same distinction between matrimony and fornication as among freemen; since slave marriages were for most purposes invalid when tested by the general law, simply by reason of the incompatibility of the duties of common marriage with those due from the slave to the master; and since by universal sentiment and public opinion, ripening into a law for slaves, their customary marriages were valid as far as in the nature of the case they could be,—they are deemed to have been, not null in the widest sense of the word, but only null as compared with ordinary marriage; and were good in law for any purpose for which they could so be held, not inconsistent with the master's superior claims or the general policy of the law of slavery. This rule would seldom permit any validity to be assigned them in the every day litigation of the courts, hence judges would naturally speak of them as void." 1 Bishop on Mar. & Div., § 659.

Marriage Between Master and Slave.—In Pearson v. Pearson, 51 Cal. 124, it was held that a marriage between a Emancipation alone, whether general or special, apparently had no effect upon the slave marriage. But emancipation accompanied by the consent of the parties to a transmutation of the slave marriage into a legal one, or by continued cohabitation, had the effect of rendering the imperfect slave marriage a valid and legal union.¹ In those States where a formal solemnization is master and his female slave contracted within a jurisdiction where such marriages were lawful, manumitted the slave. The court said: "There being no law or regulation at the time prevailing in the territory of Utah interdicting marriage between a white and a black person, we think that such an intermarriage legally had there between a master and his female slave, neither party being otherwise incapacitated to contract marriage, operated, by analogy to the rule of a common law already adverted to, the manumission of the slave woman, since such manumission was indispensable to her assumption of her new relation of wife to her former master. She certainly could not be, in contemplation of law, both the slave and wife of a person."

Where slaves had children and lived as man and wife till the fall of 1866, and the State constitution in 1865 provided for the ratification of marriages between negroes, it was held that she was entitled to dower in his lands, although he had in October, 1866, abandoned her, and regularly married another woman by whom he had had a child before marriage, and with whom he lived until his death. Washington v. Washington, 69 Ala. 281.

"The slave, in entering into marriage, did a moral act; and although not binding in law, it was no violation of any legal duty. If, after the emancipation, there was no confirmation by cohabitation or otherwise, it is obvious there would be no grounds for holding the marriage as subsisting or binding. But, as in the case of other parties incapacitated, we perceive no good reason for holding that the contract may not be assented to and ratified after the incapacity or disability is removed. And in harmony with these views, the supreme court of Louisiana have expressly decided that a marriage contracted in a state of slavery may be ratified and become binding by mutual assent and cohabitation after the slaves have attained their freedom." Wagner, J., in Johnson v. Johnson, 45 Mo. 600; citing Girod v. Lewis, 6 Martin (La.) 559. And in Girod v. Lewis, 6 Martin (La.) 559, it was held that a slave marriage became binding by the subsequent emancipation of the parties, apparently ipso facto, without regard to their continued cohabitation or assent. See also Pierre v. Fontenette, 25 La. Ann. 617; Pearce's Succession, 30 La. Ann. 1168.

Mr. Bishop says: "The doctrine is, that, since the invalidity of slave marriages, whether deemed more or less or perfectly complete, was in consequence of their antagonism to the rights of the master, while yet the universal and universally known custom which sanctioned them was law up to the point of such antagonism, the same rules of dissent and affirmance which we have considered in their application to the marriages of insane persons—or probably made at one or two places even more liberal in favor of the marriage—governed these slave marriages subsequently to emancipation; namely, with nothing transpiring, they still lack the legal quality of ordinary or non-slave marriage; but without any new formalities, even in States by the general laws of which a formal solemnization is indispensable, the anti-emancipation marriages of the freedmen are perfected by any mutual consent of the parties, whether expressed in words or implied from a continuance of the cohabitation." And again, "The mutual consent which two slaves gave at their marriage was to be husband and wife in the slave-marriage sense. They had no opportunity to say, so they are not supposed to have considered, whether or not they would sustain the marriage relation as it is known among free persons. Therefore, according to our defining, to make the marriage a free marriage, they must after emancipation, either by continu-necessary to a legal marriage, if from the want of some essential formality the slave union was itself meretricious, continued cohabitation after emancipation cannot render it a legal marriage.¹ In most, if not all, of the late slave holding States there are statutory or constitutional provisions confirming slave marriages after certain formalities, varying in the different States, have been complied with; and without any formality in others.² These ing their cohabitation or otherwise, consent to it. Lacking this, the slave-marriage does not become a free marriage." 1 Bishop on Mar., Div. & Sep., §§ 661, 663.

North Carolina.—In North Carolina it was held contrary to the doctrine of the text that the fact of the husband and wife of a slave-marriage continuing to live together as husband and wife after emancipation, did not render such marriage a legal union. The court, commenting upon the case of Girod v. Lewis, 6 Martin (La.) 559, cited supra, this note, said: "No authority is cited, and no reason is given for the decision, except the suggestion that the marriage, being dormant during slavery, is endowed with full energy from the moment of freedom. We are forced to the conclusion that the idea of civil rights, being merely dormant during slavery, is rather a fanciful conceit (we say it with respect) than the ground of a sound judgment. It may be that in Louisiana the marriage relation is greatly affected by the influence of religion, and the mystery of its supposed dormant rights is attributable to its divine origin. If so, the case has no application; for in our courts marriage is treated as a mere civil institution."

But in State v. Adams, 65 N. Car. 537, it was held that it was not fornication for the parties to a slave marriage to continue their cohabitation after their emancipation, thus giving to this extent a recognition of the legality of the union.

Kentucky.—In Kentucky, the courts hold that a slave marriage can only be confirmed after emancipation in the manner prescribed by statute, and such confirmation will not relate back as against third parties to the time at which they were manumitted, although the cohabitation has been continuous. Thus, in Stewart v. Munchandler, 2 Bush (Ky.) 278, it was held that a colored woman could not plead coverture as a defense to a suit brought upon her note executed after her manumission but before she and her husband had gone through statutory formalities, although they had been married by a colored preacher as slaves, sixteen years before, and had lived together continuously since as husband and wife. See also Estill v. Rogers, 1 Bush (Ky.) 62.

In Dowd v. Hurley, 78 Ky. 260, however, it was held that the effect of complying with the statute was to legalize the customary marriage between persons of color, and not to institute a new marriage; and that after such confirmation of the slave marriage, the husband might claim the homestead exemption against creditors whose claims had their origin prior to such confirmation.

1. 1 Bishop on Mar., Div. & Sep., § 666.

2. Georgia.—In Williams v. State, 67 Ga. 260, it was held that it was not error on the part of the trial judge to charge, upon a trial for bigamy, that, if defendant and the woman alleged to be his wife (negro slaves prior to the emancipation) had lived in a state of concubinage, then the act of 1866 did not marry them; but on the contrary if they so lived on the 9th of March, 1866, then the act did marry them.

Virginia.—Code of 1873, ch. 104, § 13, provides: "Where colored persons before the passage of this act shall have undertaken and agreed to occupy the relation to each other of husband and wife, and shall be cohabiting together, as such, at the time of its passage, whether the rites of marriage shall have been solemnized between them or not, they shall be deemed husband and wife and be entitled to all the rights and privileges and subject to the duties and obligations of that relation in like manner as if they had been duly married by law." Tritchett v. Smith, 78 Va. 524. See also Francis v. Francis, 31 Grat. (Va.) 283.

And under the Virginia act rendering children of colored persons, recognized by the man as his, legitimate, the recognition may have occurred prior to the passage of the statute. Tritchett v. Smith, 78 Va. 524. See also Scott v. Raub, 88 Va. 721.

Mississippi.—See Andrews v. Simmons, 68 Miss. 732.

Kentucky.—The Kentucky statute of February 14, 1886, provides that the husband and wife of the slave marriage "shall appear before the clerk of the county court of their residence, and declare that they have been and desire to continue living together as man and wife," and upon the payment of certain fees the clerk is required to make "a record of such declaration that shall be evidence of the existence of the marriage and the legitimacy of the issue born, and to be born of said parties, provided the issue of customary marriages of negroes shall be held legitimate." Whitesides v. Allen, 11 Bush (Ky.) 23. In this case, it was held that the children of such marriage were legitimate, even though the parents did not make the statutory declaration, and the statute was spoken of as "this confused statute." Dowd v. Hurley, 78 Ky. 260. See also Brown v. McGee, 12 Bush (Ky.) 428.

Where slaves were emancipated and thereafter lived together for a year, and had for twenty-five years prior thereto lived as husband and wife, this was sufficient to render a subsequent attempted marriage by the man with another woman void, and the first wife is entitled to dower in his land. Ewing v. Bibb, 7 Bush (Ky.) 655.

Alabama.—The constitutional convention of 1865 (R. C. of 1867, p. 64) adopted an ordinance providing that "All marriages between freedmen and freedwomen, whether in a state of slavery or since their emancipation, heretofore solemnized by anyone acting or officiating as a minister, or anyone claiming to exercise the right to solemnize the rites of matrimony, whether bond or free, are hereby ratified and made valid, provided the parties are now living together as man and wife; and in all cases of freedmen and freedwomen who are now living together recognizing each other as man and wife, be it ordained that the same are hereby declared to be man and wife, and bound by the legal obligations of such relationship." Of this ordinance the court, in Washington v. Washington, 69 Ala. 286, said: "By force of the ordinance, all the legal infirmity of their relation was removed and they became husband and wife. They were not compelled into an involuntary relation, but the voluntary relation they had formed, and which by continuance after emancipation they had affirmed, so far as it was capable of confirmation by their own acts, was legalized." See also Jackson v. State, 53 Ala. 472; McConico v. State, 49 Ala. 6.

Arkansas.—The provisions of the act of February 6, 1867, providing that negroes and mulattoes then cohabiting as husband and wife, and recognizing that relation, should be deemed lawfully married from the passage of the act, with the rights and obligations appertaining to the marital relation, was valid, and of its own force created that relation between such persons as were within its provisions, without the necessity of a marriage ceremony. Evidence of cohabitation as husband and wife at and after the passage of the act, and the admission of the parties, are competent to establish a marriage under the act. Scoggins v. State, 32 Ark. 205.

The Arkansas act of 1867, rendering the recognized offspring of negroes, who had lived as man and wife, legitimate, included the children of parents who were then dead as well as the children of those living. Gregley v. Jackson, 38 Ark. 487.

Texas.—By section 27, art. 12, of the Constitution of 1869, all persons who were formerly held in bondage and in that condition lived together as husband and wife, and who, when that constitution was adopted, were so living together in this State, became legally married; and the abdication of that constitution by the constitution of 1876 has not annulled such marriages nor exempted those who contracted them from amenability to the laws relating to unlawful marriage. Steward v. State, 7 Tex. App. 326. See also McKnight v. State, 6 Tex. App. 158; Hill v. Fairfax, 38 Tex. 220; Webb v. State, 24 Tex. App. 165.

The above section legitimated the children of slaves who, prior to emancipation, lived together as husband and wife, and continued so to do until the death of one of them; and validated the marriages of such persons as were living together as husband and wife at the time of its adoption, and legitimated the children of such persons, whether born before or after that time. Livingston v. Williams, 75 Tex. 653; Hill v. Fairfax, 38 Tex. 220.

South Carolina.—In Davenport v. Caldwell, 10 S. Car. 317, it was held under the enabling acts of that State, where two slaves, persons of color, went through the form of marriage, lived together as husband and wife for a number of years, and died leaving issue before the general emancipation took place, that such persons were to be considered in law as husband and wife, their children legitimate and capable of inheriting from each other under the statute of distribution. The case has been recognized and followed in State v. Whaley, 10 S. Car. 500; Dingle v. Mitchell, 20 S. Car. 202; Myers v. Ham, 20 S. Car. 522; James v. Mickey, 26 S. Car. 270; Clement v. Riley, 33 S. Car. 66.

North Carolina.—The act of 1866, ch. 40, § 5, provides "that in all cases where a man and woman, both or one of whom were lately slaves, are now emancipated, now cohabit together in the relation of husband and wife, the parties shall be deemed to have been lawfully married as man and wife at the time of the commencement of such cohabitation, although they may not have been married in due form of law;" and further provides for an acknowledgment before the clerk of the county court, etc.

In State v. Whitford, 86 N. Car. 637, it was held that such act was not unconstitutional as validating a contract void for want of consent, the act making cohabitation and living together as man and wife after emancipation, and continued up to the time of ratification, evidence of the consent.

In State v. Adams, 65 N. Car. 537, it was held that the formality of acknowledgment before the clerk, etc., was not essential to the confirmation of the marriage. To the same effect is Long v. Barnes, 87 N. Car. 332.

In State v. Harris, 63 N. Car. 1, Reade, J., said: "The substance of marriage, the consent of the parties, existing, it was as clearly within the power of the legislature to dispense with any particular formality, as it was to prescribe such. This neither made nor impaired the contract, but gave effect to the parties' consent, and recognized as a legal relation that which the parties have constituted a natural one. So that by force of original consent of the parties while they were slaves, renewed after they became free, and by the performance of what was required by the statute, they became to all intents and purposes man and wife."

Where a slave has maintained relations with two women, which separately considered would have brought either case within the terms of the legalizing statute, it was held that the statute did not render either union valid. The court said: "Its purpose and its effect are to legalize and give validity to a single relation formed and maintained among the late slave population and possessing the features and conditions of marriage." Branch v. Walker, 102 N. Car. 34.

The North Carolina act of 1879, declaring that "the children of colored parents," born before January 1, 1868, of persons living together as husband and wife, are legitimate children of such parents, with all the rights of heirs and next of kin, applies to the children of all colored parents, whether slaves or free, and whether the parents were incapable of entering into the marriage relation by virtue of positive law or their status as slaves. Woodard v. Blue (N. Car. 1889), 9 S. E. Rep. 492.

This statute has been held not to extend the right of inheriting beyond parents and children, and the estates of such parents and children. Tucker v. Bellamy, 98 N. Car. 33; Jones v. Haggard, 108 N. Car. 178. See also Tucker v. Tucker (N. Car. 1891), 13 S. E. Rep. 5.

Tennessee.—The provision of the code (Mill. & V.), §§ 3303, 3304 (act 1866), which declares to be husband and wife all colored persons living as such while in slavery, and conferring the right of inheritance on children of such persons, does not apply to marriages contracted without the consent of the owner of the contracting parties. Brown v. Cheatham (Tenn. 1892), 17 S. W. Rep. 1033. And though one of the parents died during slavery, still the child may inherit. Wallace v. Godfrey, 42 Fed. Rep. 812.

District of Columbia.—It is provided by act of Congress of February 6, 1879, "that the issue of any marriage of colored persons contracted and entered into according to any custom prevailing at the time in any of the States shall for all purposes of descent and inheritance" be deemed legitimate. It has been held that a slave marriage with the consent of the master was statutes are in general applicable only where the cohabitation was continued down to the passage of the act,¹ "and only where the subsequent commerce was intended to be matrimonial."²

IV. DIVORCE.—The parties to the customary slave marriage might divorce themselves at will,³ but, in one State at least, such a divorce was of no effect without the consent of the master.⁴

V. LEGITIMACY—INHERITANCE.—As marriage between slaves was not held by the courts to be an illicit connection, but was regarded as a quasi marriage, and effect given to it as far as possible, having due regard to the rights of the master, the children of such marriage were not regarded as bastards, and therefore it would seem that upon emancipation their heritable blood was restored to them, apart from any statute expressly declaring them legitimate.⁵

It has been held that the slave marriage must have existed at the time of emancipation in order that the children might inherit as heirs of the father, and that if the marriage was dissolved during slavery they could not so inherit.⁶

If, from the disability of slavery, the descendant, at the death of the ancestor, was incapable of inheriting the property, subsequent emancipation will not enable him to take it,⁷ nor will an express statute declaring such emancipated slaves legitimate.⁸

As in several of the States a bastard may inherit and transmit inheritance through his mother, the question of legitimacy of a negro child claiming through a maternal ancestor would not in those States come in question.⁹

I. Ownership and Control, 796.

II. Duties, Obligations, and Liabilities of Company, 797.

I. OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL.—The sleeping cars and palace cars attached to railroad trains are owned in most instances, though not always, by corporations other than the railroad companies operating the trains; such corporations making a business of the ownership and management of such cars. The growth of the system is comparatively recent; but the relative rights of the sleeping-car company, the railroad company, and the passenger have been pretty well defined by judicial decisions. The railroad company cannot, speaking generally, relieve itself of its obligations and liabilities as a common carrier of passengers who make use of the accommodations afforded by the sleeping and palace cars.¹ A passenger may assume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that the whole train is under one management.²

when it is not used in this sense, it is synonymous with 'kill.' The man that is slain is killed; and the man that is killed by the hand of his fellow-man is slain. It suffices to charge that the accused 'did feloniously kill and slay' the deceased; and it equally suffices to charge that the accused, with force and arms . . . did willfully and feloniously shoot and kill' the deceased."

The question whether railway companies should own their own sleeping cars is discussed in a note to St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Southern Express, 23 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 545.

In Thorpe v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 76 N. Y. 402; 32 Am. Rep. 325, it appeared that a passenger on the train, finding no vacant seats in the ordinary cars, entered the drawing-room car, which was not owned by the railroad company, and took a seat there; that when called upon for extra fare for the seat he refused to pay, but announced his willingness to go into another car if a seat were provided for him there; and that then the porter of the drawing-room car, who was in the employ of the owner of that car, attempted forcibly to eject him. It was held that the railroad company was liable for the assault.

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451; 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 225, the berth in the sleeping car broke down, to the injury of the occupant, and he was allowed to recover against the railroad company to whose train the sleeping car was attached.

In Dwinelle v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 120 N. Y. 117; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 384, a passenger was assaulted by the porter of the sleeping car after, owing to a wash-out, the passenger had been transferred to another train. It was held that the question whether the porter was engaged in the performance of his duty as agent of the railroad company at the time of the infliction of the assault was for the jury under the facts and circumstances.

2. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 461; 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 371; 43 Am. Rep. 433.

In a Louisiana case a passenger sued the palace car company and also the railroad company for an assault committed on him by the porter of the palace car into which, without permission, he had entered to wash his hands. It was held that he could not recover against the palace car company. Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 40 La. Ann.

II. DUTIES, OBLIGATIONS, AND LIABILITIES OF COMPANY.—According to the weight of authority the liability of the sleeping-car company is neither that of a common carrier nor of an innkeeper.¹ There is, however, an obligation to exercise reasonable care and

In Ulrich v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 108 N. Y. 80; 34 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 350; 2 Am. St. Rep. 369, one traveling upon a free pass was injured by a collision due to the negligence of the railroad company. Upon the pass was an indorsement releasing the company from liability in case of accident. It appeared that the passenger had purchased from the drawing-room car conductor a ticket entitling him to a seat in that car. It was held that this did not make him a passenger for hire, nor vary the effect of the indorsement, and that he was not entitled to recover against the railroad company.

In Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 1 Flip. (U. S.) 500, Browning, J., said: "First. The peculiar construction of sleeping cars is such as to render it almost impossible for the company, even with the most careful watch, to protect the occupants of berths from being plundered by the occupants of adjoining sections. All the berths open upon a common aisle, and are secured only by a curtain, behind which a hand may be slipped from an adjoining or lower berth with scarcely a possibility of detection. Second. As a compensation for his extraordinary liability, the innkeeper has a lien upon the goods of his guests for the price of their entertainment. I know of no instance where the proprietor of a sleeping car has ever asserted such lien, and it is presumed that none such exists. The fact that he is paid in advance does not weaken the argument, as innkeepers are also entitled to prepayment. Third. The innkeeper is obliged to receive every guest who applies for entertainment. The sleeping car receives only first-class passengers traveling upon that particular road, and it has not yet been decided that it is bound to receive those. Fourth. The innkeeper is bound to furnish food as well as lodging, and to receive and care for the goods of his guests, and, unless otherwise provided by statute, his liability is unrestricted in amount. The sleeping car furnishes a bed only, and that, too, usually for a single night. It furnishes no food and receives no luggage, in the ordinary sense of the term. The conveniences of the toilet are simply an incident to the lodging. Fifth. The conveniences of a public inn are an imperative necessity to the traveler, who must otherwise depend upon private hospitality for his accommodation, notoriously an uncertain reliance. The traveler by rail, however, is under no obligation to take a sleeping car. The railway offers him an ordinary coach, and cares for his goods and effects in a van especially provided for that purpose. Sixth. The innkeeper may exclude from his house everyone but his own servants and guests. The sleeping car is obliged to admit the employes of the train to collect fares and control its movements. Seventh. The sleeping car cannot even protect its guests, for the conductor of the train has a right to put them off vigilance over the persons and property of passengers, especially while they are sleeping.¹

The company is bound to furnish the required accommodations, if it has them;² but not to one who by the rules of the railroad company is not entitled to use these accommodations, as, for example a second-class passenger, or one not holding a through ticket.³ The company is bound, and it is its right, to preserve order and enforce a proper decorum, as well as to keep a reasonable watch over the persons and property of passengers.⁴ So it for non-payment of fare or violation of its rules and regulations. I hold, therefore, that sleeping-car companies are not subject to the responsibility of innkeepers at common law, and that defendant cannot be held liable upon that ground."

The argument against this position is stated and summed up in an article by Morris Gray in 20 Am. Law Review, p. 159.

In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 28 Neb. 239; 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 637; 26 Am. St. Rep. 325, it was held that the liability of a sleeping-car company in the case of articles of wearing apparel lost in the car was similar to the innkeeper's liability. Of this case it is said in Hutchinson on Carriers (2d ed.), § 617d, note: "This case is clearly opposed to the great weight of authority, and its force is lessened by the fact that the court treated the question as a new one, which it obviously was not." Loss of Ticket.—A passenger in a sleeping car lost his ticket. The agent declined to issue another ticket but gave him his personal card with the statement thereon: "This gentleman holds seat in 'Nokomis' this P. M. Misland. C. E. Benedict." In Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 1 Flip. (U. S.) 500, it appeared that the plaintiff, a passenger, put his waistcoat, containing his wallet and money, under his pillow. It was the custom of the company to have the conductor and porter keep awake during the night, but on this night they went to sleep. In the morning the wallet and money were gone. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover their value.

In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gardner, 3 Penny. (Pa.) 78; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 324, Gardner put his watch and pocketbook under the outside corner of the mattress of his berth, went to sleep, and next morning both money and watch were gone. The watchman, who should have been on duty, had been negligently absent, and Gardner got a judgment. Woodruff, etc., Sleeping Coach Co. v. Diehl, 84 Ind. 474; 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 294; 43 Am. Rep. 102, presents almost the same state of facts as the Gardner case, and, as there, a judgment against the company was affirmed.

In an action against a palace car company, it appeared that plaintiff was a passenger in one of defendant's sleeping cars; that he was told he would require to change cars on account of a wreck, that having partially dressed himself, he left his pocketbook containing a sum of money lying upon the bedding of his berth and went to the wash room, whence, having finished dressing, he went out of the car and forward to the wrecked train some 60 or 70 yards distant. Immediately on arriving there he missed his pocketbook and went back to recover it. He found the conductor and porter in the smoking room and informed them of his loss. All the other passengers had left the car before plaintiff, and they did not return to it until after he did. He testified that he was not absent from the car more than three or four minutes, and that when he left it no one remained in it except the conductor and porter. It appeared in evidence that a train brakeman had passed through the car but without stopping. The conductor, porter and passengers were searched, but the pocketbook was not found. Held, that a verdict for the plaintiff was sufficiently sustained by the evidence, and that it would not be reversed on appeal. Pullman Palace Car v. Matthews, 74 Tex. 654; 15 Am. St. Rep. 873. Henry, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "In the case of Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pollock, 69 Tex. 120; 34 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 217, the following language of the supreme court of Massachusetts, used in deciding the case of Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car Co., 143 Mass. 267; 28 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 159; 58 Am. Rep. 135, is quoted with approbation: 'While it [the sleeping car company] is not liable as a common carrier or as an innholder, yet it is its clear duty to use reasonable care to guard the passengers from theft; and if, through want of such care, the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable therefor.' We think this doctrine is as applicable to the case now before us as it was in the cases in which it was asserted. The evidence suggests either that the plaintiff did not lose any money or that the servants of the defendant, or one of them, found and appropriated it. The district court found the issue in favor of the plaintiff, and the judgment is sufficiently sustained by the evidence to make it our duty to affirm it, following the rule always enforced in such cases. The position in which plaintiff left his money was unquestionably an act of negligence on his part; and, if the evidence did not so conclusively exclude the idea of its having been taken by anybody except the servants of defendant, who were in charge of the car, he ought not to have had a recovery, because of his own negligence. The fact, however, that plaintiff's negligence furnished

The company cannot avoid liability for property lost or stolen through its negligence, by posting in the car a notice disclaiming responsibility, if it does not appear that the passenger saw the notice.¹ Negligence on the part of the company, or its servants, is not to be presumed from the mere fact of a loss, but must be shown;² and contributory negligence on the part of the complaining passenger may defeat his recovery.³

the temptation and opportunity to defendant's servants to take the money did not release it from its obligation to protect him against them."

In Welch v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 352, Welch went to bed in a sleeping car, placing his overcoat in a vacant berth overhead. In the morning it was missing and he sued to recover its value, and got a judgment therefor, which was, however, reversed. In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gaylord, 23 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 788, Gaylord placed a scarf, having upon it a $300 diamond pin, in the receptacle intended for articles of clothing and placed at the head of the berth. The pin was stolen, suit was brought, the company demurred, and on appeal the demurrer was sustained.

In Whitney v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 143 Mass. 243, the plaintiff, while the train was stopping at a station, left the car for ten minutes, leaving his satchel upon the sill of one of the car windows, which could be reached from the outside through an adjoining open window. It was held that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to his loss and that the action could not be maintained.

A passenger on a railway train entered a car, having in the pocket of his overcoat a sum of money, and gave the overcoat to the porter without mentioning the money, and the porter hung the coat in the passenger's berth. It was held that the money was in his own custody and at his risk; and the fact that soon afterwards an accident overturned the car, and on the passenger making his way out told the porter and brakeman of the railway company that the money was in the car, put no liability for the money on the company as gratuitous bailee, or otherwise, and it was not in such case responsible for the loss of the money. Hillis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 72 Iowa 228; 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 108.

In an action against a sleeping-car company for the loss of a passenger's property by theft, the evidence tended to show that the property of two passengers in one car was stolen from their berths during the same night; that the porter of the car was found asleep at an early hour of the morning in a position from which no view could be had of that part of the car in which the passengers were asleep; and that the porter was required to be on duty for thirty-six hours continuously, which included two nights. It was held that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant proper to be submitted to the jury. Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car Co., 143 Mass. 267.

SLIP—SLOUGH.

Definition.

In the case of a loss of property which the passenger in the sleeping car retains in his possession, the liability of either the railroad company or the sleeping car company is limited to the amount of money reasonably necessary for the traveling expenses of the passenger upon the projected journey,¹ and to the amount of baggage usually carried by passengers in their valises.²

SLIP—(See also DOCKS, vol. 5, p. 851; WHARVES).—1. A slip is an opening between two pieces of land or wharves.³

In marine insurance in England "the 'slip' is in practice the complete and final contract between the parties, fixing the terms of the insurance and the premium; and neither party can, without the assent of the other, deviate from the terms thus agreed on without a breach of faith, for which he would suffer severely in his credit and future business."⁵ peared that the plaintiff, a passenger, deposited a purse containing nearly $500 in his vest-pocket and placed his vest under his pillow, and that in the morning he left it there while in the toilet-room for five minutes. The court discussed the questions of negligence and contributory negligence, and deemed the facts to show "specific negligence on the part of the passenger touching the custody of his own valuables of a gross character," and that there was no case to go to the jury upon the ground of negligence.

In Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Handy, 63 Miss. 609; 56 Am. Rep. 846, the court, in reviewing a charge to the jury, said, that if the passenger "carelessly and negligently left his pocket-book on the car when he reached his destination, and its contents were abstracted by persons other than the servants of the company, there would be no liability on the part of the company."

SLUICE DAM.—A sluice dam is for the purpose of utilizing the water of a stream by raising a head sufficient to float logs and lumber over obstructions and shoal places down to the dam; and then by letting it out, flood the stream below so as to carry the logs down to their destination. It is constructed with a sluiceway, or opening, for the passage of logs. 2. Constitutionality of Smoke Ordinances.—In People v. Lewis, 86 Mich. 273, 37 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 481, a city ordinance forbidding under penalty the emission of dense smoke from any chimney in the city, but exempting dwelling houses and steamboats from its operation, was held not to be invalid on the ground that it makes an unreasonable discrimination between classes of persons residing within the same municipal territory. But in that case two of the justices dissented; and in State v. Ramsey Co. (Minn. 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 112, the relator was arrested upon the charge of creating a nuisance in violating chapter 375, Special Laws of Minnesota 1889, declaring the emission of dense smoke within the city of St. Paul under certain circumstances a nuisance and prescribing a penalty. Section 3 contained the following provision: "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to manufacturing establishments using the entire product of combustion, and the heat, power, and light produced thereby, within the building, where they are generated or within a radius of three hundred feet therefrom."

The relator asked for his discharge on habeas corpus for the reason that the said statute was unconstitutional as partial or class legislation. The court held the act unconstitutional, saying: "No arbitrary distinction between different kinds or classes of business can be sustained, the conditions being otherwise similar. The statute is leveled against the nuisance occasioned by dense smoke, and it can make no practical difference in what business the owners or occupants of the buildings in which such smoke is produced are engaged, or whether the heat evolved from the combustion of the fuel producing such smoke is applied to the generation of steam or other useful purposes; or, further, whether steam power is used in manufacturing or is applied to other uses, as a grain elevator or hoisting apparatus in a warehouse. We are obliged to hold that the distinction or classification attempted to be made is untenable. Section 3 must be read in connection with section 1, and is evidently intended to be a limitation upon the latter section, and is so connected with it that its provisions must be regarded as inseparable from the general purpose and object of the act so that the whole must stand or fall together. For these reasons we hold the act invalid."

As to when smoke amounts to a nuisance, see NUISANCES, vol. 16, p. 946.

I. DEFINITION.—A society or club may be defined as a voluntary association of persons, generally unincorporated, united together

"So" when used in connection with something to be done—e. g., "so completed"—imports the doing of the thing in the manner and so as to satisfy the requirements previously prescribed. G. W. R. Co. v. Halesowen, 52 L. J. Q. B. 479. See also Elmer v. Burgin, 2 N. J. L. 173.

Sometimes Equivalent to Hereinbefore.—The expression "so devised" in a will has been held to mean "hereinbefore devised." Giles v. Melsom, L. R., 6 H. L. 24.

"So Far as the Law Allows."—In Davies v. Davies, 36 Ch. Div. 359, a covenant to retire from a certain trade or business, "so far as the law allows,"

was held too vague for the court to enforce.

So as Aforesaid.—See AFORESAID, vol. 1, p. 320.

3. Sober and Temperate.—In Brockaway v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 9 Fed. Rep. 249, it was said: "The words 'sober and temperate' are to be taken in their ordinary sense. The language does not imply total abstinence from intoxicating liquors. The moderate, temperate use of intoxicating liquors is consistent with sobriety. But if a man use spirituous liquors to such an extent as to produce frequent intoxication, he is not sober and temperate within the meaning of this contract of insurance."

In Hutton v. Waterloo L. Assur. Co., 1 F. & F. 735, where it was shown that deceased had had delirium tremens the same year the policy was issued, by mutual consent for a common purpose, and governed by a constitution and by-laws formulated and agreed to by the members.¹

and the year before, it was held that this was a breach of warranty of sober and temperate habits. See also LIFE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 636; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 11, p. 706, n.

1. Black's L. Dict.; Sweet's L. Dict. A society is a number of persons united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose. 2 Bouv. L. Dict.

The term "association" has practically the same signification. "This term is used throughout the United States to signify a body of persons united without a charter, but upon the methods and forms used by incorporated bodies for the prosecution of some common enterprise. It also enters into the names bestowed by the legislatures upon many corporations. In this connection it is used without any very uniform discrimination as to its precise meaning; but seems to be, on the whole, preferred for bodies which are not vested with full and perfect corporate rights and powers; also for organizations formed to promote the improvement, welfare, or advantage of the public, as distinguished from the improvement of members, for which 'society' is preferred, or making profits, for which 'company' is the better name." Abb. L. Dict., Tit. ASSOCIATION.

A club is a voluntary association of persons for social purposes, and sometimes, also, for purposes of a literary or political nature, or the like. In some clubs the expenses are borne by a contractor, who receives the subscriptions of members, and makes his profit out of the difference; these are called proprietary clubs. Sweet's L. Dict., p. 156. Black's L. Dict., p. 214.

In Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564; 50 Am. Rep. 340, Field, J., said: "The word 'club' has no very definite meaning. Clubs are formed for all sorts of purposes, and there is no uniformity in their constitutions and rules. It is well known that clubs exist which limit the number of the members, and select them with great care, which own considerable property in common, and in which the furnishing of food and drink to the members for money is but one of the many conveniences which they enjoy."

Distinguished from Other Organizations—Corporations.—It is plain that a club is not a corporation, although it resembles one in some points. A corporation is a fictitious person, and can only be created by the legislature or by a proper court. "It has, in common with a club, perpetual succession, that is, the power of electing new members to fill the places of those who 'go off.' But it is only regarded as a whole, separate from the members composing it. Its rights and obligations are only exercisable by, and enforceable against, the whole body, and by its corporate name, and not at all against the individual members separately, or even jointly. The members of a club do not form a collective whole, and cannot collectively acquire any rights or incur any obligations." Club Cases by Arthur F. Leach, London, 1879. See White v. Brownell, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brew. (Pa.) 571.

Partnership.—In Lindley on Partnership, p. 1, it is said that a partnership implies "an agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement;" and in 1 Bl. Com. 475, the thing to be shared in a partnership is described as "the profit arising from some predetermined business engaged in for the common benefit." But in the case of a club the thing to be shared is merely the conveniences and social intercourse which it affords.

Societies and clubs whose object is not the sharing of profits, and whose members do not hold themselves out as partners, are neither partnerships nor quasi partnerships. Lindley on Partnership (Ewell) 57; Fleming v. Hector, 2 M. & W. 172; In re St. James Club, 2 DeG. M. & G. 383; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brew. (Pa.) 571; Ash v. Guie, 97 Pa. St. 493; 39 Am. Rep. 818; White v. Brownell, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318; McMahon v. Rauhr, 47 N. Y. 67; Richmond v. Judy, 6 Mo. App. 465, where it was said: "Associations and clubs, the objects of which are social or political, and not for purposes of trade or profit, are not partnerships; and pecuniary liability can be fastened on the individual members of such associations only by reason of the acts of such individuals or their agents; and the agency must be made out—none is implied from the mere fact of association."

II. ORGANIZATION.—The organization of societies and clubs, unlike that of corporations, does not depend upon statutory provisions; but as to manner and effect, is within the discretion of the associators.¹ The constitution, rules, and by-laws form what corresponds to the charter of a corporation, and the assenting thereto, either by signing or otherwise, provided such assent is personal, places the members under obligations in the nature of a contract.²

Again, in Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 98, it was held that an unincorporated hose company, having accumulated funds by voluntary subscriptions, is not under the common and statute laws of Pennsylvania a co-partnership; and a court of equity will not dissolve such an association and decree an apportionment of the funds upon the application of a minority.

"Associations of this description are not usually partnerships. There is no power to compel the payment of dues, and the right of the member ceases when he fails to meet his annual subscriptions. This certainly is not a partnership; and the rights of co-partners, as such, are not fully recognized. The purpose is not business, trade, or profit, but the benefit and protection of its members, as provided for in its constitution and by-laws. In accordance with well established rules, no partnership exists under such circumstances." Miller, J., in Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 507.

But in one case, Park v. Spaulding, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 128, the members of a club were treated as partners, and held liable for the debts of the club according to the principles governing partnerships.

In Lloyd v. Loaring, 6 Ves. 773, and Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180, a lodge of Freemasons and a friendly society, respectively, were called partnerships.

Joint Stock Companies.—"The distinction between a partnership and a joint stock company is, 'that a partnership consists of a few individuals known to each other . . . whilst a company consists of a larger number of individuals, not necessarily acquainted with each other at all; so that it is a matter of indifference whether changes are effected amongst them or not. . . . It may be said that the law of unincorporated companies is composed of little else than the law of partnerships modified and adapted to the wants of a large and fluctuating body.' It would follow then that as a club is not in any sense a partnership, it is not a company." Leach's Club Cases, pp. 8, 9. See In re St. James' Club, 2 De G. M. & G. 383; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brew. (Pa.) 571; White v. Brownell, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318. Special reference must be had to JOINT STOCK COMPANIES, vol. 11, p. 1036, the principles in regard to such companies being analogous to this subject.

Miscellaneous.—An association which had for an object the aiding of its members by means of loans of money, was held not to be strictly a benevolent or charitable association. People v. Nelson, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 200.

An association for purposes of mutual benevolence among its members only, is not an association for charitable uses; and if unincorporated its members are regarded as partners in their relations to third persons. Babb v. Reed, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 151; 28 Am. Dec. 650.

Again, clubs differ from co-owners, in that they have not the right of co-owners in the transmission of their interest; and from mutual benefit societies, because the nature of the benefits they confer is definite and not regulated by legislature. Leach's Club Cases, p. 11.

1. "A club organized for social purposes is 'unknown to the common law,' and in England as yet ignored by statute law. In New York, and several other States, social clubs may be incorporated; and when they have become so, they are subject to the laws that govern corporations." Club Law, 27 Alb. L. J. 326.

2. A social club is founded on contract, and the obligation of that contract cannot be violated. This contract consists of both the written and unwritten laws of the association. The

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES — 1. Property Rights. — Voluntary unincorporated associations are incapable of holding real property in their own name; but it may be held for their use and benefit by trustees appointed for that purpose.¹

2. To Sue and be Sued. — At common law, no suits by or against voluntary unincorporated societies can be maintained, either in the name of the association, or of its agents or trustees; but such action must be instituted in the name of all its members.²

first are expressed by the constitution and by-laws. Club Law, 27 Alb. L. J. 327. See Fleming v. Hector, 2 M. & W. 172, per Parke, B.; Austin v. Searling, 16 N. Y. 123; 69 Am. Rep. 665.

In the case of an unincorporated association, persons become members of the association by originally subscribing to the articles. Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 517.

In Waite v. Merrill, 4 Me. 102; 16 Am. Dec. 238, it was held that the covenant by which the members of the societies of Shakers are bound to each other is a valid instrument, obligatory on all who voluntarily enter into it.

By a recent New Jersey statute, societies, clubs, or associations, having for their object "the promotion of artistic taste in general, and of vocal music in particular," are authorized to take, hold, etc., real and personal estate. Laws 1890, ch. 262.

It seems, however, that in case of a voluntary unincorporated association, which is not empowered to hold realty, but whose members can be ascertained, a deed to it may be construed as a grant to such members as tenants in common. Byam v. Bickford, 140 Mass. 31.

Where realty is purchased by an unincorporated association, and the title is conveyed to trustees for their benefit, and certificates are issued to the members who subscribed money for the purchase, which entitled them to shares in the association, such certificates constitute an equitable lien on the realty for the amount represented by them. Crawford v. Gross, 140 Pa. St. 297.

Knights of Labor. — In Wells v. Monihan, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 617, it was held that a decree of the general assembly of the Knights of Labor, by which the charter of a local assembly was annulled, did not affect the rights and title of the latter to property it had acquired, and could not be enforced by the court.

Transfer. — Where several local assemblies of the Knights of Labor had purchased a hall for their joint use, the title having been conveyed to trustees, and the assemblies afterwards organized themselves into a corporation for the purpose of administering property, it was held that such a corporation could compel the trustees to transfer the property, and to account for the rents and profits. Organized Labor Hall v. Gebert (N. J. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 578.

The title to property may be vested in an association before it is incorporated, and in order to vest such title in the corporation, no formal transfer is necessary. American Silk Works v. Salomon, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 135.

A court of equity will compel the transfer of funds from former trustees of a voluntary association to trustees newly elected. Birmingham v. Gallagher, 112 Mass. 190.

Appropriation of Funds. — A court of equity will enjoin self constituted trustees from applying the profits of a fair to purposes other than those for which it was held. Morton v. Smith, 5 Bush (Ky.) 467.

The funds of an association can only be applied to further the general purpose for which they were contributed. The majority cannot dispose of the money of the minority, or of a single member, to any other purpose without his consent. Abels v. McKeen, 18 N. J. Eq. 462.

2. Detroit Schuetzen Bund v. Detroit Agitations Verein, 44 Mich. 313; Curd v. Wallace, 7 Dana (Ky.) 190; 32 Am. Dec. 85; Niven v. Spickerman, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 401; Mears v. Moulton, 30 Md. 142; Pipe v. Bateman, 1 Iowa 369.

Thus, an unincorporated lodge of masons could not sue in the corporate name to recover property, but only as individuals. Lloyd v. Loaring, 6 Ves. 773. See Smith v. Smith, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 557; Fells v. Read, 3 Ves. 70.

But such associations may bring a suit, it seems, through an agent properly appointed for that purpose,¹ and likewise, by reason of community of interest, when the members of a voluntary unincorporated association are very numerous, one or more may sue in behalf of all, but in such case the representative capacity must be distinctly and clearly stated in the declaration.² By statute, however, voluntary unincorporated associations are now authorized, both in England and in some of the States of the Union, to sue and be sued in the names of certain officers, in most cases the president or treasurer.³

In case of a suit against the members of a voluntary association, the name of a person which was signed to the articles of association without authority may be omitted as a defendant. Boyd v. Merriell, 52 Ill. 151.

1. Habicht v. Pemberton, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 657, where it was said by Duer, J.: "To enable a plaintiff to bring a suit in his own right and in behalf of others having a common interest, it is not sufficient to allege that the other parties are so numerous that it would be impracticable to bring them all before the court; but the nature of their common interest must appear to be such as would entitle them, were they all before the court, to maintain the action in their own right, or in their own names . . . It is true, the complaint avers that the plaintiff is specially authorized to bring the suit for and on behalf of the society; but whether he has such authority as can enable him to bring the suit in his own name, is a question of law which can only be determined when the nature and terms of his authority shall be set forth. An action in the name of the general agent of the society may certainly be sustained." See Phipps v. Jones, 20 Pa. St. 260; 59 Am. Dec. 708.

So a suit may be brought against the trustees of a Shaker community, when such trustees hold the property of the community, and make its contracts. Davis v. Bradford, 58 N. H. 476.

But a note given to a voluntary association, and made payable to the "treasurer," cannot be sued upon by such treasurer. Ewing v. Medlock, 5 Port. (Ala.) 82.

2. Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566; Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 517; Wood v. Draper, 4 Abb. Pr.

(N. Y.) 322; Beekman F. Ins. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 658; Mears v. Moulton, 30 Md. 142. See Birmingham v. Gallagher, 112 Mass. 190; Floyd v. Loaring, 6 Ves. 773.

Thus, in New York Code Civ. Procedure, § 448, provides that "where the persons who might be made parties are very numerous . . . one or more may sue for, the benefit of all," and this notwithstanding the fact that another section provides for the maintaining of actions by or against certain unincorporated associations in the name of the president or treasurer." Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 88.

In such a case, where a bill was filed in the name of the agent of such an association, for the benefit of the concern, and it did not appear by the bill that the complainant was a member of the association, the bill was held bad on demurrer. Marshall v. Loveless, Cam. & N. (N. Car.) 217.

Actions By and Between a Society and Its Members.—At common law, a member of an unincorporated association cannot sue such association. Huth v. Humboldt Stamm, No. 153, 61 Conn. 227.

A member of a voluntary unincorporated association for pleasure purposes, cannot maintain an action in his own name, either in his own behalf or as assignee of other members, upon a contract made with the association by another member. McMahon v. Rauhr, 47 N. Y. 67.

A member of a band, one of the by-laws of which is that any member upon leaving the band shall leave all his interest, having left and taken his instrument with him, may be sued in trover to recover the instrument, by the remaining members. Danbury Cornet Band v. Bean, 54 N. H. 524.

3. Actions in Names of Officers.—The English Stat. 10 Geo. IV., ch. 56, § 21, authorizes suits by or against friendly societies, to be carried on in the name of the treasurer or trustees for the time being of such society, without any other description; and the same provision is contained in 3 and 4 Vict., ch. 110, § 8, in regard to loan societies.

New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1919, provides that an action against an unincorporated association, having seven or more members, may be maintained against the president or treasurer of such association. See Olery v. Brown, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 92; Fritz v. Muck, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 69. This section suspends an action against the individual members of an association in the first instance. Flagg v. Smith, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 623. The case of Park v. Spaulding, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 128, seems to be antagonistic to this view, but in distinguishing the two cases Dykeman, J., said that there was some difference between them. "In the latter the body was unorganized and had no constitution, or by-laws, or articles of association; while in the former, by-laws were adopted and a club organized." See also Ebbighousen v. Worth Club, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 300, where the court of common pleas refused to concur with the doctrine laid down in Park v. Spaulding, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 128, and held that the action should be brought against the president in the first instance. Compare Allen v. Clark, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 563.

But by § 1923 of the same code the plaintiff may, however, sue all the members in the first instance; and it has been held that the right to sue the officers is granted for the sake of convenience merely, and that it must be proved that all the members of the association are liable either jointly or severally. McCabe v. Goodfellow (N. Y. 1892), 30 N. E. Rep. 728; Hudson v. Spaulding, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

Where defendant was sued as president, under this statute, and after being notified to produce the constitution and by-laws, failed to do so, it was held sufficient, in order to prove that the association consisted of more than seven members, to produce evidence that, in addition to the original members, tickets had been issued to a large number of others, who contributed to the support of the society. Heden v. Clarke (Supreme Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 291. The complaint need not contain the names of the seven or more members, but it is sufficient if it aver that there is such a number. Tibbets v. Blood, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

As a rule, statutes derogatory to the common law must be strictly complied with, and therefore, where the officers against whom the action may be brought are the president or treasurer, an action against the president, secretary and treasurer is improperly instituted. Schmidt v. Gunther, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 452.

A complaint alleged that the plaintiff was president of the National Cross Country Association of America, an association of seven members and upwards; that said association was organized on or about, etc., and that it then and there adopted a constitution, etc., to which it referred, and which was made part of the complaint. After the verification, a list was added, headed, "Officers of the National Cross Country Association of America. President, Otto Ruhl, N. Y. Athletic Club; Vice President, William Halpin, Olympic Athletic Club;" and then followed the constitution and by-laws. The constitution provided that any amateur club or cross country association should be eligible to membership; but it nowhere appeared that such organizations were not meant to be incorporated, nor did the complaint base the qualifications of members on the fact that they were not natural or legal persons. Therefore, an objection of want of legal capacity to sue, because the members were unincorporated associations and not persons, within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1919, was properly taken by answer instead of demurrer. Ruhl v. Ware, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 473.

In an association, formed in pursuance of a charter granted by a general organization of such associations, the treasurer's right to sue upon a note executed to him according to the provisions of the code, § 1919, is not defeated by an order of the executive board of the general organization, which revokes the charter of the local association. Wells v. Monihan, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 617.

Residence of Officer.—Under the statute allowing certain associations to sue and be sued in the name of certain officers, the decision in a transitory action upon a question of change of venue will depend upon the residence of those officers. Bacon v. Diasmore, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 358.

3. Liabilities—a. IN GENERAL.—As an unincorporated society cannot be treated as a partnership or corporation, it would seem that at common law any liability incurred in its name, through its officers or members, cannot be fixed upon the association itself, as such, but only upon such officers or members.¹

Connecticut.—The statute provides that "any number of persons associated together as a voluntary association, not having corporate powers, but having some distinguishing name, may be sued" by the name by which such association is known. Under this statute a military company, formed by voluntary enlistment, is a voluntary association, and may be sued by the name by which it is known. Fox v. Naramore, 36 Conn. 376. But a statute of this kind does not give to a member of such an association the right to sue it. Huth v. Humboldt Stamm, No. 153, 61 Conn. 227.

1. "Many of the associations, societies and fraternities, and beneficial associations of the country are unincorporated; and as they cannot be regarded as individuals or co-partnerships, they may appear to have no especial legal status at all, and thus not at all subject to being brought into court." Hirschl, Fraternities, etc., 39.

In a note to Ebbinghausen v. Worth Club, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 300, it is said, "there are two principal classes of cases: . . . one where a question has arisen between the members—an internal controversy; the other where the question has arisen between a creditor on the one hand, and the body, or one or more members, on the other—an external controversy. The courts have always distinguished between the principles applicable to these two classes of controversies, and have, in the absence of a better guide, leaned, in the one class of cases, toward the rules afforded by the law of corporations, and often, in the other class of cases, toward those afforded by the law of partnerships or of agency."

"The true principle is, and upon this view the apparent discordance in the cases may be nearly reconciled, that the law allows associates to imitate the organization and methods of corporations so far as their rights between themselves are involved, and will enforce their articles of agreement, nothing illegal or unconscientious appearing as between the parties to them. But the public and creditors have a right to invoke the application of the law of partnership to the dealings of any training association, unless such association has the shield of incorporation. Thus, if the controversy is between members of the association and relates to such subjects as mode of acquiring membership, tenure of property, division of the profits, transfer of shares, voting, expulsion, dissolution, or the like, the courts may deal with the association by analogy to the law of corporations so far as the contract between the members contemplates." Abb. Dig. Corp., tit. Associations, n.

The Connecticut Gen. Stat., 1875, p. 403, § 9, provides that it is optional with the creditor of an unincorporated voluntary association to proceed against the association as such, or against the individual members; but if he pursue the former plan, he can levy only on the property of the association; if the latter, execution will go against the property of the individuals. Davison v. Holden, 55 Conn. 103; 3 Am. St. Rep. 40. See supra, this title, Right to Sue and be Sued; infra, Members; Officers.

Agricultural Society—Liability Upon Reorganization.—In Livingston Co. Agricultural Soc. v. Hunter, 110 Ill. 155, it was held that where an agricultural society was reorganized upon a joint stock place, and there was no change in respect to the objects of the society, a separate and independent society was not thereby formed, but the old organization existed under a new name and creditors of the old held the new society the same as the old, whether their claims accrued before or after reorganization.

Liability for Negligence.—Where the seats at an agricultural fair were so negligently constructed that persons occupying them sustained injury by reason of the negligence, the society was held liable. Dunn v. Brown Co. Agricultural Soc., 46 Ohio St. 93. See Brown v. South Kennebec Agricultural Soc., 47 Me. 275; 74 Am. Dec. 484.

But in Barton v. Pepin Agricultural Soc. (Wis.), 52 N. W. Rep. 1120, it was held that where a fair association

b. SALE OF LIQUOR.—As to the liability to indictment of the members or officers of a club, where liquor is furnished to the members and money received therefor, there has been a conflict of authority, the weight of authority, however, denying such liability.¹

IV. MEMBERS—1. Rights.—Membership in societies and clubs is, as a rule, elective; the right is conferred only on such persons as the existing members see fit to associate with themselves; was in the habit of allowing private teams to be driven around the track after the races were over, and on one occasion the driver of a team of young horses whipped them into running away, so that they left the track and injured a visitor, the association was not liable, as the injury was proximately caused by the act of the driver and was not a direct or natural consequence of the permission given to owners of teams to drive around the track.

Boat Club.—A boat club was possessed of a landing-stage and a floating barge or a house boat, moored in the Isis at a distance of thirty feet from the bank by means of two iron rings, which were fixed to the barge, and passed loosely and movably round two posts driven into the bed of the river. Between the barge and the bank four other posts were driven into the bed of the river, and a movable frame of boards, laid on the top of these posts, but not fixed to them nor touching the barge or bank, formed the gangway from the barge to the bank. The barge was roofed over and formed a room, which was used by the members of the club, as a means of access to their boats, and for reading and other amusements. No land was occupied with the barge, nor was the club owner of the posts. The posts had been driven into the bed of the river more than twenty years, for the purpose of being used as aforesaid, and had remained and been so used without the leave or license of the corporation of the city, who were owners of the soil of the bed of the river, and no rent had been paid or other acknowledgment made by the club. It was held that the club was not ratable in respect of the barge, which was a mere chattel, nor in respect of the posts, as the club had no exclusive occupation of them. Grant v. Oxford Local Board, 9 B. & S. 900.

1. It was held in State v. McMaster (S. Car. 1892), 14 S. E. Rep. 290, that under the South Carolina statute a social club required no liquor license.

In Piedmont Club v. Com., 87 Va. 540, the court held likewise under the Virginia act of 1889-90.

So in Barden v. Montana Club (Mont. 1891), 25 Pac. Rep. 1042, the holding was the same under the Montana statute.

In State v. Neis, 108 N. Car. 737, the court, following State v. Lockyear, 95 N. Car. 633; 59 Am. Rep. 287, sustained an indictment against the steward of a club, the facts being that liquor was given to him by the individual members of the club, who owned the liquor in common, and the steward furnished a drink to a member and received ten cents in return, this being just about the actual value of the liquor furnished, and the money being used with other money obtained in the same way to replenish the stock of liquor. The transaction was deemed by the court to be a sale.

In State v. Essex Club (N. J. 1890), 20 Atl. Rep. 769, a transaction somewhat similar was deemed to constitute a violation of a municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquor at retail without a license. And to the same effect were the decisions in People v. Sinell, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 607; People v. Andrews, 115 N. Y. 427; State v. Easton Social, etc., Club, 73 Md. 97.

In Nogales Club v. State (Miss. 1891), 10 So. Rep. 574, it appeared that a social club had one room separated from the rest of the club-rooms, such room being fitted up with a side-board from which the steward sold drinks to members and visitors. A sale was made to a minor at the price fixed by the governing committee of the club, which had no license. It was held that an indictment was sustainable under the statute prohibiting unlicensed sales to minors.

So where a social club bought liquor at wholesale, and, while retaining the ownership, served it out by the drink or the bottle to members signing tickets payable monthly or paying cash, it was held that such a club was within a municipal ordinance prohibiting the retailing of liquors at a club-house without the payment of a license tax. Kentucky Club v. Louisville (Ky. 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 743.

In Com. v. Baker, 152 Mass. 337, it was held that if a club through its agent uses a place for the purpose of keeping intoxicating liquors and selling them to its members, the place is a common nuisance, and the agent may be convicted of keeping the same under Massachusetts statute of 1887, ch. 206, which provides that all places used by clubs for the purpose of selling, distributing, or dispensing intoxicating liquors to their members or others, shall be deemed a common nuisance. This case is distinguished from Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564; 50 Am. Rep. 340, in the fact that in the latter case the city where the club was located had voted to license the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the provision of Massachusetts Pub. Sts., ch. 100, § 45, prohibiting clubs in no-license towns from selling, etc., intoxicating liquors, did not apply; while in the present case the club was located in a town which had voted not to license the sale of liquor.

In People v. Bradley, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 601, the steward of a club who furnished beer in pint bottles to one of the members, punching his ticket as a charge therefor, was held to be properly convicted under New York laws of 1857, ch. 628, § 13, which prohibits the sale of liquors in quantities of less than five gallons without a license; and whether credit was given or the liquor paid for at the time, or whether the charge was shown by punching the ticket, was not material.

As a Device for Evading Revenue Laws.—In State v. Tindall, 40 Mo. App. 271, it appeared that the defendant had organized a club in which a person became a member by signing certain articles of association and paying an admission fee, thereupon being entitled to obtain liquors at the club-room by purchasing a "requisition ticket" upon which the defendant who supplied the liquor received a profit. The court held that the transaction was a mere device for evading the revenue laws, and constituted a sale notwithstanding the alleged membership of the purchaser to the club.

At the trial of an indictment against the steward of an incorporated social club for keeping and maintaining a common nuisance, there was evidence that a large quantity of intoxicating liquors in bottles was found at different times in the rooms of the club, together with utensils, fixtures, etc., of an ordinary bar-room; that lockers in the room contained bottles of liquor with the names of members marked on them, the keys to which were found in a drawer; that a number of men were found drinking there, and that when the police tried to enter, the defendant held the door, but afterwards, upon being arrested, said, "I cannot go; I am running this place, and if I go the men will help themselves to the liquor." He then turned down the gas, ordered the men to leave and locked the door. It was held that this evidence was sufficient to warrant a finding that the club was a mere device to cover the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors. Com. v. Ryan, 152 Mass. 283.

In Com. v. Tierney (Pa. 1892), 24 Atl. Rep. 64, the following facts appeared: The defendant, who had been refused the renewal of a liquor license but continued to sell at the same place, claimed that a club had rented the bar-room from him for ten dollars a month, the rest of the house being occupied by himself and family, and had employed him as steward to dispense liquors to the members and guests. The initiation fee of the club was twenty-five cents and the dues ten cents a week, and it was formed for social purposes and mental improvement although the literary department consisted of the Police Gazette, and two other newspapers; the guests and members paid ten cents for a glass of whisky and five cents for beer. The court held that this evidence showed that the club was nothing more than a device to evade the license law, and that an instruction that if the jury should believe the evidence they should find the defendant guilty, was not error.

Upon an indictment for running a club where liquors were furnished to the members, it need not be shown, in order to maintain such indictment, that the sole purpose of the club was a sale and distribution of liquor, but it is sufficient if such was one of the purposes only. Com. v. Jacobs, 152 Mass. 276. See generally INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 11, p. 567; SEARCHES AND SEIZURES, vol. 21, p. 964.

therefore, the courts will not interfere to compel the admission of an applicant, no matter what his claims may be.¹ Having, however, once become a member, he acquires, under the constitution and by-laws, certain rights in which he will be protected by the courts.²

The interest of each member in the property and effects of an association is equal, and no member has an interest therein which can be taken out of the whole for his sole use until the affairs are wound up and the rights of the respective members settled.³

The rights generally pertaining to membership are determined by the constitution and by-laws.⁴

1. White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 162. See Mayer v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assoc., 47 N. J. Eq. 519.

Thus where a person was duly elected a member of a democratic county committee, which was a voluntary, unincorporated, political association, the courts would not attempt to enforce his right to sit as a member of such committee. McKane v. Adams, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 629. Aff'd in McKane v. Democratic Gen. Committee (N. Y. 1890), 25 N. E. Rep. 1057.

2. "The courts will interfere for the purpose of protecting property rights of members of unincorporated associations, and, when they do interfere, it may be stated with safety that the rules, which the courts will follow, are essentially the same as those which guide the courts when dealing with formally incorporated bodies of the same kind." Hirschl on the Law of Fraternities and Societies, p. 47. See Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180; Penfield v. Skinner, 11 Vt. 296.

3. McMahon v. Rauhr, 47 N. Y. 67, where Folger, J., said further: "The rights of the associates in the property, and the modes of enforcing them, are not materially different from those of partners in the partnership property."

Lord St. Leonards, in the St. James's Club Case, 2 De G. M. & G. 383, said: "Clubs are all formed on this principle: the candidate must be elected; he must then pay an entrance fee, and also an annual sum or subscription. In what, then, are the interests and liabilities of a member? He has an interest in the general assets as long as he remains a member, . . . but he has no transmissible interest; it is a simple right of admission to and enjoyment of the club, while it continues."

See infra, this title, Dissolution.

4. Joining Another Association.—

Where there are no provisions in the constitution of an association which forbid one of its members to join another of similar character, the fact that officers and members of such association do, as individuals, unite themselves with another, does not deprive them of their offices or forfeit their membership; nor does the fact that the second organization has in its constitution such provisions affect their relations to the first. Farrell v. Cook, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 603; Farrell v. Daltzell (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 739.

So in Harmstead v. Washington Fire Co., 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. (Pa.) 392, it was held that the privileges of honorary membership were not forfeited by temporary membership in another company, if acquiesced in by the original association, although there was a by-law of such association forbidding it.

Use of Name.—Where dissatisfied members of a voluntary association withdraw therefrom, and incorporate themselves under the name of such association, they cannot deprive the original organization of the use of its name. Black Rabbit Assoc. v. Munday, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 99. In this case Donohue, J., said: "The matter in dispute may be a very small one and may not be important, but the question involved is one of great importance. It is the question whether dissatisfied members of a voluntary institution can, by incorporating themselves, deprive the association with which they are dissatisfied, of rights which they have acquired, and vest themselves—the dissatisfied members—with those rights. On the ground, therefore, that the plaintiff suppressed,

2. Liabilities.—The cases involving questions of the individual liability of members of a society or club for its debts seem to show that such liability is governed generally by the principles of agency, and the fact of such agency may be determined by the rule, or custom of the club, as to the plan upon which its business is conducted. If a cash system be employed, a member can be held individually liable upon debts contracted by officers or other members, only to the extent to which he has assented, expressly or by implication, to the contracts out of which such debts arise;¹ and the mere fact that he has used the things bought is not in the complaint and affidavits, the fact that the association they sought to restrain was prior in date to their own, and on the ground that the prior association's right cannot be taken away in the manner in which the plaintiff has attempted to do so, the motion for an injunction will be denied."

An action lies on behalf of an unincorporated association, particularly one consisting of more than seven members, and which sues in the name of its president or treasurer, to restrain part of its members from incorporating a society under the same name as the association. McGlynn v. Post, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 97.

Power of Part of Members.—A part of the members of a voluntary organization cannot, without the consent of the others, bind them, before the act claimed to be binding is done, or they, with full knowledge of the facts, ratify and adopt it. Sizer v. Daniels, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 426.

Where property rights are involved, the majority of the members have no right, and will not be permitted by the courts, to impair or affect them, against the will of any of the owners. Austin v. Searings, 16 N. Y. 126; 69 Am. Rep. 665.

The majority of an unincorporated lodge or secret society, who withdraw from the grand lodge and surrender their charter, will not be allowed to retain the lodge property, where the minority continue the organization under the same name, their own officers being installed by the grand lodge. Altmann v. Benz, 27 N. J. Eq. 331. But see Chamberlain v. Lincoln, 129 Mass. 70, where it was held that the rights of different persons claiming to represent a subordinate lodge of the Order of Good Templars of Massachusetts, are to be determined by the constitution of the Grand Lodge, and, although a subordinate lodge has done acts which render it liable to have its charter declared forfeited, yet, until it is declared so, it is entitled to possession of the lodge property; and a bill in equity cannot be maintained against its members, to recover possession of such property, by persons claiming to be recognized by the Grand Lodge as the subordinate lodge, until they have exhausted the remedies prescribed in the constitution of the Grand Lodge.

Censure—Notice.—Where it is provided by the constitution of a club that the board of governors may censure or expel members for misconduct, but that no such penalty shall be enforced until after "ten days" notice in writing has been given, it has been held that personal notice is necessary; and a notice by mail received only nine days before such action is not sufficient. People v. Hoboken Turtle Club (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 76.

Non-User.—Honorary Member.—See Harmstead v. Washington Fire Co., 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. (Pa.) 392, where it was held that the privileges of honorary membership in a fire company, if such membership has not been declared forfeited by the proper authority, or in the proper manner, are not lost by non-user.

1. In Fleming v. Hector, 2 M. & W. 172, where a club had got into difficulties, and was dissolved, and a call was made on the members for a certain amount to meet the liabilities, the defendants, among others, refused to pay; whereupon suit was brought for the price of certain articles furnished the club. Lord Abneger, C. B., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The case must stand upon the ground of principal and agent. It is, therefore, a question as to how far the committee who was to conduct the affairs of the club as agents are authorized to enter into such contracts as that upon which the plaintiffs now seek to bind the members of the club at large; and depends on the constitution of the club, which is to be found in its own rules; and on looking at these rules it certainly does strike me that it is impossible to interpret them so as to give the committee the power of dealing on credit even for the purposes of the club. . . . The moment you state the case as one of principal and agent, you see that something more was necessary to fix the defendant than the mere fact that the committee did not pay the money the moment they ordered the wine." In the same case Parke, B., added: "These cases resolve themselves into questions of construction as to the meaning of the original rules of the club. It appears to me quite clear the club was formed upon ready-money principles. If the committee chose to enter into contracts on credit when they had not sufficient funds, that is their own affair," and Lord St. Leonards: "The member pays on the spot, and were he also liable to those supplying the articles, he would pay twice over."

Again, in The St. James's Club Case, 2 De G. M. & G., 383, which was the case of a proprietary club, Lord St. Leonards said: "It was said that the debts were incurred with the sanction of the general body of the members. It is clear that the other members may not be liable generally, yet all who concur in the expenditure are liable. The committee of management exceeded the power given to them; they had no power, either express or implied, to raise money by debentures. It is said there was a meeting approving of this being done, but it nowhere appears who were present. It was also contended that though not liable to third persons, the members are liable inter se. There is the fallacy—they are not liable, except to the extent to which they have agreed to be so." See Todd v. Emly, 8 M. & W. 505; Caldicott v. Griffiths, 8 Exch. 806; Wood v. Finch, 2 F. & F. 447; Bailey v. Macaulay, 19 L. J. Q. B. 73.

The decision in Richmond v. Judy, 6 Mo. App. 465, seems to have been based upon this principle. In this case the court, per Bakewell, J., said: "Associations and clubs, the objects of which are social and political, and not for purposes of trade or profit, are not partnerships, and pecuniary liability can be fastened upon the individual members of such associations only by reason of the acts of such individuals or their agents; and the agency must be made out—none is implied from the mere fact of association."

So in Ash v. Gine, 97 Pa. St. 493, 39 Am. Rep. 818, it was held that all the members of a masonic lodge were not liable as partners to persons who had advanced money upon certificates of deposit in the name of the lodge and signed by the officers thereof, who had been appointed a committee to erect a building for the lodge and authorized to borrow money for this purpose; but that the members of the committee, and all who participated in the erection of the building by voting for or advising it; or who in any way assented to the undertaking, or subsequently ratified it, were alone liable for the amount of the certificate. See also Ferris v. Thaw, 72 Mo. 446, where the same rule was laid down in the case of money borrowed upon a note, and used for lodge purposes. Compare Lewis v. Tilton, 64 Iowa 220; 52 Am. Rep. 436; Reding v. Anderson, 72 Iowa 498; Ray v. Powers, 134 Mass. 22; Devoss v. Gray, 22 Ohio St. 159.

Where several individuals, by voluntary subscription, raised money to build an academy, and at a meeting chose A as their agent to employ workmen, procure materials, etc., and he hired the plaintiff to do work on the building, it was held, that all the subscribers were bound, and might be joined in the suit. Robinson v. Robinson, 10 Me. 240.

McCabe v. Goodfellow (N. Y. 1892), 30 N. E. 728, arose out of an action for services of an attorney at law employed by the president of a law and order league. The league was formed pursuant to a resolution adopted at a public meeting of citizens. A constitution was at the same time adopted and signed by the members, which stated that the object of the league should be to unite all orderly and law abiding citizens, with a general view to aiding the officers of the town in the discharge of their official duties. The members should consist, first, of the central committee, composed of three members of each church and temperance society, and those appointed by the league itself; second, of all other persons willing to sign the constitution. A president, two vice presidents, and a secretary were provided for, and they were to constitute the executive committee. Regular committee meetings were to be held once a month for general business, and funds were to be raised by collections and subscriptions to the "guaranty fund," to which the plaintiff was a subscriber. Under these circumstances, it was held that as there was nothing in the organization of the league, its constitution, or objects, which showed an intention to create a partnership amongst the members, or that they should become personally bound for any debts contracted by its officers, beyond what was necessary for the maintenance of its existence, and as no authority was given to any officer, agent or committee to pledge without limit the personal credit of the members, the action could not be maintained; and the fact that the members knew of the plaintiffs' employment and ratified and approved it, did not render them liable since it appears that they expected that his compensation would be paid out of the fund voluntarily contributed for the purpose, and did not intend that there should be any debts contracted in excess of those funds. The decision below, reported in 15 N. Y. S. 377, was reversed.

The decision in Park v. Spaulding, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 128, as to the liability of members for the debts of the club, does not seem to be based upon any principle of agency, but is broadly stated to the effect that "where a body of gentlemen join themselves together for social intercourse and pleasure, and assume a name under which they commence to incur liabilities, by opening an account, they become jointly liable for any indebtedness thus incurred; and if either of them wishes to avoid his personal responsibility by withdrawal from the body, it is his duty to notify the creditors of such withdrawal; otherwise if a creditor continues to furnish, in good faith, articles such as have been previously purchased for the use of the club, his responsibility will continue upon the same principle that holds retiring partners to liability for an indebtedness subsequently contracted with former creditors."

Where it was shown that a tradesman had examined a list of the members of a club, and, on account of their general reputation, concluded that there was no reason to suppose that his bill would not be paid, it was held that he relied on the general respectability of the members, and could not attempt to fix the liability on any one member. Overton v. Hewett, 3 Times L. R. 446.

To the general rule that the members of an association are liable for goods furnished on the order of an agent of the association, if furnished with their concurrence and approbation, see Ridgeley v. Dobson, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 118; Downing v. Mann, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 36; Steele v. Gourley, 3 Times L. R. 118; Jones v. Hope, 3 Times L. Rep. 247; Newell v. Borden, 128 Mass. 31, where oral evidence that the defendants at one of the meetings of the association passed a vote authorizing the act of the defendant, who ordered certain work and material of the plaintiff, was held competent to show that the other defendants were jointly liable with him.

But where it was sought to hold the defendant, a member of an unincorporated association, liable for a premium offered at an exhibition by a committee of the association, and it did not appear that he was present at the meeting appointing the committee, and there was no evidence of the authority of the committee to incur the debt, judgment was given for the defendant. Vogler v. Ray, 131 Mass. 439.

Where the acting president of a society for educational purposes employed a teacher, the members of the society were held personally liable for his salary. Heath v. Goslin, 80 Mo. 310; 50 Am. Rep. 505.

A and B and twenty-four other persons were members of the committee of management of a club. The club being in debt, a resolution was passed at a general meeting of the club, at which B was not present, on the 1st of June, 1852, to the effect that a loan of £4,000 was necessary to free the society from outstanding liabilities, and that the committee be empowered to raise that sum on the guaranty of the society. At a meeting of the committee on the 15th of June, at which B was present, this resolution was discussed; and at a second general meeting of the society, held on the same day, the resolution for the loan was confirmed. At a meeting of the committee on the 3d of August, the terms of a loan from the Commercial Bank were arranged, and the money was placed to the credit of the club on the 5th, their account being at the same time transferred from another bank to the Commercial Bank.

sufficient to fix his liability.¹ But where the officers of a club are allowed by its rules to buy on credit, the members can be held responsible for such purchases.²

On the 12th of August the signatures of B and of other members, who were authorized to sign checks on behalf of the club, were transmitted to the Commercial Bank, and various checks were afterwards drawn by B and other members of the committee, upon the Commercial Bank, for the current expenses of the club. An action was brought by the Commercial Bank against A to recover the balance due to them from the club, and judgment having been recovered therein against A for a large sum which he had paid, it was held that, there being evidence of his previous assent to and subsequent ratification of the act of the committee in obtaining the loan, B was liable to contribution, and that the proceedings at the meetings at which he was not present were admissible in evidence against him in an action brought by A to enforce such contribution. Mountcashell v. Barber, 14 C. B. 53; 78 E. C. L. 51; 2 C. L. R. 60.

Where a person, by express permission, allowed his name to be used as a member of a committee of arrangements for an association ball, and subscribed for some of the preliminary expenses, but did nothing more and was not present at the ball, he could not be liable for the costs of a supper provided at the ball without his knowledge or consent. Downing v. Mann, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 36.

A rented a room to a theatrical club at a certain amount per month. After the contract was made B became a member of the association and as such used the room but was not liable for the rent on the contract made before he became a member. Barry v. Nickolls, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 324.

Where one member of an association had employed the plaintiffs to do work for the benefit of all, and had had an accounting with the other members, assuming and receiving credit for payments due the plaintiffs, it was held that he was liable therefor without the other members being joined in the action. Secor v. Law, 4 Abb. App. Ct. Dec. (N. Y.) 188.

The defendant purchased a steamboat and had her repaired, with the expectation of selling her to an association which he and the plaintiff who made the repairs expected to join; it was held that, unless the credit was given to the association by agreement, the defendant was liable. Wells v. Turner, 16 Md. 133.

In Tenney v. New England, etc. Union, 37 Vt. 64, it was held that a member of an association does not relieve himself from liability by ceasing to participate in its management. And in an action against the association, if a person was a member thereof at the time negotiations between the plaintiffs and such association began, they may treat him as a member until notified of his withdrawal, unless it is shown that they were ignorant of his being a member when credit was given. See Park v. Spaulding, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 128. And in the same case it was held that neither the death nor the withdrawal of a member of an association affects the liability of those continuing to be members, for debts contracted in the name of the association, when it was not designed that such should be the effect, the organization being intended to be perpetual. Compare Tyrrell v. Washburn, 6 Allen (Mass.) 466.

Burden of Proof.—The burden of proving that authority has been conferred upon the officer making the contract is upon the party who asserts its validity. New Ebenezer Assoc. v. Gress Lumber Co. (Ga. 1892), 14 S. E. Rep. 892.

New York Statute.—The New York statute provides that, in the case of incorporated clubs, the creditors must look to the trustees or other officers for the payment of all debts contracted while they are trustees, provided such debts are payable one year from the time they were contracted; and that a suit shall be brought within one year after the debts are due. *Hall v. 3. Expulsion.—The causes for expelling members from societies and clubs are to be looked for in the rules and by-laws.¹ The power to carry these rules into effect is vested usually in a committee, or in the general body of the club, when it may be exercised in a meeting by the vote of a prescribed proportion of the members, and it is only under certain circumstances that the courts will interfere to annul the action of such committee or meeting.²

Fellows for arrears due by him. Upon his admission to the lodge he had signed the constitution and by-laws, thereby agreeing to support the same and to pay all legal demands against him so long as he should continue a member of the lodge. It was held that, the demands being not unreasonable, and the distinction between suspension and expulsion having been frequently recognized in the by-laws of the society, the party suspended did not cease to be a member, and continued liable to pay the contributions which the by-laws required. Palmetto Lodge v. Hubbell, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 457; 49 Am. Dec. 604.

1. For what has been held reasonable or unreasonable causes for expulsion, see DISFRANCHISEMENT, vol. 5, p. 687.

"There is no reason why the principles laid down [in regard to formally incorporated bodies] should not apply to those unincorporated; we have seen in a former section that these also are favorably regarded by the courts, and all property rights of members jealously protected. A recent English case (Wood v. Wood, L. R., 9 Exch. 190) tends to prove that the courts are fully as considerate in dealing with the unincorporated as with the others." Hirschl, Fraternities and Societies, § 12.

In Rigby v. Connol, 28 W. R. 650, the principle is laid down that the courts will not interfere in the matter of expulsion if there are no property rights involved. It is to be presumed, however, that such case would very rarely arise. In delivering the opinion, Jessel, M. R., said: "No courts of justice can interfere so long as there is no property, the rights to which are taken away from the person complaining. Now if that is the foundation of the jurisdiction, the plaintiff, if he succeeds at all, must succeed on the ground that some rights of property to which he was entitled have been taken away from him. That this is the foundation of the interference of courts as regards clubs, I think, is quite clear, for, if you look at the Lord Chancellor's judgment in Re St. James's Club, 2 De G. M. & G. 387, you will see that he puts it thus—that the member had an interest in the assets of the club. Similarly, in the case of Hopkinson v. Marquis of Exeter, 16 W. R. 266, L. R., 5 Eq. 66, Lord Romilly starts with the right to the enjoyment of the club property, and the subsequent cases have gone on the same ground." Compare Sale v. First Regular Baptist Church, 62 Iowa 26; 49 Am. Rep. 136.

2. Power to Expel.—It would seem from Dawkins v. Antrobus, 17 Ch. Div. 615, that in England a club, if unincorporated, or any unincorporated voluntary association, was without inherent power to expel a member in the absence of a provision in its constitution or by-laws; but this is not the American doctrine. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 329; Loubat v. Le Roy, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1; 40 Hun (N. Y.) 546.

As to the English rule, see Innes v. Wylie, 1 C. & K. 257; 47 E. C. L. 255, where it was held that any society may make any rules by which the admission and expulsion of its members are to be regulated, and the members must conform to those rules; but where there is not any property in which all the members of the society have a joint interest, and where there is no rule as to expulsion, the majority may, by resolution, remove any member; but, before that is done, notice must be given to him to answer the charge made against him, and an opportunity given to him for making his defense.

"In all cases, whether the power of expulsion is rated in committee or general meeting, it is a very wide and arbitrary power, and in its terms there is no restriction of any kind on the exercise of it, however capricious or tyrannical. But it is an ancient and

It may be said generally that the courts will not assume jurisdiction of matters of expulsion until all recourse to the tribunals of the club itself has been exhausted;¹ but after this has well established rule of English law, that no person shall be dispossessed of a place of profit or honor, or be deprived of rights which he has acquired by contract or otherwise, without a fair trial, and without the exercise of a bona fide and sound discretion on the part of those who claim the power so to dispossess or deprive him." Leach's Club Cases, p. 16.

"In an unincorporated voluntary association, the privilege of membership is not given by statute, or derived through prescription, as in a corporation; but is created and conferred by the organization itself. It is not a franchise—a franchise being a particular privilege vested in individuals, which is conferred by a grant from a sovereign or government—while on the contrary the privilege of membership in a voluntary association is derived exclusively from the body that bestows it, and may be conferred or withheld at pleasure. The law cannot compel such an organization to admit an individual to membership, as may be done in the case of a corporation, nor can it interfere to restore a member who has been deprived of the privilege, for not complying with the conditions upon which the enjoyment of it was made to depend. A member of a body of this description has, as such, undoubtedly, rights which the law will protect, but they do not rest upon the same ground, and are by no means co-extensive with the franchise enjoyed by a member of a corporation. They depend upon the nature of the organization, upon the object for which it was formed and upon the rules, regulations, constitution or by-laws which are explanatory of its purpose, and which the body has adopted for its government." Daly, J., in White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 192.

By-Laws.—The members of a voluntary unincorporated society are bound by their by-laws, whether reasonable or unreasonable. Elsas v. Alford, 1 City Ct. Rep. 123. Where there is a provision in the rules of a social club that a general meeting may alter rules affecting the general interests of the club, a new rule providing for the expulsion of a member for conduct injurious to the character and interests of the club, is binding upon a member expelled under it, although there was no provision for expulsion when he became a member; for he is presumed to have consented to such rule. Dawkins v. Antrobus, 41 L. T. N. S. 490. Compare Poultney v. Bachman, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 49. White v. Brownell, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318.

Where a by-law of a club gives the directors the power of expulsion, "for acts or conduct which they may deem disorderly or injurious to the interests, or hostile to the objects, of the club," it is not essential to the validity of a conviction upon such charge, that there be a finding by the tribunal trying the offense, in totidem verbis; but it is sufficient if a resolution be passed, that the member was guilty of a violation of the by-law, based upon the fact that, without provocation, he charged a fellow member in the clubhouse of acting like a blackguard. Com. v. Union League, 135 Pa. St. 301.

See By-Laws, vol. 2, p. 708.

Where it was provided in the constitution of a voluntary medical society that if the annual dues were not paid by a certain time, "the defaulter shall forfeit his membership . . . and of this he shall be duly notified;" and that notice of such requirement should be severed every year, and that on reading the roll of members, any such defaulter should be immediately stricken from the roll, it was held that the nonpayment of dues at the specified time was not ipso facto a forfeiture of membership. Medical, etc. Society, etc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248.

1. To the effect that an expelled member must seek redress within the association before the courts are open to him are, Loubat v. Le Roy, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1; 40 Hun (N. Y.) 546; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 329; Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 508; Poultney v. Bachman, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 49; Harrington v. Workmen's Ben. Assoc., 70 Ga. 340; Bauer's Appeal (Pa. 1878), 18 Alb. L. J. 218; Lewis v. Wilson, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 166.

In Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 508, Miller, J., said: "As the members who are claimed by the plaintiffs to have been chargeable with a violation of the rules of the association, were been done, legal interposition may be sought where it appears that the expulsion was effected without giving to the member expelled, notice, and a fair opportunity to defend himself,¹ or where not called upon to answer so as to correct the evils complained of, and as the power to remedy the same was ample and complete, the plaintiffs are not in a position to seek the interposition of a court of equity. Courts, as a general rule, should not interfere with the contentions and quarrels of voluntary associations, so long as the government is fairly and honestly administered; and those who have grievances should be required in the first instance to resort to the remedies for redress provided by their rules and regulations." See also Olery v. Brown, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 92; Lucas v. Case, 9 Bush (Ky.) 297.

But in Mulroy v. Supreme Lodge, 28 Mo. App. 463, it was held that this rule only applies where the association is acting strictly within the scope of its powers.

1. Notice and Hearing.—The question of notice underwent discussion in the case of Loubat v. Le Roy, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1; 40 Hun (N. Y.) 546. In the opinion at the special term the court said that this was the first case in New York State in which a court of equity had been called upon to determine the principles or methods of governing, or to be employed by a purely social club in conducting investigations as to the conduct of a member leading to his expulsion. The court said that the jurisdiction was indisputable, membership in the club in question being a valuable social privilege, and an unjust expulsion a stigma on character to be redressed in a court of equity. The case of Wachtel v. Widows' etc., Soc., 84 N. Y. 28; 38 Am. Rep. 478, was cited as analogous, though that was not the case of a club; and the language of the opinion in that case—"It is well settled that an association whose members become entitled to privileges or rights to property therein cannot exercise its proper powers of expulsion without notice to the person charged, or without giving him an opportunity to be heard"—was approved and deemed applicable. The court adverted to the fact that the English court of chancery had been called upon to deal with these questions, and quoted the following language of Lord Romilly in Gardner v. Freemantle, 19

W. R. 256: "I point out that these clubs are formed entirely for social purposes, and there must be some paramount authority to keep up their objects. In some cases the court will interfere with the exercise of that paramount authority, but only where there is moral culpability, or if the decisions arrived at are from fraud, personal hostility, or bias; but in cases of this description all that this court requires to know is that the persons who are summoned really exercised that judgment honestly. The court will not decide whether they did rightly or wrongly." The facts of the New York case were, the governing committee of the club referred to a sub-committee the duty of investigating the facts relied on as ground for expulsion, and reporting the same to the governing committee. The plaintiff, whose conduct was under discussion, was notified to appear before the sub-committee and make his statement. This he did. Statements of other persons were made in his absence, and on these statements, as well as on that of the plaintiff, the sub-committee based its report, which was adopted by the governing committee, without further notice or hearing. In the special term the proceeding was deemed sufficiently regular, but the general term held otherwise, taking the ground that the duty of the sub-committee was one of mere investigation, and of the collection of statements of facts; that this committee had no power, either under the resolution appointing it, or under the constitution and by-laws of the club, to act upon the evidence obtained; that the governing committee was the sole body to hear and determine the case, and that when it received the report of the sub-committee the case was first placed in the condition in which effective action could be taken upon the facts; and that as the plaintiff had no opportunity to appear before the governing committee, or to be heard concerning the action to be taken by it, his rights were infringed.

The leading English case is that of Dawkins v. Antrobus, 17 Ch. Div. 615. The court there said: "We have no right to sit as a court of appeal upon the decision of the members of the

it was effected in a manner contrary to the rules and regulations of the society,¹ or where the expulsion was not bona fide, but the result of fraud or malice.² The burden of proof is presumably club duly assembled; all we have to consider is, whether the notice was or was not given according to the proper rules, whether the meeting was properly convened, and whether the meeting, if properly convened, had come to the conclusion that this gentleman ought to be expelled." It was further said: "The court has no right to consider whether what was done was right or not, or, even as a substantive question, whether what was decided was reasonable or not. The only question is, whether it was done bona fide."

To the point that courts will not review the merits of the expulsion of a member of a voluntary association if its rules have been complied with and new notice and an opportunity for a hearing have been given are, Com. v. Pike Ben. Soc., 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 250; Olery v. Brown, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 92; Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 507; Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38; Lambert v. Addison, 46 L. T. 20.

Where a member of a society used menacing language towards another member of the society, and for this a majority of a general meeting of the society voted that he should no longer be considered a member of the society, but did not give him any notice of the intention to take his conduct into consideration, or any opportunity of making his defense, it was held that this expulsion was invalid, and that he was still a member of the society. Innes v. Wylie, 1 C. & K. 257; 47 E. C. L. 255.

Again, in Fisher v. Keane, 14 L. T. 335, it was said by Jessell, M. R.: "In my opinion, a committee . . . is bound to act . . . according to the ordinary principles of justice, and is not to convict a man of a grave offense which shall warrant his expulsion from the club without fair, adequate and sufficient notice, and an opportunity of meeting the accusations brought against him. It ought not, as I understand it, according to the ordinary rules by which justice should be administered by committees of clubs, or by any other body of persons, who decide upon the conduct of others, to blast a man's reputation forever, perhaps to ruin his prospects for life, without giving him an opportunity of either defending or palliating his conduct." See People v. St. Franciscus Ben. Soc., 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 216; Labouchere v. Earl of Wharcliffe, 13 Ch. Div. 346; New York Protective Assoc. v. McGrath, 23 N. Y. St. Rep. 209; Gebhard v. New York Club, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 250.

In Fritz v. Muck, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 69, it was held, that even where it was not provided by the rules of the society for notice to be given, the plaintiff, who had been expelled without notice, should be reinstated, as such rule was unreasonable and unjust. Compare People v. Fire Department, 31 Mich. 458.

1. Thus in White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 162, it was held in a suit for an injunction to restrain the officers of a voluntary unincorporated association from carrying into effect a resolution or vote by which the plaintiff was suspended from membership, that the only question is, whether the plaintiff was suspended according to the constitution and by-laws of the association, and that he has no cause of complaint unless they were violated in the proceeding against him. "Those who become members of such associations are bound by their rules, not being in conflict with the law of the land; and the courts can interfere no further than to hold the association to a fair and honest administration of those rules." See also Foster v. Harrison, 72 Law Times 183; 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 46 (n); Dawkins v. Antrobus, 44 L. T. N. S. 557; aff'd 41 L. T. N. S. 490; Labouchere v. Earl of Wharcliffe, 13 Ch. Div. 346.

Quorum.—If a two thirds vote of the committee is required by the constitution of a club to expel a member, and it is provided that a majority of the committee shall constitute a quorum, a two thirds vote of a quorum of the committee as it existed at the time of the vote is sufficient, although there are vacancies in the committee. Loubat v. LeRoy, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1.

2. Hopkinson v. Marquis of Exeter, L. R., 5 Eq. 63, where Lord Romilly, M. R., said: "It is clear that every member has contracted to abide by that rule which gives the absolute discretion to two thirds of the members on the party complaining, to show the existence of facts to justify the interference of the court, and the ordinary rules of evidence apply.¹

present to expel any member. Such discretion must not be capricious or arbitrary discretion; but if the decision has been arrived at bona fide, without any caprice or improper motive, then it is a judicial opinion from which there is no appeal. None but the members of the club can know the little details which are essential to the social well being of such a society of gentlemen, and it must be a very strong case that would induce this court to interfere." And in the later case of Gardner v. Freemantle, 19 W. R. 256, the same principle was laid down, somewhat amplified.

To this point generally are White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 162, aff'g 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318; Loubat v. LeRoy, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1.

The case of Dawkins v. Antrobus, 44 L. T. N. S. 557, aff'g 41 L. T. N. S. 490, reviewed all the grounds upon which the interference of the courts might be based; and it was held that the action of the plaintiff, who had had an opportunity of explanation, the rules having been duly observed, and the action of the club having been exercised bona fide and without malice, could not be maintained; and likewise, that even if the decision of the club had been erroneous, but given bona fide, and in accordance with the rules, the court would not have interfered. Compare Com. v. Union League, 135 Pa. St. 301; People v. St. George's Soc., 28 Mich. 261.

The case of Lyttleton v. Blackburn, 33 L. T. N. S. 642, is of little weight on this point. The vice-chancellor refused to review the decision of a club committee, although it had been given under circumstances calculated to lead to the conclusion that the committee had been influenced by a wish to check inquiry into the position and management of the club; and while the vice chancellor did say that the powers of the committee must not be exercised capriciously, but bona fide, still he accepted its decision in the suit as conclusive evidence of their bona fides, which was quite sufficient to render it impossible that the decisions of a committee or club could ever be reversed, whatever limitations to their power might exist in theory.

In Gebhard v. New York Club, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 248, it was held that where the constitution of a club regulates the trial of offenses against the club, the court will not enjoin the club from proceeding in such trial against the accused member before any violation of his right to a fair trial is shown.

The conclusions drawn by Mr. Leach from the English decisions, in regard to the interference of courts in matters of expulsion from social clubs are summarized as follows: "Clubs are essentially social institutions, and other objects are merely secondary and adventitious. Gentlemanly conduct and good feeling between the members are necessary for the maintenance and prosperity of the club as a social institution; there must be some paramount authority to take note of any ungentlemanly behavior or breach of the good feeling of the club, and that authority is usually vested in a committee; it is their duty, as well as their own and the club's interest, to inquire into any alleged offense against club morals, and, if need be, to take the initiative in instituting such inquiry. But the penalties on the convicted offender are so serious that it behooves them to act in a manner befitting what they are—a judicial or quasi-judicial body—and in consequence, they should in such matters act strictly in accordance with the rules of the club, and the ordinary principles of justice; and they should pay particular attention to the constitution of the court, by seeing that due notices are sent to all the persons who ought to be summoned, whether as committeemen, witness, or accused; and that no one who has any bias or personal interest in the matter in question should sit as a member of the tribunal on the inquiry; the accused person should be given full opportunity of defending himself; and finally the decision should be arrived at in a bona fide manner, on the circumstances in evidence, without malice and without caprice. If any of these considerations can be shown to have been disregarded, then a judicial tribunal will interfere, and the decision of the quasi-judicial tribunal will be set aside." Leach's Club Cases, p. 47.

1. Evidence.—In Gardner v. Freeman—

If the expelled member maintains his claim, a remedy may be afforded by an injunction restraining the officers from interference with his privileges.¹

V. OFFICERS.—The appointment, powers, and duties of the officers of unincorporated societies and clubs are regulated largely by constitutions and by-laws.² On the unauthorized contracts of tle, 19 W. R. 256, the testimony of five of the committee, which consisted of eighteen, was introduced to show that they had acted bona fide, and were not influenced by the other party to the controversy, who always retired from the meeting after the case of the plaintiff was dismissed.

In Lyttleton v. Blackburn, 33 L. T. N. S. 642, the court could not take the plaintiff's assertion that he believed, or suspected the committee to have acted maliciously in expelling him, because the committee called upon swore that they had not acted capriciously, unjustly, or corruptly, and stated their reasons. But this decision has been criticised. Leach's Club Cases, 28, and practically overruled in Fisher v. Keane, 11 Ch. Div. 353, where it was held that an expulsion on purely ex parte evidence will be set aside.

If the rules of a club are contained in a book kept by the master of the club, and accessible to the members, every member of the club must be taken to be acquainted with them. Raggett v. Musgrave, 2 C. & P. 556; 12 E. C. L. 260.

Burden of Proof.—The good standing of a member having been shown, by the certificate or otherwise, the burden of proving a loss of good standing is on the society, where it relies on such loss to justify an expulsion. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Johnson, 78 Ind. 110.

1. See Foster v. Harrison, 72 Law Times 183; 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 46 n, and cases cited under notes supra. Fritz v. Muck, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 69.

2. See OFFICERS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS, vol. 17, p. 39.

Powers.—A voluntary association cannot be converted into a corporation by the executive board, unless the power to do so is conferred upon such committee by the constitution and by-laws, or by the express resolution of the association; and if it is desired to ratify the action of the committee which has exceeded its authority in such case, the meeting must be called by competent authority, the members generally must be notified of the meeting and its purpose, and there must be a majority of the members present. Rudolph v. Southern Ben. League (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 135.

One of a committee of five of an unincorporated religious society assumed authority to make a contract on behalf of the committee, and his act was afterwards ratified by a majority of the members. It was held that the result was the same as if authority had been originally conferred. But ratification will not be sufficient unless those ratifying have a full knowledge of all material facts, or unless it is made under circumstances by reason of which there may be a fair presumption of such knowledge. New Ebenezer Assoc. v. Gress Lumber Co. (Ga. 1892). 14 S. E. Rep. 892.

Judicial Powers.—"Most of these associations, societies and fraternities have within their organization provision for adjudication upon questions arising between the member and the society, and many go even so far as to establish tribunals for the adjusting of private controversies between member and member."—Hirschl's Law of Fraternities and Societies, p. 38.

The force of adjudications by society tribunals depends largely upon circumstances, and the nature of the right involved. If it be a personal right—for example, the expulsion of a member—their decisions will generally be binding. See infra, this title, Expulsion. But in the case of property rights, it was held in Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Rep. 665, that a voluntary association—for example, the Odd Fellows—cannot confer judicial powers on its officers or committees. The creation of judicial tribunals is one of the functions of the sovereign power, and an adjudication of such officers, as such, on rights of property, is not good as a judgment, nor, it seems, as an award. See Nicks v. Monihan (N. Y. 1891), 29 N. E. Rep. 139. Lamphere v. Grand Lodge (Mich. 1882), 11 N. W. Rep. 268; Mauson v. Grand Lodge (Minn. 1883), 16 N.

officers the members are not liable, though the officers themselves, who attempt thus without authority to bind themselves or the society, may make themselves liable personally.¹

W. Rep. 395; Davies v. Mayo, 82 Va. 97.

In Rudolph v. Southern Ben. League (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 135, it was held that if a decision of a committee of a voluntary association, in pursuance of which property was transferred and pecuniary interests were affected, operates unjustly as to any of the members, the court would restrain its enforcement.

Treasurer.—The treasurer of a voluntary association for charitable purposes will be held to account for the money in his hands, and must pay it over to those entitled to receive it according to the interests of the association. Penfield v. Skinner, 11 Vt. 296.

Where an association was formed for the purpose of paying to its members, out of a common fund, certain sums upon certain contingencies, with the condition that should the contingency fail, the fund should be restored to the members according to their subscriptions, it was held that upon the non-occurrence of the contingency, an action by a member, for money had and received, to recover the amount of his subscriptions, would lie against the treasurer, who had possession of the funds. Koehler v. Brown, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 78.

The laws of an unincorporated association provided that the funds should be placed in the hands of the treasurer, and that none should be drawn out, except by an order of the council, signed by a certain officer and two trustees; but no manner of transferring the funds to a successor was provided for. It was held that an action to recover the funds would not lie against the treasurer on account of his refusal to pay the money, in pursuance of a resolution by the council, where no order had been drawn and signed, as provided. Smith v. Pinney, 86 Mich. 484.

The New Orleans Board of Underwriters, a body composed of private individuals without being incorporated, received through their treasurer on deposit money to which the plaintiff was entitled. It was held that a suit to recover the money could be maintained against the treasurer in his individual capacity. Bennett v. Wheeler, 12 La. Ann. 763.

Removal of Officers.—Where the laws which govern a voluntary unincorporated association provide a remedy within the association for any offense committed by its officers, neither opposition on its part of the officers to the authority under which they act, nor irregularity in the performance of their duties, will authorize a part of the members to withdraw from a regular meeting, for the purpose of expelling its regularly elected officers, and of constituting themselves their successors. McCallion v. Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc., 70 Cal. 163. See generally AMOTON, vol. 1, p. 557.

Under the constitution and by-laws of the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias in Pennsylvania, an officer of a grand or a subordinate lodge cannot be suspended by the grand chancellor without a trial and judgment by the lodge. Lowry v. Stotzer, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 397.

1. In re St. James's Club, 2 DeG. M. & G. 383; 13 Eng. L. & Eq. 589; Todd v. Emly, 8 M. & W. 505. See also Fleming v. Rector, 2 M. & W. 272.

But trustees of an association are not individually liable for its debts unless they have in some way rendered themselves so. Wolf v. Schleiffer, 2 Brew. (Pa.) 563; or unless liability is fixed upon them by statute as in New York, where it is provided by laws of 1865, ch. 368, that trustees of associations formed for social and recreative purposes are responsible for debts incurred during their term of office. Hall v. Siegel, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 206.

Under this statute, the trustees of a club are liable for work done under a contract, where they have ratified an excess of expenditure above the amount allowed by the governing board, and have made payments on account of the debt and asked for time in which to pay the residue; and in such case it is not necessary for the creditor to exhaust his remedy against the club before proceeding against the trustees, nor does an action to enforce a mechanic's lien against the club affect the claim against the trustees for the same work. Robinson v. Fay (Supreme Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 120.

And so it seems that if it can be shown that individual credit was given to the officer or committee contracting

V. DISSOLUTION—1. Mode; Grounds.—The mode of dissolution is frequently provided for by constitutions and by-laws. In the absence of a provision therein, a resolution passed at a general meeting of the society may direct a dissolution;¹ or a court of equity may be appealed to if the condition of things is such as to make this an appropriate remedy.

In addition to any grounds which may be set out in the constitution or by-laws, for which a society may be dissolved by a resolution of the members, a court of equity will decree a dissolution at the suit of one or more members, where violent dissena debt, he will be primarily liable; and it is a question for the jury, whether credit was given to such officer or to the association. Ebbinghausen v. Worth Club, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 400. See Fredendall v. Taylor, 23 Wis. 538; 99 Am. Dec. 203.

Again, in Todd v. Emly, 8 M. & W. 505, it was held that in order to charge the whole committee, it must be proved that the member or members of it who gave the order did so with the knowledge, and by the express or implied authority, of the other members; and the question whether the credit was extended to the individual member or to the whole committee is for the jury. Delaunay v. Strickland, 2 Stark. 416.

In Wisconsin it has been held in Fredendall v. Taylor, 23 Wis. 538, 99 Am. Dec. 203, that a committee appointed by an unincorporated association was primarily liable upon a contract made by them for work, although authorized to make such contract. This case arose out of a contract for the construction of a wellor tank in certain fair grounds, to be used by the Firemen's Association in their exercises. In delivering the opinion, the court, by Paine, J., said: "It is true they [the committee] did not act personally in contracting with the plaintiff, the committee having delegated its authority to a sub-committee, composed of S and L [two of the defendants]. But the latter, in making the contract, were acting as agents of the committee, so that the liability of the whole committee is the same as though all had acted in making the contract. It was not claimed that the contract was not within the scope of the committee's authority or of that delegated to the sub-committee. On the contrary, it is conceded that the well was necessary to the tournament and it was for that purpose. It is conceded that the association was not incorporated at this time and had no legal existence, so that it could contract or be sued as such. And when such is the case, a committee which assumes to contract for services for such an irresponsible, intangible association must become personally liable, else there is no liability whatever." Compare McCartee v. Chambers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; 22 Am. Dec. 556.

Building Committees.—A number of persons formed an association for the purpose of building a meeting house, and three were appointed a committee to superintend the erection. In an action against the committee to recover for services rendered by plaintiff, who was also a member of the association, it was held that as the defendants did not make any express promise, or pledge their individual credit, and as there were no funds put at their disposal by the association; and as they acted under the direction and control of the members; and further, as plaintiff and defendants were all members of the association, and equally interested in the project, the latter were not liable. Cheeny v. Clark, 3 Vt. 431; 23 Am. Dec. 219. Compare Abbott v. Cobb, 17 Vt. 593.

1. "A club can only be dissolved by a resolution passed by a general meeting, or (perhaps) by a chancery action." Leach's Club Cases 55.

In Industrial Trust Co. v. Greene (R. I. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 914, it was held that a dissolution was not effected by a vote in favor thereof, passed at a special meeting which had been called by a deposed president, who was no longer recognized as president by the society.

In the St. James's Club Case, 2 DeG. M. & G. 383, it was held that an organization of this character did not come within the provisions of the English Winding Up Act.

sions and lasting differences have arisen between them;¹ or where the funds have been improperly dealt with; or there has been bad faith or mismanagement in the control of affairs²; and likewise the exclusion of a member from the privileges of membership has been held sufficient ground for dissolution,³ but this view seems contrary to principle and authority.⁴ Non-user may effect a dissolution.⁵

3. Effect.—Upon the dissolution of a society or club, its members are each entitled to their proportionate shares of its property and effects, and the officers or members, as the case may be, are liable for the outstanding debts.⁶

1. Lafond v. Deems, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 41; 81 N. Y. 507. See Fischer v. Raab, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 87, where Daly, J., said: "In case of violent dissensions and irreconcilable differences between the members of a voluntary association, judgment will be rendered at the suit of one or more members against all the others dissolving the society. But no action will be entertained for such a purpose upon mere proof of differences of opinion, bad temper, or the ordinary disputes common to such societies; nor upon proof of injuries or injustice sustained by one member, through the action or vote of the society, if he have another remedy."

In Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 98, it was held that an unincorporated hose company was not a partnership; and that a court of equity would not dissolve such an association and apportion the fund among those charged by the by-laws with its distribution, "as long as there are those who are ready to execute the public trust with which the fund has been clothed."

2. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 531.

In Pearce v. Piper, 17 Ves. 15, it was said that any friendly society formed on erroneous principles would be dissolved by the courts, and payments which exhaust the funds would be restrained.

3. Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 531; aff'd in 18 Cal. 688.

4. Burke v. Roper, 79 Ala. 138; see Lafond v. Deems, 81 N. Y. 507; Thomas v. Ellmaker, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 98; Fischer v. Raab, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 87.

And so in a recent case of a mutual benefit society, where the president was removed, in violation of its by-laws, no written charges having been preferred against him; but where he himself had put the motion for his removal, had retired upon an affirmative vote, and had taken part in subsequent meetings without asserting his right to preside—it was held that the removal of the president was not ground for dissolution, as he was presumed to have acquiesced in the proceeding for the sake of harmony. Industrial Trust Co. v. Greene (R. I. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 914.

5. Thus, in Strickland v. Prichard, 37 Vt. 324, it was held that where an unincorporated masonic lodge sold its furniture, and ceased to have meetings for twenty-three years, it had become dissolved by non-user.

So where a voluntary association voted to transfer its funds to another organization, and ceased to hold meetings for five years, it was held that the association was dissolved and that the proceedings of subsequent meetings were of no effect. Penfield v. Skinner, 11 Vt. 296. Compare Burke v. Roper, 79 Ala. 138.

6. Lord St. Leonards in In re St. James's Club, 2 DeG. M. & G. 383. Hibernia Fire Engine Co. v. Com., 93 Pa. St. 264.

In Hewett v. Hatch, 57 Vt. 16, it was held that the trustees, upon dissolution of a voluntary association, could not maintain replevin against one of its members to recover the common property.

Where the charter of a subordinate organization provided that in case of dissolution such funds as it possessed should be turned over to the general council, but instead of such transfer they had, upon dissolution, been divided amongst the members of the subordinate lodge, it was held that such members could be compelled to repay the funds to the general council, by a suit brought against them personally. State Council v. Sharp, 38 N. J. Eq. 24.

I. DEFINITION.—Sodomy is a carnal knowledge committed against the order of nature by man with man, or in the same unnatural manner with woman, or by man or woman in any manner with a beast.¹

II. NATURE AND PUNISHMENT—1. Nature.—In early times in England, this offense was regarded as highly penal.² Gradually, however, it came to be looked upon as less criminal, until, by

1. See 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 698; 1 Bish. on Criml. Law (7th ed.), § 503; 4 Bl. Com. 215. See also BUGGERY, vol. 2, p. 600.

The offense is named sodomy from the supposed prevalence of the sin in Sodom. Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355; 71 Am. Dec. 331; 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 569. It includes bestiality. See BESTIALITY, vol. 2, p. 185.

In Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355; 71 Am. Dec. 331, the court by Perkins, J., defined bestiality to be a "connection between a human being and a brute of the opposite sex;" and sodomy to be a "connection between two human beings of the same sex—the male;" and held that both may be embraced in the term "crime against nature."

That this distinction is not generally made will be sufficiently seen by a glance at the authorities above cited.

At a trial where the information charged the defendant with an assault with intent to commit the "infamous crime against nature," the court instructed the jury that the "crime against nature" was synonymous with sodomy, and this was correct. People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 397.

In State v. Williams, 34 La. Ann. 87, it was contended by the defendant that § 788, Louisiana Rev. Stat., providing for the punishment of the "abominable and detestable crime against nature, committed with mankind or beast," does not define the crime, nor describe any crime known to the common law; but it was held that this contention was untenable.

Buggery is a detestable and abominable sin, amongst Christians not to be named, committed by carnal knowledge, against the ordinance of the Creator, and order of nature, by mankind with mankind, or with brute beast, or by womankind with brute beast. 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392.

Sodomy is a carnal copulation, by human beings, with each other against nature, or with a beast. 2 Bish. Cr. Law (7th ed.), § 1191.

Sodomy consists in sexual connection with any brute animal, or in sexual connection, per anum, by a man with any man or woman. 1 Wharton Cr. Law (8th ed.), § 579. See, also, Stephen's Digest of Cr. Law, art. 168.

By the Ohio act of April 12, 1889, "whoever shall have carnal copulation in any opening of the body, except in sexual parts, with another human being, or with a beast, shall be deemed guilty of sodomy."

2. Lord Coke says: "It appears by the ancient authorities of law that this was felony; but they vary in punishment, for Brit., ch. 9, saith that sorcerers, sodomers, and hereticks shall be burnt; F. N. S. 269a agrees with it statute, it was again declared to be felony.¹ This statute, subsequently repealed,² was revived and confirmed in the reign of Elizabeth.³ So, that, by the common law of the States of the Union, sodomy is an offense;⁴ but whether a crime or a misdemeanor is uncertain.⁵

2. Punishment.⁶—According to some of the ancient authorities, the sodomite was punished in England by being burned to death;⁷ but one high authority said he should be buried alive.⁸ This

But Flet., bib. 1, ch. 35, Pecorantes, et sodomitæ terra, vivi cui sodiantur. But in the ancient book called the Mirror of Justice, vouched in Pow. Com. in Fogoffe's case, the crime is more high, for there it is called crimen læse Majestatis, a sin horrible, committed against the King of Heaven." 12 Coke's Rep. 36. 3. Stat. 5 Eliz., ch. 7. See 12 Coke's Rep. 36.

The present English statute is the 24 and 25 Vict., ch. 100, § 61.

4. See 1 Bish. on Cr. Law (7th ed.), § 503.

5. 2 Bish. on Cr. Law (7th ed.), § 1196.

In Coburn v. Harwood, Minor (Ala.) 93; 12 Am. Dec. 37 it was said that sodomy was indictable neither by the statutes of the State nor by the common law.

In Iowa sodomy is declared not to be a crime. Estes v. Carter, 10 Iowa 400.

In Texas, the law has lately undergone a change. Fennell v. State, 32 Tex. 378, was an indictment as if at common law for sodomy. The court by Lindsay, J., said: "The third article of the general provisions of the criminal code (Pas. Dig., art. 1605) declares that, 'in order that the system of penal law in force in this State may be complete within itself, and that no system of foreign laws written or unwritten, may be appealed to, it is declared that no person shall be punished for any act or omission as a penal offense unless the same is expressly defined and the penalty affixed by the written law of this State.' Art. 2033 of the same code says: 'If any person shall commit, with mankind or beast, the abominable and detestable crime against nature, he shall be deemed guilty of sodomy, and on conviction thereof he shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for not less than five nor more than fifteen years.' Now, we conceive that this latter article is no definition of the common-law crime of sodomy. It is not defined by our statute what the 'abominable and detestable crime against nature' is. To ascertain what it is we have to appeal to the unwritten or common law. To do so we shall be compelled to act in contravention of the expressed object of the criminal code. The crime against nature is wholly undefined by the criminal code, and, therefore, according to its express injunction, is not punishable."

This case was followed by Frazier v. State, 39 Tex. 390.

But in Ex parte Bergen, 14 Tex. App. 52, the court by Willson, J., said: "It is no longer required that the offense should be expressly defined." "We are of the opinion that 'sodomy,' which is the 'abominable and detestable crime against nature,' known to the common law, is, by article 342 of the Penal Code, made an offense, with a penalty affixed thereto in compliance with article 3 of the Penal Code."

And Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476, citing Ex parte Bergen, 14 Tex. App. 52, holds that sodomy is now an offense which can be punished under the law of Texas.

6. Says Bacon: "If any crime deserves to be punished in a more exemplary manner, this does. Other crimes are prejudicial to society; but this strikes at the being thereof." 4 Bacons. Abr. (5th ed.) 569.

7. See 12 Coke Rep. 36; 4 Bl. Com. 216.

8. It is said that in the reign of Richard I it was the practice to hang a man and drown a woman found guilty of the offense. 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 698, n. a.; Coburn v. Harwood, Minor (Ala.) 93; 12 Am. Dec. 37.

The ancient Goths punished the crime either by burning the guilty one severity was subsequently relaxed, and, for a considerable time the death penalty was not inflicted,¹ the offense being subject, in times of popery, only to ecclesiastical censure.² But in the first half of the sixteenth century, the offense was, by statute,³ again made capital.

In the different States of the Union the punishment varies. While in some it is not indictable,⁴ in others it is declared a felony.⁵

III. WHAT CONSTITUTES THE OFFENSE—1. By Whom May be Committed—a. IN GENERAL.—Sodomy may be committed between two male persons;⁶ or between a man and a woman;⁷ or between a man or woman and a beast.⁸

b. PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES.—All persons present, aiding to death or by burying him alive. 4 Bl. Com. 216.

3. 25 Hen. VIII, ch. 6.

This statute, having been repealed by the 1 Mary, was revived and confirmed by 5 Eliz., ch. 6, and thereafter remained in force till repealed by the 9 Geo. IV, ch. 31, which nevertheless provided for the infliction of the death penalty. See 1 East P. C. 480; 4 Bl. Com. 216; 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392; 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 698.

By the 24 and 25 Vict., ch. 100, § 61, every one who is convicted of the felony is liable to penal servitude for life, as a maximum, and to penal servitude for ten years, as a minimum, punishment. See Stephen's Dig. of Crim. Law, (4th ed.), art. 168.

By the criminal code of Illinois, ch. 38, § 336, it is declared an infamous crime.

A man was found guilty of having committed buggery upon a girl eleven years of age, and had received sentence of death; but the judge, before whom he was tried, reprieved him, in order to obtain the opinion of the judges whether this was a case within the statute. It is said that no opinion was given, because the judges were not unanimous. But Fortescue, who reports the case, affirms that a great majority of them were of opinion that this is buggery by the law of England. He adds that the Earl of Macclesfield, then chancellor, to whom he wrote upon the occasion, was clearly of the opinion that this case is not only within the reason, but also within the words of the statute, and that he was surprised there should have been any difference of opinion among the judges. The reporter does, moreover, cite several authorities to show that under the word mankind, all females as well as males of the human species are comprehended. 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 570.

8. 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392; Stephen's Dig. of Cr. Law (4th ed.) art. 168.

Is a fowl a "beast," within the statute? In Rex v. Mulreaty, a manuscript case decided in 1812, by Bayley, J., cited in 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 698, it was held that "an unnatural connection with an animal of the fowl kind is not sodomy, a fowl not coming under the term 'beast;' and it was agreed clearly not to be sodomy when the fowl was so small that its private parts would not admit those of a man, and were torn away in the attempt."

But in Reg. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. Div. 357, it was held that a domestic fowl is an animal within 24 & 25 Vict., ch. 100.

and abetting the commission of the crime, are principals.¹ And where, by statute, the offense is made felony generally, there may be accessories both before and after.²

c. CONSENT.—Consent or non-consent is not material.³

2. How Committed.—There must be connection in those parts where sodomy is usually committed.⁴

3. Carnal Knowledge.—The carnal knowledge requisite is the same as is required in case of rape.⁵ There must be penetration;⁶ but to no particular depth;⁷ and it is not necessary that there should be emission.⁸

1. 1 Hale's P. C. 670; 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 570; 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392; 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 699.

2. 1 Hale's P. C. 670; 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392; 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 699.

3. If the crime be committed between two persons both of whom are of the age of discretion, then both are alike guilty. 1 Hale's P. C. 670. See also Rex v. Jellyman, 8 Car. & P. 604.

But if one only be of years of discretion, that one only is guilty. 1 Hale's P. C. 170.

And it matters not whether that one be the pathic or the agent. Reg. v. Allen, 1 Den. C. C. 364; 2 Car. & K. 869; 3 Cox. C. C. 270.

In this case the facts proved were that the prisoner induced a boy, twelve years of age, to have carnal knowledge of his person, the prisoner being the pathic in the crime. The prisoner was convicted. The trial judge doubted whether, since the boy was incapable of crime, being under fourteen, the prisoner could be convicted, but it was held that the conviction was right. See also 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 570.

4. Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 698.

Where a prisoner forced open a boy's mouth with his fingers and put his private parts in the boy's mouth, and emitted, it was held not sodomy. Rex v. Jacobs, R. & R. C. C. 331.

7. Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476.

"It is laid down by Coke, Ch. J., that the least degree of penetration maketh a carnal knowledge." 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 569.

8. In the early stage of the law it was held that emission of seed, as well as penetration, was essential in sod-omy. Lord Coke declared this doctrine, citing "the case of Stafford, who was attainted in the King's Bench, and executed." 12 Coke's Rep. 37.

Later we find the judges divided, some holding that both penetration and emission were necessary, others that penetration was sufficient. "Infection," the latter said, "cannot be proved in case of a child, or of bestiality, and penetration may be evidence of emission, and Stafford's case" "takes no notice of emission." Duffin's case, 1 East's P. C. 437.

Bacon says: "It must be allowed, that penetration may be without emission; and it is easy to conceive that it would in some cases be difficult to prove emission where it has in fact been. It seems, then, a little strange to make the proof of emission necessary to the proof of sodomy. It is, indeed, said, in one of the books cited by Mr. Sergeant Hawkins, that emission is an evidence of buggery; but it is not said, that the proof of emission is necessary upon an indictment for buggery." 4 Bacon's Abr. (5th ed.) 569.

Coming down to 1828, we find it enacted by statute, 9 Geo. IV, ch. 31, § 18, that "whereas, upon trials for the crimes of buggery and rape," etc., "offenders frequently escape by reason of the difficulty of the proof which has been required of the completion of those several crimes" "it shall not be necessary in any of those cases to prove the actual emission of seed in order to constitute a carnal knowledge, but the carnal knowledge shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only."

Since this enactment it has been held that the crime is complete if the jury is satisfied that penetration took place. Rex v. Reeksepear, 1 M. C. C. 342.

See also Rex v. Cojins, 6 Car. & P. 351; 25 E. C. L. 434.

IV. INDICTMENT.—The ordinary common-law form of indictment, approved by writers and precedents, for this offense, is good.¹

It has been held, recently, that the words, "had a venereal affair," are not essential in an indictment charging the crime against nature; and that these words may be supplied by an allegation of carnal knowledge.² It has been ruled that the carnaliter cognovit is unnecessary.³

In this case, the prisoner, being interrupted by a witness calling to him, withdrew himself from the animal, he being then in a state of erection. Parke, J., said: "In the former state of the law, the prisoner would have been entitled to an acquittal; but as the law is now, if there was penetration, the capital offense is completed, although there has been no emission."

See also 2 Bish. Cr. Law (7th ed.), § 1194. The present English statute is the 24 & 25 Vict., ch. 100, § 63.

In the United States it has been held that emission need not be proved. Com. v. Thomas, 1 Va. Cas. 307. See 2 Bish. Cr. Law, (7th ed.), § 1131.

1. State v. Chaudonette (Mont. 1890), 25 Pac. Rep. 438.

It was necessary that the indictment should charge, contra naturæ ordinem rem habuit veneream, et carnaliter cognovit. But Foster, J., thought it necessary to charge also, peccatumque illud sodomiticum auglicè dictum buggery, adtunc et ibidem nequiter felonice, diabolice, ac contra naturam, commisit et perpetravit, since the statute used the term "buggery." 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 392; 1 Russell on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 699; 1 East's P. C. 480, citing Foster 424, as referring to Co. Ent. 351b, as a precedent settled by great advice.

In Reg. v. Rowed, 3 Q. B. 180, the indictment charged that the defendants "in a certain open and public place, called Kensington Gardens," "unlawfully and wickedly did meet together for the purpose and with the intent of committing and perpetrating with each other, openly, lewdly, and indecently, in the said public place, divers nasty, wicked, filthy, lewd, beastly, unnatural, and sodomitical practices; and then and there unlawfully, wickedly, openly, lewdly, and indecently did commit and perpetrate with each other" "divers such practices as aforesaid," etc. This indictment was held bad, as not specifying any offense with the requisite certainty.

2. Or even by an equivalent allegation. Lambertson v. People, 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 200.

3. On the ground that the crime of sodomy is too well known to be misunderstood, and too disgusting to be defined, further than by merely naming it. Davis v. State, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 154.

Indictments Held Sufficient.—In Cross v. State, 17 Tex. App. 476, the indictment alleged that the defendant "did then and there unlawfully and willfully commit with a mare, the same being a beast, the abominable and detestable crime against nature by then and there having carnal connection with said beast, and did then and there commit the crime of sodomy with said beast." Held sufficiently to charge the offense.

In Reg. v. Allen, 1 C. & K. 495, where the indictment described the animal as a certain animal called a bitch, it was held that, though the females of foxes and of some other animals, as well as of dogs, are called bitches, yet this was sufficiently certain.

In People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 397, it was charged that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully and feloniously make an assault upon Harry George with intent to commit in and upon the person of the said Harry George, the infamous crime against nature, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc., and this was held good.

Included Offense.—An indictment for sodomy will support a conviction for the offense of attempting to commit sodomy. State v. Frank, 103 Mo. 120.

Lapse of Time.—In Reg. v. Robins, 1 Cox C. C. 114, the prisoner was indicted for bestiality alleged to have been committed nearly two years before.

Alderson, B., said: "I ought not to allow this case to go further. It is monstrous to put a man on his trial

V. EVIDENCE—1. In General.—The nature of the evidence required as to the commission of this offense is the same as in rape.¹ As in rape, the evidence should be unequivocal and should leave no doubt of the guilt of the accused.² Penetration must be proved;³ but it is not necessary to prove emission.⁴

2. Testimony of Accomplice.—The evidence of the prosecuting witness, if an accomplice in the act, is not alone sufficient to convict, but must be corroborated.⁵

after such a lapse of time. How can he account for his conduct so far back? If you accuse a man of a crime the next day, he may be enabled to bring forward his servants and family to say where he was and what he was about at the time; but if the charge be not preferred for a year or more, how can he clear himself? No man's life would be safe if such a prosecution were permitted. It would be very unjust to put him on his trial."

1. 1 East's P. C. 480; 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 699.

2. 1 Burns' Justice (23d ed.) 393; 4 Bl. Com. 215; 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 699.

Lord Hale, speaking of rape, says: "It must be remembered that it is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved, and harder to be defended by the party accused, though never so innocent." 1 Hale's P. C. 635.

This is equally true of sodomy, and therefore even greater caution should be used upon the trial of an indictment for this offense, which is even more heinous.

3. And in Collins v. State, 73 Ga. 76, it was held that circumstantial evidence of penetration will authorize a conviction, the testimony of one who actually saw the act not being necessary.

4. See supra, this title, Carnal Knowledge.

Certain of the States of the Union have statutes providing that it shall not be necessary to prove emission of seed in order to convict of sodomy. See Illinois Crim. Code, ch. 38, § 48; Act of March 31, 1860—Pennsylvania—Brightly's Purdon (19th ed.) 342.

But it is said that in Michigan, the statute of 1841, providing that the offense will be complete on proof of penetration only, not having been reenacted it may be necessary to prove also emission. Tiffany's Cr. Law (4th ed.), 916, note 2.

5. Wharton's Cr. Law (8th ed.) § 580.

Where a man committed the offense against nature with his wife, it was held that if it appeared that the wife consented, the prisoner must be acquitted, the evidence of the wife not being corroborated. Patteson, J., said: "Although consent or non-consent it is not material to the offense, yet, as the wife, if she consented would be an accomplice, she would require confirmation; and so it would be with a party consenting to an offense of this kind whether man or woman." Rex v. Jellyman, 8 Car. & P. 604.

See also Medis v. State, 27 Tex. App. 194. In this case it was laid down that in sodomy, as in rape, if the evidence tends to show the consent of the prosecuting witness to the criminal act there must be corroborative evidence to warrant conviction. It was held that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury that if they found that the alleged injured party was consenting then they must find that his evidence was corroborated.

One Acting Under Coercion.—In People v. Miller, 66 Cal. 468, the defendant was convicted of the infamous crime against nature. It was contended that the complaining witness, a boy thirteen years old, was an accomplice whose testimony required corroboration, and that, as he was not corroborated, the conviction was erroneous. But the uncontradicted testimony of the boy showed that he acted under the threats and coercion of the defendant and it was held that he was therefore not an accomplice.

Evidence Sufficient to Corroborate.—

Com. v. Snow, 111 Mass. 411, was the case of an indictment for sodomy committed with one S, who testified that defendant committed the crime in the latter's rooms, at a certain time; that while in the act, S heard a rapping at the outer door; that defendant went to the door and let some one in; that defendant and M came up stairs, and M went farther up, while defendant returned to his rooms. M testified that she came at the time mentioned to the outer door and found it locked, contrary to custom; that, after she had tried the door, defendant came down stairs and let her in, telling her that he locked the door because he was "having a nap;" that defendant returned to his room and she went up to her rooms. B, a physician, testified that he had prescribed for S for having taken poison, and that, after his return from visiting S, defendant came to him and asked if S would die, and if he had said why he had taken the poison. Held, sufficient corroboration to warrant a verdict against defendant, even if S were to be regarded as particeps criminis.

VI. LIBEL AND SLANDER.—The question of the effect of a charge of sodomy under the law of libel and slander has been before the courts. The charge has been held actionable, per se, even where sodomy is not indictable.¹ But this doctrine does not seem to be supported by the weight of authority.²

In Territory v. Mahaffey, 3 Mont. 112; 2 Cr. Law. Mag. 278, M was indicted for sodomy with A, who testified that M had committed the offense with him on a certain date and also at other times before that date. The officer who arrested M testified that M, when arrested, said it would be one of the most interesting cases ever tried, for A was a boy prostitute. A brother testified that M came to his house and requested that A go to the place where the offense was alleged to have been committed to receive some money that M owed him; that A went and did not return till next day. The clerk of a hotel testified that M and A went to bed in a room in the hotel. Held, that A was an accomplice, and that his testimony was corroborated by evidence which tended to connect M with the offense.

Evidence Held Competent.—On an indictment for sodomy, evidence was admitted to the effect that defendant attempted, after the commission of the alleged offense, to commit a like offense with the witness, and said to him that he had "done it with other boys." The judge charged that if, either from the language itself, or from proved facts taken with the language the jury should think that defendant intended to include the prosecuting witness, the declaration was in the nature of a confession and was competent, otherwise, not, and this was held correct. Com. v. Snow, 111 Mass. 411.

Evidence Not Admissible.—Since, on the trial of an indictment, evidence may not be admitted to show that the accused has a general disposition to commit the same kind of offense as that charged, therefore an admission by the prisoner, in a prosecution for an infamous crime, that he had committed a similar offense at another time and with another person, and that his natural inclination was toward such practices, ought not to be received in evidence. Rex v. Cole, 1 Russ. on Crimes (6th Am. ed.) 700.

In State v. Gruso, 28 La. Ann. 952, it was held that the fact that the party injured made complaint immediately or soon after the time of the injury might be proven; but that particulars or circumstances narrated were hearsay and not admissible except to corroborate the testimony of the party when impeached.

1. In Estes v. Carter, 10 Iowa 400, it was held that, sodomy being no crime under the laws of Iowa, words charging a person with sodomy were not actionable without showing special damage. But in Cleveland v. Detweiler, 18 Iowa 299, the contrary was held, the court by Dillon, J., saying that the charge involved "unchastity of the highest, grossest, and most flagrant character," and that "an ordinary accusation of unchastity is mild and gentle as compared with the one for which this action is brought."

So in Haynes v. Ritchey, 30 Iowa 76; 6 Am. Rep. 642, and the court by Miller, J., said: "We have no hesitation in holding that to charge a woman with bestiality is to impute to her a debasement and depravity of thought and sentiment not involved in any other possible accusation, and is an imputation of unchastity of the gravest and grossest character and actionable per se."

2. In Reg. v. Hickman, 1 M. C. C. 34, it was held that a letter threatening

VII. SODOMY GROUND FOR DIVORCE.—Sodomy or an unsuccessful attempt to commit sodomy, was by the common law a ground of separation between husband and wife.¹ Under the present English statute,² the commission of the offense by the husband affords a cause for a divorce a vinculo. In at least one State,³ "the commission of the crime against nature, either with mankind or beast, either before or after marriage," is a cause of divorce.

VIII. ATTEMPTS.—An attempt to commit sodomy was indictable at common law.⁴ By statute in *England*⁵ and in some of the States,⁶ the attempt is declared to be a misdemeanor.

to charge the prosecutor with having made overtures to commit sodomy does not threaten to charge a crime which can be regarded as infamous under 4 Geo. IV, ch. 54, § 3.

Coburn v. Harwood, Minor (Ala.) 93; 12 Am. Dec. 37, held that sodomy not being indictable at common law or by a statute of the State, words charging a commission of the offense are not actionable per se. So, also, in Davis v. Brown, 27 Ohio St. 326; Melvin v. Weiant, 36 Ala. 184, followed the case of Davis v. Brown, 27 Ohio St. 326, and the court by Boynton, J., said: "Some members of the court, in view of the heinous character of the charge, and of its direct and certain tendency to degrade and exclude from decent society the person against whom the said charge is made, would have inclined to regard the injury as one which the law, now existing, is adequate to redress, while the remaining members are of the opinion that Davis v. Brown, 27 Ohio St. 326, was correctly decided."

By the act of Apr. 12, 1889, sodomy has since, however, been made a crime in Ohio.

Other Cases.—In Woolcott v. Goodrich, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 714, the slanderous words alleged were: "He has been with a sow." It was held that the action would lie. See Goodrich v. Woolcott, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 231.

In Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355; 71 Am. Dec. 331, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had used words charging Mary Ausman with having had sexual connection with a dog, and that she had "had pups." Held, that the action would lie.

In State v. Frank, 103 Mo. 120, it was declared that an attempt to commit the offense of sodomy is a crime in itself and punishable as such under Missouri Rev. Stat., 1879.

In Michigan, by act of May 17, 1889, it is provided that "every person above the age of sixteen years who shall entice, allure, or persuade any male person under the age of fourteen years into any room, office, or to any other secret place, to take, or for the purpose of taking any immoral, immodest or indecent liberties, or who shall take or attempt to take such liberties with such person at any place shall be deemed guilty of a felony."

The literal meaning of the word is a dwelling in a place for a day only; and by an extended and somewhat figurative mode of expression it is used to signify a dwelling in a place for a short time, without ascertaining the precise length of time.²

Sojourner.—The Pennsylvania act of 1881, in relation to physicians, requires a physician to register in any county in which he "sojourns" for the purpose of practicing medicine. In Edge v. Com. (Pa. 1887), 9 Atl. Rep. 471, it was held that a physician, who resided and practiced medicine in one county and had an office and practiced in another, was a "sojourner" in the latter county, within the statute.

SOLEMNIZE—(See also MARRIAGE, vol. 14, p. 614).—To solemnize a marriage means nothing more than to be present at a marriage contract, in order that it may have due publication before a third person or persons, for the sake of notoriety and the certainty of its being made.¹

SOLICITATION OF CHASTITY—(See also SEDUCTION).—Vol. 21, p. 682.

I. DEFINITION.—Solicitation of chastity is the asking or urging a woman to surrender her chastity.⁵ In England, by the common law, this was not an indictable offense, but punishable in the spiritual courts.⁶ In the State of Connecticut, where adultery is a felony, it would seem that solicitation to commit adultery may be indictable as an attempt;⁷ but it has been held otherwise in Pennsylvania, where the solicitation constitutes a ment—is not used “solely” in the course of trade so as to give exemption from toll, within an exception to an English statute levying tolls upon vehicles. Speak v. Powell, L. R., 9 Exch. 25.

1. Pearson v. Howey, 11 N. J. L. 19.

A marriage is solemnized when, in the presence of a judicial officer, priest, or minister, the parties declare that they take each other as husband and wife; and the officer or minister who witnesses this ceremony is said to “solemnize” the marriage. Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1.

In Bowman v. Bowman, 24 Ill. App. 170, it was contended that a common-law marriage was not such a marriage as the legislature had authorized the courts to dissolve by divorce, such a marriage not being one “contracted and solemnized” within the meaning of the statute on divorce. It was held that “the word ‘solemnized,’ as used in our statute, is not to be construed as meaning only a ceremonial solemnization, whether religious or official, but that for the purpose of divorce a marriage may be self-solemnized by the parties to it, and a contract between them which constitutes them man and wife is a marriage ‘contracted and solemnized’ within the meaning of our statute authorizing divorce.”

2. Solemnly.—Where a thing—e. g., an oath—has to be done “solemnly,” that “does not merely mean religiously, but means with all due solemnities.” Attorney-Gen’l v. Bradlaugh, L. R., 14 Q. B. Div. 667.

3. Reg. v. Most, 44 L. T. N. S. 823. In that case there was a conviction under a statute making it criminal to “solicit, encourage, or persuade,” etc., any person to murder any other person. The solicitation was by newspaper publication.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE, PLEA OF.—(See also TRESPASS).—His own assault. A plea which occurs in the actions of trespass and trespass on the case, by which the defendant alleges that it was the plaintiff's own original assault that occasioned the trespass for which he has brought the action, and that what the defendant did was merely in his own defense.

SOON.—In a short time. See note 4.

Solvency of Bank.—A bank is solvent, within the meaning of the constitution and statutes of Missouri, when it possesses sufficient assets to pay, within a reasonable time, all its liabilities through its own agencies. Dodge v. Mastin, 17 Fed. Rep. 660.

Instruction almost identical with this was held not to be erroneous in Iowa. State v. Cadwell, 79 Iowa 432.

It will be observed that this definition falls between the two given in the text, viz., that solvency is the sufficiency of one's entire property and assets to pay all his debts, and that solvency is one's ability to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business. But in both cases it was said that ordinarily "solvency," when applied to a bank, had the latter meaning.

1. "Some" has been held equivalent to "any." McClellan v. McClellan, 65 Me. 506; Cooper v. Hubbuck, 12 C. B. N. S. 456; 104 E. C. L. 456.

Whether this condition is anything more than a co-operation of the voluntary muscles with the thoughts which occupy the mind during sleep, is not settled by physiologists. Not only is locomotion enjoyed, as the etymology of the term signifies, but the voluntary muscles are capable of executing motions of the most delicate kind. There is a form of this affection called ecstasis, or "cataleptic somnambulism," from its being conjoined with a kind of catalepsy, in which the walking and other active employments are replaced by what appears to be a deep, quiet sleep, the patient conversing with fluency and spirit, and exercising the mental faculties with activity and acuteness. Somnambulism may incapacitate a person from the performance of his duties, and so impair the validity of his contracts. By rendering him troublesome, mischievous and dangerous, it furnishes good grounds for annulling contracts of service, whether it existed previously and was concealed, or had made its appearance later. Whether it should be considered a sufficient defense of breach of promise of marriage, is a question which hardly admits of an answer. Hoffbauer suggests as a reason for not regarding the criminal actions of the somnambulist with indulgence, that they have originated, if not in premeditation, at least in the deep and deliberate attention which the mind has given to the subject when awake. Fodere, by a similar logic, holds that the acts of a somnambulist are more independent than others; being the free and unconstrained expression of waking thoughts and designs, and therefore not excusable. He seems to have forgotten, observes Dr. Ray (Med. Jur. Ins.) that by no human laws are men responsible for their secret thoughts, but only for their words and acts. *Rap. & Law. L. Definition.SOUND.*Definition.

SOUND—(See also HORSES, vol. 9, p. 761; WARRANTY).—"Sound, when used with reference to wood or vegetables, or other inanimate substances, means free of decay or rottenness. When it is used in reference to animals, and applied to the mind, it means that neither from nature nor disease, nor other causes, is the mind incapable of performing its ordinary functions. When applied to the organs of seeing, hearing, smelling, etc., it means that the organ has not, either from nature, disease, or other cause, any defect which makes it incapable or unfit to perform the services ordinarily required of it."¹

232, the trial court had instructed, "if there is no time specified for the performance of an act, or if it is specified that it is to be performed soon, the law implies that it is to be performed within a reasonable time." It was held that there was certainly no error in this instruction sufficient to reverse the judgment.

As Soon as Possible—(See also AS, vol. 1, p. 777; LOGS AND LUMBER, vol. 13, p. 1025; SALES).—"To do a thing 'as soon as possible' means to do it within a reasonable time, with an undertaking to do it in the shortest practicable time." Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie, L. R., 4 Q. B. Div. 673; 29 Moak's Rep. 105; Robinson v. Brooks, 40 Fed. Rep. 525.

In Attwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. N. S. 110; 87 E. C. L. 108, a manufacturer agreed to deliver goods "as soon as possible." This agreement was construed to mean "as soon as the vendors could" with reference to their ability to furnish the articles ordered consistently with the execution of prior orders in hand. Attwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. N. S. 110; 87 E. C. L. 108, in Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie, L. R., 4 Q. B. Div. 670; 29 Moak's Rep. 105.

In Pope v. Filley, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 190, reversed, but upon another ground, 115 U. S. 213, the vendors agreed to ship the vendee 500 tons of iron "as soon as possible." The court by McCrary, J., said: "The meaning of that clause of the contract is that these parties were to use all reasonable diligence to ship as soon as possible. The time in such a case is of course important, and it was especially important, in this case, because the parties saw fit in their contract to say that the iron should be shipped as soon as possible; but if it was shipped by the first conveyance that could be had, and due diligence was used, then that part of the contract has been complied with."

And again: "This clause did not make it obligatory upon the plaintiff to do everything which was possible as a physical act, if such act lay beyond what shippers of iron might reasonably be expected to do. So far as the obligation of this clause of the contract is concerned, it is sufficient for the jury to find that the plaintiff diligently made every reasonable effort in the usual course of commerce to effect the prompt shipment of the iron."

As Soon as They Conveniently Can.—

A railroad charter authorized a company to construct a road with one or more tracks, and to make and erect warehouses and all works and appendages, etc., "as soon as they conveniently can." It was held that the expression "as soon as they conveniently can" did not compel the company to exercise its whole authority in the very beginning, and when the demands of business were few. SOUND IN DAMAGES.—An action is said to “sound in damages” when it is brought, not for specific recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real and mixed actions, or the personal actions of debt and definue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc.¹

SOUNDS—(VOCAL).—See note 2.

SOVEREIGN.—See INTERNATIONAL LAW, vol. II, p. 439; STATES; UNITED STATES.

ory; sound mind, etc., are expressions frequently used to describe the testamentary capacity of a testator. See INSANITY, vol. II, p. 151; TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

“Sound Health,” in an application for insurance, was held to mean a state of health free from any disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, not a mere temporary indisposition which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution of the assured. Brown v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306. See generally LIFE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 632.

1. Steph. Pl. (2d. Am. ed) 133.

An action sounding in damages, within the meaning of the Illinois statute relating to appeals and writs of error from or to the appellate court, is one where the damages cannot be determined in dollars and cents by witnesses, but certain facts are proven, and from those facts the jury determine the amount of damages, as in slander, and the like. The words, “sounding in damages,” were intended to include all cases, whether the action is ex contractu or ex delicto, when the damages are not susceptible of direct proof. Bradshaw v. Standard Oil Co., 114 Ill. 172.

2. A claim of a patent was as follows: “The method of and apparatus for transmitting vocal or other sounds telegraphically.” It was held that articulate speech was certainly included within the description “vocal or other sounds.” Dolbear v. American Bell Telephone Co., 126 U. S. 1.

3. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Missouri River Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260. That was a suit against a railroad company to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's steamboats by defendant's bridge across the Missouri river. The Act of Congress authorizing the building of the said bridge provided that the spans should not be less than 160 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw. The line of the bridge as built ran diagonally across the current of the river, while each several pier was parallel with the current. Measured along the superstructure, the distance from pier to pier was 160 feet, but measured at right angles with the current of the river, the distance was but 153 feet. It was contended for plaintiff in error that the word “span” as used in the statute, meant the structures or parts of the bridge which spanned the river on each side of the pivot pier. It was held in conformity with the definition given above that “span” as used in the statute, meant the open space between the piers measured at right angles with the current; the space left open for navigation purposes, and not the superstructure.

4. Span of Horses.—A colt four months old is not exempt from execution as forming with its dam a “span of horses.” Ames v. Martin, 6 Wis. 361; 70 Am. Dec. 468. The court, by Cole, J., said: “We should have but little difficulty in saying that the word ‘horse,’ in the statute, was intended to include a young colt, were it not used in connection with the word ‘span’ This word seems to qualify and limit the meaning of the word ‘horse;’ for the ordinary and familiar signification of the language, ‘a span of horses,’ is two animals which may be connected together, or united for the purpose of a team.”

I. IN GENERAL.—1. United States as Successor of Spain.—By the treaty of cession with Spain the United States succeeded to all the rights and duties of the king of Spain in the ceded territory;¹ and, as Spain had power to make grants founded on any consideration and subject to any restrictions, a grant binding on her is binding on the United States as her successor.¹

2. Land Passing as Public Property.—But where colonists were to receive their titles and grants from the Spanish Government it follows necessarily that the entire title, legal and equitable, must have remained in the Government and have been so understood by the parties; and if the land designated for the establishment remained national property, and was not severed from the national domain, it passed to the United States as public property by the treaty of cession.²

3. Mode of Making Concessions or Grants.—Applications for a concession in Louisiana as well as in California usually addressed a petition to the governor for the land; and it seldom or never appears that any survey was had before the concession was issued; but surveys frequently followed the concession or grant; and where the proceeding is regular it affords strong evidence to support the title of the claimant.³

4. Construction of Acts of Congress.—The incidental construction which the Federal Courts have placed upon the various acts of Congress is given in the notes.⁴

1. In U. S. v. Clarke, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 231, the court by Catron, J., said: "All the grants of lands made by the lawful authorities of the king of Spain before the 24th day of January, 1818, were by the treaty ratified and confirmed to the owners of the lands. Such is the construction given to the 8th article by this court in U. S. v. Arredondo Case, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 706, and in U. S. v. Percheman Case, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 51; that is, imperfect titles were equally binding on this government after the cession as they had been on the Spanish government before."

As to the distinction between a complete Spanish grant and a mere contract, see U. S. v. Mayor, etc., of Philadelphia, 11 How. (U. S.) 652. Concerning the invalidity of the Maison Royal Grant, see U. S. v. Coxe, 17 How. (U. S.) 43, following U. S. v. Turner, 11 How. (U. S.) 666; U. S. v. King, 7 How. (U. S.) 833, which is also reported in 3 How. (U. S.) 773.

Concerning Indian titles see Chouteau v. Malony, 16 How. (U. S.) 237, et seq.; U. S. v. Fernandez, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 304; Mitchel v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 80, et seq.

2. U. S. v. Turner, 11 How. (U. S.) 666. But see to the effect that a grant for a quay did not pass to the United States, but belonged to the city of New Orleans, Mayor, etc., of New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 712, affirming, as to dedication of property to public use, the principles upon which were decided the cases of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, and Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 498.

3. Trenier v. Stewart, 101 U. S. 803. Regular concessions or grants were usually made in one of three ways: First: Grants by specific boundaries, where, of course, the donee is entitled to the entire tract within the described monuments. Second: Concessions or grants by quantity, as of one or more leagues of land within a larger tract described by what are called out-boundaries, where the donee is entitled to the quantity specified and no more, to be located by the public authority usually in a manner to include the improvements of the occupant, and with due respect to any descriptive recitals in the instrument. Third: Grants or concessions of a place or rancho by some particular name, either with or without specific boundaries, where the donee is entitled to the tract known by the name specified, according to the boundaries, if boundaries are given, and if not, then according to the known extent and limits of the tract or rancho as shown by the proofs, including evidence of possession and the settlement and cultivation of the occupant. Trenier v. Stewart, 101 U. S. 803. See also Higuera v. U. S., 5 Wall. (U. S.) 834.

4. In the proviso in the act of 1836, confirming Spanish and French claims,

II. CONSTRUCTION — 1. In General; Description; Validity.—

Spanish grants are construed strictly against the grantee.¹

The laws and ordinances of the Government of Spain in relation to grants of land by the Spanish Government, must be of universal application in the construction of grants.² To sustain a claim under a Spanish grant there must have been possession under a complete grant or concession from the Government, or an order of survey duly executed, or other mode of investiture of original title in the claimants, by separation from the mass of the public domain, either by actual survey or definition of fixed, natural or ascertainable boundaries, or initial points, courses, and distances, by competent authority, prior to the cession of such lands to the United States.³

the words "under any law of the United States" mean subject to any law thereof. Mills v. Stoddard, 8 How. (U. S.) 345.

The act of June 6, 1874, applies only to cases where the party is entitled to a patent. Snyder v. Sickles, 98 U. S. 203.

The twenty-fifth section of the judicial act and the treaty with France extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to rights protected by the constitution, by treaty, or by laws of the United States. Mayor, etc., of New Orleans v. DeArmas, 9 Pet. (U. S.), 236. See also Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. (U. S.) 372; Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 254; Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 234.

Claims to Spanish grants that may be prosecuted against the United States under the act of 1860, must have three distinguishing elements. First: The claimant, or those under whom he holds, must have been out of possession for twenty years or more. Second: The land must be claimed by a complete grant or concession or order of survey duly executed, or other mode of investiture of the title in the original claimant by separation from the mass of the public domains, either by actual survey or defined natural boundaries or initial points, and courses and distances, by the competent authority, prior to the cession of the United States. Third: Where such title was created and perfected during the period of the actual possession of the prior government under which the claim is asserted. Scull v. U. S., 98 U. S. 410.

Where courts are called upon to decide according to the rules governing a court of equity, they are bound to give due weight to lapse of time. Thus, where a party under no disability, slept on his rights, for nearly fifty years, without making a single step and made no excuse for his long delay, relief was refused. U. S. v. Moore, 12 How. (U. S.) 223. Where a claimant's grant has been determined as having no force, the District Court has no power to act on evidence of naked possession unaccompanied by written evidence conferring, or professing to confer, a title of some description. Such is not a sufficient equity to entitle them to a decree. U. S. v. Power, 11 How. (U. S.) 580; U. S. v. Rillieux, 14 How. (U. S.) 189.

The Spanish laws which formerly prevailed in Louisiana, and upon which titles to land in that State depend, must be judicially noticed. In U. S. v. Turner, 11 How. (U. S.) 668, the court, by Taney, C. J., said: "They are questions of law and not questions of fact, and are always so regarded and treated in the courts of Louisiana."

Where countries have been acquired by the United States, its courts take judicial notice of the laws which prevailed there up to the time of such acquisition. Such laws are not considered foreign, but those of an antecedent government. U. S. v. Perot, 98 U. S. 430.

1. Josephs v. U. S., 1 Ct. of Cl. 197.

2. Buyck v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 223; U. S. v. Hanson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 198.

3. U. S. v. Clamorgan, 101 U. S. 831. Where grants were made by Spain, binding on that government, they are equally binding on the United States. As the successor of Spain, all the grants of lands, made by the lawful

Where there has been no possession, and no survey or other segregation of the land from the public domain, a Spanish grant cannot be valid, it being incomplete according to Spanish usages and regulations until a survey is made by the proper official authority;¹ and where the land claimed by a Spanish concession cannot be located by survey, the petition for confirmation will be dismissed;² or where the points indicated in a survey cannot be found, then the description is too indefinite for a survey to be made, and a claimant can take nothing under the concession.³

Uncertainty of location and vagueness of description is fatal to a Spanish grant.⁴ Where the extent of a grant is not given, being without boundaries or location, so that it cannot be located, authorities of the king of Spain, before the 24th of January, 1818, were, by the treaty with Spain, ratified and confirmed to the owners of the lands. U. S. v. Clark, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 232; citing and approving the doctrine in U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 706, and in the U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 51.

1. U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 63. A concession merely, without antecedent survey and location, creates no right of property. Maguire v. Tyler, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 650. "Concession," according to the Spanish law, is neither a grant nor a survey, but only a warrant or order authorizing the deputy surveyor to make a survey, and to report the survey when made to the intendant, in order to found a grant upon it.

2. De Villemont v. U. S., 13 How. (U. S.) 267.

3. Buyck v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 224; U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 333; U. S. v. Miranda, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 160; citing and approving U. S. v. Forbe, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 182; Buyck v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 215. Also, O'Harra v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 275, and U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 319.

4. So, where the beginning point of a Spanish grant is uncertain, and the second point has a range of six or seven miles, no valid survey can be made. U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 96. And where a party has taken possession, but had no survey executed during the time Spain exercised jurisdiction, this being his own neglect, it lies on him to establish the boundaries of his grant, and to identify his land with such certainty, as to show what particular tract was severed from the public domain; and if he fails to do it, then he has no remedy in a court of justice. Lafayette v. Blanc, 3 La. Ann. 60, affirmed in U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 96.

But in the U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 54, the petitioner asked "two thousand acres of land in the place called Ockliwaha, situated on the margin of St. John's River." Governor Estrada says: "I do grant him the two thousand acres of land which he solicits, in absolute property, in the indicated place." The survey of this land was not executed until the 20th of August, 1819, after the treaty of cession. The title was confirmed by the court. So in the case of U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 446, the grant was sustained where the petitioner solicited a grant of the quantity of land which the Governor of Florida had thought proper to assign to the water-mills, equivalent to five miles square; which land he solicits "on the western part of St. John's river, above Black creek, at a place entirely vacant, known by the name of White Spring." In the grant it is declared "A title shall be issued comprehending the place and under the boundaries set forth in the petition." And in the case of U. S. v. Levi, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 479, the grant was "for twenty-five thousand acres of land, south of the place known by the name of Spring Garden, in this form: twelve thousand acres of them, adjoining the lake or pond called Second, and known by the name of Valdes, and the remaining thirteen thousand acres on the pond farther above the preceding, known by the name of Long Pond, the whole west of the River St. John." The survey was executed on the 2d of August, it is void;¹ as also where the boundaries are too indefinite.² A concession indefinite in itself will not be recognized without a survey. The Supreme Court of the United States, in various cases, has either directly or indirectly decided that an actual survey of an open floating concession is a necessary ingredient to its validity, and that it must also be an authorized survey to pass any title.³

A survey under the Spanish Government meant the actual survey of the land, ascertaining the contents by running lines and angles.⁴ Where precise locality is not given to a concession, a survey is necessary to sever the land from the public domain, and where none is made the grant is void.⁵ The land granted must be taken as near as may be to the place described in the petition, and if it cannot be found there the grantee has no claim to an equivalent; and if it shall be found to interfere with previous grants to third persons, the concession will be lessened in quantity according to the extent of the rights of third persons.⁶

1819, and the court confirmed the title. Several other grants reviewed in the same case, where the description is similar, were also confirmed, as being sufficiently certain. Land described as "South and north of the lands at Musquite" is too indefinite, and a claimant can take nothing under such a concession. Buyck v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 224; U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 333.

1. U. S. v. D'Auteriène, 15 How. (U. S.) 28.

2. Denise v. Ruggles, 16 How. (U. S.) 244; U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 787; U. S. v. Miranda, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 160. But where there is some obscurity in the language of the grant, which may be cleared by reference to an official Spanish survey referred to in the grant, and which was before the Government at the time the grant was made, the obscurity is cured. U. S. v. McMasters, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 681.

3. Wherry v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 338; Smith v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 327; O'Hara v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 279; U. S. v. Hanson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 198; U. S. v. Clarke, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 228; U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 784; U. S. v. Lawton, 5 How. (U. S.) 26.

In most grants, even those of a descriptive character which designated the place where the lands were to be located, a survey was required to be made and returned before a party could obtain a formal and perfect title. Winter v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 384.

Non-interference with the rights of others was a condition which attached to all grants, and was generally expressed; but if not expressed, always implied. This, of itself, demanded an actual survey on the ground as the only certain mode of observing that condition. Winter v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 384.

4. U. S. v. Hanson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 198; 6 Jac. Law Dict. 157.

"The survey," says the court by Story, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 441, "made by a surveyor being under oath, is evidence as to all things which are properly within the line of his duty. But his duty is confined to describing and marking on the plat the lines, corners, trees, and other objects on the ground; and to subjoin such remarks as may explain them."

This case shows the nature of a survey and what must be understood by it. See also U. S. v. Hanson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 200.

5. De Villemont v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 389; Villalobos v. U. S., 10 How. (U. S.) 541.

6. U. S. v. Arredondo, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 135.

An equivalent for such diminution cannot be surveyed elsewhere. U. S. v. Arredondo, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 135.

In such cases, where the concession does not provide for an equivalent, or for another location, none can be made. U. S. v. Arredondo, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 135.

Courts of justice can only adjudge what has been granted; and declare that the lands granted by the lawful

2. Survey.—Where the survey does not conform to the concession, the grant will not be confirmed.¹ Where a survey is not wholly within the grant, the title will be confirmed to such part of the survey as is within the grant.² The titles of towns to common fields under Spanish concessions, which were vague and uncertain in their boundaries and locations, do not vest in the towns under the act of 1812, until properly surveyed, as required by the act.³

Where the survey contains more than the concession, according to the exterior boundaries as described in the plat, the grant will not be confirmed.⁴ The validity of the order of survey depends upon the power of the officer making it.⁵ A survey could be executed by the surveyor-general, or by any deputy appointed by him, or by the surveyor of the district, or the commandant of a post, or by a private person authorized by the governor-general or intendant.⁶

authorities of Spain are separated from the public domain; but where the land is expressly granted at one place, they have no power by a decree to grant an equivalent at another place, and thereby sanction an abandonment of the grant made by the Spanish authorities. The courts of the United States have no authority to direct the title of the United States in the public lands, and vest it in claimants, however just a claim may be to an equivalent for land, the previous grant of which has failed. U. S. v. Forbes, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 184, citing U. S. v. Arredondo, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 88. See also U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 436; U. S. v. Huertas, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 171.

But where two places are designated in the petition where the lands are to lie, and an equivalent was decreed in case of a deficiency, the residue may be surveyed elsewhere. U. S. v. Clarke, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 233.

Such is the construction given to the 8th article of the Florida treaty in the case of U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 706, and in U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 51.

In U. S. v. Clarke, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 233, the grant was for lands particularly mentioned, or for any other lands that were vacant.

1. U. S. v. Levi, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 481; U. S. v. Hernandez, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 486; from which U. S. v. Sibbald, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 323, and Seton v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 309, are distinguished.

2. U. S. v. Huertas, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 489; see also U. S. v. Huertas, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 476.

S.) 317; and where such survey of such commons was made and recognized, accepted and acted upon by a town, it became binding and cannot be disputed by it. Carondelet v. St. Louis, 1 Black (U. S.) 179; Bissell v. Penrose, 8 How. (U. S.) 317; where the cases of Mackay v. Dillon, 4 How. (U. S.) 421; Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. (U. S.) 449, and Jourdan v. Barrett, 4 How. (U. 4. U. S. v. Richard, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 472.

5. Chouteau v. U. S., 9 Pet. (U. S.) 139.

For power to set aside a survey, see Maguire v. Tyler, 1 Black (U. S.) 195; or change location, see Villalobos v. U. S., 10 How. (U. S.) 541; or correct a mistake, Chaires v. U. S., 3 How. (U. S.) 611.

6. U. S. v. Hanson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 198.

In Smith v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 334, it is said that "Spain never permitted individuals to locate their grants by mere private survey. The grants were no authority to the public surveyor, or his deputy, to make the survey as a public trust, to protect the royal domain from being cut up at the pleasure of the grantees. A grant might be directed to a private person, or a separate official order given to make the survey; but without either, it could not be a legal execution of the power."

III. CONDITIONS—1. Inhabitation and Cultivation.—The Government of the United States regards the condition of inhabitation and cultivation, annexed to imperfect titles from the Spanish Government, as material and essential, and as having this character by the laws and usages of that Government.¹

2. Survey.—A Spanish grant requiring for its validity a timely survey and occupation within a reasonable time is void if neither of these conditions be performed,² but when the condition is once performed the grant becomes absolute.³

3. Express Conditions.—A Spanish concession of land upon express condition of inhabitation and improvement is no valid foundation for a grant unless there has been a compliance with such conditions.⁴

4. Time Allowed for Performing Conditions.—By the eighth article of the treaty of cession of Spain to the United States, the same time is allowed to the owners of land granted under the authority of Spain to fulfill the conditions of their grants after the date of the treaty as was limited in the grants.⁵

See also Glenn v. U. S., 13 How. (U. S.) 250.

For additional cases turning upon the survey, especially in California, Florida and Louisiana. See SURVEYS,

2. U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 97. But unless a condition to a grant is distinctly intimated it will not be inferred. A condition cannot be implied in an absolute grant. U. S. v. Rodman, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 130.

3. U. S. v. Clarke, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 169.

4. McMicken v. U. S., 97 U. S. 218.

5. So a concession by a Spanish governor which is not followed by the proceedings which his order required, nor a severance of the land from the royal domain, is invalid and void. Le Compte v. U. S., 11 How. (U. S.) 127; U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 787. And where the claimant of a grant made in 1797 never had possession, and had made no improvements, and had not perfected his grant fifty years after, the presumption is the grant was forfeited. U. S. v. Moore, 12 How. (U. S.) 209. See also U. S. v. Burgerin, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 85; U. S. v. Drummond, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 84; U. S. v. Kingsley, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 476; U. S. v. Mills, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 215; Buyck v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 215. So a grant upon condition of taking possession within six months is defeated by a breach of that condition. O'Hara v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 279. A trifling occupation is insufficient and will not avail the grantee. Thus where one obtains a grant on the representation that he would "establish his whole family and employ all his negroes" in carrying on the establishment, and it appeared that five years afterward he had but a single slave there, it will not be considered a sufficient occupancy to complete his title. U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 95. And where one had obtained a grant on condition that he would introduce a colony and establish a great industry, but had taken no steps to fulfill this condition, it was held that his title could not be confirmed. Glenn v. U. S., 13 How. (U. S.) 260. But a condition in a grant of land "to settle two hundred families thereon," etc., is a condition subsequent, and equity will excuse a strict legal performance where a change of sovereignty and circumstances impede its performance. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691. Or where the performance of the condition subsequent is made impossible by the act of the grantor. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691.

5. In the case of U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691, it is said that as to individual rights, the treaty is to be considered as dated at its ratification. The provision of the treaty as to the performance of the conditions in grants, is not confined to owners of land by occupancy or residence; but extends to persons who have a legal seisin and possession of land, in virtue of a grant; and that, in the situation of the province, and the claimants to land at the time

5. Treaty as Affecting Conditions in Grants.—As between the governments, parties to a treaty, the treaty relates back to its date, but as to the performance of conditions in a grant to a private individual, it affects only from the time of its final ratification.¹

IV. CONFIRMATION; JURISDICTION TO CONFIRM.—The United States Supreme Court has no jurisdiction over land titles unless they are protected by some act of Congress, or by some treaty applicable thereto.² Where a title is complete in form, according to the usages and laws of Spain, and recognized and sanctioned by of the cession, it was enough that they should show a performance of the condition cy pres. U. S. v. Gibbald, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 313. See also U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 436.

1. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691.

2. Mayor, etc., of New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 226. But where the construction of an act of Congress is involved to sustain the title, the court has jurisdiction under the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act, where the title is not to be determined by Spanish law alone. Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. (U. S.) 372, where New Orleans v. Armas, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 226, is cited and distinguished. The same question arose in the cases of Pollard v. Kibbie, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 354, and Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 234, and the court in these cases held that they had the power to look behind the act of Congress into a Spanish concession for the purpose of construing the act, and comparing it with that under which the defendant claimed. Under the acts of Congress of May 26, 1824 (4 Stat. at Large, 52), and June 17, 1844 (5 Stat. at Large, 676), the courts of the United States have no power to decide upon complete or perfect titles to land. U. S. v. Mayor, etc., of Philadelphia, 11 How. (U. S.) 648; following U. S. v. Reynes, 9 How. (U. S.) 127; U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 773; 7 How. (U. S.) 833; U. S. v. McCullagh, 13 How. (U. S.) 216.

A perfect Spanish grant is not a subject of jurisdiction in the federal courts under the above acts. They only provide for cases where the title set up is imperfect but equitable. U. S. v. Roselins, 15 How. (U. S.) 36.

The acts were not designated to invest the holders of imperfect titles with new or additional rights, but merely to provide a remedy by which legal, just and bona fide claims might be established. U. S. v. Reynes, 9 How. (U. S.) 154; Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 253; Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 511; and see U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 89; Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. (U. S.) 463.

A decision of a State court giving lands covered by riparian rights to certain claimants under a grant in 1807 by an Intendant-General under the Spanish government, which was excepted from the operation of the act of Congress passed on the 26th of March, 1804, which annulled all Spanish grants made after the first of October, 1800, and which was recognized as a valid grant by the act of 3d of March, 1819, was only a construction of a perfected Spanish title, and cannot be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, under the 25th section of the Judiciary act, it being a perfect title. Mackay v. Dillon, 4 How. (U. S.) 421; Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. (U. S.) 344; Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. (U. S.) 461; Kennedy v. Hunt, 7 How. (U. S.) 592; U. S. v. Castant, 12 How. (U. S.) 442.

Conflict in Titles.—In the case of Doe v. Eslava, 9 How. (U. S.) 421, the court held that where there were two conflicting claims to land, one founded upon a French grant in 1757, with possession continuing down to 1787, and another founded upon a Spanish grant in 1788, with possession continuing down to 1819, both claims being confirmed by congress, that in an ejectment suit, where the titles were in conflict, and the State court instructed the jury that the confirmations balanced each other, and that they must look to other evidence in order to settle the rights of the parties, and the judgment of the court being, ultimately, in favor of the party who claimed under the Spanish grant, that it would not, under the circumstances of the case, be distributed.

Congress as a perfect title, courts of justice are concluded by it and have no authority to set it aside.¹ Where Congress provides a board of commissioners to examine grants, and declares that their decision shall be final, a State court has no jurisdiction to divest a claimant of a title obtained from that body,² and its judgments and orders are regarded as nullities.³ In the case of an imperfect Spanish title to land, a confirmation by Congress is

As between claimants under the former government setting up independent, imperfect claims to the same parcel of land, the courts of justice have no jurisdiction to determine the controversy; in such cases it belongs to the political power to decide to whom the perfect title shall issue. Maguire v. Tyler, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 650.

1. Such is the well established doctrine in the cases of Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. (U. S.) 344; Mackay v. Dillon, 4 How. (U. S.) 421; and especially that of Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. (U. S.) 461. See also Kennedy v. Hunt, 7 How. (U. S.) 586; U. S. v. Castant, 12 How. (U. S.) 442.

Jurisdiction of Federal Courts to Confirm.—Under the act of Congress of 1824, for relief to claimants of French or Spanish grants, concessions, warrants, or orders of survey, unless the petition is presented in conformity with that act, the federal courts have no jurisdiction. U. S. v. D'Auterieve, 15 How. (U. S.) 30, where an act of Congress extends the jurisdiction of a federal court to all claims "by virtue of any French or Spanish grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey" legally made by the proper authorities, the court thus empowered has authority to confirm such claims, and should do so. And this power extends to grants of any character not reserved by the provisions of the empowering act. Delassus v. U. S., 9 Pet. (U. S.) 134.

The act of May, 26, 1824 (4 Stat. 52), was not intended to give jurisdiction to the district court to determine controversies between intermediate claimants, or ascertain the validity of conveyances. Such questions are to be determined in other tribunals of the country. Putnam v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 333.

The real inquiry in these cases is, whether the government is the owner, and if that is decided against herself, she has no further concern in the controversy. Bullitt v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 333.

In the case of Callender v. U. S.,

Hempst. (U. S.) 334, the district court of Arkansas refused to entertain a petition for the confirmation of a grant, under the act of 1824 (4 Stat. 52), for want of jurisdiction where the greater part of the land granted was situated in another State.

2. Hickey v. Stewart, 3 How. (U. S.) 762.

Where full jurisdiction is given to the commissioners, their judgment is final. See U. S. v. Nourse, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 9.

In the case of U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 730, it is laid down as a universal principle that where power or jurisdiction is delegated to any public officer or tribunal over a subject matter, and its exercise is confided to his or their discretion, that the acts so done are valid and binding as to the subject matter. The only question that can arise between an individual, claiming a right under the act done, and the public, or any person denying their validity, are power in the officer and fraud in the party. Voorhess v. Bank of U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 478.

All other questions are settled by the decision made, or the act done by the tribunal or officer, unless an appeal or other revision of the proceeding is prescribed by law. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 729, and cases there cited.

3. Thus where Congress provided a board of commissioners to examine certain grants and declared that their decision should be final, the court of chancery of the State of Mississippi had no authority to establish one of these grants. Hickey v. Stewart, 3 How. (U. S.) 750.

According to the decision of Henderson v. Poindexter, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 543, the exercise of jurisdiction by a court in such a case, where no power had been conferred by Congress upon it, is a mere usurpation of judicial power, and the whole proceeding of the court is void. See Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 340; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 511, and other cases there referred to.

inoperative, unless the title or survey under it will enable the court to ascertain the specific boundaries of the land;¹ and if, before a survey in such a case, an entry is made and a patent taken out for the land, which conflicts with a subsequent survey of the confirmed concession, the patentee has the better title.² The act of March 3, 1807, § 4, was the first that gave a board of commissioners power to adjudicate claims against the United States, and conclude the government as to the question of right in the claimant.³

The act of May 26, 1824, § 5, declared that all claims within its purview should be brought by petition before the district court within two years from the passing of the act; and when so brought before the court if the claimant, by his own neglect or delay, fail to prosecute the cause to final decision within three years, he should be forever barred, both at law and in equity; and that no action at common law or proceeding in equity should thereafter be sustained in any court whatever in relation to said claim.

By the act of 1828, § 6, the provisions of the act of 1824 were extended to the superior court of Florida with some modifications.

The act of May 26, 1830, providing for the final settlement of land claims in Florida, must be construed to contain the same limitation of time within which claim were to be presented as that by the act of May 23, 1828. In 1828 the time for filing petitions before the courts was reduced from two years to one. Courts of Florida, therefore, had no right to receive a petition for the confirmation of an incomplete concession after May 26, 1831. U. S. v. Marvin, 3 How. (U. S.) 624, where the case of U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 329, is commented on.

1. Ledoux v. Black, 18 How. (U. S.) 473.

2. Ledoux v. Black, 18 How. (U. S.) 473.

Where there is specific tract of land confirmed according to ascertained boundaries, the confirmer takes a title on which he may sue in ejectment. Bissell v. Penrose, 8 How. (U. S.) 317.

But where the claim has no certain limits, and the judgment of confirmation carries along with it the condition that the land shall be surveyed, and severed from the public domain and the lands of others, then it is not open to controversy and the title attaches to the land. West v. Cochran, 17 How.

(U. S.) 403; Stanford v. Taylor, 18 How. (U. S.) 412.

3. The judgment of the Board on all claims for less than a league square were to a large degree judicial, but as their powers and duties depended on the acts of 1805 and 1806, and more especially on that of 1807, by which they were bound to transmit to the secretary of the treasury, and to the surveyor-general of the district where the land lay, transcripts of their final decisions, made in favor of each claimant and by which they were required to deliver to them a certificate stating the circumstances of the case, and that the claimant was entitled to a patent for the tract therein designated. West v. Cochran, 17 How. (U. S.) 414.

In all cases where tracts of land were granted by the board, which had not been previously surveyed, the 7th section of the act of 1807 declared that they should be surveyed under the directions of the surveyor-general. When a certificate and plat should be filed in the proper office, a patent certificate was to issue, which should entitle the claimant to a patent from the United States. West v. Cochran, 17 How. (U. S.) 414.

But this act of Congress did not, proprio vigore, vest the legal title in claimants. When the decision of the commissioners was in the claimant's favor, a patent was necessary to convey the title. The report was made conclusive evidence of the equitable right and nothing more. And when the final report was against the validity of the claim, the opinion was to be reported upon its merits, and Congress reserved to itself the ultimate determination. Burgess v. Gray, 16 How. (U. S.) 63.

Under the acts of Congress of 1805 and 1807, in relation to the confirmation of land titles in Louisiana, the confirmation does not inure to the holder of the elder title if he neglects to pre-

Where the petition to confirm a grant is filed out of time, the court has no jurisdiction to examine into the merits of the claim.¹

V. GRANTS IN CALIFORNIA—1. Origin of Titles.—California belonged to Spain by the rights of discovery and conquest. The government of that country established regulations for transfers of the public domain to individuals. When the sovereignty of Spain was displaced by the revolutionary action of Mexico, the new government established regulations upon the same subject. These two sovereignties are the spring heads of all the land titles in California, existing at the time of the cession of that country to the United States by the Treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo.²

2. Spanish Grants—Presumption as to.—A grant made by a Spanish governor is prima facie evidence of the power of the governor to make the same, and throws the burden of proof on the party denying it.³

3. Mexican Grants—a. THE LAW AUTHORIZING.—The Mexican Congress, after the country had thrown off the government of Spain, passed the law of 1824, providing for the grant and colonization of the public lands.⁴ The Supreme Executive Government sent his claim to the commissioners. Thus where the French owner conveyed twice, and the possession went with the junior conveyance, and the holder thereof presented his claim, and had the title confirmed by the commissioners, and the holder of the senior conveyance neglected to do so, the latter could derive no benefit from the confirmation, and his title is void and barred. Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 771.

1. Under the act of Congress of 1844, reviving section 5 of the act of 1824, a petition to confirm a French or Spanish grant, filed more than two years after the former act, was barred. U. S. v. Porche, 12 How. (U. S.) 432. And even if the objection to the time of filing the petition is waived, it would not give jurisdiction to the court when the act of Congress had not conferred it. U. S. v. Porche, 12 How. (U. S.) 432.

2. U. S. v. Moreno, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 400.

3. U. S. v. Peralta, 19 How. (U. S.) 343.

In this case the court, by Grier, J., said: "The appellants on whom the burden of proof is cast, to show want of authority, have produced no evidence, either documentary or historical, that the Spanish officers who usually acted as governors of the distant provinces of California were restricted in their powers, and could not make grants of land. The necessity for the exercise of such a power by the governors, if the Crown desired the distant provinces to be settled, is the greater because of their distance from the source of power. By the royal order of August 22, 1776, the northern and northwestern provinces of Mexico were formed into a new and distinct organization, called the Internal Provinces of New Spain. This organization included California. It conferred ample powers, civil, military and political, on the commandant general. The archives of the former government also show that as early as 1786 the governors of California had authority from the commandant general to make grants, limiting the number of sitios which should be granted. In 1792 California was annexed to the viceroyalty of Mexico, and so continued till the Spanish authority ceased. An attempt to trace the obscure history of the various decrees, orders and regulations of the Spanish Government on this subject would be tedious and unprofitable. It is sufficient for the case that the archives of the Mexican Government show that such power has been exercised by the governors under Spain, and continued to be exercised so under Mexico; and that such grants made by the Spanish officers have been confirmed and held valid by the Mexican authorities."

Section 2 of the act provides that the lands of the nation, which are not ment, acting under the 16th section of this law, established, November 21, 1828, regulations for the granting and colonization.¹

The act of 1824 and the regulations of 1828 are the only laws, with the exception of those relating to missions and towns, that were in force in the territories of Mexico for the disposition of public lands.² The act of 1824 and the regulations of 1828 were the property of any individual, corporation or town, are the subject of the law, and may be colonized. Section 3 provides that for this purpose the congress of the States shall, with the least delay, enact laws and regulations for colonizing within their respective boundaries, conforming in all respects to the constitutive act, the General Constitution, and the rules established in this law; and section 4 prohibits the colonization of any lands within twenty leagues of the sea coast without the consent of the supreme government. Section 8: In the distribution of the lands preference shall be given to Mexican citizens. Section 12: No person shall be allowed to obtain a grant of more than eleven leagues. Section 15: No person who may obtain a grant under the act shall retain it if he resides out of the limits of the republic; and section 16 provides that the executive shall proceed in conformity with the principles established in the act, to the colonization of the territories of the republic. Rockwell's Spanish and Mexican Law, p. 451; U. S. v. Vallejo, 1 Black (U. S.) 541.

1. U. S. v. Vallejo, 1 Black (U. S.) 541.

These regulations provided: First, that the governors of the territories should be authorized (in compliance with the act of 1824) to grant vacant lands in other territories to such contractors, families, or private persons, whether Mexican or foreigners, as might ask for them. Second, that every person soliciting lands shall address to the governor of the respective territory, a petition, expressing his name, country, profession and religion, and describing as distinctly as possible, by means of a map, the land asked for. Third, the governor shall proceed immediately to obtain the necessary information whether the petition embraces the proper conditions required by the law of 1824, both as regards the land and the petitioner, in order that the applicant may be at once attended to, or, if it be preferred, the municipal authority may be consulted, whether there be any objection to the making of the grant. Fourth, this being done, the governor will accede or not to such petition in conformity to the laws on the subject. Fifth, the grants made to families or private persons shall not be held to be definitely valid without the previous consent of the territorial deputation, to which end the respective documents (espedientes) shall be forwarded to it. Sixth, when the governor shall not obtain the approbation of the territorial deputation, he shall report to the supreme government, forwarding the necessary documents for its decision. Seventh, the grants made to empresarias for them to colonize with many families shall not be held to be definitely valid until the approval of the supreme government be obtained; to which the necessary documents must be forwarded, along with the report of the territorial deputation. Eighth, the definite grant asked for being made, a document signed by the governor shall be given, to serve as a title to the party interested, wherein it must be stated that said grant is made in exact conformity with the provisions of the laws, in virtue whereof possession shall be given. Ninth, the necessary record shall be kept, in a book destined for the purpose, of all the petitions presented, and grants made, with the maps of the lands granted, and the circumstantial report shall be forwarded quarterly to the supreme government. Fifteenth, the land given for a house lot shall be 100 varas. Seventeenth, in those territories where there are missions, the lands occupied by them cannot be colonized at present, nor until it be determined whether they are to be considered as the property of the establishments of the Neophytes, Catechumens, and Mexican colonists. limitations upon the power of the governor to make grants. They were also considered to be directions to petitioners for land before they could get titles.¹ The public lands could not be sold for money, nor granted away in consideration of past public services, nor on condition of making public improvements of use to the travelling community, or of general benefit to the State.² The avowed purpose of the Mexican congress in enacting the law of 1824, and of the supreme government in carrying it into effect, was to colonize the public domain and to preserve it for settlement and cultivation.³

b. WHAT COULD BE GRANTED.—More than eleven leagues could not be granted to one individual.⁴ The authority conferred by the act and regulations was limited and restrained to the granting of unoccupied public lands,⁵ though islands were excepted and could not be granted,⁶ as were also mines.⁷ Public establishments of the departments could not be granted under those laws;⁸ nor lands occupied by the Catholic missions;⁹ nor

1. Fuentes v. U. S., 22 How. (U. S.) 443. Authority to make the grants is there expressly conferred on the governors, and conditions prescribed on which they shall be made. The court must look to these laws for both the power to make the grant, and for the mode and manner of its exercise; and they are to be substantially complied with, except so far as modified by the usages and customs of the government under which the titles are derived, the principles of equity and the decisions of this court. *U. 3. This policy recognized the obligation resting on the government to hold the public lands as a public trust, to be administered for the benefit of those who would settle upon them or cultivate them. The power to cede them depended entirely on the usages to which they were to be put, and these were cultivation on settlement. The legal right to dispose of them for other objects was withdrawn from the local authorities, and rested alone with the supreme government. U. S. v. Vigil, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 449.

On July 20, 1838, the minister of the interior, by order of the Mexican president, addressed a communication to the governor of the territory of California, authorizing him to grant and distribute the lands of the desert islands adjacent to that department to the citizens who might solicit the same. Grants made by the governor under the power thus conferred required the concurrence of the departmental assembly, and, if made without such concurrence, were void. U. S. v. Osio, 23 How. (U. S.) 273; U. S. v. Castillero, 23 How. (U. S.) 464; Bouldin v. Phelps; 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 306; 30 Fed. Rep. 547.

7. Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black (U. S.) 1. Grants of land made under those laws did not convey to the grantee the minerals in the soil or any interest in them, and there is no ground whatever to hold that the supreme government ever conferred upon any of the local tribunals any jurisdiction upon the subject. Mines under Mexican laws, whether situated in public or private lands, belonged to the supreme government, and private persons could only acquire a title in one by conforming substantially to the conditions ordained in the provisions of the mining ordinance of May 22, 1783. *Castillero v. lands which were in the lawful possession and occupancy of persons claiming provisional title from the government.¹

c. WHO COULD GRANT.—The power to grant, conferred by the regulations, was vested in the governors of the territories.² The departmental assembly possessed no power to make grants of lands. Its power was restricted to approval or disapproval of the grant made.³

d. HOW GRANTS OBTAINED.—By the regulations, every person soliciting lands was required in the first place to address a petition to the governor, setting forth his name, country, profession and religion, and also to describe the land asked for as distinctly as possible by means of a diseño, or map, which was usually annexed to the petition in order that the governor might have the means of ascertaining whether the tract solicited was vacant and so situated that it might properly be granted to the applicant.⁴ The petitioner was not required to prove his representations, but it was the duty of the governor to obtain the necessary information to enable him to determine whether the case, as presented in the petition, fell within the conditions specified in the regulations, both as regarded the land and the

The supreme government, on August 17, 1833, issued a decree secularizing the missions in California, and, on November 3, of the same year, the congress of Mexico passed an act authorizing the measures which should secure their colonization. Various regulations were promulgated by the governor, but on November 7, 1835, the supreme government issued a decree suspending the secularization act until the curates should take possession of their parishes as had been provided by the second section of the act. On November 7, 1840, the president by his decree directed that a general order be issued to the governor for the restoration of the lands, and such decree remained in full force at the treaty of peace between the two countries. *U. It is true the grant was not complete until the approval of the assembly, and in this sense the assembly and the governor acted concurrently, but the initiative must be taken by the governor. He was required to act in the first instance to decide whether the petitioner was a fit person to receive the grant and whether the land itself could be granted without prejudice to the public or individuals. U. S. v. Vigil, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 449.

The provision that a map should accompany the petition was not enforced in all cases. The governors exercised a discretionary power of dispensing with it under special circumstances. No motive existed for insisting upon the presentation when the information it was designated to impart was already in the public archives, open to the applicant.¹ The information was obtained by a formal reference to the local magistrate, and a report from him was the course usually adopted, but it was not essential.²

c. APPROVAL.—A right and title passed by the governor's grant, but its definite validity was suspended for the approval of the assembly, and so it continued to be suspended until its approbation had been given.³ It was the duty of the governor on making the grant to submit it to the departmental assembly for their approval.⁴ If the approval of the assembly was refused, it did not take away nor in any way qualify the grantee's title, but only kept its final validity in suspense until the grant had been refused by the supreme government of the republic.⁵

It might have been obtained by the governor from his own investigations, or he might, as stated in the regulations, if that course were preferred, consult the appropriate municipal authority, which was that of the district, whether any objection existed to making the grant. Hornsby v. U. S., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 237.

The provisions subjecting the grant to the approval of the assembly did not prevent the title from passing to the grantee upon the execution of the instrument. Such approval was not a condition precedent to the vesting of the title. Roland v. U. S., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 748; Hornsby v. U. S., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 238; *Ferris v. The regulations contemplated an approval to precede the issue of the formal grant; so where the grantee received the document the concession should be considered final. For a long time after the adoption of the regulations this course of proceeding was followed; but afterwards, and for some years previous to the conquest, a different practice prevailed, and the former title papers were issued without waiting for the action of the assembly, a clause being inserted to the effect that the grant was subject to the approval of that body. Pico v. U. S., 2 Wall. 281.

The neglect of the governor to submit the grant to the assembly suspended the . . . validity of the grant, that is, it prolonged the liability of the State to be defeated by the action of the assembly, and of the supreme government thereon, but no other consequence followed. His neglect was not permitted to operate to divest the grantee of the estate already vested in him. Fremont v. U. S., 17 How. (U. S.) 555; U. S. v. Reading, 18 How. (U. S.) 7; *Hornsby v. U. After its action, whether of approval or disapproval, it became the duty of the governor to forward the necessary documents with the report of the assembly to the supreme government. Until the approval of the supreme government the grant was subject to be defeated. With such approval it was discharged of the defeasance and became definitively, that is, finally valid, and passed the estate to the grantee, beyond even the power of the government to divest, except by proceedings to work a forfeiture for breach of its conditions subsequent. Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 616; U. S. v. Reading, 18 How. (U. S.) 7.

f. EFFECT.—If the assembly approved the grant it was the duty of the governor to deliver it to the grantee, as evidence of his title.¹ Upon the delivery, the grant became definitively valid.² The grant is prima facie evidence that the governor performed his duty, and consequently, that the grant had the approbation of the assembly.³

When the governor had once exercised his discretion and made the grant, he could not recall it or nullify it.⁴

The absence of the conditions from the grant does not affect the validity of it.⁵

The conditions of cultivation and occupancy annexed to the grants were conditions subsequent, for the non-performance of which the estate might be defeated, by proceedings of the government to that end; but, until such proceedings were had, and a forfeiture declared thereon, the estate remained perfect and complete in the grantee.⁶ Such proceedings had their inception in

sent to the assembly, or that, having been sent, they had been rejected, and that, after such rejection, they had not been sent by the governor to the supreme executive government for a final decision, the titles of the grantees are just what they were in their beginning, and are sufficient, now that the territory has been transferred to the United States, for confirmation under the act of March 3, 1851. U. S. v. Reading, 14 Sawy. (U. S.) 164.

Such grants so circumstanced are equitable titles protected by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and by the laws and usages of nations concerning the rights of property of the inhabitants of a ceded or conquered country. U. S. v. Reading, 14 Sawy. (U. S.) 164; 18 How. (U. S.) 1.

And they are protected by the usages of Mexico in respect to such grants, the archives of California showing that a very large portion of the lands in the occupation of its inhabitants was held by titles wanting the approval of the assembly. what was termed a denouncement by a party desirous of obtaining the land. An investigation then followed whether or not the conditions had been complied with or so disregarded as to justify a decree of forfeiture. Without such inquisition and decree the title did not revert to the government, nor was the land subject to be re-granted.¹

g. JURIDICAL POSSESSION.—When the approval of the departmental assembly was obtained to the grant, there was another proceeding to be taken which was essential to the complete investiture of title. Such proceeding was a formal delivery of possession of the property by a magistrate of the vicinage, called the delivery of juridical possession.² This proceeding was essential to the complete investiture of title where there was any uncertainty as to the precise boundaries of the lands granted, and until performed the grant was regarded as inchoate and incomplete.³ This proceeding had a double operation: First, to make a formal tradition or livery of seisin of the property, and, second, to measure off and segregate the specific quantity granted, and establish its boundaries.⁴ The proceeding involved an ascertainment and settlement of the boundaries of the lands granted by the officers of the government specially designated for that purpose.⁵

h. SPECIFIC GRANTS; GRANTS BY QUANTITY.—Grants of the public domain of Mexico, made by governor of the department of California were of three kinds. First. Grants by specific boundaries, where the donee was entitled to the entire tract described. Second. Grants of quantity, as of one or more leagues situated at some designated place or within a large tract described by out-boundaries, where the donee was entitled out of the general tract only to the quantity specified. Third. Grants of places by name, where the donee was entitled to the tract named according to the limits as showed by its settlement and possessions, or other competent evidence.⁶ In the cases of grants belonging to the second class mentioned, the grant, as between the government and the grantee, created in the latter a vested interest in the specific land conveyed.⁷ Until juridical possession was given, title remained in the government until the segregation of the quantity designated by the grant, charged with the interest and equity of the grantee;¹ and the latter was entitled only to the specific quantity named, but what portion of the general tract should be set apart for him could only be determined by a survey under the authority of the government. Until then the grantee and the government were tenants in common of the whole tract.² Until the segregation of the quantity designated by the grant, the grantee was entitled as against all but the government, to the possession of the entire tract, and no third person could interfere with such possession.³

The rights to make the survey rested exclusively with the government, and could only be exercised by its officers.⁴ The grantee could not himself make the measurement so as to bind the government.⁵ He might, however, make a selection and location under such circumstances as to estop him from asserting any right to the remainder.⁶ If, after a grant of quantity was made, another party obtained a grant from the government by specific boundaries within the lands where the first grant was to be located before the former grant was surveyed, the title of the latter grantee was superior to that of the former.⁷ As between two floating grants of quantity within the same general tract, which is sufficiently large to satisfy both, where neither grantee had received official delivery of possession, under the former government, the party whose claim is first surveyed and patented will hold the better right to the land covered by his patent, and

If one person could, in this way, appropriate a particular parcel to himself, all persons could do so, and thus the conferee would soon be stripped of the land which was intended by the government as a donation to its grantees. If the law were otherwise than as stated, the conferees would find their possessions limited, first in one direction and then in another, each intruder asserting that the parcel occupied by him fell within the surplus, until, in the end, they would be excluded from the entire tract." *Shanklin v. 4. Surveys—a. IN GENERAL, ACT OF 1851.—If the Mexican Government failed to locate a grant, the power of locating the same passed to the United States to be exercised in such manner, and at such times as the United States might deem expedient.² By the act of March 3, 1851, the United States designated the manner and conditions under which the right and power of location would be exercised, and declared the effect which should be given to the proceedings had.³ The act confers the power of locating the claim upon the surveyor-general, his survey being subject to revision by the executive officers authorized to supervise and direct the surveyor's action. It did not require the return of the survey or plat to the commissioners, or into court.⁴

b. ACT OF 1860.—The act of June 14, 1860, allowed surveys, where objection was made to their correctness, to be brought before the district court and subjected to examination, and required them to be corrected, if found to vary from the specific directions of the decrees upon which they were founded; or if the decree contained no specific directions from the general rules governing in such cases.⁵ The object of the act in respect to surveys was not to settle the question of title, but to insure conformity of the survey with the decree upon which it was made.⁶ The act applies solely to surveys subsequently made, and to surveys previously made and approved by the surveyor-general, which had been at the passage of the act returned into the district court, or in relation to which proceedings were then pending for the purpose of contesting or reforming the same.⁷ By the act, when a survey had been made and plotted it was the duty of the surveyor-general to publish notice of the fact for four weeks. In the mean time the survey and plot were to be retained in his office subject to inspection. If, upon the expiration of the publication no application was made for the return of the survey into the district court for examination and adjudication, or, if made, the application was refused, the survey became final. On the other hand, if the survey was ordered into court, it did not become final until it had been approved, or had been modified and reformed by the decree of the court. Until the survey was established in one of these ways, it was without any binding force. Until then it is only a mere preliminary proceeding, amounting in effect to no more than a mere report of the action of the surveyor, filed in his office for the inspection of all parties interested, or returned by him into court by its order for examination and adjudication.¹ The approval had as against claimants under floating grants, the force and conclusiveness of a judicial determination in a suit in rem, and all such claimants were concluded by it.² The approval of a court establishes the fact that the survey is in conformity with the decree of confirmation; or if the decree is for quantity only, that the survey was authorized by it, and, in either case, the approval renders the survey conclusive as to the location of the land against all floating grants not previously located.³ The survey thus approved had the effect and validity of a patent.⁴

The act of Congress of June 2, 1862,⁵ as to surveys, did not repeal the act of 1860.⁶

5. Effect of Conquest.—The authority of the Mexican Government ceased in California July 7, 1846, the date on which the American forces captured Monterey; and all grants made after that time are void.⁷ The conquest did not affect the character of the interests of the inhabitants in lands derived from the former government.⁸ The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo did not impair the rights of the inhabitants to lands acquired from the former government. Such rights were preserved and protected by the treaty,⁹ which placed Mexican citizens on the same footing as citizens of the United States.¹⁰ By the treaty, the United States became vested with the title to all the lands in California not held in private ownership by a legal or equitable title.¹

6. Act of 1851—a. PURPOSE OF ACT.—By the act of March 3, 1851, the United States declared the conditions under which it would discharge its political obligations to Mexican grantees.² The power to decide upon the validity of any claim presented to land in California by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican government, as matter of original jurisdiction, is, by the act, exclusively conferred upon the commissioners appointed under the act.³ The main purpose of the statute was to separate and distinguish the lands, which the United States owned as property, which could be sold to others, from those lands which belonged either equitably or legally to private parties under a claim of right derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments.⁴ The effect of the act of 1851 was to reserve all lands in California covered by grants made by the former government so as to afford a reasonable time for the asserting of rights thereto before the tribunal provided by the act.⁵

b. EMBRACED CLAIMS LEGAL AND EQUITABLE.—The act embraced not only equitable titles, but legal titles also, and required them all to undergo examination and to be passed upon by the court.⁶ A title derived from the Mexican Government was not

In the execution of the treaty, obligations with respect to property claimed under Mexican laws, the United States might adopt such modes of procedure as it deemed expedient. It might act by legislation directly upon the claims preferred, or it might provide a special board for their determination, or it might require their submission to the ordinary tribunals. It was the sole judge of the propriety of the mode, and having the plenary power of confirmation, it may annex any conditions to the confirmation of a claim resting upon an imperfect right which it may choose. It may declare the action of the special board final; it may make it subject to appeal; it may require the appeal to go through one or more courts, and it may arrest the action of the board or courts at any stage. *Grisar v. The object of the provision appears perfect while any further action was required on the part of such government or its successor, in order to invest the claimant with the entire legal title to, and the absolute possession of the specific lands granted.¹ Inchoate or equitable titles required further action of the granting power for their protection and their presentation was necessary to enable the new government to discharge its political obligations in this respect.² The act is not subject to any constitutional obligation so far as it applies to grants of an imperfect character, which require further action of the political department to render them perfect.³ Legal titles—such as were perfect under the former government—did not need any action of the new government for their protection, but their presentation was necessary to enable the new government to ascertain the extent of the property it had acquired by the accession of the country.⁴ The holders of legal titles, such as were perfect under the former government, were not compelled to submit them to the board of commissioners appointed under the act, nor did they forfeit their lands by a failure to present them to such board for confirmation.⁵

C. MERE POSSESSORY CLAIMS NOT EMBRACED.—Mere possession of land with the consent of the Mexican Government, no matter how long continued, created no right in the possession which the United States was required to recognize or which was permitted to be confirmed by the act of 1851.⁶

Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 628. The government must take some steps to determine the extent of its own possessions, and, for that purpose, may require the presentation of claims which are asserted by individuals, and, as a consequence, may prescribe the penalty of non-presentation. And as to the political obligations assumed by the treaty, it must determine for itself, for no other power can determine for it, or control its action in that respect—the mode and manner in which they shall be discharged. *Estrada v. There is nothing in the language of the statute to imply any such exclusion of perfected claims from the jurisdiction of the commission. The act requires all claims to be presented, perfect as well as imperfect claims. Botiller v. Dominguez, 130 U. S. 247.

d. INDIAN CLAIMS.—Mission and Pueblo Indians were not required by the act to present their claims, and are not affected by their failure to present them.¹ All other Indians were required to present their claims to the commissioners, and claims not so presented are lost.²

e. ASSIGNEE'S CLAIMS.—The assignee of a grantee might present his claim, but where there were many assignees the proper party to the proceeding was the original grantee who could produce the documents of title and best knew how to establish it.³

f. EFFECT OF FAILURE TO PRESENT CLAIM.—All claims not presented to the board of commissioners provided for by the act during the time fixed by the act for their presentation, are treated by the act as non-existent, and the land as belonging to the public domain.⁴

g. PROOF OF GRANT.—The record required to be kept by section 11 of the Regulations of 1828 is the evidence of the grant, and the grant must be established by such record evidence as found in the archives, or which, having been there, has been lost.⁵

h. COMMISSIONERS—(1) Duty.—The duty of the commissioners appointed under the act was confined to determining the validity of grants made by the Mexican Government as between the claimant and the United States.⁶

The act required all claims to lands to be presented within two years from its date, and declared, in effect, that if upon such presentation they are found by the tribunal, created for their consideration and by the courts on appeal to be valid, the government will recognize and confirm them and take such action as will result in rendering them perfect titles. But it has also declared in effect by the same act that if the claims be not presented within the period designated, it will not recognize nor confirm them, nor take any action for their protection, but that the claims will be considered and treated as abandoned. Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 490.

essential part of the system of Mexico to preserve full record evidence of all grants of the public domain and of the various proceedings by which they were obtained. Where, therefore, a claim to land is asserted under an illegal grant from the Mexican Government, reference must in the first instance be had to the archives of the country embracing the period when the grant purports to have been made. If they furnish no information on the subject a strong presumption naturally arises against the validity of the instrument produced, which can only be overcome, if at all, by the clearest proof of its genuineness, accompanied by open and continued possession of the premises. Pico v. U. S., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 279; U. S. v. Teschmaker, 22 How. (U. S.) 392; U. S. v. Pico, 22 How. (U. S.) 406; Fuentes v. U. S., 22 How. (U. S.) 443; U. S. v. Castro, 24 How. (U. (2) Decision.—The decision of the commission was not conclusive upon either party to the proceeding. Either party was entitled to appeal therefrom to the United States district court with the ultimate right of appeal to the supreme court.¹

(3) Judgment; Effect of.—The judgment of the board of commissioners upon the validity of a grant presented to them, if not appealed from, or if, on appeal, affirmed, is conclusive against the United States and those claiming under the United States.² Claimants under titles subsequent to the acquisition of the country by the United States took in subordination to its action in reference to claims existing at the date of the acquisition, and are bound by the proceedings had under the act, although not parties to such proceedings, or given notice of them.³

i. EFFECT OF CONFIRMATION.—A confirmation vests the legal title in the conferee, subject, however, to any equitable rights under the title confirmed which existed at the time of the confirmation.⁴

j. EQUITABLE RIGHTS; HOW ENFORCED.—The holders of equitable titles must seek their rights by a proceeding appropriate to their nature and condition. They cannot maintain an action of ejectment against the conferees or those claiming under them, but must go into equity where their rights can be properly investigated with a due regard to the rights of others.⁵

k. THIRD PERSONS.—Under the 15th section of the act, "third persons" are not bound by any of the proceedings had under the act, or by a patent issued in pursuance of such proceedings.⁶ The term "third persons," as used in the act, does quantity of land lying within exterior boundaries embracing a much larger tract, and in relation to which no proceedings were ever taken by the Mexican government for the measurement and segregation, a confirmation of the claim was only a judicial determination of the right of the claimant to have a specific quantity set apart to him out of a general tract, and the duty of the board was discharged by a confirmation of the claim in the general terms of the grant, leaving the specific quantity designated to be surveyed and set off by the proper officers of the government to whom the subject of surveys was intrusted. *U. not embrace all persons other than the United States and the claimants, but only those who hold independent titles arising previous to acquisition of the country, and whose titles at that date were such as to enable them to resist successfully any subsequent action of the government affecting them.¹

1. EFFECT OF REJECTION OR NON-PRESENTATION.—The final rejection of the claim in the proceedings had under the act operated proprio vigore to restore the lands claimed to the public domain without any further action by the government.² So also did a failure to present the claim within the required time.³

m. PATENT—(1) Operation and Effect.—A patent issued upon confirmation of a Mexican grant takes effect as of the date of the filing of the petition with the board of commissioners, and is to be regarded as executed on that day, and passes whatever interest the United States may then have had in the premises.⁴ It operates, in consequence, as an absolute bar to all claims under the United States having their origin subsequent to the petition.⁵ The patent is also a record of the government showing its action and judgment with respect to the title of the claimant as it existed upon the acquisition of the country. It is conclusive evidence of the validity of the original grant, and of the recognition and had come into its political control by the treaty of Mexico, never made pretense that it was the owner of the lands so granted by Mexico. When, therefore, guided by the tribunals which the government had established to pass upon the validity of these alleged grants, it issued a patent to the claimant, it was in the nature of a quitclaim, an admission that the rightful ownership had never been in the United States, but, at the time of the session, it had passed to the claimant or to those under whom he claimed. *Adam v. In addition to this, being conclusive upon the question of the existence and validity of the grant, it necessarily establishes the title of the patentees from the date of the grant, the character of such title depending upon the issuance of the patent, upon the nature of the grant and the proceedings of the former government in relation thereto; whether the grants were of a specific tract separated from other land by defined boundaries, or whether the grants were of a certain quantity of land lying in a large tract; and, in the latter case, whether juridical possession had been given to the grantee. *Stark v. confirmation, and of the survey and of its conformity with the confirmation, and the relinquishment to the patentee of all the interest of the United States in the land.¹

(2) How Vacated; Collateral Attack.—It can only be vacated and set aside by direct proceedings instituted by the United States, or by parties acting in its name and by its authority.² If the authority to issue the patent depends upon the existence of particular facts in reference to the condition or location of the property, or the performance of certain antecedent acts, and officers have been appointed for the ascertainment of these matters in advance, who have passed upon them and given their judgment, then the patent, though the judgment of the officers be in fact erroneous, cannot be attacked collaterally by parties showing title subsequently from the same source, much less by those who show no color of title in themselves.³ It cannot be attacked collaterally, even for fraud, whether charged to have existed in the procurement of the original grant or in the proof of its execution, or in

By it the government declares that the claim asserted was valid under the laws of Mexico; that it was entitled to recognition and protection by the stipulations of the treaty, and might have been located under the former government, and it is correctly located now, so as to embrace the premises as they are surveyed and described. As against the government this record, so long as it remains unvacated, is conclusive. And it is equally conclusive against parties claiming under the government by title subsequent. *Beard v. In Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 493, the court by Field, J., said: "It is in this effect of the patent, as a record of the government, that its security and protection chiefly lie. If parties asserting interests in lands, acquired since the acquisition of the country, could deny and controvert this record, and compel the patentee in every suit for his land, to establish the validity of his claim, his right to its confirmation and the correctness of the action of the tribunals and officers of the United States in the location of the same, the patent would fail to be as it was intended it should be—an instrument of quiet and security to the possessor. The patentee would find his title recognized in one suit and rejected in another; and if his title were maintained, he would find his land located in many different places as the varying prejudices, interests, or notions of justice of witnesses and jurymen might suggest. Every fact upon which the decree and patent rests would be open to contestation. No construction which will lead to such results can be given to the act of March 3, 1857."

the making of the survey.¹ If, however, the patent be void on its face, or was issued without authority, or was prohibited by statute, or the government had no title, it may be impeached collaterally in an action at law.² The patent is prima facie valid, and the burden is upon the party attacking it to show that under no circumstances was its issuance authorized.³ Such collateral attack can only be made by one in privity with the common source of title,⁴ or by one lawfully in possession of the lands under the pre-emption laws of the United States sustaining such privity with the government.⁵

7. Pueblo Lands—a. RIGHTS OF PUEBLO.—By the laws of Spain, which laws were continued in force by Mexico when that country came into possession of California, pueblos were entitled, for their benefit, and the benefit of their inhabitants, to the use of the lands constituting the sites of such pueblos, and of adjoining lands within certain prescribed limits.⁶ No formal grants were made to the pueblos, but their rights or title to the land vested ipso facto on the formation or official regulation of the town.⁷

b. ASSIGNMENT TO PUEBLO.—These laws and ordinances provided for the assignment to the pueblos, when once established and officially recognized, for their use and the use of their inhabitants, of such lands, to the extent of four square leagues.⁸ The lands to which the pueblos thus became entitled were required to be measured off in a square or prolonged form, according to the nature of the country.⁹ Until the lands were definitively assigned and measured off the title of the pueblo was to them imperfect.¹⁰ Such measurement and segregation could be made by the government only, and could not be made by the pueblo so as to bind the government.¹ If the Mexican government never acted in the matter, the right and power to locate the lands passed to the United States, and could be exercised by them in such manner as they might deem expedient.²

c. TITLE OF PUEBLO.—The pueblos held the pueblo lands in trust, their title being merely a right to alienate portions thereof to their inhabitants for building or cultivation, and to use the remainder for commons, for pasture lands, as a source of revenue or for other public purposes.³

d. DISPOSITION BY PUEBLO.—(1) Before the Conquest.—The power of the pueblos to dispose of the pueblo lands was limited to the granting of them for the purposes named. This granting power was exercised by the alcaldes of the pueblos.⁴ The records kept by the alcaldes of the grants made by them are original evidence of such grants.⁵ Justices of the peace had no power to make grants of pueblo lands;⁶ nor had prefects.⁷ The pueblo lands, until disposed of by the pueblo to private parties, were subject to the control and disposition of the government, and could be granted to individuals by the governor of the department.⁸ A grant once made by an alcalde could not be revoked by the latter at his mere will.⁹ The conditions inserted in the grants made by alcaldes are conditions subsequent, and a failure of the grantee to comply with them did not work a forfeiture of the grant.¹⁰ whose official custody the books might be at the time was authorized and requested to give him another like copy of the original proceedings. (2) After the Conquest.—The conquest of California by the American forces July 7, 1846, terminated the authority of the Mexican department officials over public lands.¹ It did not suspend the power or authority of the officers of the pueblos to make grants of such lands.² The fact that the officers of a pueblo after the conquest were Americans, or held their offices under American authority, did not change the powers and obligations, which by the existing laws of the country, belonged to such municipal officers.³ The power to grant pueblo lands was never vested in the military governors of California.⁴ The conquest did not affect the validity of grants of the pueblo lands previously made.⁵ The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo did not divest the pueblos of any rights of property nor alter the character of their interests in the pueblo lands.⁶ The estates of the pueblos in their lands at the time of the treaty were not indefeasible, but simply a limited right of disposition and use, subject in all particulars to the control of the government of the country, and before such estates could become absolute and indefeasible, some action was required on the part of the United States.⁷

the exercise of the granting power. No such condition is imposed by the regulations of 1789, nor by any other to which our attention has been called. The grant was intended to be a gift and not a sale made for the purpose of encouraging new settlements. The money paid by the grantee was a tax or fee and not a price for the lot. The power was long exercised, so far as we are advised, before the tax was imposed, and when it was imposed we do not understand that it was intended to restrict in any sense the granting power as it had previously existed, but merely to authorize the Ayuntamientos to make a charge for the grant in the nature of a fee or tax, for the purpose of municipal revenue, not differing in any respect from other municipal fees or taxes. *Donner v. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo does not purport to divest the pueblo, existing at the site of the city of San Francisco, of any rights of property or to alter the character of the interests it may have held in any lands under the former government. It provides for the protection of the rights of the inhabitants of the ceded country to their property, and there is nothing in any of its clauses inducing the inference that any distinction was to be made with reference to property claimed by towns under the Mexican Government. The subsequent legislation of Congress has treated the claims of towns as entitled to protection the same as the claims of individuals, and has authorized their presentation to the board of commissioners for confirmation. *Townsend v. (3) Act of 1851.—The act of Congress of March 3, 1851, did not change the nature of estates in land held by pueblos.¹ The act did not operate as a grant of lands to the pueblos, but merely made proof of the existence of a pueblo on July 7, 1846, prima facie evidence that a grant had therefore been made to it.² It was necessary for pueblos to present their claims for confirmation under the act.³ The act requires claims of individuals to pueblo lands based upon grants from the pueblo to be presented for confirmation under the act by the authorities of the pueblo.⁴ A confirmation by the commissioners of a claim presented by a pueblo took effect upon the title of the pueblo as if it existed upon the acquisition of the country by the United States, and validated it as of such date.⁵ A patent issued in pursuance of a confirmation by the commissioners of the claim of a pueblo is not an original grant, but is a mere acknowledgment that the pueblo had little from the Mexican government, and a release of all claim on the part of the United States to the land.⁶ The act did not require a claim to pueblo lands under a grant from the governor to be presented in the name of the pueblo. Such a claim was required to be presented by the grantee.⁷ Such claimants were not benefited by confirmation of the pueblo claim, and the confirmation of the pueblos' title did not inure to the benefit of such grantees.⁸

VI. GRANTS IN ALABAMA.—The king of Spain, in virtue of the bulls of Pope Alexander VI, became the proprietor of the Spanish possessions in America, and could grant the shore of navigable waters in his American colonies. And the power possessed by the king, in this particular, might be exercised by his viceroys and other subordinates within their respective jurisdictions.⁹

corporate authorities should present under one general claim not only the interest of the city, town or village, which they represent, but also the separate interest of individuals holding under conveyances from them. The confirmation of the common title to these authorities would, of course, inure to the benefit of parties holding under them. Lynch v. Bernal, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 321.

While a grant is void unless the grantor has the power to make it, it is not void because the grantee does not prove or produce it; the law supplies this proof by legal presumption, arising from the full, legal and complete execution of the official grant, under all the solemnities known or proved to exist, or to be required by the law of the country where it is made and the land is situated.¹ When a grant of lands is made by a public and responsible officer of a foreign government, the presumption is in favor of his authority and of the validity of the grant.²

A Spanish grant made after the treaty of St. Ildefonso in 1800, whereby the Louisiana Territory was ceded to France by Spain, conveyed no title to lands within the limits of the present State

Spain founded its right, bestowed all the regions which had been or should be discovered, on Ferdinand and Isabella and their successors. From them all grants of land flowed. Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 594. The viceroys who represented the person of their sovereign, possessed his regal prerogatives within the precincts of their own government, in their utmost extent. Like him, they exercised supreme authority in every department of the government, military, civil, and criminal. And, as their dominions were too extensive for their personal supervision, they, in turn, were represented by various orders of magistrates—some appointed by the king, others by the viceroys—all of whom were amenable to the jurisdiction of the latter; unless they were required to execute their duties, without the limits of either of the viceroyalties. (Robinson's Am. 350, 351, 352; 2 vol. Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella 172, 173, 174, 486, 493, 494, 495;) Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 594; Antones v. Eslava, 9 Port. 2. Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 596. So it will be presumed that the intendant of the province of West Florida, during the time the Spanish Government was the proprietor of the country, possessed the power necessary to have authorized an inquiry and decree for a sale of parsonage and church lots, on the ground that he was a public officer of his government, and the act was seemingly regular. A certificate of confirmation of an inchoate title to lands claimed under the government of Spain, issued by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress, to investigate such claims, is prima facie valid, and cannot be assailed by one having no right or interest in the land. Richardson v. Hobart, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 505; 18 Am. Dec. 70.

Such certificate will override a title founded on possession alone, not existing long enough to bar an entry under the Statute of Limitations. Hallett v. Eslava, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 115.

The power given to the registers and receivers by the different acts of Congress, to determine between conflicting and interfering claims, and to direct the manner of locating and surveying them applies only to confirmation of imperfect grants made by the former proprietors of the country. These officers had no power to locate and direct the survey of a disputed line, where one of the parties claims by virtue of a complete and unconditional grant. Mayor, etc., of Mobile, v. Farmer, 6 Ala. 740; affirmed in 9 How. (U. S.) 469. Where Congress confirms the title to the same land to two individuals, the confirmation is merely a disavowal by the United States in favor of both parties. Each, therefore, must rely upon the strength of his own title. Eslava v. Farmer, 7 of Alabama.¹ But while the Spanish authorities could not make a valid title of land, yet the grant was capable of confirmation by Congress.² The term "new grant" in the act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824, embraced grants made by the local authorities of Spain after the acquisition of Louisiana by the United States, and before the cession of Florida, and such claims were capable of confirmation.³ An inchoate grant by Spain previous to the treaty of St. Ildefonso only imposes upon the United States a political obligation to validate it so far as it is binding in conscience; but until it is confirmed, it confers upon the grantee no right which an American court will recognize. A confirmation by Spain subsequent to the treaty, by which it yields up its right to the soil, is wholly inoperative to affect the title of others acquired after the original grant.⁴ Concessions of lands now within the State of Alabama, confirmed in 1713 by the then governor of Louisiana

If the United States has no interest in the premises, in consequence of a previous disposition, or other cause, it has no power to either grant or confirm a title. Doe v. Bebee, 8 Ala. 914; affirmed in 13 How. (U. S.) 25. See also Doe v. Greitt, 8 Ala. 930.

It is the settled doctrine of the judicial department of the government that the treaty of 1819 with Spain, ceded to the United States no territory west of the river Perdido, as it had already been acquired under the Louisiana treaty of 1803 with France; and therefore all grants of land within such territory made by Spain after the latter date, are void. Pollard v. Files, 2 How. (U. S.) 602. In this case Catron, J., said: "It was thus held in Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 254, and again in Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 515, and it is not now open to controversy in this court." But in the interval between the Louisiana purchase and the time, some nine years later, when the United States took possession of the country west of the Perdido, the Spanish Government had the right to grant permits to settle and improve by cultivation, or to authorize the erection of establishments for mechanical purposes; and these incipient concessions were not disregarded by Congress, but are recognized in the acts of 1804, 1812 and 1819, and as claims are within the act of 1824; yet this last act gave a title to the owners of old water lots, in Mobile, only where an improvement was made on the east side of Water street, and made by the proprietor of the lot on the west side of that street. See Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 588, and affirmed in 16 (U. S.) 247. Nor could such person claim as riparian proprietor or where his lot had a definite limit on the east. Pollard v. Files, 2 How. (U. 4. Kennedy v. Jones, 11 Ala. 79. Such incomplete claim to land under Spanish authority may be admitted as evidence for the purpose of showing that Spain had asserted a title to the premises in controversy, or for the purpose of laying a predicate from which it may be presumed that the defendant and those under whom he claims has been in possession for twenty years, so as to give him a title by prescription; although the evidence of title had only been recorded as directed by the acts of Congress of 1805, 1806, 1807, 1812. Doe v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1038. And it is intimated in Haller v. Eslava, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 122, that evidences of an incomplete claim under Spanish authority should be received for the purpose indicated.

The legislative acts of 1803, 1816 and 1818, in respect to the keeping and translating of the Spanish records, make duly authenticated copies of such records evidence, and dispense may constitute a complete grant to the donee, and vest in him a perfect title, and a title of this sort will especially be sustained, despite objections to its want of certainty, where Congress has confirmed the concession, and possession has been maintained for a century and a half.¹ Confirmation, by Congress, of titles to lands claimed under the crown of Spain, whether regarded as a substantive grant of the land or as a mere relinquishment of the title of the United States, does not affect the possession.² As a general rule the party claiming a benefit from a foreign law must prove its existence; but when the laws of one State or nation are operative in another, this rule does not apply. The courts of this country will therefore judicially notice the laws of Spain, which regulated the conveyance of real property in Mobile and the country adjacent, when the territory was subject to the dominion of that nation; and under this influence are bound to know with the production of the originals. Farmer v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1039.

1. Trenier v. Stewart, 101 U. S. 807. In this case the court, by Clifford, J., says: "Most of these views are much strengthened by historical researches of the court below, as exhibited in the opinion of the State court given in support of the judgment brought here by the present writ of error," Trenier v. Stewart, 55 Ala. 458.

Where a party obtained in 1803 from the military commandant at Mobile a permit to take possession of a lot of ground near that place, and made a contract with another person that the latter should improve it, so as to lay the foundation of a perfect title, on obtaining which they were to divide the lot equally, the latter, upon procuring a confirmation of his title under the acts of the commissioners appointed pursuant to an act of Congress, became a trustee for the former to the extent of one-half the lot; and the assignee of the latter took the title charged with such trust, of which he had knowledge. Hallett v. Collins, 10 How. (U. S.) 182.

To the same point, see Chastang v. Armstrong, 20 Ala. 609.

2. Mim v. Higgins, 1 Ala. 676. If the possession was acquired during the dominion of the Spanish crown, to sustain the defense of the Statute of Limitations, the time will be computed from the day possession accrued, and not from the act of Congress of 1812 abrogating the Spanish laws, and extending the laws of the Mississippi Territory over the country, nor from the day of the actual occupation of the territory of the United States. Innerness v. Mim, 1 Ala. 660; Tillotson v. Kennedy, 5 Ala. 407.

When a claimant of lands situated within the territory of Louisiana has appeared before the commissioner appointed under the authority of the act of Congress of April 12, 1812, and presented his petition claiming title by grant from the Spanish Government, and the commissioner reports favorably to his claim, which is afterwards confirmed by the act of Congress of May 8, 1822, the title of the claimant is founded upon the report of the commissioner and the act of Congress confirmatory thereof, and not upon any supposed Spanish grant. Chastang v. Dill, 19 Ala. 430. See also Menard v. Massey, 8 How. (U. S.) 293; Bissell v. Penrose, 8 How. (U. S.) 317. And see also Hall v. Root, 19 Ala. 396, to the point that a party may successfully assert the title against the United States Government, if the grant has not been rendered inoperative as an instrument of evidence by his failure to exhibit it for registration as required by the act of Congress. And see Baker v. Chasting, 18 Ala. 417; as to effect of confirmations, see Mim v. Higgins, 39 Ala. 1.

But a concession of lands amounting to no more than an order to survey made by the Spanish authorities at Mobile in the year 1806, cannot be given in evidence to support an ejectment in the courts of the United States where the same has not been recorded, or passed upon by the board of commissioners or register of the land office established by the acts of Congress relating to land titles in that what documentary evidence of title were records of the province, so as to allow copies to be admitted in evidence.¹

VII. GRANTS IN FLORIDA—1. Source and Character.—There were three classes of Spanish land grants in Florida: Absolute grants in consideration of services already performed, which were made by the governors in special cases, either by virtue of special power recognized by the laws of the Indies, or by authority given in particular decrees coming directly or indirectly from the sovereign; grants in consideration of services to be performed, and deemed especially important for the improvement of the province, and gratuitous grants in moderate quantities for purposes of actual occupation and cultivation. By far the greatest number were of the latter class, to which were applicable the general system of Spanish land law in America.² Spanish land grants or concessions in Florida appear to have been of two kinds—those granting an incipient title, and those giving a complete title. The greater number appear to have been of the first description. Many of them contained conditions on the performance of which the right to demand a complete title depended.³

2. Ratification by Treaty and Statute.—The treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain whereby cession was made of the Floridas to this country, ratifies grants made prior to that time by the Spanish Government; but this ratification applies only to grants of lands in Florida, and not to those of Louisiana lands; and lands lying in the disputed territory between the two countries which the United States regards as within the true boundary of Louisiana and alleged to have been granted by the Spanish authorities in 1806, fall within the provision of the act of Congress declaring void all grants of land made after the treaty of 1803 with France, whereby Louisiana was ceded to the United States.⁴

Who Entitled to Execute Grants.—The power to grant lands was, in October, 1798, re-conferred upon the intendant (from whom it had been withdrawn), so far as respected Louisiana and West Florida, but this order did not extend to East Florida, where it remained with the governor. *Doe v. This disputed territory comprises the region lying between the Perdido and Mississippi Rivers. See Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 364, except the island of New Orleans; nor was the view taken concerning Spanish grants of lands situated therein affected by the act of Congress of 1844, which extended thereto the act of 1824, since the latter act was regarded as merely giving a means of completing inchoate and imperfect grants. *U. But by the act of June 22, 1860, the grants made by the Spanish Government in the disputed territory, while that government was in possession of such territory, and claimed sovereignty over it, were confirmed; and such a grant made during that period by the Spanish intendant of West Florida, although rejected and declared void under previous conditions of the laws, was held to be confirmed and validated by the act of 1860.¹ Under the Florida treaty no grants of land made after the date thereof were valid; nor could a survey be valid on lands other than those authorized by the grant;² yet the power to survey in conformity to the concessions existed up to the change of flags;³ and where a grant made before the treaty was for the land mentioned in the petition, or for any other lands that were vacant, three surveys were held valid where they were made of lands within the quantity granted, though not at the place specially mentioned in the grant, but at other places.⁴ Under the same treaty, the owners of conditional grants, who have been prevented from fulfilling all the conditions of their grants, have time extended to them, running from the ratification of the treaty, to complete such conditions; but the treaty declares that if the conditions are not complied with within the terms limited in the grant, the grants shall be null and void; and this restriction applies to a grant for land in Florida by the Spanish governor, on condition that the grantee build a mill within a period fixed by the grant, where the grantee has not performed the condition, or shown sufficient reason for its non-performance.⁵

A conditional concession was held to be a grant of land, and not a mere privilege of cutting timber, but not held good as to excess in surveys over land granted in the concession. U. S. v. Richard, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 474.

A survey was confirmed, though not strictly conforming to the place designated in the grant, on the ground of the greater latitude allowed in surveys in the province of Florida, and the fact that the surveyor-general had returned that the survey was made according to the grant, and the failure of the United States to prove the contrary, in U. S. v. Law, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 167. The exclusion of water covered and marsh land from the quantity granted, on the basis of an alleged custom in the government of East Florida was not sustained, especially as a new location was made of equivalent land so as to vary from the grant, in U. 3. Confirmation.—The Supreme Court of the United States, and the courts of Florida, have uniformly held, in construing the 8th article of the treaty of February 22, 1819, between the United States and Spain, so far as it is intended to protect or provide for the confirmation of private land grants made by the Spanish authorities in Florida previous to January 24, 1818, that the 8th article is to be considered as operating to confirm such grants in presenti, and the language of the Spanish side or Spanish copy of the treaty is substantially adopted as the true rule, reading, viz: That such grants "shall stand or remain ratified and confirmed," etc.¹ Under the treaty of 1819 it was not contemplated that the Government of the United States should convey titles upon purchases made of Spain before January 24, 1818, but only that the United States, after a change of dominion, should respect such purchases as were made of the Spanish Government before that time, and ratify and confirm the right which had, before that time, been acquired of the Spanish Government.² The report and abstract of decision of the Board of Land Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress, approved May 8, 1822, in regard to claims and titles to lands in Florida, whether under grants from the Spanish Government or by purchase from said government, are not final, and cannot have the force of res adjudicata, nor deprive the claimants of any right which they may have had previous to said report and abstract or decision. The object for which said commissioners were appointed was to enable the government to ascertain the Spanish grants and sales, and their location, so that they might be separated from the public domain, and not sold as public lands. For this purpose they "constituted a board of inquiry, and not a court exercising judicial power and deciding finally on titles."³ After the acquisition of Florida by the United States, in virtue of the treaty of 1819, various acts of Congress were passed for the adjustment of private claims to lands within the ceded territory; but the tri-last of these cases the court refused to attach a grant in absolute property with a promise of title in form, a condition implied from the consideration being in part the erection of a saw-mill.

In adjusting land titles, derived from the Spanish Government in Florida prior to the date fixed by the treaty of 1819, the acts of Congress confirming grants are not construed as grants de novo. MaGee v. Doe, 9 Fla. 397, citing Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How.

The eighth article of the treaty of 1819, between the United States and Spain, by which the Floridas were acquired, must be construed to stipulate expressly for the security to private property which the laws and usages of nations would, without express stipulation, have conferred. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 745.

bunals appointed to decide on them were not authorized to settle any which exceeded a league square; and on claims exceeding that quantity, such tribunals were directed to report especially their opinion for the future action of Congress.¹

Where a concession of land in 1817 by the Spanish authorities of West Florida was made "subject to the conditions prescribed in the regulations of 17th of July, 1799," and the decree of concession concluded with an order "that the land be surveyed and marked by the surveyor, to be submitted to the superior authority—costs to be taxed;" and no further steps appeared to have

1. The lands embraced in the larger claims were defined by surveys and plats returned; and they were reserved from sale, and remained unsettled until some resolution should be adopted for a final adjudication on their final validity, which was done by the law of the 23d May, 1828, U. S. v. Arrendondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 707, setting forth such law in which incorporation was made by reference to the law of 1824, passed to enable claimants to lands within the limits of Missouri and Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims to lands prior to the consummation of the cession of the territory acquired by the United States by the Louisiana treaty. The case sustains the validity of a claim for land in Florida, embraced by the treaty, not finally settled, containing the requisite quantity of land, not reported on as antedated or forged, nor annulled by the treaty, and presented to and acted on by the commissioners according to law.

Rejection of Claims by Commissioners Not Final.—A rejection of a claim to two thousand acres of land in Florida by a board of commissioners to ascertain claims and titles to lands in East Florida, was not a final action on a claim in the sense in which these words are used in the act of May 26, 1830; but it was still necessary that Congress should pass upon the matter. U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 94, et seq. See also U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 446, et seq., discussing jurisdiction of such tribunals, etc., MaGee v. Doe, 9 Fla. 395.

Lands Within the Indian Territory.—A grant of land in Florida within the Indian boundary by the governor, acting under the crown of Spain, before the cession of Florida to the United States, which was confirmed to the grantee by the decree of the judge of the eastern district of Florida, has been sustained on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as within the power of the governor, although the lands had not by any official act been decreed to form a part of the royal domain. U. S. v. Fernandez, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 304.

"This subject," says the court, by Baldwin, J., "has been so fully and ably considered in M'Intosh v. Johnson, that we have only to refer to the language of the court to show that every European government claimed and exercised the right of granting lands, while in the occupation of the Indians." Johnson v. M'Intosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 579." See the opinion, U. S. v. Fernandez, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 304.

Concerning Indian title to Spanish fort, see Mitchel v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 80, et seq. This case arose upon the mandate of the United States Supreme Court in Mitchel v. U. S., 9 Pet. (U. S.) 711, in reference to which application was made of the doctrines declared in Sibbald v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 493, and The Santa Maria, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 431.

Lands Not Surveyed or Improved, etc.

—The United States as successor to Spain is not bound to confirm the title claimed under a grant from the Spanish authorities, to land at New River, in Florida, where no survey was made of the land, and nothing done for the purpose of using or improving the land claimed to have been granted. U. S. v. Desespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 333; applying the rule recited in U. S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 461, and recognized as authority in U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 351.

Nor where the claimant abandons his first location can he rest his rights upon a new and independent concession from an inferior tribunal, which could only be intended to expedite the formal title. U. S. v. Desespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 333.

been taken to comply with the conditions, or to complete the grant, anterior to the cession of the Floridas by Spain to the United States, such concession is not evidence of title.¹

The ganancial rights of husband and wife, as to property acquired during coverture, under the Spanish law in force in Florida at the exchange of flags, have been secured and will be acknowledged.²

VIII. GRANTS IN LOUISIANA—1. Titles Originating During Spanish Sovereignty.—The treaty of Paris with France ceding Louisiana to the United States, protected the property of the people of the province, both as to complete and inchoate titles only so far as to cover rights founded in justice and good faith, and based upon competent authority; and, if it could be supposed to refer to titles or claims derived from Spain, it could embrace such only as had their origin while Spain was the rightful sovereign over the territory.³ Nor did the treaty change

Certificate as Evidence of Grant.—Where a claim was made for a square of four miles of land, under a grant from a Spanish governor of East Florida, the certificate of the copy of the grant, given by the secretary of the government and province, and stating each copy to be "faithfully drawn from the original" in the secretary's office under his charge, was sufficient evidence in support of the grant. U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 229, stating that such proof had been ruled to be sufficient in U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 346, and U. S. v. Rodman, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 137. See also U. S. v. Acosta, 1 How. (U. S.) 26. But compare U. S. v. Breward, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 147.

Recitals in Grant.—A grant of ten thousand two hundred and fifty acres of land, by the Spanish governor of Florida, which recited, among other things, that it was made under a royal order of the king of Spain, of 29th March, 1815, which order was not in conformity with the grant, but was made in the exercise of other powers to grant lands which had been vested in the governor, was not made invalid by the recital of the royal order as authority for the grant. U. S. v. Delespine, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 231, relying upon U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 51, and upon the recital of an additional consideration in the way of the surrender of another grant previously made for services.

2. MaGee v. Doe, 9 Fla. 398. In this case the court by Forward, J., said: "The verdict of the jury found the fact to be that Constance Alba, one of the lessors of the plaintiff, was the wife of Peter Alba, Jr., at the time of his purchase of these lots of land of the Spanish Government, and that as the same were acquired during their marriage, the lots being an onerous increase or gain-come under the Spanish laws enforced at that time in the province of West Florida, into partition, and therefore that she is the legal owner of one undivided half of said lots."

The courts of Florida have frequently adjudicated upon these rights under the Spanish law. MaGee v. Doe, 9 Fla. 398; citing White's New Recopilation 61.

A claimant of a ganancial right under the laws existing in the province of Florida, while it was a part of the Spanish dominion, takes subject to the debts contracted during the marriage, which are to be paid out of the common property, and he cannot take such property and leave the debts unpaid. To recover an interest of this kind there should be a representative of the estate. McHardy v. McHardy, 7 Fla. 308; citing 1 White's New Recop. 63, 66.

3. U. S. v. Reynes, 9 How. (U. S.) 151, holding that a Spanish grant dependent on a decree of September 1, 1803, is inoperative within the prov-the character of inchoate Spanish titles; but it imposed upon the Government of the United States only an obligation to perfect such titles;¹ nor under the acts of Congress of May 26, since or territory of Louisiana, as made after 1800, from which date Spain's possession of parts of Louisiana was treated as wrongful by the United States. See also Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 515; 21 Myers' Fed. Dec. 26.

The treaty of St. Ildefonso, by which Spain ceded Louisiana to France, became operative to transfer the sovereignty on the 1st of October, 1780, which was the day of its date. Davis v. Police Jury of Concordia, 9 How. (U. S.) 288.

French Grants.—A grant of land in Louisiana, issued by the representatives of the king of France in 1765, was void (see also as to grant in 1764, U. S. v. Ducros, 15 How. (U. S.) 41) as the province of Louisiana had been ceded by the king of France to the king of Spain in 1762; and the title to the land described in such a void grant was vested in the king of Spain, and remained in him until the treaty of St. Ildefonso, when it passed to France, and by the treaty of Paris became vested in a claimant who did not comply with the conditions of confirmation implied by the act of Congress. U. S. v. D'Auterive, 10 How. (U. S.) 622, et seq.

Furthermore not only are French grants of land in Louisiana made after the treaty of Fontainebleau, by which Louisiana was ceded to Spain, void unless confirmed by the Spanish authorities, before the cession to the United States; but even if there has been continued possession under the grants so as to lay the foundation for presuming a confirmation by Spain, this would indicate the existence of an absolute title and not of an inchoate or imperfect one; and therefore the cases are not included under the acts of Congress of 1824 and 1844 which look only to inchoate and equitable titles; so that the district court of the United States has no jurisdiction in such cases. U. S. v. Pillerin, 13 How. (U. S.) 10.

1. Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. (U. S.) 375, holding further that the Federal Government being unable to confirm the title to two adverse claimants, must to some extent determine between the conflicting titles. An imperfect title to land in Louisiana derived from Spain before the cession, without confirmation by act of Congress, cannot be supported against a party claiming under a grant from the United States. U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 787.

In case of incomplete titles to lands in Louisiana the treaty conferred the fee on the United States, with the equity attached in the claimant, which equity was clothed with the fee by the confirming act. McDonogh v. Millandon, 3 How. (U. S.) 706; Morrison v. Whetstone, 5 La. Ann. 636. No time was fixed by the treaty within which conditions appertaining to imperfect grants of land might be performed; but this was left to the justice and discretion of our government; and when in a due exercise of that discretion the acts of Congress of 1804 and 1824 were passed, and authority was conferred on the courts to determine questions of title between the Government and individuals, the limits of the jurisdiction were prescribed by the provision that no act done by the Spanish authorities, or by an individual claimant after the 3d day of March, 1804, should have any effect on the title by its condition at that date. Glenn v. U. S. 13 How. (U. S.) 260. See, also, to like general effect, DeVilemont v. U. S., 13 How. (U. S.) 266; Murdock v. Gurley, 5 Rob. (La.) 457. But see Lobdell v. Clark, 4 La. Ann. 100.

The power of the commandants of posts in the Spanish colonies to make inchoate titles to lands within their jurisdiction, has been repeatedly acknowledged by the Supreme Court of the United States; but the power of completely severing the subject of the grant from the public domain was retained by the central jurisdiction and belonged to the civil and military governors; so that concessions of lands, made in the country known as the neutral territory by the commandant of the Spanish post, which were not ratified by the civil and military governors, must be treated as imperfect, and dependent upon the sanction of the United States. U. S. v. Davenport, 15 How. (U. S.) 7.

Nor will a grant of land be sustained where it is based on a receipt

1824,¹ and June 17, 1844,² have courts of the United States power to decide upon complete or perfect titles to land.³

2. Full Grant Distinguished from Contract.—A complete Spanish grant uniformly gave to the grantee, in plain, direct, and unequivocal language the whole ownership to the land granted, for himself and his successors, with power to sell the same at his will,⁴ and materially differed from a mere contract that a large district should be designated on lands belonging to the public domain, whereon a party might exercise certain exclusive privileges.⁵

3. Need of Actual Survey or Fixed Boundaries.—To sustain a claim under a Spanish grant of Louisiana lands it is requisite among other things that the land should be identified by an actual survey with metes and bounds, or the description in the grant must be such that judgment can be rendered with precision by such metes and bounds, natural or otherwise, without any element of given for the purchase price of lands by an intendant, who had not at the time the power to grant any part of the Spanish king's domain; where, from non-compliance with the conditions as to making mounds or levees and ditching, the presumption is that there was a surrender of the purchase and refunding of the price; where the claim is presumptively barred by the lapse of time; and where a decree concerning the lands in the court below, even on the assumption of the validity of the claim, was in part erroneous. U. S. v. Moore, 12 How. (U. S.) 217.

5. U. S. v. Mayor, etc., of Philadelphia, etc., 11 How. (U. S.) 652. In this case a territory of twelve leagues' square was "destined and appropriated" by the Spanish governor in order that the party to whom they were designated "might settle the land" and establish in Louisiana his colony of five hundred wheat-growing families; and the interest of the colonizer was intended to be in the monopoly of manufacturing flour and exporting it to Havana and other places, under the jurisdiction of the Spanish crown; with which view he obtained separate grants for the bayous or mill-seats, and was bound to erect at least one mill within two years from the date of the grant. See pp. 649-651. This contract was regarded as identical in character and governed by the same principles, with those considered in U. S. v. King, first reported in 3 How. (U. S.) 773, but as finally decided in 1849, reported in 7 How. (U. S.) 833.

Purpose of Grant.—Grants for the purpose of grazing cattle in Louisiana in the country formerly held by Spain, lying to the east of the Sabine River, are more than mere licenses to use the lands. U. S. v. Davenport, 15 How. (U. S.) 7, relying upon confirmation of grant in U. S. v. Huertas, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 475, which does not appear to touch this point.

Compliance with Regulations or Conditions.—Among the objections to the validity of concessions made by the lieutenant governor of Upper Louisiana which have not been sustained, are those involving a failure to comply with regulations of the governor-general of Louisiana, concerning the number of tame cattle to be possessed by the applicant and the quantity of land to be granted to an individual. Choteau v. U. S., 9 Pet. (U. S.) 153.

A claim buried for half a century is not good against the United States where it is based on an order of the Spanish governor to establish a petitioner on land in Louisiana, and during the ten years that the province remained in the hands of Spain the party to whom this gratuitous concession was made neither had a survey nor took possession, nor did any other discretion or uncertainty,¹ and such a grant will not avail against the United States, where the concession contains no lines or boundaries by which the specific tract of land may be definitely determined.²

4. Instrument of Title.—It has been settled by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and in cases, too, where the instrument upon which a claim to land was founded contained clear words of grant, that if the description was vague and indefinite, and there was no official survey to give it a certain location, it could create no right of private property in any particular parcel of land, which could be maintained in a court of justice.³ A certificate of survey brought forward to sustain a grant which was officially recognized by the Spanish authorities of Louisiana will be regarded as prima facie genuine; but this presumption will not prevent its impeachment when it is shown to be antedated or fraudulent.⁴

5. Indian Titles.—In the Spanish colonies, land was not assigned to the Indians by actual survey; they were permitted to occupy a specified spot, and to have one league around it. But by this was meant one league square, and not one league around their village in every direction.⁵ On the discovery of the American continent, the principle was acknowledged by all European nations that discovery, followed by actual possession, gave title to the soil to the government by whose subjects or authority it was act showing an intention of fulfilling the known condition by which such concessions could be converted from an inchoate into a complete title, although there were regulations which required parties so situated to have their titles made out. U. S. v. Simon, 12 How. (U. S.) 434, quoting as to object and effect of such concessions, U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How. (U. S.) 96.

2. Dauterive v. U. S., 101 U. S. 706. An order of survey with actual settlement forms a better title than an older order without it. Baker v. Thomas, 4 La. 417.

This doctrine has been applied to a claim for a large tract of land in Western Louisiana, commonly known as Maison Rouge claim.

3. U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 786.

A paper offered as a grant from the Spanish authorities for some land in Louisiana will be rejected as such, where it is nothing more than the preamble usually inserted in Spanish grants, especially where there is no evidence of the taking of possession or the exercise of acts of ownership during a period of nearly seventy years. U. S. v. Le Blanc, 12 How. (U. S.) 436.

So the presentation of a petition to a Spanish intendant, praying for a grant, and referred to the surveyor-general to report thereon, but on which no further action had been had at the transfer of the territory to the United States, the petitioner never having had actual possession, can confer no title. Lafayette v. Blanc, 3 La. Ann. 59; affirmed in 11 How. (U. S.) 104.

4. U. S. v. King, 3 How. (U. S.) 785. As to presumption that marks of cancellation were made by cutting the paper in gashes at the time the paper, which was a receipt for the purchase money of lands sold in Louisiana, by the intendant thereof, was presented at the royal treasury in Spain. made, not only against other European Governments but the natives themselves. While respecting the rights of the natives as occupants, they all asserted the ultimate title to be in themselves.¹ Indian tribes in Louisiana with lands allotted by the laws of Spain were never invested with absolute ownership. They could not dispose of the lands unless expressly authorized by the government. If all died or removed permanently, the lands reverted to the crown, not by forfeiture but the implied right of reversion; or, if the population of the Indian villages were greatly reduced, the remnants of several villages were united into one, and they held as much of the land originally set apart as they needed.²

IX. GRANTS IN MISSISSIPPI.—The law of Spain continued in force in Mississippi until after the territorial government was actually organized, under the act of Congress of April 7, 1798; this government was not actually organized until the beginning of the year 1799.³ Spain never had a right of soil in this State above the thirty-first degree of north latitude; and all grants and dispositions of land made by Spain above that line were in their inception void for want of title in that government.⁴ Spanish grants, made after the treaty of peace of 1782, between the United

British and Spanish Grants North of the 31st Parallel of North Latitude.—The boundary line between Georgia and West Florida was the 31st parallel of north latitude. But if the district between that line and a line drawn east from the mouth of the Yazoo River ever constituted a part of West Florida, while the latter was a British province, still a grant of land in that district made by the British governor of West Florida in 1772 would be void, because the proclamation of George III, made in 1763, creating the province of West Florida as a colonial government, a grant of land in that district by the governor was prohibited until the Indian title was extinguished, which did not take place till 1777. And a grant of land in that district by the Spanish Government, would also be void, because the title of Spain never extended north of the 31st parallel.

Montgomery v. Ives, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 172.

A grant of land lying in the present State of Mississippi will not be sustained where the original grant is alleged to have been issued by the Spanish governor of Louisiana in 1781, but the only evidence of it was a copy taken from a notary's book, and the governor at that time was merely the military commandant of the region in question; and this conclusion is reached, apart from questions concerning the jurisdiction to pass upon the claim and the failure to record it under the requirements of acts of Congress. U. S. v. Power, 11 How. (U. S.) 576.

4. Doe v. Beaumont, 6 How. (Miss.) 249.

The treaty of 1795, by which the line between the United States and the provinces of East and West Florida was established or recognized at the thirty-first degree of latitude, was a settlement of territorial limits according to pre-existing rights. Spain did not cede any territory above the boundary then acknowledged, but admitted that the territory above that parallel had previously constituted a part of the territory of the United States. As a consequence of this adjustment, it followed that the possession by Spain of territory to which she had no right was wrongful, and grants or titles derived

States and Great Britain, within the territory east of the river Mississippi and north of a line drawn from that river at the 31st degree of north latitude, east to the middle of the river Appalachicola, have not any intrinsic validity; but the holders must depend for their titles exclusively on the laws of the United States.¹ By the treaty of 1795 between the United States and Spain, Spain admitted that she had no title north of the thirty-first degree of north latitude, and her previous grants of lands were, of course, void; but the transfer of the country, including land belonging to Georgia, which was ceded to the United States in 1802, was with a reservation that all persons who were actual settlers on the 27th of October, 1795, should have their grants confirmed; and on the 3d of March, 1803, Congress passed an act² establishing a board of commissioners to examine these grants, whose certificate in favor of the claimant should amount to a relinquishment forever, on the part of the United States.³ If a government by mere act of power revokes a valid grant of land, and then gives title to another, the courts will respect the title of the first grantee.⁴ The certificate of the confirmation of a Spanish grant made by the board of commissioners constitutes from the Spanish Government to such territory were invalid for want of title in the granting power. Doe v. Beaumont, 6 How. (Miss.) 249.

1. No Spanish grant made while the country was wrongfully occupied by Spain can be valid, unless it was confirmed by the compact between the United States and the State of Georgia of the 24th of April, 1802, or has been laid before the board of commissioners constituted by the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1803, ch. 340, and of March 27, 1804, ch. 414. Henderson v. Poindexter, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 530.

2. 2 U. S. Stat. at Large 229.

3. Robinson v. Minor, 10 How. (U. S.) 642. But in order that a claimant may bring himself within the protection of the act of cession by Georgia to the United States, he must show that the ancestor or person under whom he claims was "actually settled" on the land on the 27th of October, 1795, the date mentioned in the Cession act. Hickie v. Starke, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 98; Doe v. Beaumont, 6 How. (Miss.) 249.

Spanish Order of Survey.—A Spanish order of survey of land in West Florida, afterwards confirmed by the United States, when they acquired title, constitutes of itself a legal title without any patent from the United States. Winn v. Cole, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 125.

Order of Survey Signed by Deputy Governor—Effect of Vesting Title.—A Spanish order of survey signed by a deputy governor, is presumed prima facie to be issued by competent authority and valid. And such order vests such a right as can only be divested by the alienation of the grantee, or his voluntary abandonment, or by an entire failure to perform the conditions of the grant, or by some act against the government which would justify confiscation. Winn v. Cole, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 121; Stark v. Mather, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 190; 12 Am. Dec. 553.

The report of the surveyor-general of the Spanish Government stating land so located to be vacant, and the allegation of that fact in a subsequent grant to another party, does not amount to confiscation, or the revocation of the grant, and if it be a revocation, it would be an act of capricious tyranny, and ought to be disregarded. Winn v. Cole, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 121.

4. Hence, where A received a grant of land from the Spanish Government, which was revoked by a mere arbitrary act of power, and the land then granted to B, and then A was driven from the country, and B's title confirmed by the board sitting under the act of Congress, B will be declared to hold as trustee for A. Stark v. Mather, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 190; 12 Am. Dec. 553.

title to the land embraced in it,¹ and is conclusive against the United States, but not as between individuals.² The confirmation of a Spanish grant by Congress relates back to the date of the grant;³ and the performance of the conditions imposed in a Spanish grant on the grantee is either dispensed with or admitted by a confirmation of it by Congress.⁴

X. GRANTS IN MISSOURI.—The State of Missouri was formerly a part of the territory first of France, next of Spain, then of France, which ceded it to the United States by the treaty of 1803, in full propriety, sovereignty and dominion, as she had acquired and held it; and thereby this government put itself in place of the former sovereigns, and became invested with all their rights, subject to their concomitant obligations to the inhabitants.⁵ The act of Congress of May 25, 1824, gives to the district court of the United States authority to hear and determine all questions arising in any cause brought before it upon the petition of any persons claiming lands within the State of Missouri, by virtue of any French or Spanish grant, concessions, etc., legally made or issued before the 10th day of March, 1804, by the proper authorities, to any person or persons resident in the province of Louisiana, etc., and which might have been perfected into a complete title, under and in conformity to the laws and usages and customs of the government under which the same originated, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States,⁶ and a concession made in regular form by special order of the governor-general of the province will not be invalidated because it was not made in pursuance of regulations which were intended for the general government of subordinate officers, and not to control and limit the power of the person from whose will they emanated.⁷ In repeated decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the authority of local governors, under the crown of Spain, to make grants of lands in the Louisiana region, and has also affirmed the validity of descriptive

Indian Grants.—By the laws of Spain, the Indians had a right of occupancy; but they could not part with this right except in the mode pointed out by the Spanish laws; and where these laws and usages did not sanction a grant to Missouri lands, it will not be sustained. Chouteau v. Molony, 16 How. (U. S.) 229.

grants, though not surveyed before March 10, 1804, in Missouri, or January 24, 1818, in Florida.¹ Under the third section of the act of Congress, relating to claims to Missouri lands, persons who had claims of a certain class under France or Spain to land upon which they were settlers or housekeepers, might have a right of pre-emption if they would relinquish their claims; and this right was not affected by the confirmation of an adjoining town-lot claimed by the same party; nor did it depend on actual residence and housekeeping in the case of a person whose claim under a Spanish or French grant was still undetermined.² A recorder of land titles had no authority to investigate titles of French and Spanish grants in Louisiana, where the claimants were not in actual possession, or where the claim had been passed on by the commissioners.³

XI. GRANTS IN NEW MEXICO.—Previous to 1821 the king of Spain, by virtue of his prerogative, had the power of disposition of the public domain. Upon the assertion of these prerogatives in Mexico the power passed to the sovereign of the latter country.

1. Mackey v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 341. A general and unlocated concession granted by the Spanish governor prior to the transfer of Louisiana, whereof a private survey made after the transfer was recognized by the commissioners appointed under the act of 1805, before whom the claim was filed, and so designated and located as to be reserved from sale by virtue of the act of 1811, and consequently no New Madrid certificate could be located upon it, Bissell v. Penrose, 8 How. (U. S.) 331, following Stoddard v. Chambers, 2 How. (U. S.) 284; and examining and explaining the cases of Mackey v. Dillon, 4 How. (U. S.) 421; Les Bois v. Bramell, 4 How. (U. S.) 449 and Jourdan v. Barrett, 4 How. (U. S.) 169. Grant void for want of authority of officer to make, see Wright v. Thomas, 4 Mo. 590. And for uncertainty in description, see Ashley v. Turley, 13 Mo. 434.

But though the lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana had the authority, as a sub-delegate, to grant concessions, direct surveys, and place grantees in possession, yet no perfect title to the land, such as the Spanish Government could disavow, passed until the concession and a copy of the survey were delivered to the intendant-general at New Orleans, and also a process-verbal attesting the fact that the survey was made in the presence of the commandant, or in that of a syndic and two neighbors; and an imperfect concession of lands in the present

State of Missouri lacking such prerequisites to the perfecting and recording of the title could not avail against patents for the same land, unless Congress had, by some law, protected the land from the location of patents. Menard v. Massey, 8 How. (U. S.) 303, giving (p. 314) the form of a Spanish title.

As to steps necessary to the procurement of the complete Spanish grant, see Tyler v. Wells, 2 Mo. App. 526.

3. By the act of Congress of the 13th of June, 1812 (2 Stat. 748) power was vested in the recorder of land titles to investigate and report on certain Spanish and French claims in the State of Missouri. His authority was confined to two classes of cases; first, to the claims of persons who were then actual settlers on the land they claimed, and whose claims had not been before that time filed with the recorder of land titles. Such persons were allowed to file a notice in writing, stating the nature and extent of their claims, and the written evidences thereof, and were directed to be recorded. Second, to claims which had been presented to the board of commissioners, but had not been decided on by that board. (2 Stat. 748.) Winter v. U. S., Hempst. (U. S.) 349; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 454.

All the power which governors of provinces, intendants, or other persons had to dispose of public domain, ceased upon the independence of Mexico, and grants made by them, unless they were expressly sanctioned by the new power, were of no effect.¹

Rights of individuals to property in the territory of the United States were not affected by the change of sovereignty and jurisdiction. They were entitled to protection whether the party had the full and absolute ownership of the land, or merely an equitable interest therein, which required some further act of the government to vest in him a perfect title.²

Under the act of 1854, a report by the surveyor-general that a certain Mexican grant had not been surveyed, but is "reported" to contain a certain number of acres will be sustained, the legal effect of this decision by the surveyor-general being to segregate from the public domain all the lands covered by the grant as reported on by him.³

No jurisdiction over such claims was conferred upon the courts of this State; but the surveyor-general in the exercise of the authority with which he was invested by act of Congress,⁴ decides them in the first instance, and the final action on each claim is reserved to Congress.⁵ But such decision of the surveyor-general is not binding upon the courts of New Mexico until confirmed by Congress.⁶

1. Pino v. Hatch, 1 N. Mex. 128. But a grant of land executed by the political chief of New Mexico in 1823, though not sufficient to pass the absolute title, for want of legal authority to make it, is nevertheless admissible in evidence as against one having no better right to show the time and mode of gaining possession and the point from which the adverse occupation is to be reckoned. Pino v. Hatch, 1 N. Mex. 129; but see the dissenting opinion of Brocchus, J., pp. 133-145.

2. Tameling v. U. S. Freehold, etc., Co., 93 U. S. 661; Pino v. Hatch, 1 N. Mex. 145.

Power to Settle Land Titles in New Mexico was, by the eighth section of the act of 1854, expressly enjoined upon the surveyor-general of that territory. He was empowered for that purpose to issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths and perform all necessary acts in the premises. He was directed to make a full report with his decision, as to the validity or invalidity of each claim, under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States. That report, according to a form to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, was to be laid before Congress for such action as might be deemed just and proper. Tameling v. U. S. Freehold, etc., Co., 93 U. S. 662.

Mex. 39, where it is held that the power and authority of review rests with Congress alone, and until reversed or modified by that body, a decision by the surveyor-general is binding upon courts, and must be regarded as res judicata. The doctrine laid down in Stoneroad v. Stoneroad, 4 N. Mex. 61, is followed in the later case of Chaves v. Whitney, 4 N. Mex. 180.

In 1823 the Mexican Government conveyed certain lands in New Mexico by grant calling for specific boundaries. On the cession of the territory to the United States the holder of the grant presented his claim to the surveyor-general of the territory for investigation and decision, under the act of Con-

Where there is sufficient evidence of fraud and mistake a patent will be canceled.¹

An act of Congress confirming to a claimant his title to a tract of land granted to him by the Mexican Government under the colonization laws of Mexico and Spain, and a patent issued in accordance therewith, conveys no title to the mineral lands included in such grant.²

XII. GRANTS IN TEXAS.—The authority to grant land previous to the Mexican revolution was vested in the intendants or in the military commandants and governors, subject to confirmation by the intendants. These offices were abrogated and suspended by the consummation of the independence of Mexico, and the public domain became thereby vested in the supreme government until the formation of the States, and its transfer by the supreme government to them, during which time authority to grant lands emanated from it.³ The Texas revolution of 1836 did not divest Mexicans of their title to lands acquired before that event.⁴ The division of a country into separate governments gress July 22, 1854. The surveyor-general, in a report which followed the boundaries called for by the grant, recommended that Congress confirm the grant, and by act of Congress approved June 21, 1860, the same was confirmed according to the report of the surveyor-general. The surveyor-general afterwards had the grant surveyed, and the survey was approved by him, but no notice of this survey was given to the claimants, some of whom were minors and married women. The survey called for boundaries, which did not correspond with those of the grant, but were far within the lines. Held, that the courts were not concluded by the survey from determining the extent and validity of the grant by the Mexican Government by specific boundary calls, and afterwards duly examined into, approved, and confirmed; and that the persons holding title under the grant might maintain an action of ejectment to recover lands lying outside the boundaries shown by the survey, but within the boundaries of the grant. Stoneroad v. Stoneroad, 4 N. Mex. 60.

But in the absence of an actual ouster, or any intrusion upon one's actual possession, ejectment will not lie in New Mexico in favor of one claiming under a Mexican grant approved, surveyed, and recommended for confirmation by the surveyor-general, but not as yet confirmed, as against one claiming under a Spanish grant submitted to that officer, but disapproved, the jurisdiction of the courts of that territory under the act of Congress of July 22, 1854, § 8 (10 Stat. 308), being confined until confirmation, to the preservation of the status in quo of the estates and parties. Chaves v. Whitney, 4 N. Mex. 178.

A grant issued by the primero vocal or political chief of the department of Texas in 1824 passed no title to the grantee. Holliday v. Harvey, 39 Tex. 674.

Although he had no power previous to the colonization law, yet he may have had a special commission to grant titles to particular lands, and it seems that if objection be not made such commission may be proved by parol testimony. Norton v. Mitchell, 13 Tex. 51.

After the passage of the national colonization law of the 13th of August, 1824, the states of the Mexican confederation possessed the property in the soil, and had alone the power, by direct agency, of appropriating lands to individuals. Republic v. Thorn, 3 Tex. 505.

does not of itself divest the citizens of either of titles to land in the other.¹ In an early case the opinion was expressed that under the laws of Spain, which remained in force in Mexico after her independence, and those subsequently enacted by her, an alien could not acquire real property in that republic;² and in a subsequent case the invalidity of a sale of land was expressly adjudged;³ but in a later case, where land had been sold in 1833 to citizens

U. S. 494; Hancock v. Walsh, 3 Woods (U. S.) 351. Neither the constitution of Texas nor statutes enacted since its adoption divest Mexicans of titles to land in Texas, acquired before its independence, unless proceedings for forfeiture equivalent to "office found" have been carried into effect. Airhart v. Malissieu, 98 U. S. 494; Phillips v. Moore, 111 U. S. 211.

The original constitution of Texas, adopted March 17, 1836, fifteen days after the Declaration of Independence, provides as follows: "All persons who shall leave the country for the purpose of evading a participation in the present struggle, etc., shall forfeit all rights of citizenship and such lands as they may hold in the republic." Gen. Prov., §8. By the tenth section it was declared that aliens should not hold land in Texas, but a reasonable time was given them to come in or dispose of their lands. By an act of the Congress of Texas, passed Jan. 28, 1840, it was provided: "In making titles to lands by descent it shall be no bar to a party that any ancestor through whom he derives his descent, from the intestate, is or hath been an alien, and every alien to whom any land may be devised or may descend shall have nine years to become a citizen of the republic, and take possession of such land; or shall have nine years to sell the same before it shall be declared to be forfeited, or before it shall escheat to the government."

This statute was re-enacted in 1848, and the State constitution of 1845 effected no change in rights of property, but expressly established existing rights. Art. 6, § 20. By an act passed Feb. 13, 1854 (Pasch. Dig., arts. 45-47), it was further provided in favor of aliens that they should have the same rights as are accorded to Americans, citizens by the laws of the nation to which such aliens belong. Hancock v. McKinney, 7 Tex. 384; Swift v. Herrera, 9 Tex. 263; Johnson v. Smith, 21 Tex. 722; Luter v. Mayfield, 26 Tex. 325.

1. The owners of land, acquired under the colonization laws, before the separation of Texas from the states of the Mexican Confederacy, did not, consequently, incur the penalty of a forfeiture of their titles, as prescribed in the 30th article of the State colonization law of the 24th of March, 1825, against those who should establish themselves in a foreign country, by becoming or remaining domiciled in Mexico, after the dismemberment of the government. Kilpatrick v. Sissneros, 23 Tex. 130; Sabrieiro v. White, 30 Tex. 581; Andrews v. Spear, 48 Tex. 579; Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 495.

In the case last cited the court by Bradley, J., says: "In some of the early cases in Texas, as in Holliman v. Peebles (1 Tex. 673), and in Yates v. Iams (10 Tex. 168), it was argued, though not expressly decided, that by the general Spanish law, and if not by that law, at least by the colonization laws of Mexico and of Coahuila and Texas, a non-resident alien could not hold real estate. The same views were expressed in the case of McKinney v. Saviego, 18 How. (U. S.) 240. But the laws referred to had respect to the case of aliens, who, when they were such, acquired, or attempted to acquire, lands in Spain or her colonies, and not to the case of citizens or subjects who, on the division of an empire, happened to hold lands in the section in which they did not reside, and therefore had good title thereto when, by operation of law, they became aliens as to such section. It must be admitted that aliens of this class stand on a different footing, in equity, at least, from those who, being aliens, attempt, against the law, to acquire real estate in a foreign country," citing Jones v. McMasters, 20 How. (U. S.) 8; White v. Burnley, 20 How. (U. S.) 235.

of the United States, then non-resident aliens, it was held that, unless there was an adjudication by some court of political authority upon their alienage, while it existed, their rights were not divested.¹ And it was competent for one alien enemy to convey to another land situated in the country with which theirs is at war.² And such alien had a right to sue for lands in Texas, alienage being no bar to an action if the title of the alien was good.³ Several cases, however, have decided that an alien cannot sue for lands in Texas, but these presented the naked questions of alienage as a bar.⁴ A certified copy of the protocol of a Mexican title is competent evidence of that title.⁵

2. This point was settled in the case of Conrad v. Waples, 96 U. S. 279, and cited with approval in Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 497.

3. Jones v. McMasters, 20 How. (U. S.) 8; Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 497.

4. White v. Sabariego, 23 Tex. 243. But see the later case of Sabriego v. White, 30 Tex. 576.

5. By the act of the Congress of Texas, passed December 14, 1837, it was declared, "that it shall be the duty of every person or persons who may have in his or her possession or control any titles or documents whatever which relate to lands, and which, by the laws now or hereafter existing in Texas, have been and are considered archives, to deliver the same to the commissioner of the general land office, or his order, within sixty days after the final passage of the act." Pasch. Dig., art. 70.

The sixth section of the same act constituted the land office the proper depository of all books, records, papers, and original documents appertaining to the titles of land denominated archives. Pasch. Dig., art. 71.

A certified copy of a title from the land office was prima facie evidence of its existence, for it would be presumed that the original was an archive of the land office. Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 500.

Recording of Title.—Until a title is deposited in the land office of Texas, or duly recorded, bona fide, purchasers holding a junior Mexican title will be protected. The act of Dec. 20, 1836, "organizing inferior courts," provided among other things, § 37, that "any person who owns or claims land of any description, by deed, lien, or other color of title, shall, within twelve months from the first of April next, have the same proven in open court, and recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court in which said land is situated; but if a tract of land lies on the county lines, the title may be recorded in the county in which part of said land lies."

"Sec. 40. No deed, conveyance, lien or other instrument in writing shall take effect, as regards the interests and rights of third parties, until the same shall have been duly proven and presented to the court, as required by the act for the recording of land titles. And it shall be the duty of the clerk to note particularly the time when such deed, conveyance, lien or other instrument is presented, and so record them in the order in which they are presented." Pasch. Dig., arts. 4980, 4983.

The limit of the time prescribed in the thirty-seventh section was repealed in 1838. As most original titles in Texas, originating before the revolution, were public archives, the parties holding only testimonios thereof, the following law was passed, Jan. 19, 1839: "Copies of all deeds, etc., when the originals remain in the public archives, and were executed in conformity with the laws existing at their dates, duly certified by the proper officers, shall be admitted to record in the county where such land lies." Pasch. Dig., art. 4984.

Under these laws failure to record a grant rendered it inoperative as against an innocent purchaser without notice. Guilbeau v. Mays, 15 Tex. 410; Musquis v. Blake, 24 Tex. 461; Nicholson v. Horton, 23 Tex. 47; Wilson v. Williams, 25 Tex. 54.

Buying with actual notice of a previous title, or under circumstances which make it a duty to take notice, is a fraud, and deprives the purchaser of

Under a Mexican grant to an empresario the contract of the latter obliged him to introduce colonists into a specified district. But if there were no colonists and the empresario opposed no objection, sales of land within the district might be made by the government.¹ Sales of land could only be made to Mexicans, and no inquiries as to their character were required. The alcalde was a competent and proper person to complete the titles on a contract of sale, where no organization of the colony had taken place.² Such grant could not be defeated by proof that the principal surveyor did not in person perform the work of making surveys, or because the survey was made before the order directed to the surveyor by the alcalde was entered on the grant.³ It was a common practice in Texas for empresarios and others to have their surveys completed in anticipation of the arrival of the colonists, or the measures requisite for the procurement of the final title. The return of such surveys by a surveyor, and their recognition by the commissioner or alcalde, was treated as a substantial compliance with the law.⁴

the immunity arising from the fact that such title is not recorded nor deposited in the land office. Crosby v. Huston, 1 Tex. 203; Grumbles v. Sneed, 22 Tex. 565; Airhart v. Massieu, 98 U. S. 501.

By a law passed Oct. 20, 1866, a title not deposited in land office, and not recorded, will no longer avail as against certain descriptions of title without actual notice. Pasch. Dig., art. 5825.

Prohibition of Grants Within the Littoral or Coast Leagues.—In constructing the articles of the colonization law of August 14, 1824 (see translation of the general colonization law of August 18, 1824, in appendix to Halleck's Report, Executive Documents, Senate, of 1849), the Supreme Court of Texas has repeatedly held that it operated as a prohibition of any grant of land within the littoral or coast leagues within the twenty frontier leagues bordering on the United States, without the previous assent of the Federal executive of Mexico; that such assent was essential to the validity of a grant within those limits, and that such assent was not to be inferred from the existence of the grant but must be affirmatively established. *Smith v. And the Mexican league applicable to grants of such lands, being a square of 5,000 varas on each side, has always been estimated at 4,428.4 acres, the vara being considered $33\frac{1}{2}$ American inches. *U. I. RETROSPECTIVE VIEW; IN THE ENGLISH COURTS.—Although this subject has already been considered,¹ it may be of practical use to present, after a brief retrospect of the common law thereon, some recent statutory modifications of the procedure. As has been observed, in England, the bail in a civil action was required (in absence of waiver by consent),² to be either a freeholder or housekeeper,³ liable to the ordinary process of courts of justice, and worth double of the sum sworn to, or one thousand pounds beyond that sum, if it exceeded one thousand pounds after payment of his debts. If there were more than two bail, they must, respectively, be possessed, after the liquidation of their debts, of double the aliquot portion of the amount for General and Special Count in Assumpsit.—"The statement of the cause of action in assumpsit is either general, where certain very comprehensive formulæ, founded upon an alleged indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff, for goods sold, work done, money lent, etc., are applicable; or special, where the cause of action must be set out in terms more precisely adapted to the special circumstances of the case, being employed in all other instances of a promise, not under seal, except the single one stated above, of indebtedness for goods sold, work done, money lent, etc.; as, for example, for not accepting goods bought; for not doing work according to agreement, etc.; on promissory notes, or bills of exchange, for all which, as well as for any other like cases, the cause of complaint must be set out in language corresponding to the facts." 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.) 575.

1. See BAIL, vol. 2, p. 37.

2. As to the plaintiff's waiver, see Saggers v. Gordon, 5 Taunt. 174. A beneficial householder was admitted by consent. Anonymous, 2 Chitty B. Ct. R. 96.

3. One who, by death in the family of an outgoing tenant, was prevented from taking possession, was held not to be a housekeeper. Bold's Bail, 1 Chitty B. Ct. R. 502. So also one who merely rented and lodged in a tap adjoining a tavern. Walker's Bail, 1 Chitty B. Ct. R. 316. Otherwise, one living in apartment chambers and liable for his separate taxes. Lomax's Bail, Petersdorf, B. 275. So also was one deemed a householder while temporarily occupying a house owned by the water commissioners, by whom he was employed, although he paid no rent nor taxes. Williams v. Dethick, 2 Price 8.

A foreigner having few effects in England, was admitted as bail for an alien defendant. Christie v. Filleul, 2 W. Bl. 1323. Also a foreigner having none. Colson v. Carhordy, cited in Tidd, Pr. 295. But one's mere ownership of land in Jamaica was held not to qualify him. Boddy v. Leyland, 4 Burr. 2526; Anonymous, Lofft. 34. A beneficed clergyman was rejected, though having property in Trinidad. Wightwick v. Pickering, Forrest 138.

which they became responsible. There was also a restriction founded on personal position or character. Persons exempt from the ordinary process of the law were incompetent to justify as bail—e. g., the king, the royal family, his servants, peers of the realm, ambassadors and their servants, members of the House of Commons, officers of the different courts of justice, and persons living within the verge of the palace.¹ It was also a rule in all the courts, that no attorney or any other person practicing as such, should be bail in any action pending therein. This was to protect attorneys against importunity of their clients. It was also deemed advantageous to the suitor.² It seems that ignorance was no disqualification, in one otherwise well qualified.³ By the statute 8 Geo. II, "no sheriff's officer, bailiff, or other person concerned in the execution of process should be permitted to become bail in any action depending therein." Infants, married women, and infamous persons were disqualified.⁴ Ordinarily, bail once rejected could not afterwards be accepted; and this, whether in the same, or in an inferior court.⁵ As to the English procedure, a formal memorandum called a "bailpiece" was, by the persons offering to be special bail, signed and acknowledged before the clerk, judge, or commissioner, and certified and filed in the court in which the action was pending. Thereupon, this completed undertaking was called a "recognizance." This was "absolute" if the plaintiff consented to the bail; or de bene esse, if they were subject to his afterwards excepting to them.⁶ By the statute of 1889, any commissioner for oaths may "take any bail or recognizance in or for the purpose of any civil proceeding in the supreme court, including all proceedings on the revenue side of the queen's bench division." The statute of 1869, abolishing arrest on mesne process, except where the defendant was about to quit England, or where the action was for a penalty other than in respect of any contract, rendered obsolescent much of the English common law relating to special bail.⁷ A knowledge thereof,

2. 1 Chitty B. Ct. R. 715, n. The rule was relaxed as to an attorney, who, having ceased practice, was divested of privilege from arrest; also as to any attorney's clerk temporarily accepted as bail without opposition; certain "niceties" in practice were abandoned as "mischievous." Otherwise, where the ground of rejection was merely the having been indemnified by the defendant's attorney; the reason of rejecting one so indemnified being simply to avoid evasion of the rule that no attorney be bail. Hallett's Bail, 1 Dowl. & R. 488.

6. Chitty, Prac. 727.

As to the practice under the statutes 4 & 5 Anne, ch. 16, and 4 W. & M., ch. 4, of taking "bail below" by the sheriff, when "bail above" had not been put in "to the action," see 3 Bl. Com. (Sharswood ed.) 291.

7. See BAIL, vol. 2, p. 35, note upon "Bail Below."

however, is deemed essential to a clear understanding of American statutes prescribing that some procedure being legislated upon "shall be as heretofore,"¹ etc.; or that an undertaking shall be executed by "sufficient bail,"² or that the persons offering be examined under oath "to a reasonable extent."³

II. IN THE FEDERAL COURTS—1. In General.—Such also has been, in the United States, the effect of State statutes abolishing imprisonment for debt,⁴ and such also the effect of legislation by Congress conformably thereto.⁵ But special bail is required in suits to recover Federal penalties, begun before the State abolished imprisonment for debt.⁶ Also upon removal of suits from a State court.⁷ And special bail originally given continues in force after the suit has been transferred to the Federal court.⁸

Where a defendant giving bail in one district is committed in another, the judge, upon return of the marshal's certificate of commitment, "may direct that an exoneretur be entered upon the bailpiece, where special bail shall have been found, or otherwise discharge such bail."⁹

3. E. g., the New York statute (§ 26) quoted infra, this title, note 3, p. 897.

4. See BAIL, vol. 2, p. 36.

5. "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any State, on process issuing from a court of the United States, where, by the laws of such State, imprisonment for debt has been or shall be abolished." And State restrictions thereon shall apply to process issuing from the Federal courts. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 990.

In States where no statute exists regulating special bail, it may be required in the Federal courts in cases of tort as well as of contract, and without affidavit as to the true amount of the debt or damages. Parkhurst v. Kinsman, 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 168. (See in Whiting v. Putnam, 17 Mass. 175—decided in 1821—a criticism upon the then defective Massachusetts law hereon.)

6. "In all suits or prosecutions for the recovery of duties or pecuniary penalties prescribed by the laws of the United States, commenced in any State where, by the laws thereof, imprisonment for debt shall not have been abolished, the person against whom process is issued, shall be held to special bail, subject to the rules which prevail in civil suits in which special bail is required." U. S. Rev. Stat., § 942.

In a Federal court in Virginia, in 1795, in the case of the U. S. v. Mundel, 6 Call (Va.) 245, there were two writs of capias ad respondendum against Mundel, one for a statutory penalty and the other for a duty on stills. The marshal demanded bail on both, but Mundel refused, and resisted the marshal's attempt to imprison him for want thereof. It was held that he was not indictable for so resisting; the court, by Iredell, J., saying that although the marshal was authorized to demand bail for the duty, he could not demand it upon the writ for the penalty, notwithstanding the United States district attorney's indorsement; an indorsement, even by a judge, is extrajudicial, if the State act regulating the practice does not authorize it.

7. The petitioner must give surety for his entering the proceedings, etc., in the Federal court, "and also for his there appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if special bail was originally requisite therein." U. S. Rev. Stat., § 639, pl. 3.

8. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 641.

9. In absence of such discharge, the defendant may be holden sixty days after a rendition of judgment in the suit in which the bail was procured, in order that he may be charged in execution. U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 943, 944.

2. In Admiralty; Fide-jussores.—A stipulation securing one's appearance to answer a libel in admiralty is not to be considered as a bail bond at common law, but is governed wholly by the rules of admiralty practice. The function and liability of such bail are rather analogous to that of the fide-jussores of the civil law.¹

III. IN THE STATE COURTS—1. In General; New England, etc.—In those of the older States whose statutes regulating practice are not specially codified, the provisions as to special bail, being derived from those of England above noted, are quite homogeneous.²

Bail in civil cases may be taken by a commissioner of the court for the district. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 945. A clerk of court may take a recognizance of special bail de bene esse, in case of absence or disability of the judge. U. S. Rev. Stat. 947.

1. Lane v. Townsend, 1 Ware (U. S.) 286. See infra, this title, Discharge; the Roman Law.

After final decree for the libellant in a suit in personam where the respondent gave bail to appear, but has gone beyond seas, the court may grant the libellant a monition for the bail to appear and show cause; and the fact that no execution has been returned non est inventus, is no ground for refusing a decree that the bail satisfy the original decree for damages. Snow's Bail, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 485.

On what contingencies the Federal courts may deliver prize goods on bail, see U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4626; Roberts, Adm. (ed. of 1869), p. 437.

For form of bail-piece for the respondent's appearance to answer to the libel, see Pugh, Adm. (ed. of 1890), p. 251; and for form of bail bond, p. 148.

As to the English Admiralty practice for bail in actions in rem, to be given the principal registry, see Bruce, Adm. (ed. of 1886), p. 289.

The bail for arrested property must not be partners. The Mars (dec. in 1873), cited in Bruce Adm. 288.

2. As to the procedure for bailing under the poor debtor laws of the New England States, see—besides POOR DEBTORS, vol. 18, p. 833, note 4—Massachusetts Stat. 1888, ch. 419, §§ 5 and 6.

In Massachusetts: "Bail in a civil action shall be taken as heretofore practiced, by a bond to the sheriff, if the writ is served by him or his deputy, otherwise to the officer by whom the writ is served, with condition that the defendant shall appear and answer to the plaintiff, abide the final judgment of the court, and shall not avoid." Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 852, § 2. The bond is void if made out to a deputy sheriff. Conant v. Sheldon, 4 Gray (Mass.) 300. So also if made out to the sheriff of another county, although the action was brought in that county. Smith v. Adams, 12 Met. (Mass.) 564. A bail bond was sustained which had the correct firm name of the plaintiffs, although it had wrong both of their Christian names. Colburn v. Downes, 10 Mass. 20. Where, in a suit of A against B and C, a bail bond is given by B, a discontinuance by A as to C will not operate to release the sureties. Sanderson v. Stevens, 116 Mass. 133.

"An officer shall not be required to accept a bail-bond unless with two sureties at least, each of them having sufficient property within the Commonwealth." Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 952, § 3. The sheriff would be answerable for accepting only one surety, although at the time, having a large fortune. Long v. Billings, 9 Mass. 479.

"The bond may be approved by a judge of a court of record, or of a police, district, or municipal court, or by a master in chancery, commissioner of insolvency, trial justice, or justice of the peace, and when so approved, the sureties shall be deemed sufficient." Massachusetts Pub. Stat. 1882, p. 952, § 4. "A bail bond shall bind the persons who execute it, though taken with one surety only." § 5. Where a bail bond signed by Snow and Atwood recited substantially: We, Snow, as principal, "and ———, sureties," are holden, etc., Atwood was held to be bound as surety; it not appearing that, at the time of executing it, he understood that it was to be executed by any other person as surety. Danker v. Atwood, 119 Mass. 146.

In Maine also, the bond binds the obligors, although signed by only one surety, or by several sureties not having sufficient property in the county. Maine Rev. Stat. 1883, p. 727, § 3.

In Vermont, in case of insufficiency discovered pending suit, the court may order new bail. Vermont Rev. Laws, 1880, § 1175.

"If it is made to appear to the court by a person who is bail for a party in a suit pending therein, that such person was induced to enter bail by misrepresentations, or by promise of indemnity which has not been performed on reasonable request, the court may on application of the bail and consent of the party for whose security the bail is taken, discharge such bail, and order new bail on reasonable terms." § 1176.

"When a surety indorses a writ of attachment as bail, the officer shall deliver to him a bail-piece." § 1464. On its presentation, a justice shall deliver to a sheriff or constable, commanding him to assist the surety in apprehending the principal. § 1465. So also shall the jail keeper, upon request, give the surety a bail-piece, on admitting the principal to the liberties of the jail yard. § 1505.

In case of a female plaintiff, the bail is not affected by her marriage. § 2338.

In Connecticut: "The officer shall assign the bail bond to the plaintiff on his request, and no action shall be maintained against the officer who took the bail, unless he shall refuse to assign the bail bond to the plaintiff, on request." Connecticut Gen. Stat. 1888, § 961.

No recovery can be had against a sheriff for refusing to assign a bail bond that is unenforceable. So held, where there had been an attempt to entrap the bail, against the justice of the case. Newell v. Hoadley, 8 Conn. 381.

In New Hampshire, an officer may take bail by their indorsing their names on the writ. New Hampshire Pub. Stat. 1891, p. 619, § 6.

In New Jersey, the sheriff indorses the names, in case of a capias ad respondendum. New Jersey Rev. St. 1877, p. 856, § 52. There a female defendant cannot be arrested. § 54.

In Pennsylvania freeholders are privileged from arrest in any civil action. Pennsylvania Brightly's Pur. Dig. of Stat. 1885, p. 63, § 47. There the officer taking a bail bond must give a bail-piece in the form prescribed on p. 60, § 26. There, moreover, a bail bond forfeited shall not stand as a security, where the plaintiff can be put in as good a condition as if he had never been delayed. Bank of Pennsylvania v. Lasell, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 387; Priestman v. Keyser, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 344. But in 1819, where special bail had been delayed until the plaintiff lost the opportunity of trying his cause as soon as he might have done, if the bail had been entered within six weeks after the return of the original writ, it was held that the bail must stand as security for the debt to be recovered. McFarland v. Holmes, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 50.

In Delaware: "Insufficient bail shall be regarded as no bail. A sheriff or officer taking insufficient bail shall be deemed to have voluntarily permitted the defendant to escape, and shall be liable accordingly. One or more citizens of the county, of ability to answer the sum in which bail is required, shall be sufficient bail." Delaware L. 1874, p. 636, § 7.

In Illinois, against a defendant who fraudulently contracted the debt, or conceals property with intent, etc., the plaintiff may sue out a capias ad respondendum, the judge or master granting it to fix the amount of bail. The form of the bail bond is prescribed in Illinois Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 158, § 4: "No person shall be permitted to be special bail in any action, unless he be a householder and resident within this state, and of sufficient property; and no counselor or attorney at law, sheriff, under sheriff, bailiff, constable, or other person concerned in the execution of process, shall be permitted to be special bail in any action." P. 159, § 5. There scire facias against special bail was abolished in 1845. P. 162, § 25.

Enlargement on bail does not prevent an insolvent debtor from being imprisoned again on the same debt. People v. Hanchett, 111 Ill. 90.

In Indiana, the creditor's right of action on the recognizance of special bail is limited to two years after the final judgment against the principal. Indiana Rev. Stat. 1888, § 880.

In Michigan: The form of the recognizance and of the bail-piece for special bail is prescribed in Michigan Annot. Stat. 1882, §§ 7319-7320.

In South Carolina no attorney or officer of court is acceptable as bail. South Carolina Gen. Stat. 1882, § 667.

In some States, a bail bond which does not satisfy the statute may be valid at common law.¹

A bail bond may be nullified by illegality of prior proceedings.²

2. Under the New Codes; New York, etc.—The Codes have provisions not only defining the objects of bail "undertaking" in civil actions, but also minutely prescribing the procedure therein.³

In Alabama, such is a rule of court. Alabama Code, 1886, p. 807, rule 5.

In Georgia, scire facias against bail can only issue from the court in which the original judgment was obtained. Georgia Code, 1882, § 3417.

1. Bell v. Pierce, 146 Mass. 60.

But there must have been an actual or implied acceptance by the obligee of such common-law bond to constitute a delivery, etc. Hawkes v. Pike, 105 Mass. 560; 7 Am. Rep. 554. See also Kent, 4 Com. (13th ed.) 454.

In Vermont, as to the common-law rights and liabilities of special bail, see Worthen v. Prescott, 60 Vt. 68.

In Missouri, the sureties on a criminal recognizance are liable though the principal has not signed it. State v. Peyton, 32 Mo. App. 522.

In Indiana, so also. Minor v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 236.

In Georgia, as to bail in trover and replevin, see Georgia Code, 1882, §§ 3418, et seq.

In Mississippi, no bond or recognizance is affected by any irregularity therein. Mississippi Rev. Code, 1880, § 2305.

2. In Texas, failure of an affidavit to state that the attachment was not sued out for the purpose of injuring the defendant was held to be ground for quashing the attachment and relieving the forthcoming sureties. Burch v. Watts, 37 Tex. 135.

3. In New York: "The defendant may give bail, by delivering to the sheriff a written undertaking, in the sum specified in the order of arrest, executed by two or more sufficient bail, stating their places of residence and occupations to the following effect: (1) If the order of arrest could be granted only by the court, that the defendant will obey the direction of court, or of an appellate court, contained in an order or a judgment, requiring him to perform the act specified in the order; or, in default of his so doing, that he will, at all times, render himself amenable to proceedings to punish him for the omission. (2) If the action is to recover a chattel, that the defendant will deliver it to the plaintiff, if delivery thereof is adjudged in the action, and will pay any sum recovered against him in the action. (3) In any other case, that the defendant will, at all times, render himself amenable to any mandate which may be issued to enforce a final judgment against him in the action." Birdseye's New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 97, § 25.

"It is not necessary that the undertaking be approved or accompanied with an affidavit of justification of the bail. But the officer taking the acknowledgment of the undertaking must, if the sheriff so requires, examine under oath, to a reasonable extent, the persons offering to become bail, concerning their property and their circumstances. The examination must be reduced to writing, subscribed by the bail, and annexed to the undertaking." Ibid, § 26.

"Within three days after bail is given, the sheriff must deliver to the plaintiff's attorney copies certified by him of the order of arrest, return and undertaking. The plaintiff's attorney, within ten days thereafter, must serve upon the sheriff a notice that he does not accept the bail; otherwise he is deemed to have accepted them, and the sheriff is exonerated from liability." Ibid, § 27.

"The qualifications for bail are as follows: (1) Each of them must be worth the sum specified in the order of arrest, exclusive of property exempt from execution; but the judge, on justification, may allow more than two bail to justify, severally, in sums less than that specified in the order, if the whole justification is equivalent to that of two sufficient bail." Ibid, § 29.

If required by the plaintiff's attorney, the judge's examination must be reduced to writing, and subscribed by the bail. § 30.

See California Code Civ. Proc. 1885, §§ 487, et seq.; Nevada Gen. Stat. 1885, §§ 3103, et seq.; Dakota Comp. L. 1887, §§ 4953, et seq.; Montana Comp. Stat. 1887, p. 92, §§ 129, et seq.

3. Under the Louisiana Code.—In Louisiana, under the code of practice, which is chiefly derived from the civil law, the function and liability of bail in civil actions are in some respects like those of the fide-jussores.¹ Cases often arise thereunder which in any other State would seem quite anomalous.

IV. DISCHARGE.—1. In General; the Roman Law.—At common law, it seems nothing but the act of God could excuse in the case of bail.² The Roman law was more indulgent.³

When bail become fixed, they cannot be discharged from liability, either by the surrender, bankruptcy or arrest of the principal on a ca. sa.⁴

1. See infra, this title, Discharge; The Roman Law.

One who carries all his property in his pocket is not acceptable as a surety within the Louisiana act of 1876, whereunder the surety, to be "good and solvent" within Louisiana Code, art. 575, must have property susceptible of being legally reached by the sheriff. State v. Rightor, Judge, 36 La. Ann. 711.

In some cases—e. g., in a bond for the release of an attachment—what is omitted in the conditions will be supplied by the court, and what is added will be ignored. McCloskey v. Wingfield, 32 La. Ann. 38.

Discontinuance of the suit against some of the solidary obligors does not discharge the other defendants. Vredenburgh v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 627.

In a case where no money judgment is enjoined, a surety on an injunction bond—apparently interested in maintaining the judgment—may become, for the opposite party, a surety on an appeal bond—apparently interested in having a reversal; he is not a "party" within the Louisiana Code. Verret v. Bonvillain, 32 La. Ann. 29.

2. In England, in 1745, one under sentence of transportation was brought up and surrendered in discharge of his bail, and then remanded. Vergen's Bail, 2 Stra. 1217. But Lord Mansfield refused this where the principal was actually on board ship therefor. Fowler v. Dunn, 4 Burr. 2034.

In New York, a stipulation between the plaintiff and the defendant for extending the time of payment does not exonerate the bail. Steinbock v. Evans, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 278.

3. It is true that by the laws of the Twelve Tables, tab. 1, cap. 1, the creditor was authorized of his own right, and without the authority of a precept from a magistrate, to seize his debtor anywhere in public, and forthwith carry him before the prætor. Brief was the formula of citation. "Te in jus voco." If he hesitated, or attempted to escape, struitur in pedes, the creditor, calling the bystanders to witness, might seize and drag him, oborto collo, to the judgment-seat. If the debtor was aged or sick, a cart could be resorted to.

The debtor's only escape was to give a caution or bail, usually with sureties or fide-jussores, for his appearance at a future time. This was called the stipulatio in judicio sistendi. Its object was satisfied when the debtor was personally subject to the process of the court. If between the service of process and the day for appearance, he had contracted new obligations, become embarrassed and less able to pay, it was not a forfeiture.

But the tribunals admitted a variety of excuses for his non-appearance; e. g., stress of duties of a municipal office; detention elsewhere as a witness; condemnation to death or exile; civil imprisonment, or restraint of military custody; captivity under the public enemy; death in his family; detention by sickness, tempest or flood. On such excuse, the prætor discharged the fide-jussores.

As to the distinction between the liability of such fide-jussores and that of the special bail in the common-law practice, see 3 Bl. (Sharswood ed.) 292.

4. The difference between bail to the action and bail in error is, that in the former, the sureties not being fixed, a ca. sa. is sued out and returned, but in the latter, no ca. sa. is necessary at all for that purpose, and they become fixed from the judgment of the territorial superior court. Dowlin v. Standifer, Hempst. (U. S.) 290.

Where special bail are entitled to be discharged ex debito justitiae, they may not apply for an exoneretur by way of summary proceeding, but they may plead the matter in bar.¹

An amendment conforming the declaration to the cause of action in which the bail was given, will not authorize a discharge.²

In general, special bail will not be allowed to plead that the judgment recovered against the principal was unjust.³

2. Surrender of the Principal; Frustration.—A surrender of the principal discharges the undertaking,⁴ and, ordinarily, no justification of bail is necessary, when special bail is entered for the purpose of making a surrender.⁵

1. See opinions in Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 329; Davidson v. Taylor, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604, quoted in note at BAIL, vol. 2, p. 39.

Bail may surrender their principal even after a conditional judgment has been rendered against them. Stare v. Lingerfelt, 109 N. Car. 775.

2. Carrington v. Ford, 4 Cranch (C. C.) 231. But otherwise, as to matter added at variance with the affidavit to hold to bail. Hyer v. Smith, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 437.

3. In an action of covenant brought in a Federal court in Ohio, on a bond signed by D, for release of Mahon from imprisonment, conditioned to pay what should be recovered in a suit of G. v. M., pending in Kentucky, it was held that D could not show that the judgment recovered was unjust. Great-house v. Dunlap, 3 McLean (U. S.) 303.

In Sibbald v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 492, the court by Baldwin, J., said: "No principle is better settled, or of more universal application, than that no court can reverse or annul its own final decrees or judgments, for errors of fact or law, after the term in which they have been rendered, unless for clerical mistakes, or to reinstate a cause dismissed by mistake." This rule has been applied to a judgment of forfeiture of a recognizance. U. S. v. Wallace, 46 Fed. Rep. 569. As to relief in equity see Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. (U. S.) 444; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3; Phillips v. Negley, 117 U. S. 665. See a case complicated by death of defendant. U. S. v. Insley, 49 Fed. Rep. 776.

As to when there could be no relief on habeas corpus, see Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214.

4. In general, as to the effect of surrender of the principal by special bail, see BAIL, vol. 2, p. 38.

In Massachusetts, in 1811, on scire facias it was held not to be sufficient excuse for bail not surrendering their principal, that he was confined in prison for counterfeiting. Parker v. Chandler, 8 Mass. 264. But in 1819 it was held that bail who had surrendered their principal were discharged by his subsequent sentence to State prison. Bigelow v. Johnson, 16 Mass. 218.

In Connecticut, such seasonable surrender is good for discharge. Ruggles v. Corey, 3 Conn. 419. But compare Lockwood v. Jones, 7 Conn. 431; Beebe v. Gardner, 11 Conn. 104.

In New York, in 1820, bail were held entitled to an exoneretur, where their principal had been sentenced to the Vermont State prison for thirteen years for counterfeiting. Loflin v. Fowler, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 335. Otherwise, in 1827, in case of a two years' sentence. Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Mowatt, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 599. In 1839 bail was held entitled to an exoneretur, where before return of the capias against him, his attempt to surrender the principal was frustrated by the latter's imprisonment for life. Cathcart v. Cannon, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 28.

5. The New York code expressly provides for relief of the bail of one imprisoned on a criminal charge, B.'s N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 101, § 50.

In a cause in a Federal court in Pennsylvania, in 1830, one who had become bail to the marshal entered special bail, and on exception and refusal to justify, he was sued on the bail bond, and surrendered the principal before the return of the writ. It was held, that the surrender was good, and that the bail was entitled to relief on the usual terms. Stockton v. Throgmorton, Baldw. (U. S.) 148.

Bail in Pennsylvania may follow their principal into the District of Co-

Where the principal would be entitled to an immediate and unconditional discharge if he had been surrendered, the bail are entitled to relief by entering an exoneretur without any surrender.¹

The codes generally provide very explicitly for the surrender of the principal, frustration, the effect, etc.²

lumbia, and there take him out of the custody of the person who has become bail for him in that District. If the principal be brought into the circuit court of that District to be surrendered to the marshal, he will be ordered by the court to be delivered up to the Pennsylvania bail; in case of conflict of State laws, that of the commonwealth, in which the parties are, must prevail. Sharpless v. Knowles, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 129.

In Illinois: "If any defendant, having given special bail in any action, shall afterward be legally arrested and delivered over to the executive authority of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, upon a charge of having committed a crime out of the jurisdiction of this State, and shall be thereupon carried beyond the limits thereof, such bail shall be discharged from all liability incurred as bail, if the defendant has not returned to this State discharged from such arrest, before he shall be liable to be charged as bail for such defendant." Illinois Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 162, § 23.

1. Olcutt v. Lilly, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 407. And this, a fortiori, where the law prohibits the party from being imprisoned at all; or where, by the positive operation of law, a surrender is prevented. Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 329—quoted in note at BAIL, vol. 2, p. 39.

The act of Congress of 1839 gives immediate effect to the State laws in regard to imprisonment of debtors, as well in cases pending as in those begun subsequently. It relates to the remedy and does not impair the contract obligation. Where appearance bail had been given theretofore, the defendants are not bound to give special bail, but may be discharged on motion on common bail. Gray v. Munroe, 1 McLean (U. S.) 528.

2. E. g., Birdseye's New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 100, §§ 42, et seq.

In Ohio, the bail may, for the purpose of surrendering the defendant, arrest him at any time or place, before he is finally charged, or, by a written authority indorsed on a certified copy of the undertaking, may empower any person of suitable age and discretion to do so. Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5513.

In Kansas so also. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4252.

In Virginia, against a defendant about to abscond, the plaintiff may, after giving bond, etc., sue out a capias ad respondendum, the form of which writ shall, in a suit in equity, as well as in an action at law, be, as nearly as may be, assimilated to the form of such writ as it was used at law before the first day of July, 1850; the defendant to give bond to appear and answer interrogatories. Virginia Code, 1887, §§ 2991-2, 2997. It seems, that the function and liability of the sureties therein would be that of ordinary special bail. See Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 168; Branch v. Webb, 7 Leigh (Va.) 371; Allen v. Hamilton, 9 Gratt (Va.) 255.

A plea by special bail that the principal was imprisoned in Pennsylvania was, by the Virginia court of appeals, held to be unavailing—the incarceration preceding the date of the undertaking. Ross v. Randolph, 5 Call (Va.) 297.

3. In Illinois, discharge of the defendant in insolvency or bankruptcy entitles the bail to have an exoneretur, provided that judgment shall not have been recovered against him as the bail of such defendant. Illinois Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 162, § 24.

A discharge of the principal under insolvent laws—e. g., of Louisiana—does not affect the liability of bail theretofore fixed. Lyon v. Auchincloss, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 234. Or, e. g., under those of Pennsylvania. Bobyshall v. Oppenheimer, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 317. But compare Richardson v. McIntyre, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 412.

4. Death of the Principal.—A like rule and restriction apply in case of the death of the principal.¹

V. EXCESSIVE BAIL.—In criminal cases, what is, or what is not "excessive bail" within the constitutional inhibition, is rather a matter of sound discretion, aided somewhat by precedent.² But in civil cases, the ad damnum clause in the writ, together with a statutory restriction to double of the amount thereof, ordinarily render infrequent the instances of grievance therefor.³ Still, the criterion, of course, is, as in criminal cases, the probability of the defendant's appearing; and this is generally determinable by his known character and means. It seems that no civil action would lie against a justice for demanding an excess.⁴

the ca. sa. may be pleaded in bar to a scire facias against the bail. Byrne v. Carpenter, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 481. So also as to a discharge in bankruptcy. Bennet v. Alexander, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 90.

In Massachusetts, a plea that the principal is discharged in bankruptcy and that the debt ought to have been proved therein is good. Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 481.

1. In Maryland, where the English practice prevails, if the principal dies after the return of the ca. sa., and before the return of the scire facias, the liability of the bail is considered fixed by the return of the ca. sa. Davidson v. Taylor, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604.

In Illinois, death of the principal before the return day exonerates the bail; but they may be liable for costs. Illinois Rev. Stat. 1891, p. 162, § 22.

In Rhode Island, death of the principal before the return day of the execution discharges the bail. Rhode Island Pub. Stat. 1883, p. 619, § 6.

In California, "The bail are exonerated by the death of the defendant, or his imprisonment in a State prison, or by his legal discharge from the obligation to render himself amenable to the process." California Code Civ. Proc. 1885, § 491. Compare B's New York Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 101, § 51.

In Ohio, so also. Ohio Rev. Stat. 1890, § 5514.

In Kansas, so also. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, § 4253.

In Nebraska, arrest and imprisonment for debt were abolished in 1887. Nebraska L. 1887, p. 654.

In New Hampshire, if the principal dies after a return of non est inventus, the bail is holden for the amount of the judgment. Hamilton v. Dunklee, 1 N. H. 172.

4. In Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 374—trespass on the case against a justice of the peace, purporting to be founded on a violation of the constitutional inhibition of excessive bail—the court, by Woodbury, J., said: "It is not certain that, as a general principle, civil remedies can be prosecuted for all violations of the constitution. [Citing Nantucket v. Cotton, 14 Mass. 243—that no appeal lies from a judge's assessment of a pauper's relatives.] Indictments and impeachments seem the only redress for some of them; though it can hardly be questioned that a civil remedy, also, may be sustained for all those violations which at common law or by statute have been pronounced actionable.

"The offense of denying, delaying, or obstructing bail where it ought to be granted, was not only known at the common law, but was punishable by action . . . as well as by indictment. [Citing 4 Bl. Com. 296.] Yet to constitute this offense it must have been manifest that either the number or the sum required was unreasonable; for the officer who demanded them was at the same time liable if he accepted insufficient bail. . . . It was once the practice to require of the bail corpus pro corpore. [Citing Castell's Widow v. Bambridge, Strange 854—case against Bambridge, warden of the Fleet, for compelling Castell while therein imprisoned to catch the smallpox.]

"Judicial officers are, for obvious reasons, exempt from civil prosecutions for their acts. [Citing Kent, C. J., in Yates v. Lansing, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 289.] This does not give to magistrates any dangerous immunity. The Definition. SPECIAL BAILIFF—SPECIAL CASE. Definition.

In dealing with arrests and bail bonds, the courts will not go into nice questions of law, on complicated affidavits.¹

In some states, arrest in civil cases is not permitted unless the plaintiff make affidavit that the defendant is indebted to him in a certain sum.²

If another suit is pending elsewhere for the same cause of action, the bail will be reduced to a nominal sum, or only common bail allowed.³

SPECIAL BAILIFF.—See BAILIFF, vol. 2, p. 39.

SPECIAL CASE.—(See also REPORT AND CASE MADE; VERDICT).—1. A statement in writing of the facts proved on the trial of a cause, drawn up and settled by the attorneys and counsel for the respective parties under the supervision of the judge, for the purpose of having certain points of law, which arose at the trial and could not then be satisfactorily decided, determined upon full argument before the court in banc. This is otherwise called a case reserved, or made; and it is usual for the parties, where the law of the case is doubtful, to agree that the jury shall find a general verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon such a case to be made, instead of obtaining from the jury a special verdict.⁴

2. The constitutions of California and New York provide that the legislature may confer jurisdiction upon the county courts in "special cases." As thus used, the term "special cases" has been held to embrace "those cases that are the creation of statute, and the proceedings under which are unknown to the general framework of the courts of common law and equity."⁵ constitution forbids all courts of law, as well as single 'magistrates' to require 'excessive' bail. If the members of a higher court, therefore, violate this prohibition, they are equally liable with a justice of the peace; and an indictment or an impeachment would seem to be sufficient remedies. Any suffering to individuals, that might be apprehended from the great numbers and limited knowledge of single magistrates, can always be soon obviated; as the person committed for a failure to procure bail, which appears excessive, possesses the right to be brought before a judge of this court by habeas corpus, and to have the sum reduced, if, under all the circumstances, it is thought too large."

1. In Burton v. Haworth, 4 B. & Ad. 467, 24 E. C. L. 103, the court by Taunton, J., said: "The arrest may have proceeded on improper motives, but we cannot try the merits of the cause on affidavits. This is not one of those clear cases, of which Chambers

v. Bernasconi, 6 Bing. 498, 19 E. C. L. 149, is an instance, where the court, unless they shut their eyes, cannot but see that the process has been improperly used, and where, therefore, they are justified in interfering summarily. In Nizetich v. Bonacich, 5 B. & Ald. 904, 7 E. C. L. 296, there was a letter of the plaintiff, acknowledging in one line that the defendant was his creditor; the case lay in a nutshell. Here it is very different."

SPECIAL DAMAGES—(See also DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 50; LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 13, p. 434; NUISANCES, vol. 16, p. 922; TRESPASS; TROVER).—Special damage is that which the law does not necessarily imply that the plaintiff has sustained from the act complained of. It is often very difficult to distinguish general from special damage. The necessary result of an injury is often and easily confounded with the natural and proximate result, and all legal damage, whether general or special, must naturally and proximately result from the act or default complained of. It is difficult to lay down any general rule by which to determine when the law implies the damage and when it does not. It would seem, however, that when the consequences of an injury are peculiar to the circumstances and condition of the injured party, the law could not imply the damage simply from the act causing the injury.¹

SPECIAL FINDING—(Compare FINDING, vol. 7, p. 991; VERDICT).—A "special finding" is not a mere report of the evidence, but a statement of the ultimate facts on which the law of the case must determine the rights of the parties; a finding of the propositions of fact which the evidence establishes and not the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest.²

SPECIAL IMPARLANCE.—See PLEADING, vol. 18, p. 506.

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT—(See also BILLS AND NOTES, vol. 2, p. 382).—An indorsement in full, which, besides the indorser's signature, designates the person in whose favor the indorsement is made; thus, "Pay C. D. or order, A. B." is a special indorsement.

In the following cases the scope of the term as used in these constitutional provisions was considered: Griswold v. Sheldon, 4 N. Y. 581; Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 593; Doubleday v. Heath, 16 N. Y. 80; Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57; People v. Main, 20 N. Y. 434; Beecher v. Allen, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 169; Hall v. Nelson, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 88; Benson v. Cromwell, 6 Abb. Pr. The definition as given in the text has been much shaken in New York by the decision in Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57; but is still sustained by the California cases.

SPECIAL MOTION.—See MOTIONS, vol. 15, p. 893.

SPECIAL PARTNER OR PARTNERSHIP.—(See also LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, vol. 13, p. 802; PARTNERSHIP, vol. 17, p. 889).—There is, perhaps, some distinction in these phrases; special partner usually means the partner, who under laws authorizing the formation of limited partnerships, puts in a definite capital, assumes no part (or only such as the statute permits) in the business management, and is liable only to loss of the capital contributed. But the partnership thus formed is commonly called a limited partnership; and special partnership may well mean one formed for a single branch of business or subject.³

SPECIAL PLEA.—A plea other than the general issue.⁴

1. Steph. Pl. (3d Am. ed.) 179. This definition is approved by the dictionaries of Black, Burrill and Brown. But Bouvier and Anderson define "special issue" as being a plea to the action which denies some particular material allegation, which is in effect a denial of the entire right of action. The term is probably used in both senses. Abb. L. Dict.

A law which applies only to an individual, or to a number of individuals selected out of the class to which they belong, is a special and not a general law. State v. California Min. Co., 15 Nev. 249.

"On the subject of general issues, it remains only to remark that other pleas are ordinarily distinguished from them by the appellation of special pleas; and when resort is had to the latter kind, the party is said to plead specially, in opposition to pleading the general issue." Steph. Pl. (3d Am. ed.) 179.

"When the allegations (or pleadings, as they are called) of the contending parties in an action, are not of the general or ordinary form, but are of a more complex or special character, they are denominated special pleadings; and when a defendant pleads a plea of this description (i. e., a special plea) he is said to plead specially, in opposition to pleading the general issue. These terms have given rise to the popular denomination of that science which, though properly called pleading, is generally known by the name of special pleading. Hence, also, the denomination of 'special pleader'

3. Debts by specialty are such whereby a sum of money becomes or is acknowledged to be due by an instrument under seal. 2 Bl. Com. 465, followed in January v. Goodman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 208.

A specialty is a contract executed with the solemnities of sealing and delivery, and is emphatically styled a Statute of Limitations.—"Specialties" were not within the statute of 21 James I, ch. 16, the English statute upon which the Statutes of Limitation of most of the States are founded. The term, as used in that statute and in its American counterparts, has in some jurisdictions received a more extended meaning than would be warranted by the definitions given above, and has been held to include judgments, liabilities created by statute, etc.

Judgments, Liabilities Created by Statute.—In Stockwell v. Coleman, 10 Ohio St. 40, an action of debt was brought upon a transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace of the State of Indiana. A plea of the Statute of Limitations of four years was entered. The court by Sutliff, J., said: "It is certain that while the term specialty, in the strict and early use of the word, was regarded as only applicable to bonds, deeds or other instruments under seal, it afterwards came to be used in a much more comprehensive sense. The term specialty has long been used both in England and America in this more comprehensive sense, as embracing debts upon recognizances, judgments and decrees, and (in England certainly) debts upon statutes. And we have no doubt that the word specialty, as used in our Statute of Limitations was intended and does in fact comprehend as well judgments as sealed instruments. . . . This court, however, rests its opinion in the case before us upon the conclusion arrived at, that a judgment of a court of another State is, in the legal and reasonably comprehensive sense of the term, to be regarded in this State as a debt upon a 'specialty;' and such a judgment when sued upon in this State is not subject to a plea of the Statute of Limitations of four years, whether the judgment be that of a court of record or of a court not of record." See also Bobo v. Norton, 10 Ohio St. 514; Bissell v. Jaudon, 16 Ohio St. 498; Randolph v. King, 2 Bond (U. S.) 104. But in Tyler v. Winslow, 15 Ohio St. 366 (followed in Hawkins v. Lasley, 40 Ohio St. 40), it was held that a domestic judgment was not a "specialty" within the statute. These decisions are absolutely irreconcilable upon principle.

In Pease v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 480, it was held that a judgment in a justice's court is not within the Statute of Limitations, like a foreign judgment; "for it is, in an action founded upon it, conclusive evidence of a debt, and is, therefore, not a debt by simple contract but by specialty."

In Seymour v. Street, 5 Neb. 85, it was said that "specialty" originally imported a writing actually under seal, though it has been extended to include judgments.

In Indiana, however, in the case of Kimball v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 282, it was said: "The term 'specialty' employed in the statute, does not embrace a judgment. Says Blackstone: 'A debt of record is a sum of money which appears to be due by the evidence of a court of record.' 'Debts by specialty, or special contract, are such whereby a sum of money becomes, or is acknowledged to be due, by deed or instrument under seal.'" 2 Bl. Com. 465. And though the judgment sued upon in that case was a foreign one, it does not appear that the court intended to limit the doctrine enunciated to foreign judgments. See also Niblack v. Goodman, 67 Ind. 181. To the same effect see Todd v. Crumb, 5 McLean (U. S.) 172. See also David v. Porter, 51 Iowa 254.

These authorities well illustrate the confusion in which the subject is involved. Upon principle and authority it would seem that a judgment is not a specialty; but as it is not an agreement, contract, or promise in writing, it is not within the Statute of Limitations of 21 James I, nor the similar Statutes of Limitation in this country. 7 Wait's Actions and Defenses, p. 253; Dudley v. Lindsey, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 486; 50 Am. Dec. 522; Todd v. Crumb, 5 McLean (U. S.) 172; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 359; Reddington v. Julian, 2 Ind. 224; Stewart v. Peterson, 63 Pa. St. 230; Mahurin v. Bickford, 8 N. H. 54.

The same may be said of statute liabilities. They, too, have been frequently termed specialties by the courts. Jones v. Pope, 1 Wm. Saund. 38; Cork, etc., R. Co. v. Good, 13 C. B. 826; 76 E. C. L. 824; Shepherd v. Hills, 11 Exch. 55; Ward v. Reeder, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 145; Lane v. Morris, 10 Ga. 162; Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mason (U. S.) 243; Van Hook v. Whitlock, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 409; Atwood v. Rhode Island, etc., Bank, 1 R. I. 376.

Except in Ohio (Stockwell v. Coleman, 10 Ohio St. 33, cited supra, this note), it has been generally held that a foreign judgment is not a specialty, even in those jurisdictions in which domestic judgments are so held. Hubbell v. Cowdrey, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 132; Pease v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 479; Jordan v. Robinson, 15 Me. 167; Keith v. Estill, 9 Port. (Ala.) 669; Cameron v. Wurtz, 4 McCord (S. Hard money or specie is a coin of the precious metals, of a certain weight and fineness, with the government stamp thereon, denoting its value as a medium of exchange, or currency. Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 536.

In Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, suit was brought upon a note which was payable "in specie." It was held that when a contract for money is, by its terms, made payable in specie or in coin, judgment may be entered thereon for coined dollars. The court by Field, J., said: "Here the terms 'in specie' are merely descriptive of the kind of dollars in which the note is payable, there being different kinds of circulation, recognized by law. They mean that the designated number of dollars in the note shall be paid in so many gold or silver dollars of the coinage of the United States. They have acquired this meaning by general usage among traders, merchants and bankers, and are the opposite of the terms, in currency, which are used when it is desired to make a note payable in paper money. These latter terms, in currency, mean that the designated number of dollars is payable in an equal number of notes which are current in the community as notes. Paup v. Drew, 10 How. (U. S.) 218." Contra.—In Glover v. Robbins, 49 Ala. 219; 20 Am. Rep. 272, a promissory note for six thousand five hundred dollars was made in October, 1864, and was by its terms payable "in specie." It was held that a judgment for the said sum and interest in gold or silver coin, "being the said plaintiff's damages as assessed by the jury aforesaid, or its equivalent in United States currency," was erroneous, and that the judgment could be recovered only for the amount of the note in United States currency. The court by Peters, J., said: "The note on which this suit is brought bears date on the 10th day of October, 1864, and it is made payable 'in specie.' There was no evidence offered to show what was meant by the word specie. But as there was no objection made to the verdict, which assessed the damages 'in gold or silver coin,' it is supposed that this interpretation was put upon this word by both the plaintiff and the defendant. Yet, as the debt was contracted long after the passage of the legal tender acts of Congress, regulating the payment of such contracts, the judgment should have been for so many dollars only, leaving it to be discharged in any legal tender currency or money of the United States. It is presumed that this is the result of the latest construction of the legal tender acts of Congress by the Supreme Court of the United States; and the decisions of that high tribunal, until modified or overruled, constitute the governing rule, and are a part of the paramount law of the land. Legal Tender Cases (Knox v. Lee, and Parker v. Davis), 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457; Banks v. Supervisors, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 26; 12 U. S. Stat. at L. 345, 532, 709.

1. The statute of 43 Eliz. ch. 2, establishing poor rates in England, imposed no liability on any mines, except coal mines. The English Rating Act of 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., ch. 54, § 3) made all mines assessable to the poor rate; but, by § 8, a lessee till then exempt from being rated, became during the continuance of his lease, entitled to deduct from his rent one-half of the rate, unless he had "specifically contracted to pay such rate in the event of the abolition of the said exemption." A lessee of an iron mine, who became liable to the poor rate under the latter act, and who before its passing had contracted to pay his rent "free from all deductions whatsoever," and also to pay "all manner of taxes, rates, assessments, charges, and impositions whatsoever, parliamentary or parochial, which now are or which shall at any time hereafter," be payable in respect of the mine, was held not to have "specifically" contracted himself out of the benefit of § 8. Lord Hatherley said: "The meaning of the word 'specific' is the reverse of 'general.' We cannot give to a general covenant the force of a specific agreement with regard to a particular tax; and a covenant in a lease to pay all taxes, rents, assessments, charges, and impositions whatsoever, cannot be regarded as a 'specific covenant.'" *Chaloner v. I. DEFINITION.—Specific performance is an equitable remedy which compels the performance of a contract in the precise terms agreed upon, or such a substantial performance as will do justice between the parties, under the circumstances of the case.¹

1. There are two aspects under which this subject may be viewed, one taking it as a branch of equitable jurisprudence, and the other, contemplating the act itself, rather than its judicial quality. Thus, adopting the latter view, Bouvier defines it as "the actual accomplishment of a contract by the party bound to fulfill it," and Burrill, "the performance of a contract in the precise terms agreed upon—strict performance." Waterman qualifies Burrill's definition by including "substantial performance, or such as will do justice between the parties under the circumstances, with compensation to the other party when that is required." Waterman on Sp. Perf., § 1. See Woodbury v. Luddy, 14 Allen (Mass.) 1; 92 Am. Dec. 731; Taggart v. Tevanny, 1 Ind. App. 339; Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 557; Portland, etc., R. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 63 Me. 90; Comer v. Bankhead, 70 Ala. 493; Conaway v. Wright, 5 Del. Ch. 472; while Anderson defines it as "That branch of equity jurisprudence which compels a party to perform his contract in specie." And. L. Dict.; Riddle v. Cameron, 50 Ala. 263; Morgan v. Morgan, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 383; 21 Am. Dec. 638; Dehart v. Dehart, 15 Ind. 167; Johnson v. Johnson, 40 Md. 189.

Courts of law do not enforce specific performance unless authorized by statute. Their sole remedy is in damages. McLane v. Elmer, 4 Ind. 239; Harnett v. Yielding, 2 S. & L. 586; Tasker v. Small, 3 M. & C. 63.

Under the early statute in Massachusetts, courts of law were given limited equitable jurisdiction, which included the power to decree specific performance, but the powers thus granted were strictly construed. See Kidder v. Hunt, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 328; 11 Am. Dec. 183; Adams v. Townsend, 1 Met. (Mass.) 483; Jacobs v. Peterborough, etc., R. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 223; Buck v. Dowley, 16 Gray (Mass.) 555.

The chancellor may award damages, either in lieu of performance which may be impossible of strict enforcement, or in addition thereto. See infra, this title, Decree—Compensation in Lieu of Performance.

This money judgment of the chancellor is not damages, however, but is termed "compensation." But compensation is not awarded where damages is the sole relief sought, and the suit which should have been brought at law was brought in chancery by pretense: thus, where a grantor of land filed a bill in equity for the specific

II. ORIGIN AND NATURE OF REMEDY.—As a remedy it is exclusively equitable, although the rights it enforces may be legal as well as equitable,¹ and is as old as equity jurisprudence itself. The earliest cases in the reports are found in the time of Edw. III, where specific performance of a marriage settlement was decreed;² and of Edward IV, where the chancellor enforced the performance of an agreement to build a house.³ In the reign of Elizabeth we find a number of cases where a decree of specific performance was ordered. At that time, and for some years after, much hostility existed between the chancellors and the common-law judges over their respective authority and jurisdiction, the latter denying the right to specific performance while the former maintained it.⁴

The authorities, indeed, trace the remedy back to the Roman law, where, according to Pothier, even contracts in relation to chattels were enforceable, although the English rule has not yet been carried thus far, until recently.⁵ In 1800 the right had become so well recognized that Sir William Grant declared that where the parties were competent and the contract unobjectionable, it was as much of course in chancery to decree specific performance as to give damages at law.⁶ The granting or denial of the relief sought rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court, in view of all the circumstances of the case.⁷ It is not to be exer-performance of a contract to reconvey upon the performance of certain conditions, and prayed for damages for non-performance, knowing that his grantees had conveyed the land to third parties, who had no knowledge of his alleged equities, and thereby had disabled themselves from performing the contract, it was held that a court of equity had no jurisdiction to award damages. In such case an allegation in the bill of notice to the subsequent purchasers, the complainant knowing better, was regarded as intended merely to give color of jurisdiction to a court of chancery, and the bill was dismissed. Doan v. Mauzey, 33 Ill. 227.

Under the New York Code, the court may award damages in lieu of a performance, where performance is impossible and the alternative relief is prayed for. Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 159.

a matter of absolute right in either party,¹ and a much stronger case is required to maintain the suit than to defeat it.² But the use of the term "discretionary" is misleading and inaccurate, for, in a proper case—that is, where all the necessary elements, conditions, and incidents are present—relief by way of specific performance should be granted as a matter of course, and not merely as a matter of favor within the arbitrary discretion of the trial court.³ Inflexible rules cannot be laid down for the exercise of this power.⁴ It is so largely discretionary that seemingly similar facts cannot always claim the same remedies. The relations of the parties and the circumstances of the case are potent factors in its application. It may be stated broadly, however, that courts are held to much stricter adherence to the doctrines governing judicial discretion in the enforcement of contracts relating to chattels and to personal conduct than in the enforcement of agreements concerning land. From their very nature, real-estate contracts which it is proper to enforce at all

Lord Hardwicke, in Joynes v. Statham, 2 Atk. 388, said: "The constant doctrine of this court is that it is in their discretion whether in such a bill they would decree a specific performance or leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law."

In McCarty v. Kyle, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 348, the court by Milligan, J., said: "The specific execution of a contract is decreed at the sound discretion of a court of chancery, but it is a jurisdiction so important and so long and frequently exercised that the principles by which it is governed are nearly as well settled as if regulated by positive enactment." Citing Cock v. Evans, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 287; Humbard v. Humbard, 3 Head (Tenn.) 100.

are enforced specifically as a matter of course,¹ while other contracts are not.²

The discretion to refuse is not to be exercised where the contract which the plaintiff seeks to enforce is evidently fair in all its parts, free from fraud or error, and founded on a proper consideration. In such cases it would be the exercise of arbitrary power to refuse relief.³ Specific performance is akin to certain other branches of equity jurisprudence, such as injunction and rescission. Under certain circumstances it differs but slightly from injunction; where the circumstances are alike, affirmative relief will take the form of a decree for specific performance, or negative relief may be afforded by injunction. In the one instance, the court decrees that the offending party shall perform an agreement which he has broken, and in the other, the court forbids and prevents the breach which he is about to make.⁴

It is the exact reverse of rescission, the defendant who resists the application for specific performance standing in much the Specific performance of a contract to convey land will not be refused on the ground of an adequate remedy at law, as there could be recovered at law only the excess of the sum agreed to be paid above the market value when the contract was to be performed, and this is an inadequate remedy. Thus, where defendant had contracted to construct a secure building foundation for plaintiff and failed to do so, and the plaintiff then did the necessary work and sued defendant, praying for a specific performance by requiring defendant to reimburse to plaintiff his money expended, the court of chancery very properly held this to be a mere claim for damages, and refused to entertain jurisdiction. To enjoin from refusing performance is, in effect, to decree specific performance; and this the chancellor cannot do in vacation. Lowell Machine Shop v. Atlanta Cotton Factory Co., 60 Ga. 233.

Upon a bill for a specific execution of an agreement and an injunction, it is clear, that if, upon the plaintiff's case, as made out by his bill, he is not entitled to a specific execution of the agreement set up by him, he cannot be entitled to an injunction, which is only ancillary to the principal object of the suit. Allen v. Burke, 2 Md. Ch. 534.

same attitude as that of the plaintiff who seeks a rescission.¹ But the relative positions of the parties are not precisely the same, for the heavier burden in each case is on the plaintiff.²

III. JURISDICTION AND POWER OF THE COURT.—The jurisdiction of courts of equity is not confined within the narrow limits that once bound it. The constant tendency has been to broaden their powers. Especially is this true in the exercise of jurisdiction in suits for specific performance.³ The former doctrine was the general principle of equity that the suitor could only invoke this remedy when relief in damages was wholly inadequate. And this is still the rule,⁴ stated broadly and subject to many excep-

Though inadequacy of price is not a ground for decreeing an agreement to be delivered up or a sale rescinded unless its grossness amount to fraud, yet it may be sufficient for the court to refuse to enforce performance. It is not uncommon for the court to refuse to enforce for inadequacy and at the same time to refuse to rescind." See Clitherall v. Ogilvie, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 257; Seymour v. Delancy, 3 Cow. It has been held that the vendor of land has the right to come into a court of equity to compel the specific performance of a contract of sale against the vendee, although he may have another and adequate remedy at law for the purchase money, and the vendee has the same liberty. Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60; Brown v. Haff, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 235; 28 Am. Dec. 425; Phyfe v. Wardell, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 283; 28 Am. Dec. 430; Schroeppel v. Hopper, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 425; *Cathcart v. See infra, this title, Contracts Relating to Land.

In Andrews v. Sullivan, 7 Ill. 327; 43 Am. Dec. 53, the court by Scates, J., states the general rule that equity will not interfere where the party has his remedy at law, and adds: "It is also true that an action at law may be maintained upon this note (a purchase-money note) if plaintiff has performed his part of the agreement. But it is equally true that one particular branch of the jurisdiction of courts of equity is the enforcement of a specific execution of contracts. While the rule, therefore, is general, it is not universal," and quotes from Sugden on Vendors 216: "If either the vendor or the vendee refuse to perform the contract, the other may bring an action for breach of contract, or file a bill for a specific performance, although it appears to have been formerly thought that as a vendor only wants the purchase money, his remedy was at law."

The distinction is made by the New York court in Rindge v. Baker, 57 N. Y. 219; 15 Am. Rep. 475, by Dwight, Com., thus: "If the action be brought for damages for breach of contract, it is a case at law. If it be brought for money by way of performance of the contract, it is a case in equity. Thus, where a vendor, in a contract for sale of land, sues for the price, his action is equitable. The mutuality of the contract gives each of the parties the same remedy, and yet the recovery by the vendor is simply in money.

"If this theory did not prevail in respect to contracts partly performed, the vendor would be utterly without remedy, since it is well settled that there is no action at law on a parol contract in part performed." And see Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Scruggs, 50 Miss. 284.

Where, on a bill by a vendor, it appeared that by the contract the vendee had the right to relieve himself from the purchase by paying a stipulated sum, it was held that the right to come into equity for specific performance being clear, the court, in refusing that decree, might, under the rule that if jurisdiction in equity once attaches, the court may go on to do complete justice, decree the payment by the vendee of the stipulated sum to the vendor, although the vendor might have recovered the same at law. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 264. Compare Stevenson v. Buxton, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 414.

Of course, where the complainant would have a remedy more adequate and full at law than a decree for specific performance could give him, equity will not interfere. Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 339.

Chancery will not enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land of small value where there are no both damages and performance, but will be required to elect his remedy; and the refusal to grant this relief in equity will not preclude a recovery at law.¹

On the other hand, it has been held that one who possesses the right of enforcement in equity may lose that right by first prosecuting his claim to judgment at law,² although such is not the equitable grounds, and an adequate remedy at law may be had for much less cost. Blake v. Flatley, 44 N. J. Eq. 228.

Where decreeing the specific performance of a contract will impose upon one of the parties a large burden of expense, without any practical benefit to the other, the court will refuse to grant a decree, and leave the plaintiff to his action at law. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Schoeneman, 90 Ill. 258; Royle v. Wynne, C. & P. 252; Heywood v. Covington, 4 Leigh (Va.) 373; Long v. Colston, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 111; Herrington v. Hubbard, 2 Ill. 569; 33 Am. A recovery of damages in an action for the breach of a covenant by the grantee of land for the purpose of a public square, to grade, inclose, and improve the premises, is a bar to a bill for the specific performance of such covenant. But a recovery for the breach of a covenant to forever keep the premises open as a public square, is not a bar to a subsequent bill for specific performance of the covenant, it being a continuing covenant. Stuyvesant v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 11 Paige (N. Y.) 414.

In Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 6 Leigh (Va.) 175; 29 Am. Dec. 208, the court, by Carr, J., said: "The ground on which equity first assumed the power of giving specific performance of contracts, was to aid the defective remedy of the common law. A man bought a tract of land; it pleased his taste, and he wanted it for a residence. After he had paid his money, the vendor changed his mind, refused a title, and the vendee could only sue at law for the money he had paid. Equity said: This is not justice, if the vendee wants the land, he shall have it in specie. Having gone thus far the courts, on the ground of reciprocity, went a step further, and said that the vendor also should have their aid if the vendee refused to execute the contract. But they did not say, and could not say, that the vendor might break his covenant, suffer a suit on it at law, take his chance of defense there, and when judgment was recovered against him, begin a new race in equity for a specific execution."

It seems to be regarded as an insuperable barrier to a decree for specific performance that the plaintiff, before the filing of his bill had failed in an attempt to enforce the agreement at law. Story Eq. Jur., § 737; Swinfen v. Swinfen, 2 De G. & J. 381.

Vendors of land sued the purchaser for their damages by reason of his failure to perform. Upon trial before a judge, a jury being waived, they failed to prove any damages. Held, that the court could not grant a judgment for specific performance, although the evidence warranted such a suit. Towle v. Jones, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 449; Cowenhoven v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

The commencement of a suit at law for breach of a contract, is not of itself a bar to a suit in the court of chancery, by the other party, for a specific performance. Brush v. Vandenberg, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 21.

In Long v. Colston, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 110, Long, considering that Colston had broken his covenant, sued on it at law. Instead of defending himself there, Colston filed a bill, offering a specific execution, and praying that the whole matter might be transferred into equity. On the broad ground that in cases proper for specific execution, though the party aggrieved may have elected to proceed at law for damages, yet as he might have resorted to equity for a specific performance, and as in equity rem-universal rule.¹ The fact that one party to a contract might have recovered damages at law of the other for his non-performance is no reason why the former should not have a decree for a specific performance.² The aim of the courts is to grant equitable relief whenever such a decree would best accomplish the ends of justice.³ The jurisdiction may be said to reach all contracts the specific performance of which would be indispensable to justice, all contracts for the breach of which there could be no proper measure of damages, all cases, indeed, where the judgment of a court of law could not put the plaintiff in as beneficial and satisfactory a situation as enforcement might, or as he would have been in, had the contract been originally fulfilled. And where equity once obtains jurisdiction it proceeds to adjust all questions material to complete justice between the parties.⁴ The decree of chancery in such cases operates in rem as well as in personam, although its primary aim is rather to reach the person and control the conscience of the defendant than to affect his property.⁵

edies ought to be reciprocal, the aggrieved party might compel him to abandon his common-law remedy, and hold him to a remedy for specific performance.

The remedy of specific performance is based upon the existence of a contract between the parties to the suit or between those through whom they claim; and when it was settled by a prior action at law that no such contract or promise was ever made, and that the acts done and claimed as in performance were under a mere parol license, no specific performance can be decreed. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 112 Ill. 384; 54 Am. Rep. 243.

1. In Connihan v. Thompson, 111 Mass. 270, the court, by Wells, J., said: "The remedy in equity by compelling specific performance and that at law in damages for the breach are both in affirmance of the contract. They are alternative remedies, but not inconsistent; and remedy in both forms might be sought in one and the same action. If the plaintiff institutes separate actions, he cannot carry both to judgment and satisfaction. He may be compelled, by order of the court, at any stage of the proceedings, to elect which he will further prosecute. But the mere commencement or pendency of one will not bar the other, or defeat the action." Citing Livingston v. Kane, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 224; Rogers v. Vosburgh, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 84.

rupted possession, but through his own fault prevented the title from being conveyed, it was held that he should be compelled to execute the contract, although he had commenced an action before the bill was filed, and obtained judgment for breach of covenant. *Hughes v. A will directed a devisee to convey certain land in another State to M. On a suit to compel the conveyance it was held that the devisee could base no defense on the argument that as M could not have maintained an action in such State to recover the land, the will not being recorded there, his heirs could not maintain an action to compel a conveyance. McQuerry v. Gilleland (Ky. 1890), 12 S. W. Rep. 1037.

If a defendant is personally within the jurisdiction of the court, the court has jurisdiction as to his property situated beyond the reach of the process of the court; and he may be compelled either to bring the property in dispute within the jurisdiction of the court, or to execute such a transfer of conveyance thereof as will vest the legal title, as well as the possession of the property, according to the lex loci rei sita. Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 615; 22 Am. Dec. 674.

Thus in Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444, Lord Hardwicke decreed the specific performance of a contract relative to the boundary between the colonies of Pennsylvania and Maryland. And in Archer v. Preston (cited in 1 Vern. 135), the court decreed the specific performance of a contract concerning land in Ireland. See Arglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 237; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 159. And in Derby v. Athol, 1 Ves. 202, the court maintained its right to consider the title to the Isle of Man, where equitable interests were involved.

A court of equity may compel the specific performance of a contract to purchase land, though such contract was both made and to be performed, and the land lies within a foreign jurisdiction; provided the defendant has been duly served with process, and subjected to the jurisdiction of the court. Cleveland v. Burrill, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 532.

But where part only of the persons from whom such conveyance is required are residents of the State, and the court has not acquired jurisdiction over the court, no matter where the property in suit be situated.¹ While this is true, the courts have no power to pass the title to land situated abroad. They may compass practically the same end by binding the conscience of its owner and compelling him to carry out his agreements concerning it; but there is no authority to directly affect the land itself or the title of it, and the deed of a master appointed to convey for the contractor will have no efficacy.²

It is not always essential to the jurisdiction that the defendant persons of the non-residents, so that complete relief cannot be had in that suit, the cause will be dismissed; especially where no real necessity exists for trenching upon the rule discountenancing multiplicity of suits. Penn v. Hayward, 14 Ohio St. 302.

Ward v. Arredondo, Hopk. (N. Y.) 213; 14 Am. Dec. 543, was a suit in the New York courts by a resident of the West Indies against other residents of those islands to enforce a contract made in Cuba for the conveyance of Alabama lands. The court, on appeal, sustained the jurisdiction, and, by Sandford, Ch., said: "This is in effect a bill to enforce a specific performance of the contract by laying hold of the deed which is within the jurisdiction of the court. If the land and all parties were within the jurisdiction it would be the ordinary case. The peculiarity is, that the land and the only party defendant who has an interest, is out of the jurisdiction. An objection has been made that there may be different suits under different jurisdictions, and thence that there may be conflicting decisions. It is very true that none but the Alabama courts can determine the title to the land in the last resort. . . .

The elementary principle seems to be that the jurisdiction may be upheld wherever the parties or the subjects are within the jurisdiction, that an effectual decree can be made and enforced so as to do justice between the parties. . . . The dispute, then, is about a personal contract which is transitory and may be enforced in any country. To enforce it here encroaches not upon any jurisdiction of Spain or Alabama. The deed is subject to our jurisdiction; that deed is such a portion of the subject in question, that by acting upon it, the court may decide the controversy, and do complete justice between the parties." See Myres v. De Mier, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 343.

The courts will enforce a contract to execute a mortgage upon land situated abroad. Hicks v. Turck, 86 Mich. 214.

In Kansas, etc., R. Const. Co. v. Topeka R. Co., 135 Mass. 34; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 495; 46 Am. Rep. 439, suit was brought in a Massachusetts court by a Kansas construction company against a Kansas railroad corporation and a citizen of Massachusetts to enforce specific performance of a covenant contained in a contract for the delivery of bonds and certificates of stock in payment of work to be performed in Kansas by the plaintiff and to enjoin the Massachusetts defendant from disposing of shares of stock and railroad bonds alleged to have been delivered to him in violation of the rights of plaintiff. The defendant railroad company had an office in Massachusetts for the transfer of shares of its capital stock and appeared to the suit by its attorney. Upon the ground that the delivery of the certificates was but a small part of the contract and that the performance of the work contemplated not having been executed it was of such a nature that a Massachusetts court at least would be powerless to compel its execution, specific performance of the contract against the defendants was refused.

be personally before the court, for in many instances the presence within the jurisdiction of the property involved gives the court the opportunity to enforce its decree, and enables it to control possession and title to chattels, even where the party sought to be bound is not subject to judicial process. Nor is the locus of the chattel or of the contract material, if jurisdiction of the person can be acquired.¹ The transfer of corporate stock may be decreed² whether the corporation be domestic or foreign, and the contracts of corporations may be enforced, the courts exercising the same jurisdiction over acts and contracts of private and municipal corporations that they do over the acts of individuals.³ The courts may compel the McIlvaine, J., says: "It does not follow, however, that a court having power to compel the parties before it to convey lands situated in another State may make its own decree to operate in such conveyance. Indeed, it is well settled that the decree of such court cannot operate to transfer title of land situate in a foreign jurisdiction. And this, for the reason that a judgment or decree in rem cannot operate beyond the limits of the jurisdiction or State wherein it is rendered. And, if a decree in such case cannot effect the transfer of the title to such lands, it is clear that a deed executed by a master under the direction of the court can have no greater effect." See Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 389; Page v. McKee, 3 Bush (Ky.) 135; 96 Am. Dec. 201; Howard v. Huffman, 3 Head (Tenn.) 462; 75 Am. Dec. 783. By the laws of Ohio, a decree for the conveyance of land operates as a conveyance, but it cannot so operate if the land is de facto under a foreign jurisdiction when the proceedings are commenced, although within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the decree at its rendition. Where a bill was filed to compel a conveyance of land within the territory claimed both by Michigan and Ohio over which jurisdiction was at the time exercised by Michigan, although the general assembly of Ohio had by law extended the jurisdiction of that State over the territory, and a subpoena was served within that territory upon the defendant by leaving a copy at his residence in his absence—held, that the decree for a conveyance was inoperative as to the land; also, that there was no such service as to give the court jurisdiction of the defendant's person. Daniels v. Stevens, 19 Ohio 222.

Mortgaged land in Massachusetts was there sold on foreclosure. Held, that a court of equity in Vermont could compel the purchaser of the equity of redemption to pay the deficiency, his deed subjecting him to the obligation to do so. Davis v. Hulett, 58 Vt. 90.

Rep. 439, the court refused to entertain a bill by one foreign corporation against another and a citizen, where the transactions done, or to be done were beyond the State and of such character that the court could not control them.

In Massachusetts, a bill will not lie against a foreign corporation unless such corporation be properly before the court by voluntary appearance or by attachment. Desper v. Continental Water Meter Co., 137 Mass. 252.

Of course where a suit is brought against an alien, or a non-resident, whether an individual or a corporation, such defendant must be properly before the court by appearance or by summons or attachment, it being impossible for the court to extend the enforcement of almost every class of contract, whether entered into or to be executed within the State or outside of it, their extraordinary powers extending to the enforcement of all proper contracts which by their nature can find no satisfactory or legal enforcement at law.¹ This is subject to the limitation that a foreign contract, to be specifically enforced, must be legally enforceable in the country where it was entered into, as well as consistent with the law and policy of this country.² As the decree strictly and primarily operates against the person rather than in rem, the general rule is that suit may be brought and jurisdiction entertained in the county where the defendant resides; or, if he be a non-resident, in any forum where process may be had upon him.³ Some courts have held that in the absence of statute, such suits, if they relate to real estate contracts, are to be commenced only in the county or district where the land is,⁴ but such is not the true rule, the authorities generally allowing the county of the defendant's residence to determine the jurisdiction.⁵

IV. EQUITABLE MAXIMS, APPLIED AND ILLUSTRATED.—Most of the maxims of equity have full application to the equitable remedy under consideration, notably those which follow.

arm of its process into a foreign State. Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ala. 498; 3 Am. St. Rep. 758; Sayre v. Elyton Land Co., 73 Ala. 85; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 350; Camden, etc., Co. v. Swede Iron Co., 32 N. J. L. 15. See Shafer v. O'Brien, 31 W. Va. 601.

1. Foubert v. Turst, 1 Bro. P. C. 129; March v. Eastern R. Co., 40 N. H. 548; 77 Am. Dec. 732.

The court of chancery has jurisdiction to enforce the performance of contracts made between foreigners, and in a foreign country, although the defendant is only temporarily within the jurisdiction of the court at the time of the service of the process upon him. Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 616; 22 Am. Dec. 669; Waterman on Sp. Perf., § 48.

2. Waterman on Sp. Perf., § 48; Hope v. Hope, 26 L. J. Ch. 417.

The contrary rule applied to the ordinary action at law on contracts seems to be announced in Smith v. Spinolla, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 198, where the court says: "If a foreign creditor pursues his debtor here, he is entitled to the more efficacious remedy provided by our laws." Sicard v. Whale, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 194; Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 346.

4. Burrall v. Eames, 5 Wis. 260; Gartrell v. Stafford, 12 Neb. 545, 41 Am. Rep. 767.

5. Miller v. Rusk, 17 Tex. 170. Or that of one of the defendants. Hearst v. Kuykendall, 16 Tex. 327.

Such would seem to be the Indiana rule (see Coon v. Cook, 6 Ind. 268; Dehart v. Dehart, 15 Ind. 167, and Vail v. Jones, 31 Ind. 467), although in Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 12, upon the strength of a statute requiring actions for the recovery of real estate or an interest therein to be commenced in the county where the land is situated, the action was held to be local.

6. The courts, in applying this maxim to suits for specific performance, expand it into the familiar doctrine that equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract upon which an action at law will not lie. And sometimes the same idea is expressed by declaring that relief is granted whenever a contract is broken which was binding at law and the legal remedy is clearly inadequate. See 3 Parsons on Contracts 353; Flint v. Brandon, 8 Ves. 163; Cannel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243; Aston v. Robinson, 49 Miss. 348; Hickman v. Grimes, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 86; 10 Am. Dec. 714.

See note to Hepburn v. Dunlop, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 206, in Lawyers' Co-op. ed.

Equitable Maxims. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. Equitable Maxims.

In Lemmon v. Tapper, 2 S. & L. 682, the court, by Lord Redesdale, said: "Courts of equity have therefore enforced contracts specifically where no action for damages could be maintained; for at law the party plaintiff must have strictly performed his part, and the inconvenience of insisting upon that in all cases was sufficient to require the interference of courts of equity. They dispense with that which would make compliance with what the law requires oppressive."

And in Getchell v. Jewett, 4 Me. 350, it was held that in order to found a decree for specific performance, it is not necessary that the breach shall be such as would support a claim for damages at law.

The maxim that equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract, upon which an action at law for damages, will not lie, only means that the contract must be such as the law would have recognized if sued on in proper time and under proper circumstances. White v. Butcher, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 231.

In order to obtain a specific performance in equity, the note in writing must be sufficient to maintain an action at law. Barry v. Coombe, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 650.

In other words, equity will supply a remedy where the law affords none, but it will not create a right of action, where none exists at law. Waterman on Sp. Perf., § 13; Hoy v. Hansbrough, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 533; Day v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. 191.

Where a party has no right of action at law, equity will not interfere to enforce a contract, unless there have been some circumstances excusing the failure at law, or a waiver of the forfeiture on the part of the obligee. Tevis v. Richardson, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 654; Allen v. Beal, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 554; 13 Am. Dec. 203.

But it does not follow as a matter of course because the legal obligation is perfect, that specific performance will be decreed. Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 325.

Statutes of Limitation.—Courts of equity follow the law in applying the Statute of Limitations. Hovenden v. Annesley, 2 S. & L. 617; Johnson v. Hopkins, 19 Iowa 49; Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 202; Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (U. S.) 190; Prater v. Sears, 77 Ga. 28.

That is to say, a right of action barred at law by the statute will not be enforced in equity. But even where the claim is not legally barred equity will in its discretion refuse to recognize it if the plaintiff has delayed its prosecution inexcusably. Peters v. Delaplaine, 49 N. Y. 362.

Contra, in Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 168.

Although, under certain circumstances, equity may grant relief even though the Statute of Limitations may have barred the legal remedy. See Norman v. Bennett, 32 W. Va. 614.

It was held in Wright v. Leclair, 3 Iowa 221, that the Statute of Limitation does not necessarily bar a suit for specific performance brought after an action at law would be barred, the legal bar applying save where there are peculiar equitable circumstances affecting the case. See infra, this title, Laches.

Under this rule in Smith v. Carney, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 295, relief was denied on a verbal contract for the sale of land, made before the Statute of Frauds went into operation, as assumpsit alone could be maintained at law for a breach of the contract, and was barred by five years' delay, and more than that time had elapsed between the accruing of the cause of action and the commencement of the suit.

Equity will not give to an executed agreement of the parties contemplating no further act by either, any different effect than that which the law attributes. Stoddard v. Hart, 23 N. Y. 556.

A decedent had executed a deed to be delivered after his death. This in the absence of a delivery during his lifetime would be void at law. But in Jones v. Jones, 6 Conn. 111; 16 Am. Dec. 35, equitable relief was granted and specific performance decreed. See Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329.

Contra, Comer v. Baldwin, 16 Minn. 172.

In Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 18; 21 Am. Dec. 245, the court by Sutherland, J., said: "If an absolute sale, consummated by a deed is void unless such deed is acknowledged in the mode prescribed by the statute, it is impossible that a contract to sell and convey at some future time should be valid."

Married Woman's Contract.—So if a married woman cannot legally make a conveyance of her real estate she can make no contract therefor that equity will recognize. Butler v. Buckingham, 5 Day (Conn.) 492; 5 Am. Dec. 174; Townsley v. Chapin, 12 Allen (Mass.) 476; Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 19; 21 Am. Dec. 245. See Martin v. Mitchell, 2 J. & W. 424.

A mere agreement of a feme covert to convey, though made with the concurrence of her husband, will not be specifically enforced. Blythe v. Dargin, 68 Ala. 370; Bowden v. Bland, 53 Ark. 53; Milwee v. Milwee, 44 Ark. 112.

And a deed by a feme covert which the statute says shall be acknowledged in a particular manner, to be valid, is void in equity if unacknowledged as well as at law. Gebb v. Rose, 40 Md. 387; Johns v. Reardon, 11 Md. 465; Byer v. Etnyre, 2 Gill (Md.) 151; 41 Am. Dec. 410; Steffey v. Steffey, 19 Md. 5; Roseburgh v. Sterling, 27 Pa. St. 292. So with her contract to sell. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521; Butler v. Buckingham, 5 Day (Conn.) 492; 5 Am. Dec. 174.

Where the statute required the husband's assent to his wife's conveyance, her deed, made without that assent, is void and cannot be the foundation of an equity. A court of equity has no more jurisdiction than a court of law to recognize and give effect to instruments inoperative for want of compliance with a condition made by statute a prerequisite to their validity. Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 13; Leonis v. Lazzarovich, 55 Cal. 52; Butler v. Buckingham, 5 Day (Conn.) 492; 5 Am. Dec. 174; Dickinson v. Glenney, 27 Conn. 104; Lane v. McKeen, 15 Me. 304; Gebb v. Goshorn, 17 Ohio 105; 49 Am. Dec. 448. See Dreutzer v. Lawrence, 58 Wis. 594.

Statute of Frauds.—Equity follows the law in that the Statute of Frauds is equally binding upon both. This is subject to the limitation that part performance of a parol contract barred by the statute takes the contract out of the statute in courts of equity although it has no efficacy in a court of law. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, vol. 8, p. 737. See also infra, this title, Statute of Frauds.

Exceptions.—A contract may be void under the Statute of Frauds; yet, if the conduct of the party setting up the invalidity has been such as to raise an equity outside of, and independent of, the contract, and nothing else will be adequate satisfaction of such equity, a court of equity will sustain the sale, though not valid under the statute. Hunt v. Turner, 9 Tex. 385; 60 Am. Dec. 167.

Where a father agreed with his son, upon a valid consideration, to make a certain devise, and, upon his death, the will proved to be invalid for want of witnesses, the agreement was specifically enforced as against testator's heirs at law. Maddox v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431; 68 Am. Dec. 535. See Jones v. Baird, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 167.

Where, under the Statute of Frauds, the agreement must be in writing, equity says: "The form is not regarded, nor the place of signature, provided it be in the handwriting of the party or his agent and furnish evidence of a complete and practicable agreement." Barry v. Coombe, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 650.

An imperfect deed is in equity regarded as an agreement to convey, and where it is acted on by the parties, conveys an equitable title which the courts may enforce. Hill v. Cooper, 6 Oregon 181; Goodlett v. Hansell, 66 Ala. 151; Roney v. Moss, 74 Ala. 390.

The delivery of a deed with an indorsement on the back by the grantee, that he transfers the deed with all its contents, upon certain conditions, gives no legal title to the person holding it; but his rights may be recognized and enforced in a court of equity. Porter v. Read, 19 Me. 363.

When any written instrument is designed to operate as a transfer of property, and proper and apt terms are used, whereby the meaning of the parties can be clearly ascertained, if some circumstances necessary to give it legal validity are omitted, whereby it is deprived of its intended specific operation, a court of equity will set it up as a contract or as evidence of a contract; and where the rights of innocent third parties would not be thereby affected, will carry it

A deed defective under the law in having no seal has been held effectual in equity, nevertheless, as a contract to sell. Munds v. Cassidey, 98 N. Car. 558; Mastin v. Halley, 61 Mo. 196.

See Hanson v. Michelson, 19 Wis. 498.

And a deed having, by mistake, but one witness and not sealed is assignable and enforceable by the assignee. Dreutzer v. Lawrence, 58 Wis. 594.

An unrecorded deed which confers an equitable title has been held to be a valid contract of conveyance as against all but a grantee without notice. Moncrieff v. Goldsborough, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 281; 1 Am. Dec. 407.

See Williams v. Mayor, etc., of Annapolis, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 539; Somerville v. Trueman, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 43; 1 Am. Dec. 389.

It has been held in two Maryland decisions that an unacknowledged and unrecorded deed by a married woman may be enforced in equity. Tiernan v. Poor, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 216; 19 Am. Dec. 225; Brundige v. Poor, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.

But the contrary doctrine is better supported. See Gebb v. Rose, 40 Md. 387; Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 24; Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; 21 Am. Dec. 245.

When the law of primogeniture prevailed in Maryland, an agreement was made between a father and his eldest son that the father should permit his estate to descend to his son, without devising the same, upon the express trust that, in case the son should succeed as devisee to the property of a third party, he would convey the estate which should thus descend to him from the father to his younger brothers. Pursuant to this agreement, the son executed a deed to his brothers which was defective, not being duly indented, acknowledged, or recorded and a conveyance was decreed in their favor. Browne v. Browne, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 430.

Any memorandum in writing, indicative of the intent of the parties, and so precise as to enable the inquirer to ascertain the terms of the contract, the land to be conveyed, and the price to be paid for it, is a sufficient contract in writing to be enforced specifically; and it need not be under seal, nor acknowledged before a magistrate; nor need it contain words of inheritance, where circumstances evince the intention to pass the fee. McFarson's Appeal, 11 Pa. St. 503.

A contract for the sale of real estate made to a copartnership in the firm name will be decreed to be executed to the members individually as tenants in common. Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312.

Exceptions.—See notes supra, this title, under the maxim, Equity Follows the Law.

Where the informality of an instrument is such that it would be absolutely void, at law, equity will not reform or enforce it.

Thus, when statutes require a feme covert excluding a deed to be examined separate and apart from her husband and to acknowledge the execution, the courts have said that her deed executed in contravention of such requirements is void and has no standing either in a court of equity or at law. Butler v. Buckingham, 5 Day (Conn.) 492; 5 Am. Dec. 174.

But she may be compelled to acknowledge a deed which she has executed and refused to acknowledge. Dundas v. Bidle, 2 Pa. St. 160.

B and wife left a region infested with yellow fever; went to the house of S. his brother-in-law; offered to pay well if allowed to remain; were both taken sick, and she died. B, on convalescence, expressed gratitude to S and wife for saving his life, and in return therefor executed an instrument bequeathing his property to them, and delivered it to them, but it was not a valid will. This was held not to be such a contract as would authorize a decree for specific performance against B's administrator, requiring delivery of the estate to S and wife. Studer v. Seyer, 69 Ga. 125.

In Dickinson v. Glenney, 27 Conn. 104, the court, by Storrs, C. J., said: "But at the threshold of this inquiry we are met with the established doctrine that equity will not contravene the positive enactments or requirements of law and defeat its policy by supplying under the guise of amending defective instruments, those deficient elements of form without which the agreement is absolutely void, even as between the parties to it; that it will not fabricate for contracting parties those essential ingredients of a contract without which, in the eye of the law, there subsists no valid contract whatever.

In such cases the intent of parties to conform to the enactments or rules of law will not avail them; and having fallen short of its requirements, they have consummated no agreement at all." So, also, Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 24.

In Carr v. Williams, 10 Ohio 305; 36 Am. Dec. 87, the court, by Grimke, J., says: "A deed which is intended to convey the legal estate, but which is so imperfectly executed as to fail of effecting that object, is deprived of the character of a conveyance, but may be treated as an agreement to convey and a resort may be had to chancery for the purpose of enforcing it and compelling a specific performance. . . . But a deed so informal as not to be legal under the statute, as where the husband fails to join and the statute requires that he join in order to render the conveyance valid, does not come within this rule, and in the case last cited specific performance was refused under the principle in the maxim 'Equity follows the law.'"

And so with an unrecorded conveyance where, as in North Carolina, a statute requires registration. White v. Holly, 91 N. Car. 67.

1. Or, better, equity regards that as already done which was agreed to be done. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 W. Bl. 121. See Ensign v. Kellogg, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 5.

This means no more than that the plaintiff may insist on being placed in a situation equally as advantageous as if the contract had been fulfilled. Gardiner v. Gerrish, 23 Me. 46.

An executory contract of sale is regarded in equity, under this doctrine, as already executed, and equitably the vendee becomes the owner and the vendor is seized in trust for him, holding merely a lien on the land for the purchase money, while the purchaser becomes trustee for the purchase money and is chargeable with interest thereon. Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 572; Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272; Davie v. Beardsham, 1 Ch. Cas. 39; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hay, 119 Ill. 507; Hunter v. Bales, 24 Ind. 299; Cutsinger v. Ballard, 115 Ind. 93; Cross v. Bean, 83 Me. 61; *Michigan State Bank v. And where the vendor has sold to an innocent purchaser at an advance he is chargeable with the price and the profit with interest. Sugg v. Stowe, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 126.

Effect of Destruction or Deterioration Before Consummation of the Sale of Realty.—This doctrine finds its most frequent application to agreements for the sale of real estate. In such agreements, equity declares that from the hour the contract is made the vendee becomes the owner of the land and the vendor holds it in trust for him.

Where, after the contract to sell has been made and before the conveyance agreed upon has passed, a change in the circumstances occurs by an increase or diminution in the value of the property or a destruction of a part of it by fire or accident, it becomes pertinent to inquire what effect is thereby had upon the rights and interests of the parties.

In such cases, the general rule appears to be, that where the property has deteriorated through the vendor's fault he is chargeable with the injury caused. Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137; Bostwick v. Beach, 105 N. Y. 661.

In Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301; 96 Am. Dec. 582, after the execution of a written contract for the sale of a house and lot, and before the day fixed for delivery of possession and payment of the first installment of purchase money, the house was accidentally destroyed by fire, without fault of either party or of the tenant then in possession. The vendor had a fee-simple title to the property, and at the proper time, under the contract, offered to deliver possession of the premises in the condition in which they then were. This the purchaser refused to receive because of the destruction of the house by fire. It was held on the theory that the vendee under the contract of sale became the immediate owner of the land, that the loss must be his, and the contract could be specifically enforced against him.

And the court, by Miller, J., says: "In contracts of this kind between private parties, the vendee is in equity the owner of the estate from the time of the contract of sale, and must sustain the loss if the estate be destroyed between the agreement and the conveyance, and will be entitled to any benefit which may accrue to it in the interim. This doctrine, notwithstanding the dictum in Stent v. Baillie, 2 P. Wms. 220, to the contrary, was plainly announced and settled by the decision of Lord Eldon in Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. 349, a case very similar in its circumstances to the present, where it was held that if there was no objection to the title of the vendor, or if it had been accepted in fact by the vendee before the houses were burned, no solid objection to the bill for specific performance could be founded on the mere effect of the accident before conveyance; 'for if the party,' says the lord chancellor, 'by the contract has become in equity the owner of the premises, they are his to all intents and purposes. They are vendible as his, chargeable as his, capable of being incumbered as his; they may be devised as his; they may be assets, and they would descend to his heirs.'

"This decision has always been regarded as fixing the true equitable rule in such cases."

And citing Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532; Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 Ves. & B. 287, and Revell v. Hussey, 2 B. & B. 287, the court adds:

"From these, and other authorities of equal weight, announcing the maxim that equity regards as done that which was agreed to be done, is deduced the established doctrine in equity, that from the time the owner of an estate enters into a binding agreement for its sale, he holds the same in trust for the purchaser, and the latter becomes a trustee of the purchase money for the vendor, and being thus in equity the owner, the vendee must bear any loss which may happen and is entitled to any benefit which may accrue to the estate in the interim between the agreement and the conveyance."

Rents and Profits.—So where the vendor, after having promised to convey, continues wrongfully in possession, the rule which makes him the trustee for the vendee requires him to account to the vendee for the rents and profits of the land. Lombard v. Chicago Sinai Congregation, 75 Ill. 271; Hampton v. Snipes, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 125.

Or the value of its use where it possesses no rental value. Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137.

On decree for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, of which possession had been given, the price being payable in annual installments bearing interest, the vendor must account to the vendee for rent received on a lease executed after the agreement of sale. Craig v. Greenwood, 24 Neb. 557. See Swain v. Burnett, 76 Cal. 299.

But if he offers to surrender possession in accordance with his contract, and the vendee wrongfully refuses his proffer, the vendor is released from the accountability for the income from the land, and has his option to prosecute his suit for enforcement in specie, or to treat the contract to sell as rescinded.

The vendor is only chargeable with the rents and profits from the date of tender. Eastman v. Simpson, 139 Mass. 348.

Where the purchaser is ready and willing to perform, and the delay is on the part of the vendor, the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits from the time when, according to the terms of the contract, possession should have been delivered; or, if the vendor has remained in possession, he is chargeable with the value of the use and occupation from the same period, and the purchaser is chargeable with interest on the purchase money if it has remained in his hand unappropriated; but where it has been appropriated, and notice thereof given to the vendor, and the purchaser has received no notice thereon, he is not liable to pay interest to the vendor. Bostwick v. Beach, 103 N. Y. 414; Dias v. Glover, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 71.

Interest Chargeable to Vendee.—Sanders v. Bryer, 152 Mass. 141, was a case where suit was brought by the tenant to enforce a covenant to sell under a lease containing such a covenant. The court held that the tenant was bound to make tender of the purchase price and keep his tender good with interest so long as he remained in possession without paying rent, and that he could not keep the benefit both of the rents and of the interest on the purchase money. The court, by Devens, J., said: "Even if he holds himself ready to obtain and pay the money when a conveyance is tendered, if he desires a decree which shall treat the land as his after the date of the day when he made his offer of payment, the money should be treated as belonging to the vendor as of the same date. The vendee cannot be entitled to the use both of the land and of the money which is the consideration to be paid for it." Powell v. Martyr, 8 Ves. 146. See also Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 25; Dyson v. Hornby, 4 De G. & S. 481; Covell v. Cole, 16 Mich. 223.

4. Who Seeks Equity Must do Equity.¹

Even if the vendor is at fault, the vendee, if he would escape liability to pay interest, must actually set aside the money and appropriate it for the vendor; must not in any way derive a benefit from it, and must notify the vendor of these facts, and that the money is thus lying idle; but after a sufficient tender, interest does not run. Calcraft v. Roebuck, 1 Ves. 221; Roberts v. Massey, 13 Ves. 561; Kershaw v. Kershaw, L. R. 9 Eq. 56; Regents Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575; Walker v. Ogden, 1 Dana (Ky.) 247; Baxter v. Brand, 6 Dana (Ky.) 296; Rutledge v. Smith, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 399; Stevenson v. Maxwell, 2 N. Y. 403; Viele v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 381; Riley v. McNamara (Tex. 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 141; Hundley v. Lyons, 5 Munf. (Va.) 342; 7 Am. Dec. 685; Brockenbrough v. Blythe, 3 Leigh (Va.) 619; Selden v. James, 6 Rand. (Va.) 465.

Where the purchaser of land has obtained a decree for specific performance of the contract of sale, with costs against the vendor, an order dismissing the bill for non-performance of the decree by the plaintiff, and still retaining the suit for the purpose of an account of the rents and profits of the premises, is erroneous. Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 382.

It devolves on the vendor to show that the plaintiff has received some use of the money tendered, or the vendee cannot be chargeable with the interest, the presumption being that the money is unproductive in the vendee's hands.

Bass v. Gilliland, 5 Ala. 761; Hunter v. Bales, 24 Ind. 299.

A and B being jointly in possession of several lots of land under a lease and contract of sale, A agreed to convey to B his share in one of the lots on a day certain, and to execute further assurances when their title should be perfected, and B was to pay the price of the conveyance at the same time. The contract was not performed at the day fixed, and A subsequently repudiated the contract, but B proceeded to erect buildings upon the lot, for which a large rent was received. On a bill filed by A to compel B, amongst other things, to complete the contract, it was held that B was not liable for interest on the purchase money until a tender of a deed by A, but that A was entitled to his share of what the rents and profits of the lot would have been, had it remained in the same state in which it was at the time of the agreement to convey. Stevenson v. Maxwell, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 273.

One holding a land warrant sold a tract of land representing that the whole of it was covered by the warrant, and articles were drawn up between the vendor and vendee for sale of the land to be acquired under the warrant. In fact, only a part of the tract pointed out by the vendor was acquired under that warrant, which he offered to convey. Afterwards, he procured a title to the residue of the tract. Held, that as to the title to such residue, equity would consider him the trustee of the vendee, and compel him to convey to the vendee. Tyson v. Passmore, 2 Pa. St. 122; 44 Am. Dec. 181.

But this general rule is not to be too rigidly enforced. It is subject to modifications according to the peculiar circumstances of the case. Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137.

In Rushton v. Thompson, 35 Fed. Rep. 635, the court by Brewer, J., said: "Courts not merely observe the words of the contract, but also have respect to the obligations of the golden rule, and that unless plaintiff has done as he would be done by it is useless for him to come into that forum where equity and good conscience reign supreme over the letter of the law."

This requires of plaintiff that he do all that is in his power to fulfill his part of the contract which he is seeking to enforce, according to its terms. He must do his full duty or the court will not regard his prayer. New York Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 783; Davis v. Read, 37 Fed. Rep. 418; *Morgan v. Where the obligation upon plaintiff is not a condition precedent, equity will see to it that defendant is protected by requiring the plaintiff to show that he is able to do his part, and in the absence of such a showing, as where it appears that insolvency or some other cause will render it doubtful if he can fulfill his part, the court will not relieve him. *Sims v. He is not bound to a literal compliance with his obligation, but may establish his position in a court of equity by a substantial performance of it. Shaw v. Livermore, 2 Greene (Iowa) 338; Clark v. Sears, 3 Iowa 104; Johnston v. Mitchell, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 227; 10 Am. Dec. 727; Church v. State, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 330.

Instances.—Thus, where one agreed, in writing, to convey to a railroad company five acres of land, on condition that it would locate its depot upon a certain forty-acre tract, or upon any five acres adjoining, and the depot was located upon a tract which touched a corner of the forty-acres, but did not lie alongside of it, it was held that there had been a substantial compliance, entitling the company to specific performance. Fitzgerald v. Britt, 43 Iowa 408.

If the vendor stands by and suffers the vendee to make valuable improvements, and does not demand a strict compliance with the terms of the contract by the vendee, equity will deem him to have waived a strict compliance, and upon a substantial compliance, equally favorable to him, will decree a conveyance. Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 227.

If a vendee shows a readiness, without injury, to perform substantially his agreement, he is entitled to the aid of a court of equity. Hart v. Brand, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 159; 10 Am. Dec. 715.

On a bill by a vendee for the specific performance of an agreement for the sale of lands, a slight variation or default on the part of the vendee, in the performance of work to be done by him before the deed was delivered, will not prevent a decree for specific performance, if the difference is a proper subject for compensation in money. And if the vendee has performed a valuable part of the contract and is in no default as to the performance of the residue, he will be entitled to his decree. Hulmes v. Thorpe, 5 N. J. Eq. 415.

It is in equity a sufficient performance, by a purchaser of land, of a stipulation to pay the taxes, to allow it to go to sale for taxes, and bid it off himself, if he seeks no inequitable advantage from the tax sale; it is an indirect mode of payment. Oliver v. Croswell, 42 Ill. 41.

Enforcement will be denied him if the contract be one that he has repeatedly broken, even if the other party has been guilty of the first breach, and he will be left to his legal remedies. Ohio Steel Barb Fence Co. v. Washburn, etc., Mfg. Co., 26 Fed. Rep. 702.

A tenant under a lease containing a covenant to renew cannot enforce such covenant if he has violated other covenants in his lease as by a prohibited use of the premises. Gannett v. Albree, 103 Mass. 372.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of land will not be decreed where, at the time of filing the bill and at the time of trial, the plaintiffs are indebted to defendant for the balance of purchase money, which they have not offered to pay. Askew v. Carr, 81 Ga. 685.

Specific execution of an agreement will not be decreed at the instance of a party who has been in default, and where the specific execution would be injurious to the other party. Vail v. Nelson, 4 Rand. (Va.) 478.

Offer to Perform Sometimes Insufficient.—Plaintiff sued to compel conveyance to him by defendant of certain land, basing his suit on the defendant's bond to convey to him the land, given in 1850, in consideration that the plaintiff should represent him in effecting a partition of this and other land, between the defendant and a joint owner. The partition was partially effected in 1850; but the difficulties arising induced the parties to postpone completion until the boundaries of the grant could be settled by proper authorities. This, it appeared, was not done until 1857, when the plaintiff offered to go on and complete the partition, but the defendant refused. Held, that the plaintiff could not be compelled to perform; that his offer to perform was not equivalent to performance; that, therefore, he could not have a decree for specific performance, as against the defendant, but must be left to his remedy for damages. Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403.

The utmost good faith is expected of all parties before the court and any lapse therefrom will be fatal.

One party to a contract, after accepting the other's understanding of it, which was mutually acted upon, is, on a bill for specific performance filed against him, precluded from making the defense that the complainant is unwilling to perform the contract. Price v. Morgan (N. J. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 663.

Where a party to a contract of purchase displayed bad faith in repudiating an obligation to pay a certain rate of interest, he was denied any right to specific performance. McClellan v. Darrah, 50 Ill. 249.

A vendor who refuses the purchaser's tender of the purchase-money on the ground that he is not bound to convey, cannot afterwards base his refusal on an objection to a misdescription of the deed which he was requested to execute. Carskaddon v. Kennedy, 40 N. J. Eq. 259.

Instances.—Plaintiff sought to purchase of defendant a certain land owned by him, and was informed that it had been withdrawn from sale. Next day or the day after, he purchased the property through defendant's agents, who had not been notified of its withdrawal; but he made no inquiry as to whether their authority antedated the information received by him from defendant. An enforcement of his contract was refused. Wickham v. Winchester, 75 Iowa 327.

If a vendor of land, after entering into an agreement to convey on payment of the purchase money, mortgages the premises, he cannot claim a specific performance of the contract by the vendee. Huber v. Burke, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 238.

Performance must have been done without any unreasonable delay or plaintiff cannot claim that he has fulfilled his duty. Lewis v. Woods, 4 How. (Miss.) 86; 34 Am. Dec. 110.

He must be prompt and eager to perform. Brown v. Haines, 12 Ohio 1. See infra, this title, Tender; Laches.

V. DOCTRINES ILLUSTRATED.—Other doctrines governing the equitable enforcement of contracts are as general in their application as those expressed in the familiar maxims of equity above quoted. These are—

1. Equity Will Not Decree Specific Performance Unless Strictly Equitable.—The decree must be equitable to all parties.⁴ In the spirit of this principle the courts refuse to declare or

One who has fraudulently concealed a material fact in connection with a contract cannot specifically enforce it. King v. Knapp, 59 N. Y. 462; Byars v. Stubbs, 85 Ala. 256; Hetfield v. Willey, 105 Ill. 286.

If the plaintiff's case appears unconscionable, specific performance will be denied him. Weise's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 351; Tucke v. Buchholz, 43 Iowa 415; Vaughan v. Thomas, 1 Bro. C. C. 556.

1. The widow of A and his children, who were of age, sold to B a tract of land belonging to their father's estate. One of the infants, after coming of age, received his share of the purchase money, and acquiesced in the sale, but afterwards gave his bond for a conveyance of his interest in the tract to C, and, a few weeks after, made a conveyance to B. C sold the bond to D, who brought his bill for a conveyance. Held, that as the bond was notice of B's possession, it should have put a purchaser upon inquiry into the nature of B's title, and that the equities being equal, the legal title of B must prevail. Gallaher v. Hunter, 5 Mo. 507.

A court of equity will not enforce a gratuitous undertaking on the part of a wife to subject her separate estate to the payment of her husband's debts. In such cases the legal title will not be allowed to prevail in a court of equity over the equitable right; it is only where the equities are equal that the law prevails. White's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 134.

2. See supra, this title, Jurisdiction.

3. In other words, equity will not compel specific performance when the benefits of a contract cannot be realized according to its terms. Marietta, etc., R. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 38 Ohio St. 24; 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 387.

Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332; 66 Am. Dec. 773; Sherman v. Wright, 49 N. Y. 227; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155; Stevens v. Comstock, 109 N. Y. 655; Day v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. 191; Conger v. Cas. 144; Huntington v. Rogers, 9 Ohio St. 511; Backus's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 186; Henderson v. Hays, 2 Watts (Pa.) 148; Garnett v. Macon, 6 Call (Va.) 308; Bryan v. Lofftus, 1 Rob. (Va.) 12; 39 Am. Dec. 242.

Instances.—A decree will not be rendered where it is evident that the contract was entered into thoughtlessly. Godwin v. Collins, 4 Houst. (Del.) 28.

Where a bill in equity has been brought to enforce the specific performance of an agreement to convey enforce a forfeiture if it can be avoided. And if the complainant, by the strict terms of his contract, is entitled to a forfeiture, it will be withheld if the defendant is ready to comply at once with his obligation.¹

2. Equity May Enforce But Not Make Agreements.²

lands, the court will be hardly disposed to afford relief to the plaintiff, when the enforcement of the contract will be attended with inequitable loss to defendants in impairing the value of adjoining lands. Church of the Advent v. Farrow, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 378.

So, in Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 422, specific performance was refused on the ground that it would subject defendant, and the public also, to delays, inconvenience, and loss.

1. Knott v. Stephens, 5 Oregon 235; Hall v. Delaplaine, 5 Wis. 206; 68 Am. Dec. 57.

In Knott v. Stephens, 5 Oregon 235, the court by Bonham, J., said: "Compensation and not forfeiture is a favorite maxim with courts of equity; and where the vendor, by his contract to convey, had not affirmatively expressed his intention to make the time of payment material, courts of equity will infer that it was understood that interest on the deferred payments would be a sufficient compensation for the delay."

A change in the circumstances of the parties or in the value of the property involved might render enforcement inequitable. See infra, this title, Fairness—Change of Circumstances.

A covenant, restricting the use of certain land, fixed a minimum price for the cost of all buildings to be erected on the land. Held, that such covenant will not be specifically enforced where it appears that the term of the covenant has nearly expired; that the character of the locality has so changed as to render it apparent that buildings of the class contemplated by the covenant will not be built upon the affected land; that, in the meantime, if the covenant should be specifically enforced the lands affected by it could not be profitably used; that the complainant himself has built a house upon the affected land which does not comply with the spirit of the covenant; and that the erection objected to will not be detrimental to him. Page v. Murray, 46 N. J. Eq. 325.

One railroad company, in consideration of the right to cross, gave the other a right to cross at some future time. Held, that the specific performance of the latter agreement would not be decreed where the crossing was to be at a place not contemplated by the parties, and where it would do a very great damage to the former company; namely, by crossing a drill and freight yard. Coe v. New Jersey Midland R. Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 105.

Specific performance of a contract by a railroad company with a landowner to erect a station at a certain point is properly denied by a court of equity, where it appears that such point is on the side of a steep mountain, in a sparsely settled district, and approached by a steep grade; that the station could only be constructed at a great expense; and that the public travel would be delayed by the stoppage of the trains, and the public convenience would be impaired. Conger v. New York, etc., R. Co., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 296.

Enforcement of specific performance of a contract should be refused if such enforcement would operate injuriously to the interests of other lessors. Society for Establishing Manufactures v. Low, 17 N. J. Eq. 19.

An agreement by a railroad company with a city to locate its terminus, offices, and machine-shops therein, and continue them there notwithstanding its own interests and those of the public should subsequently demand their removal, is not enforceable in equity. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393; 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 637.

Before granting a decree of specific performance the court will determine whether the rights of others not parties be seriously affected, and in such cases if the decree would operate inequitably upon strangers whose rights have vested since the contract was made the court will refuse its decree. Curran v. Holyoke Water Power Co., 116 Mass. 90.

tion, 75 Ill. 271; Maughlin v. Perry, 35 Md. 352; O'Brien v. Pentz, 48 Md. 562; Stoddard v. Hart, 23 N. Y. 559; Domestic Tel. Co. v. Metropolitan Teleph. Co., 39 N. J. Eq. 160.

In Hunt v. Rousmaniere, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 14, the court, by Washington, J., says: "Equity may compel parties to perform their agreements, when fairly entered into, according to their terms; but it has no power to make agreements for parties and then compel them to execute the same. The former is a legitimate branch of its jurisdiction, and, in its exercise, is highly beneficial to society. The latter is without its authority, and the exercise of it would not only be an usurpation of power but would be highly mischievous in its consequences."

Equity cannot make nor alter a contract for the parties and then execute it. If the contract must be reformed before it can be executed it can only be reformed in a suit for that purpose, or upon a bill particularly praying for that relief. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Osborn v. Phelps, 19 Conn. 63; 48 Am. Dec. 133; Kemp v. Humphreys, 13 Ill. 573; Colt v. Beaumont, 32 Mo. 118; Norfleet v. Southall, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 189. But see Philpot v. Elliott, 4 Md. Ch. 273; White v. Port Huron, etc., R. Co., 13 Mich. 356.

Where a vendor accepts part payment on a contract to sell real estate, he cannot afterwards impose new terms or conditions, and equity will decree a specific performance of the contract against him and a purchaser with notice of the contract. Keegan v. Williams, 22 Iowa 378.

Nor will equity reform a writing to make an agreement of a different effect from that which the parties intentionally entered into. Stoddard v. Hart, 23 N. Y. 556. In this case the court, by Comstock, C. J., says: "Will a court of equity make a new contract for parties in order to effectuate a mere understanding, where no agreement is pretended different from the one which the writing already expresses, and where there are no circumstances of surprise, imposition, fraud, or misplaced confidence? To do so, I think, would be taking a step in advance of the settled rule on the subject."

In Attorney-Gen'l v. Sitwell, 1 Y. & C. 559, the court, by Baron Alderson, said: "I cannot help feeling that in the case of an executory agreement, first to reform and then to decree an execution of it, would be virtually to repeal the Statute of Frauds."

Quoting this remark, the court, by Waite, J., in Osborn v. Phelps, 19 Conn. 63; 48 Am. Dec. 136, said: "These cases appear to be founded upon a just and reasonable construction of the statute, and fully establish the rule, that if two parties enter into an agreement respecting the sale of real estate, and fail to reduce that agreement to writing, according to their intention, it is not competent for the purchaser to come into a court of chancery, for the purpose of having the written agreement rectified, by the aid of parol evidence, and then the execution enforced."

"But this rule does not apply where the mistake is set up by way of defense against a claim for the specific execution of a contract. In such case, the object is not to enforce the execution of a parol agreement, but to prevent the execution of a written one, which the parties never intentionally made to resist one which to enforce would be inequitable and unjust. It was not the object of this statute to give any greater efficacy to written contracts for the sale of lands, than they possessed at the common law; but merely to require such contracts to be made in writing, in order to lay the foundation of a suit at law or in equity."

Where a husband has agreed to allow his wife property to a certain value, for her separate maintenance, to be selected by her, and valued by A and B, a court of equity cannot substitute other appraisers without the consent of the husband, and enforce the agreement. Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 485.

The parties having contracted for a sale on credit, the purchase money to be secured by a mortgage, payable by installments, a court of equity will not decree a conveyance reserving a ground rent, extinguishable at the times and in the proportions specified for the payment of the installments contracted to be secured by mortgage. Nor will the payment of the whole of the purchase money in cash be decreed. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Lehigh Coal, etc., Co., 36 Pa. St. 204.

Under what we take to be a misapplication of this doctrine, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has held that where a vendor has contracted to convey land, and his wife refuses to join in his deed, the vendee may not compel a conveyance of the vendor's interest with a corresponding abatement of the purchase price, as this would be in effect making a new contract for the parties. Riesz's Appeal, 73 Pa. St. 485. See infra, this title, Contracts Relating to Land.

1. Where the specific execution of an agreement respecting lands will be decreed between the parties, it will be decreed between all the parties claiming under them in privity of estate, or representation or title, unless other controlling equities intervene. Hays v. Hall, 4 Port. (Ala.) 374; 30 Am. Dec. 530; Wilson v. Emig, 44 Kan. 125; Chambers v. Alabama Iron Co., 67 Ala. 353; Meyer v. Mitchell, 75 Ala. 475; Thompson v. Myrick, 20 Minn. 205; *Cole v. And even where the estate of the decedent is insolvent, where a trust has arisen, specific performance will be decreed. Root v. Blake, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 271; Boyd v. Soule, 8 Gray (Mass.) 554.

On a bill against the infant heir for specific performance of a contract of the ancestor, the court may direct a conveyance by the infant when of age, and in the meantime may authorize the vendee to take and hold possession, and will restrain the infant from interfering with the possession, or incumbering the title. Sutphen v. Fowler, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 280.

Under clear proof of a parol contract, and of a part performance thereof, a specific performance was decreed against the infant heir of one of the parties, allowing him six months after becoming of age to show cause against the decree. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 201.

A gave B a deed to land upon B's agreement to pay certain debts, and give A a life lease of the same premises, with the privilege to A to redeem the property. A contract whereby a mother agrees, in consideration of her son's returning to her farm, working it and maintaining her from it, to give it to him, may be specifically enforced after her death against her heirs. Thrall v. Thrall, 60 Wis. 503.

An oral agreement, made as consideration for a deed by a grantee at the time of its execution, to furnish the grantor with a home for life, and which has been performed during the grantee's lifetime, is taken out of the Statute of Frauds, so that specific performance may be enforced against the grantee's devisees. Herrick v. Starkweather (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 145*.

Where the purchaser has fully performed his contract under a parol agreement to sell real estate, but the grantor is suddenly killed before a deed is executed, the purchaser can have specific performance from the widow and children of the grantor, though nothing was averred about interest on the deferred payments, payment of taxes, or the exact time of payment of the balance due. Everett v. Dilley, 39 Kan. 73.

But compare Givens v. Calder, 2 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 172; 2 Am. Dec. 686, where, under the provisions of a South Carolina statute, enforcement against one contractor's heirs was refused to the heirs of the other contractor.

Instances.—One who buys land and takes a conveyance, knowing that the vendor has already made a contract to sell it to another, stands in the place of his vendor, and a court of equity, if it would decree a specific performance of the contract against one, will render a like decree against the other. The notice need not be actual nor amount to full knowledge. Information, from whatever source derived, which would excite apprehension in an ordinary mind, and prompt a person of average prudence to make inquiry, is sufficient. Notice to an agent, received while clothed with authority to promote, and while engaged in promoting, the intended purchase, will be notice to the principal, even where the principal comes forward before the agent has concluded the negotiations, and completes the purchase in person, the agent not participating in the final stages of the transaction. Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438.

A purchaser who had contracted for the conveyance of lands to himself afterwards contracted to sell the same to a third person, and put him into possession. His vendor, disregarding his rights, conveyed the lands to such third person, although a balance was still due from the latter, he being irresponsible. Such original purchaser has an equitable right to require of his vendee a conveyance to himself in specific performance of the contract of the original vendor, inasmuch as such a conveyance would simply place the parties where by their contracts they have agreed to place themselves. Bird v. Hall, 30 Mich. 374.

An old man arranged with his son that, in consideration of his paying a debt secured on land, he should take the land as his own on condition he would maintain the father and his wife for life. The son paid, took possession and maintained his father and his wife for seven years, and was willing to continue to do so. The father then conveyed to one who had notice. Held, that the son could enforce a conveyance to himself. Neel v. Neel, 80 Va. 584.

After the execution of a contract to purchase land the vendor conveyed the land, and assigned the contract to a third person who accepted payments from the vendee on the contract. Held, that these payments constituted such privity as entitled the vendee to maintain a suit for specific performance. Lovejoy v. Potter, 60 Mich. 95.

The plaintiff, prior to his contract for the sale of land to the defendant, had agreed to sell a portion of the land to A, which was known to the defendant, and, subsequently to the contract with the defendant, had conveyed to A, pursuant to the agreement. Held, that the defendant was bound to complete his contract, deducting from the purchase money the proceeds of the sale to A, with interest. Vedder v. Evertson, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 281.

A agreed with B to sell to him his right to land in possession of B, if three persons, named, should find that he had a title to it, and fix the price which B should pay; no award was made. Held, that a purchaser of B, with notice of the agreement, could not compel A to make a conveyance, nor to submit the title and price to any other mode of adjustment. Smallwood v. Mercer, 1 Wash. (Va.) 290.

Defendant gave plaintiff an option on his land good for thirty days. Plaintiff elected to purchase, but did not tender the price within the time, the landowner refusing to convey on the ground that his wife would not sign the deed, and plaintiff not making his tender, owing to negotiations with the landowner, to induce the wife to sign the deed. Subsequently the land was conveyed by deed, in which the wife joined to release dower, to one who took with notice of plaintiff's rights, though in the belief that plaintiff would sue for damages instead of specific performance. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance of the land clear of dower. Mausfield v. Hodgdon, 147 Mass. 304.

Notice.—Though he be a non-resident, and the property be outside the State, the court will hold him to the consequences if he take with notice of outstanding equities. Pingree v. Coffin, 12 Gray (Mass.) 288.

But vague reports and rumors are not sufficient to constitute such notice. Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 551; Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 275; Wildgoose v. Wayland, Gouldsb. 147.

An assignee of chattels, with notice of a prior engagement bestowing superior rights upon another, is chargeable under such engagements as fully as his assignor would be. Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 231; 33 Am. Dec. 733; Andrews v. Brown, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 136; Maulden v. Armistead, 18 Ala. 500.

Purchaser Without Notice.—But a specific performance will not be decreed against a bona fide grantee who has no actual notice of such outstanding equities. Shields v. Trammell, 19 Ark. 51; Ferrier v. Buzick, 2 Iowa 136; Russell v. Moffitt, 6 How. (Miss.) 303.

Particularly if the one seeking relief has been at all negligent in protecting his equities. Doar v. Gibbs, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 371.

One who takes a conveyance without having given a valuable consideration therefor is bound by his grantor's contract to convey to another. Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27.

Rights of Assignee.—So, an assignee of a contract to sell or lease has the same rights of enforcement as his assignor. Weis v. Meyer (Ark. 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 679; *Hunt v. rendered the notes, and, without waiting for the deed for the land, conveyed the land to C. Held, that B might be compelled to execute the deed, and both he and his privies were estopped to deny the transaction, or set up any claim to the land. Johnson v. Hughart, 85 Ky. 657.

And a personal representative or heir, as his decedent. Godfrey v. Dwinell, 40 Me. 94; Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122; White v. Hooper, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 152; Rutherford v. Green, 2 Fred. Eq. (N. Car.) 121.

Where, by the reason of the loss of deeds or failure to record them, title to land is not clear, the owner may compel parties through whom he claims to execute the necessary conveyances to confirm the title. Blight v. Banks, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 192; 17 Am. Dec. 136.

Equity will grant specific performance to the assignee of an agreement to convey land, regardless of that privity of contract between the parties which is indispensable to a suit at law; and a subsequent parol extension of the time of payment for the land by the original purchaser applies to the assignee who succeeds to all his assignor's equities under the original agreement. Ewins v. Gordon, 49 N. H. 444.

Where a vendor agreed in writing to convey to the vendee on payment of a certain price, it was held that a mortgagee of the vendee was entitled upon a tender of the price, to maintain a bill against the vendor for a conveyance. Ricker v. Moore, 77 Me. 292.

Laches of Assignor.—And the laches or the abandonment or forfeiture of contract rights by those under whom he claims, is imputed to him. Aldrich v. Putney, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 204; Havens v. Patterson, 43 N. Y. 218; Hayes v. Nourse, 114 N. Y. 595; 11 Am. St. Rep. 700; Frazier v. Broadnax, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 249. See Kennedy v. Embry, 72 Tex. 387.

Laches of Infants.—The fact that the heirs of the contractor were all infants, is no excuse for their failure to perform their ancestor's contract; and the laches which would have barred such a suit by him will bar a like suit by them. Havens v. Patterson, 43 N. Y. 218; Hayes v. Nourse, 114 N. Y. 595; 11 Am. St. Rep. 700.

It is possible for a plaintiff to have an interest capable of supporting a bill praying for specific performance, although he was not a party to the contract. 3 Parsons on Contracts 354; Hook v. Kinnear, 3 Swanst. 417; Hill v. Gomme, 5 M. & C. 250; 1 Beav. 540; Colyear v. Countess of Mulgrave, 2 Keen 81; Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. Wms. 594.

Thus where a debtor has partly performed his contract to purchase real estate his creditors may come in and complete it and compel the conveyance to them. Ayer v. Bartlett, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 76.

Where a vendee of land receives a title bond, and, at the same time, executes his promissory notes for the price, the transaction constitutes an executory contract for the sale of land, which—in favor of indorsees of the notes for value before maturity, who knew of the contract—may be specifically enforced in equity, by a sale of the land and an application of the proceeds to the indebtedness; and they are entitled to an obligation to pay rent given by the vendee after maturity of the notes. Walker v. Kee, 16 S. Car. 76.

Instances Where Privies Have Been Bound.—In McKee v. Barley, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 340, A and B were coparceners. Without authority from B, A conveyed a portion of the land, using B's name in the deed. Afterwards A and B conveyed the whole land to D, who had notice of the previous conveyance to C. C sued D, setting up his deed as an agreement for the conveyance of the piece of land described in his deed, and prayed for a specific enforcement of that agreement, and it was granted.

The Alabama legislature created a harbor board, with authority to contract for the improvement of Mobile harbor, and requiring the county of Mobile to issue its bonds to said board to a certain amount to pay for said improvement. The board made a contract for work on the harbor, to be paid for in said bonds. Work was performed by contractors, and, on settlement, six bonds of $1,000 each were found to be due them. The act creating the board had been repealed, and when the board ceased operations it had no means to pay this obligation. Held, that a bill in equity by the contractors against the county, to compel a delivery of the bonds, was well brought. Kimball v. Mobile Co., 3 Woods (U. S.) 555.

4. Jurisdiction Once Acquired, Retained.—When equity has once obtained jurisdiction, it will determine all questions material to the accomplishment of complete justice between the parties.¹

Where the Privy Has Committed a Fraud.—Where a vendor of land extends the time of payment for a few days, and afterwards, upon the representations of a third person that the vendee does not intend to take the land, conveys it to such third person at an advanced price, if the original vendee in time tenders the price and demands a deed, he will be entitled to specific performance of the contract. Dement v. Bonham, 26 Ill. 158.

Exceptions.—On the death of one of two joint owners of land, between whom a contract existed that neither should sell without giving the other the refusal of the property, equity will not enforce the contract specifically against his devisees. Weisman v. Smith, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 124.

The heirs of a vendee who had a contract for 800 acres of land, and had paid the whole price, sold and conveyed 100 acres of it in fee. Held, that their grantee could not maintain a bill against the heirs of the vendor, to compel them to execute to him a conveyance of the 100 acres. Lord v. Underdunk, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 46.

A contracted for the purchase of lands, made part payment, and died in default, leaving a posthumous child. For twenty-one years no offer was made to pay the remainder of the purchase money, although the vendor endeavored to have the contract completed. For nineteen years the taxes were not paid as agreed by A, and the land was occupied for a number of years previously to the filing of a bill against the vendor for specific performance by persons claiming under him. Held, that A's child was not entitled to specific performance, nor to a return of the money paid. Scott v. Barber, 14 Ohio 547.

1. Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 557; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 264; Apperson v. Gogin, 3 Ill. App. 48; King v. Morford, 1 N. J. Eq. 274; Renkin v. Hill, 49 Iowa 270; Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ala. 498; Anson v. Townsend, 73 Cal. 415; Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157; Ross v. Purse (Colo. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 473.

Thus if the chancellor has acquired jurisdiction for the purpose of granting specific performance and from some cause not known to plaintiff at the time the suit was brought this special relief has proven impracticable or impossible, he may grant the plaintiff compensatory damages as the only possible alternative to the expense and delay of an action at law. Pratt v. Law, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 456; Aday v. Echols, 18 Ala. 353; 52 Am. Dec. 225; Kelley v. Allen, 34 Ala. 663.

This may occur where the defendant, after suit brought, does some act which puts a specific enforcement out of plaintiff's power, as by selling the property to an innocent holder for value. Andrews v. Brown, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 130; Philips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 131; Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 273. See infra, this title, Compensation in Lieu of Performance.

Another instance where equity will exercise complete authority, having once acquired jurisdiction, is where suit is brought to specifically enforce a parol contract to insure. This is done, where the loss has occurred, not by actually requiring that a policy issue, but by a decree for the payment of the loss as if a policy had issued. "This method of enforcement," says the court by Sherwood, C. J., in Baile v. St. Joseph, etc., Ins. Co., 73 Mo. 371, "proceeds on the ground that equity, once possessed of a cause, will, before releasing its grasp on the res, avoid a multiplicity of suits by doing full, adequate and complete justice between the parties by entering that judgment to which the party will ultimately be entitled." Citing Real Estate Sav. Inst. v. Collomous, 63 Mo. 290, q. v.

Where plaintiff asks for specific performance of a parol contract relating to real estate, and the defendant avers that the terms of the contract were other than as alleged in the bill, and the evidence established a contract differing materially from that set forth in bill or answer, the court may, with the consent of the plaintiff, decree specific performance of the contract as proved, or rescind and put the parties in statu quo. The defendant cannot object that the order is a surprise. West Virginia Oil, etc., Co. v. Vinal, 14 W. Va. 637.

5. Parol Evidence May be Heard to Rebut an Equity but Not to Create One.¹

6. Performance Must be Mutual.—Equity will not enforce specific performance unless its enforcement can be made mutual.²

Where specific performance of an exchange is refused for mistake in regard to the subject-matter, defendant having set up, by cross-bill, payment of the boot money, is entitled to its repayment. Hess v. Evans (N. J. 1881), 15 Atl. Rep. 310. See Adams v. Valentine, 33 Fed. Rep. 1.

"If the nature of any particular contract be such that a court of equity upon the established rules governing the enforcement of specific performance, ought to listen to one of the parties if he should ask its aid, it will be willing, upon a principle of even-handed dealing, to grant a specific performance of the contract at the instance of the other party also, although his case, per se, would not be strictly within the reason of this jurisdiction of equity." 3 Parsons on Contracts 326.

Another application of the doctrine is where the parties having agreed to determine a matter by arbitration, one of them refuses to abide by the agreement. In such case the court will determine the matter which the arbitrators were to have settled. See Lowe v. Brown, 22 Ohio St. 463. See infra, this title, Agreements to Arbitrate.

1. See infra, this title, Procedure—Evidence. See Stoutenburgh v. Tompkins, 9 N. J. Eq. 332; Herren v. Rich, 95 N. Car. 500; Veth v. Gierth, 92 Mo. 97.

The plaintiff who seeks a decree for specific performance is not entitled to the same indulgence in the introduction of parol proof as the respondent may be, who defends against it and offers to prove the existence of verbal stipulations inconsistent with and varying, and operating as conditions of or limitations to the writing. Quinn v. Roath, 37 Conn. 16.

2. See infra, this title, Mutuality.

Unless a contract can be specifically enforced as to all parties, a court of equity will not interfere. Adderley v. Dixon, 1 S. & S. 610; Duff v. Hopkins, 33 Fed. Rep. 599; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 625; 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 617; Jackens v. Nicolson, 70 Ga. 198; Blalock v. Waggoner, 82 Ga. 122; Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 485; Old Colony R. Co. v.

Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 25; 66 Am. Dec. 394; Jones v. Newhall, 115 Mass. 244; 15 Am. Rep. 97; Kansas, etc., R. Const. Co. v. Topeka, etc., R. Co., 135 Mass. 34; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 495; 46 Am. Rep. 439; Buck v. Smith, 29 Mich. 166; 18 Am. Rep. 84; Ewins v. Gordon, 49 N. H. 444; Hopper v. Hopper, 16 N. J. Eq. 147; Smith v. McVeigh, 11 N. J. Eq. 239; Rindge v. Baker, 57 N. Y. 219; 15 Am. Rep. 483; Snyder v. Neefus, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 63; Pugh v. Good, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 56; 37 Am. Dec. 534; Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 6 Leigh (Va.) 175; 29 Am. Dec. 208.

This rule means, further, that specific performance will not be enforced unless equity can enforce it on both parties simultaneously.

A written contract for the exchange of lands will not be specifically enforced, where it appears that complainant agreed to pay defendant a certain sum in further consideration, and that such agreement is omitted from the writing, as defendant could not have enforced the payment of such sum. Hall v. Loomis, 63 Mich. 709.

But this rule has its exceptions, as where the consideration is entire but the performance separate. Sterling v. Klepsattle, 24 Ind. 94; 87 Am. Dec. 309.

Thus, in Ogden v. Ogden, 4 Ohio St. 182, an agreement to execute a mortgage to pay money at a future day was enforced.

And in Sterling v. Klepsattle, 24 Ind. 94; 87 Am. Dec. 319, the agreement was to give a title bond at a future day, the consideration being already executed.

Nor will equity require a defendant to specifically perform covenants of a personal character where, from any cause, by a like proceeding instituted by defendant, the plaintiff could not be compelled to perform his part of the covenants. Bozon v. Farlow, 1 Meriv. 459; Coslake v. Till, 1 Russ. 376; Stocker v. Wedderburn, 3 Kay & Johns. 393; Hills v. Croll, 2 Phill. 60; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. (U. 7. Executed Contracts Will Not be Enforced.—It is a general rule that courts will not decree specific performance of a contract that is executed.¹

VI. CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE OR NOT, CLASSIFIED AS TO SUBJECT-MATTER.—Although the courts have continually attempted to determine the equitable enforceability of contracts by classifying them according to their subject-matter, and have declared that certain kinds of contracts, notably those which concern real estate, will be specifically enforced, while others, such as those relating to chattels and personal conduct, will not, yet the true test is not to be found in the subject-matter. For if the contract possesses the elements requisite to enable a court of equity to enforce it, specific performance will be decreed, regardless of what manner of interests or rights it concerns. The real test is the one already named, Is there an adequate remedy at law? If there is, the suitor will be left to his action in damages; if not, equity will grant him relief. Applying this test to the various classes of

N. H. 248; 10 Am. St. Rep. 404, was one in which, in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to sell a yacht, defendant had promised to pay therefor a certain number of shares of stock in a designated corporation. The evidence failed to show that plaintiff had any special wish or reason to become the owner of this stock in preference to any other stock of the same value, or that he would not have been willing to take other stock, or even money in payment for the yacht. The court took the position that the fact that one party to the contract is entitled to have a decree for specific performance of such contract does not entitle the other party to specific performance in his favor, for the breach of the contract can be adequately compensated to him by the payment of a sum of money. The court, by Smith, J., said: "The rule of mutuality of remedy is of English origin. In that country there is no limitation upon the jurisdiction of their chancery courts, except so far as it is fixed and defined by usage. For no other reason, apparently, than the arbitrary one, that the remedy should be mutual, the rule became established that either party might maintain a bill for specific performance if the other could, although the party bringing the bill could have no other relief than the recovery of the same amount of money or damages as would be recovered in a suit at law. In Massachusetts, the jurisdiction of their court to decree specific performance of the contract is limited to cases where 'the parties have not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at common law.' Neither in that State nor in Pennsylvania does the English rule of mutuality of remedy seem to be followed in its fullest extent. . . . The mutuality required is that which is necessary for creating a contract enforceable on both sides in some manner, but not necessarily enforceable on both sides by specific performance."

1. In Tucker v. Clark, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 96, where parties, supposing that they were seised, sold and conveyed lands, with covenants of seisin and warranty, to which as it subsequently appeared, they had no title; and six years afterwards, on being sued by their grantee on the covenant of seisin, purchased the lands of the true owners and tendered a new conveyance thereof to the grantee, who refused to accept it, it was held that the court had no power to compel the grantee to receive the deed, or to interfere with his action on the covenants of title.

Where, after the execution of a contract to convey to a railroad company a right of way in consideration of which the company stipulated to perform certain acts, a deed of the right of way was executed, containing different stipulations, the contract is merged in the deed, and cannot be specifically enforced. Shenandoah Val. R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 346.

A collateral covenant which restrains the assignment of a contract, will not be enforced in equity, when it appears in the contract that such restraint is a contracts, we find that, with the exception of those which relate to land, the great majority of broken agreements find an adequate remedy at law, and therefore are not proper subjects for equitable relief.¹

1. Contracts Relating to Land.—By its very nature, real estate has no measurable money equivalent. One who has a contract which entitles him to the conveyance of land cannot be compelled to accept money compensation instead, for money may not be a fit equivalent. As to him equity will always presume that the land possesses a special value that is not, for the purposes of the suit, convertible into any liquidated sum. Hence it follows that a contract relating to land will be enforced as a matter of course, if it is fair and definite in its terms, and stands upon a sufficient consideration.² Equity assumes jurisdiction over all manner of rights and interests connected with real estate, for example, in addition to contracts which relate to fee-simple interests in land, leasehold estates, life estates, easements, expectancies, riparian rights, and, indeed, any interest or estate, legal or equitable, which arises out of real property.³

In Ensign v. Kellog, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 5, the court by Parker, C. J., said: "We are satisfied that no subject is more proper for the power of a court of chancery in decreeing specific execution than a contract for the sale of real estate; for what is agreed to be done ought, in conscience, to be done. . . . Nor is the remedy at law for damages complete or adequate; for the thing contracted for is wanted, and the value in money may often be an unsatisfactory compensation."

Specific performance will be decreed, though it appears that the land contracted for is chiefly valuable on account of its timber. Equity adopts this principle, not because the land is fertile, or rich in minerals, but because it is land. Kitchen v. Herring, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 190.

Of a contract in writing respecting lands which is certain in its terms, fair, reasonable, and founded on an adequate consideration, specific performance is as much a matter of right as compensation in damages. Bogan v. Daughdrill, 51 Ala. 312; Chambers v. Alabama Iron Co., 67 Ala. 353; McClure v. Otrich, 118 Ill. 320.

absence of a showing as to the inadequacy of compensation in damages, to be incapable of equitable enforcement.

Leasehold Interest.—An agreement for a lease for more than one year is an agreement for an "estate or interest in real property," and, in a proper case, is capable of equitable enforcement, on the same terms and under the like circumstances that any agreement concerning lands is or may be specifically enforced. Wallace v. Scoggin, 17 Oregon 476.

Equitable Interest.—One who, even as subpurchaser, has acquired an equitable interest in land under an executory agreement, may enter into an agreement for its sale to a third person, without waiting until he has obtained a deed, if the sale is made in good faith, and the title is fully perfected at the time specified for the completion of the sale. Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312.

If the owner of an equitable title to real estate agrees to convey to another an interest therein, subject to the approval of the holder of the legal title, if such assignee will build a depot and side track near the same, and the latter does build the same, at his own expense, with the knowledge of the holder of the legal title, whereby the value of the tract is greatly enhanced, a court of equity will enforce the contract, subject to the rights of the holder of the legal title for any sum due him. *Borders v. In Stark v. Wilder, 36 Vt. 752, the court decreed the specific performance of a contract to execute a quitclaim deed, the plaintiff having paid the purchase money and sold the premises, and executed a warranty deed of them, in the belief that the quitclaim deed had been executed and recorded according to the defendant's promise, and that his title was perfect.

A feme sole, agreed before her marriage, that for a certain sum, which was paid her, she would release her dower in her husband's lands. After the marriage the husband conveyed a parcel of land to A by warranty deed. The husband died. Held, that equity, at A's instance, would compel the execution of a release of dower in the land. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 263.

A contract for the conveyance of land, by which the purchaser may pay in money or labor, at his election, can be enforced in equity, if he elects to pay the money, and tenders the amount. Owen v. Frink, 24 Cal. 171.

The owner of land, who agrees in writing to convey it on certain terms, and at the same time, by another written agreement, promises to forfeit a sum of money if he fails so to convey, may be compelled in equity to convey the land, on performance of the terms of the agreement by the other party. Dooley v. Watson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 414.

Where a vendee has performed his part of the contract, he is entitled to a specific performance of it, and is not bound to receive back the purchase money, after the land has increased in value and he has made improvements thereon. Buchanan v. Brown, Cooke (Tenn.) 185.

Equity will enforce an agreement to convey land upon the completion of a building as designated, and the opening of business as agreed, and the fact that the building was afterwards converted to other purposes is immaterial. Plymouth Mfg. Co.'s Appeal, 81* Pa. St. 147.

Where two lessees held an option to buy the premises, and one assigned his interest to the other; but the joint notes of both conformable to the conditions of the option, were tendered for the purchase money, it was held that the assignment did not impair the right to

with his part of the contract, unless he shows that he was ready to fulfill his own obligation.¹ Nor will he be relieved from his obligation because of the failure of the vendee to pay the purchase price, if such failure came about through the act of the vendor.² Nor is the vendor excused by the return to his vendee of the consideration; for it requires the same mutual consent to cancel a contract that it requires to make one.³ While the purchaser may not be compelled to accept less than he has agreed to take, he has a right, rather than rescind, to enforce the contract for a part, if he so desires, where an enforcement of the contract in its entirety is impossible, and to claim an abatement of price as to that which he is unable to acquire by the suit.⁴ Thus, he may enforce the conveyance of land, although the claim a conveyance. Souffrain v. McDonald, 27 Ind. 269.

Where a person agreed to convey a lot of land to a religious society, for the site of a church, was appointed on the building committee, and to obtain and collect subscriptions for the church; and in building the church previously to the incorporation of the society, expended his own money, over and above the amount of the subscriptions, the court, after the incorporation, would not compel him to convey the lot, before repayment of his money so expended. Canajoharie, etc., Church v. Leiber, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 43.

Although the only contract of which the assignee has notice recites that the consideration thereof has been paid, it is admissible for the vendor to show that the consideration was not money, but a bond to convey other land to the vendor, which land has never been conveyed; and thereupon the vendor will not be compelled to convey to the assignees until the vendee's contract to convey has been performed. Thompson v. Allen, 12 Ind. 539.

It was held, in Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299, that it was no defense to a bill for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land on the payment of a sum specifically in coin, that the plaintiff would not pay in coin if he had tendered the sum in legal-tender notes.

If payment for the land was to be made in a specific article, as in labor, the vendee cannot enforce a performance by showing a tender of money in lieu of the article, in the absence of fault on the vendor's part. Brewer v. Thorp, 3 Ind. 262.

One who purchases land at a fixed price, payable in services for a definite term, is entitled in a suit for specific performance, to credit for so much of such term as he may serve, and the vendor cannot apply the credit to another account. Young v. Harris, 36 Ark. 162.

vendor's title thereto be defective, as the vendor will not be permitted to take advantage of the weakness of his own title.¹

Instances.—Where a contract for the sale of land described it as bounded by the lands of other persons named, and as containing "1,000 acres, more or less," the court refused to decree a specific performance by the purchaser, upon proof that the land contained but 600 acres, except upon condition that the vendor would make a proportionate deduction in the price. Leigh v. Crump, 1 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 299.

A vendor of land cannot protect himself against a bill by the vendee for specific performance, on the ground that he has conveyed away portions of the land, thereby rendering a specific performance in toto impossible, if the vendee consents to receive what remains of the land, though such conveyances were made with the consent of such vendee. Waters v. Travis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 450.

Where a contract provides for the conveyance of land free from all incumbrances, the existence of incumbrances within the vendor's but not within the purchaser's knowledge, is no ground for a refusal to decree specific performance in favor of the purchaser, in so far as lies within the vendor's power. Jerome v. Scudder, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 169.

Upon suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of four hundred acres of land, the complainant may have a specific performance as to eighty acres only. The discrepancy, in such cases, is not a matter by which the defendant can be injured, and he cannot complain of it. Bogan v. Daughdrill, 51 Ala. 312.

St. 88; 88 Am. Dec. 485; Dalzell v. Crawford, 1 Pa. Law J. R. 155. Roberts v. Lovejoy, 60 Tex. 253.

A vendor of lands cannot object to a specific performance, on the ground that a bare legal title is held in trust for him by another party, if the purchaser is content with the title. Hyde v. Kelly, 10 Ohio 215.

Where a tenant in common contracted to sell a portion of his undivided half, and afterwards made a partition, with the consent of his vendee—held, that the partition was no objection to a bill, by the vendee, for a specific performance, his right attaching to his vendor's share, upon partition. Waters v. Travis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 450.

Equity will enforce specific performance of a devisee's contract to convey, under a devise "subject to the support and maintenance" of a third person, although he set up the defense that it would involve a breach of trust. Title vests in the devisee, subject to that incumbrance, and the vendor may convey such title as he has. Downer v. Church, 44 N. Y. 647.

A vendee, who has purchased by writing requiring deed of general warranty, will not be required to pay all the purchase money, when a part of the land sold is claimed by others, and the title thereto is defective. If the purchaser can show clearly that the title is defective, he will not be required to pay the purchase money until such defect is removed, or a proper abatement is decreed, if the vendee insists on having as much as he can have under good title. Heavner v. Morgan, 30 W. Va. 335.

Defendant cannot defeat a suit upon his contract to give a quitclaim deed for a strip of land, by a claim that the public are using it as a highway, where it appears that the record title is in defendant, and that no deed or written dedication has been made to the public or village authorities, and that part of the strip only has been so used. Canham v. Mooney (Mich. 1889), 41 N. W. Rep. 223.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land, the title to which is in litigation between the vendor and a third person, the vendor cannot refuse to convey whatever title he has, though the litigation concerning it is still undetermined. Bragg v. Olson, 128 Ill. 540.

Nor can he successfully resist by a mere pretense that he cannot convey.

Where a party has given his obligation for a conveyance of land, he cannot set up an executory contract, in which he was the obligor, and which he has

Where the defects in the title are known to all parties at the time the contract is made and are contemplated in the making of it, the vendee can only compel the conveyance of such title as he agreed to accept, and will not be allowed to claim a perfect title.¹ He may sue the vendor and compel a conveyance of his interest, even though the vendor's wife has refused to convey hers,² and the court will award him compensation for the interest which he fails to acquire under his decree,³ or compel the vendor to furnish never executed, as a ground of refusal to make the conveyance. Oldham v. Farris, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 405.

Nor is the fact that defendant before suit brought, but after the contract was made, had entered into an agreement with another for the conveyance of the same land. Snowman v. Harford, 57 Me. 397.

Where a party has covenanted to convey a title to a tract of land, a court of equity will not permit him to resist a claim by the vendee for specific performance, by a pretense that a part of the title is in others; that he has in vain endeavored to procure a conveyance from them, and that, therefore, he is unable to complete the title; and especially where he was cognizant of his want of title. Love v. Kamp, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 209; 51 Am. Dec. 419.

In a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, it is no defense in the vendor to say that he has disabled himself to comply with the same. The vendee is entitled to a decree compelling the vendor to make reasonable efforts to reacquire the title and convey to him. Welborn v. Sechrist, 88 N. Car. 287.

The vendor will not be heard to defend on the ground that he has conferred an equitable interest in a portion of the land upon another. Westervelt v. Matheson, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 37.

Nor Can He Take Advantage of His Own Wrong.—A land agent of the commonwealth who, as such, has sold a bond of the commonwealth for the conveyance of land, and afterwards individually taken an assignment of it from the purchaser, cannot defend a suit for the specific performance of an agreement afterwards made by him to transfer the bond upon the ground that the contracts under which he held were void as against public policy. Pingree v. Coffin, 12 Gray (Mass.) 288.

1. Winne v. Reynolds, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 407.

When, at the time of the sale of real estate, the vendor offers the vendee all the title he has in the premises, both parties knowing at the time that the vendor's title is not perfect, and the vendee, at a subsequent day, brings a bill in equity to enforce against the vendor the conveyance of a perfect title, the bill will be dismissed. Mills v. Van Vorhis, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 125.

The rule that when a vendor cannot comply with the contract, by reason of not having the legal title to all the land, the vendee is entitled to specific performance for such as he has title, with compensation for the residue, does not apply when the vendee knew at the time of purchase that the vendor had not full title. Knox v. Spratt, 23 Fla. 64.

Where A contracted to convey to B, "by a good and valid conveyance in law," a farm, a quit-rent on the farm of 54 cents per year, which was known to B at the time of the contract, was held to be no objection to a decree of specific performance, especially as such rent had not been demanded for many years. Ten Broeck v. Livingston, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 357.

A decree for specific performance of an agreement to convey land, where the wife refuses to release her dower, should calculate the amount to be abated on this account from the agreed price, not by estimating the full sum to which she would then be entitled if her husband were dead, but by a calculation of the present value of her interest, calculated by the proper tables. Hazlrig v. Hutson, 18 Ind. 481.

Exceptions.—A substantially contrary doctrine has been announced, but it does not seem to be sustained by the best authority. Thus the Pennsylvania courts, which adopt a very narrow construction of the chancery powers, have held in Riesz's Appeal, 73 Pa. St. 485, that where the vendor's wife refuses to join in his deed the vendee cannot compel a conveyance of the husband's sole interest unless he is willing to pay the full purchase price for both estates and accept the vendor's deed alone, and they relegate the vendee to the courts at law for relief. Hanna v. Phillips, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 253; Clark v. Seirer, 7 Watts (Pa.) 107; 32 Am. Dec. 745; Corson v. Mulvaney, 49 Pa. St. 88; 88 Am. Dec. 485; Burk's Appeal, 75 Pa. St. 141; 15 Am. Rep. 587. And in New Jersey. Reilly v. Smith, 25 N. J. Eq. 158.

And in Alabama, under a statute forbidding a sale of the homestead without the wife's consent a sale of the husband's interest cannot be enforced. Moses v. McClain, 82 Ala. 370. And see Conboy v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 42 Kan. 658.

A and his wife contracted to convey land to B by warranty deed but without release of dower, it appearing from the circumstances of the sale, which were known to B, that A would have refused to contract for such a conveyance. The wife voluntarily refused to join in the deed. Held, that B was not entitled to specific performance with abatement for the dower interest. Lucas v. Scott, 41 Ohio St. 636.

A husband and wife, owners of separate and undivided interests in a hotel and saloon business, entered into an executory agreement to sell it as an entirety for a fixed sum, the contract being void as to the wife because not acknowledged by her. Held, that the purchaser could not compel the husband to convey his undivided interest, as it is not to be inferred that when he entered into the contract he intended to leave his wife a cotenant with the purchasers. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521.

Under a contract to sell land where it appears there is a great deficiency in the quantity of the land, the court will not, in the absence of fraud, compel the vendor to complete the sale, making a deduction in price for the shortage. Rugge v. Ellis, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 160.

1. Indemnity for Dower Interest.—Young v. Paul, 10 N. J. Eq. 401; 64 Am. Dec. 456.

Upon a bill for specific performance, the court will not render a decree requiring a husband to procure his wife to join in the execution of a deed for the purpose of releasing her inchoate right of dower, if she is unwilling to do so. The husband, however, may be compelled to convey and to give indemnity against the claim of the wife. But a decree of indemnity will only be made where it appears that the wife's refusal to convey is not her voluntary act, but made in bad faith, by the device of the husband, to escape his just obligation. Peeler v. Levy, 26 N. J. Eq. 330.

Indemnity refused in Flaherty v. Blake (N. J. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 158.

A decree for specific performance of a contract to sell and convey land, directing a conveyance on payment by the purchaser of the amount due on the contract, but authorizing him, in case the vendor's wife refuses to join in the deed, to retain a certain sum (in this case, $250) out of the purchase-money, as an indemnity against the contingent right of dower, is erroneous. Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299.

While the husband is still living there is no basis on which to determine the injury to the title by the wife's refusal to release her dower. Humphrey v. Clement, 44 Ill. 299.

parties or strangers to the suit,¹ nor has he any equitable remedy where the vendor has no title to the land and can make none; but he is left to an action at law upon the covenants in his deed.² But where the vendor subsequently acquires title and the vendee has meanwhile made payments of the purchase price and has gone into possession and made improvements, the vendor's subsequent acquisition of title inures to the purchaser's benefit, and he may compel a conveyance to himself of such after-acquired interest.³ A deed made by one who, at the time, has no title, is regarded as a covenant to convey.⁴ The vendor will be required to re-execute a deed where, without the purchaser's fault, the first deed has been accidentally lost or destroyed before it could be recorded,⁵ or where he has obtained possession of it, after it has been once executed and delivered, and has destroyed it.⁶

b. SUITS BY THE VENDOR—(1) In General.—Though the vendee's duty in these contracts generally consists in nothing beyond the payment of money, for which the law would seem to afford a sufficient remedy, yet the vendor has a right, in a court of equity, to compel him to comply with his agreement by accepting the land and paying for it. This is permissible, under the equitable doctrine that the enforcement of contracts must be mutual, and that where the vendee would have a right to a decree compelling the conveyance of the land to him, his vendor must likewise be permitted in equity to compel the acceptance of his deed and the payment of the consideration for it. And this the vendor may do, even though he may have an action at law for the purchase money.⁷ The vendor has no standing before the

The remedy in a case where the obligee of a title bond had not paid the purchase money, is to file a bill against him to compel a specific performance. White v. Hooper, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 152.

A husband and wife, having duly executed and acknowledged their joint deed of land and placed it in the hands of a third person to be delivered by him to the purchaser, upon payment of the purchase money, may compel a specific performance, by the purchaser, of the terms of the joint contract of sale, in pursuance of which the deed was made. Farley v. Palmer, 20 Ohio St. 223.

In an action to enforce a contract to purchase land, it is no defense that a person, to whom defendant was attempting to sell the property at the time of making the contract, had sometime afterwards said that he could not take it. Northrup v. Gibbs (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 465.

It has been held that a title is not marketable where it exposes the party holding it to litigation." See also Emmert v. Stouffer, 94 Md. 543.

A purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a title which is so doubtful that it may expose him to litigation, although the court may believe it good.

It must be a marketable title, which is defined as "one that is free from reasonable doubt." Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253; Hymers v. Branch, 6 Mo. App. 511; Vreeland v. Blauvelt, 23 N. J. The question as to whether the title is marketable is one for the court, and it is not error to exclude evidence of attorneys to that point. Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N. Y. 35.

In Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575, the court by Folger, C. J., said: "As a general rule, a title which is open to judicial doubt is not a marketable title. What is a sufficient ground for judicial doubt is not to be conclusively reduced to fixed and determinate principles, for it depends, in some degree, upon the discretion of the court. (White v. Damon, 7 Ves. 35.) Thus it is said in Price v. Strange (6 Madd. 159), that, in attempting to lay down a rule, it may be stated that a purchaser is not to take property which he can only acquire in possession by litigation and judicial decision. A title may be doubtful, which is to say, unmarketable, because of the uncertainty of some matter of fact appearing in the course of the deduction of it. And if, after the vendor has produced all the proofs that he can, a rational doubt still remains, a title is not marketable. It seems that a rational doubt may be said to exist when a court of law would not feel called upon to instruct a jury to find that the fact existed on the existence of which the vendor's title depends. (Emery v. Grocock, 6 Madd. 54; Lowe v. Lush, 14 Ves. 548.)

A marketable title is one that is free from reasonable doubt. The purchaser is not compelled to take property, the possession of which he may be compelled to defend by litigation. He should have a title that will enable him to hold his land in peace, and if he wishes to sell it, be reasonably sure that no flaw or doubt will arise to disturb its market value. Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253.

Specific performance will not be decreed to compel a purchaser to accept title while an action is pending to set aside for fraud a deed on which such title depends. Aldrich v. Bailey, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 607.

An objection which is supported by a decision of the supreme court in general term will defeat a suit for specific performance. Ferris v. Plummer, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 440.

Equity will not compel the specific performance of a contract to buy land, where the title was derived through a mortgage given to "Joseph D. Beers, president of the North American Trust & Banking Company, his successors and assigns," without words of inheritance, where, as in New Jersey, such words are essential to a fee simple. Cornell v. Andrews, 35 N. J. Eq. 7; 15 Cent. L. J. 8.

But this rule that a purchaser will not be required to accept a title which may be exposed to litigation, does not prevail where no question of fact is involved and all parties interested are before the court. Chesman v. Cummings, 142 Mass. 65.

If there be any reasonable chance that some third person may raise a question against the owner of the estate after the completion of the contract, the court considers this a circumstance which renders the bargain a hard one for the purchaser, and one which it will not in the exercise of its discretion compel him to execute." Brooklyn Park Comrs. v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234; 6 Am. Rep. 70; Seaman v. Vawdrey, 16 Ves. 390.

Specific performance of a contract of sale will not be decreed at the instance of the vendor, unless his ability to make a good title is unquestionable. Tomlin v. McChord, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 135; Garnett v. Macon, 6 Call (Va.) 308; Owings v. Baldwin, 8 Gill (Md.) 337.

The title must be free from reasonable doubt. Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 262; Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 389; Bartlett v. Blanton, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 426; Jarman v. Davis, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 115; Hightower v. Smith, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 542; Beckwith v. Kouns, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 222; Beer v. Leonard, 40 La. Ann. 845; Chambers v. Tulane, 9 N. J. Eq. 146; Brown v. Haff, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 235; 28 Am. Dec. 425; Bates v. Delavan, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 299; Delavan v. Duncan, 49 N. Y. 485; Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21; Bostwick v. Beach, 103 N. Y. 414; Toole v. Toole, 112 N. Y. 333; Ferry v. Sampson, 112 N. Y. 415; Nicol v. Carr, 35 Pa. St. 381; Lowry v. Muldrow, 8 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 241; Butler v. O'Hear, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 382; 1 Am. Dec. 671; Starnes v. Allison, 2 Head (Tenn.) 221; Collins v. Smith, 1 Head (Tenn.) 251; Gober v. Hart, 36 Tex. 141; Littlefield v. Tinsley, 26 Tex. 353; Middleton v. Selby, 19 W. Va. 167.

A vendee cannot be compelled on a bill for specific performance to accept a doubtful title unless it is so stipulated in the contract. Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396.

The rule prevails whether the doubt arise upon the facts, or whether the question be one of law. Jordan v. Poillon, 77 N. Y. 518; Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 8; Abbott v. James, 111 N. Y. 673. See Hayes v. Nourse, 114 N. Y. 395; 11 Am. St. Rep. 700; Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312.

If there is any doubt concerning the title and the vendor can remove that doubt at trifling expense, he cannot have specific performance unless he first perfect his title. Reformed, etc., Dutch Church v. Mott, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 77; 32 Am. Dec. 613.

Where the contract merely calls for a deed, this implies a good title. Bowen v. Vickers, 2 N. J. Eq. 520; 35 Am. Dec. 516.

It has been held that where the contract is for a "good title" a quitclaim deed is sufficient if the vendor has a good title. Pugh v. Chesseldine, 11 Ohio 109; 37 Am. Dec. 414.

Title by Adverse Possession Sufficient.

—Title by adverse possession, such as may be proven by parol proof, will justify a decree. But it must be established beyond question. Murray v. Harway, 56 N. Y. 344; Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575; Seymour v. DeLancey, 1 Hopk. (N. Y.) 436; 14 Am. Dec. 552.

But not where the title of the vendor rests only on adverse possession, and it is impossible to determine from the evidence what claim of title was made by the vendor's grantor, and the person in whom is the outstanding title is not a party to the suit. McCabe v. Kenny, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 514.

Adverse possession under color of title, if there is no reasonable doubt as to the superiority of such title, will entitle the vendor to a decree. Crowell v. Druley, 19 Ill. App. 509. See O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511; Methodist, etc., Church Home v. Thompson, 1 Silvernail (N. Y.) 564.

Thirty years of adverse possession will sustain a title that equity will compel the vendee to accept. New York Steam Co. v. Stern, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 206; Kennedy v. Gramling, 33 S. Car. 367.

And a title one link of which is a defective assignment made seventy years earlier. New York Steam Co. v. Stern, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 206.

Fifty-five years' continuous possession cures the absence of a deed in the chain of title. Bohm v. Fay, 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 175.

So, with ninety years' adverse possession. Abrams v. Rhoner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 507.

And sixty years, where there are no outstanding minorities which could be set up against it. Ottinger v. Strasburger, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 466.

In 1835, Kip sold land to Delavan and took a mortgage for the purchase money. In 1840, Delavan made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, which provided for the return to him of any surplus. The same year Kip brought a foreclosure suit, and made Delavan a party, but not Delavan's assignee. Kip bid off the property and received a master's deed, which he recorded in 1841. Delavan lived thirty years after this, and his assignee twenty-five, and Kip's title was never questioned. Held, that in 1875 Kip's title was sufficiently good to compel its acceptance by a purchaser under an executory contract. (Reversing 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 1.) Kip v. Hirsh, 103 N. Y. 565; 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 167.

It is not a defect of title for which the vendee may defeat a decree for specific performance that, after fifty-one years' acquiescence in a public grant, private parties possibly had rights which they might have asserted. Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388; 55 Am. Rep. 869.

But this rule that title by adverse possession is sufficient is not universal, for in Schultz v. Rose, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 75, the contrary was held. And in Lewis v. Herndon, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 358; 14 Am. Dec. 68.

Particularly where the title by adverse possession depends on a long and difficult investigation of facts, although it may be good. Noyes v. Johnson, 139 Mass. 436.

Adverse possession will not answer where the contract implies that the purchaser should have a good record title. Noyes v. Johnson, 139 Mass. 436.

The possession under which title is claimed must be distinctly hostile, and where the land is unoccupied and unclosed the title has been pronounced insufficient. Kip v. Hirsh, 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 1; 103 N. Y. 565.

Mere naked possession will not support a decree for conveyance, where title is in question. Rights growing out of possession are matters purely of legal cognizance. Smith v. Hollenback, 51 Ill. 223.

Title dependent on the Statute of Limitations will sustain a decree. Shober v. Dutton, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 185; O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511; Kip v. Hirsh, 103 N. Y. 565; Core v. Wigner, 32 W. Va. 277.

Equitable Title.—The title must be a good equitable title as well as a good legal one. Creigh v. Shatto, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 82.

A purchaser at a master's sale, under a decree of court, will not be compelled to complete his purchase if he is not informed, at the sale, of any defect in the title, unless a title can be given which shall be good in equity, as well as at law. Coster v. Clarke, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 428.

A cestui que trust cannot dispose of his interest in the estate devised in trust for him, and a court of equity will not decree specific execution of an agreement of sale made by him. Shankland's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 113.

Title Dependent on Parol Proof Is Generally Sufficient.—A title, proof whereof rests partly in parol, is not necessarily so doubtful that specific performance by the purchaser will not be decreed. "It has been held that where one of the paper links of title was defective, the lapse might be supplied by parol proof of possession under color of title sufficient to establish a good adverse possession, and that such a title is enough on which to found a decree." Murray v. Harway, 56 N. Y. 344.

In Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371, the question was whether a first son had been brought up and educated as a member of the established Church of England and was a constant frequenter of that church. The fact being satisfactorily proven, the exceptions to the title were overruled.

Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573, was a suit for specific performance where title was objected to because it required parol proof to establish it, to determine whether a solicitor (Phillips) who was the plaintiff's grantor had dealt fairly with his client (Bate) who was the vendor to him. Decree granted.

But compare Irving v. Campbell, 121 N. Y. 353, where the contrary doctrine is announced. In that case the vendor was refused a decree where it appeared that a defective record was the only written evidence of a conveyance from one who was conceded to have had title less than twenty years before, even though the execution of such deed was satisfactorily proved by parol. Reversing 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 224.

Defects Which Will Prevent a Decree.—Instances.—Following have been held to be flaws in the title sufficient to defeat a conveyance:

A mortgage. Swihart v. Cline, 19 Ind. 264; Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21.

Even a mortgage that has been satisfied of record, where the vendee has notice that it has never been paid. Conley v. Dibber, 91 Ind. 413. And a mortgage, the satisfaction of which was forged, the vendee having notice of the forgery. Charleston v. Blohme, 15 S. Car. 124; 40 Am. Rep. 690.

An outstanding dower interest. Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12; Bostwick v. Beach, 103 N. Y. 414; Ely v. Perrine, 2 N. J. Eq. 396.

Where, in the chain of title, a former deed has passed which, on account of error in its terms is liable to reformation and thus to impair the title, the vendee is not bound to perfect his purchase. Scholle v. Scholle, 113 N. Y. 261.

Unsatisfied tax liens. Cooper v. Tiler, 46 Ill. 462; 95 Am. Dec. 442; Wilson v. Tappan, 6 Ohio 120.

Liability of vendor as surety. Secrest v. McKenna, 1 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 356. See Butler v. O'Hear, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 382; 1 Am. Dec. 671.

The purchaser cannot be compelled to take a title where there is at least a probability that certain persons whose deed is tendered to make a title, are not the sole and only heirs of their ancestor. Walton v. Meeks, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 311.

A vendor of land should not have specific execution of his contract, when he cannot show a good and perfect title at the hearing, though he may have been thrown off his guard by the purchaser; and want of proof that the grantors in a deed are the heirs, and only heirs, of one who died seised, is a fatal defect. A recital in the deed is not sufficient to establish the fact. Barnett v. Higgins, 4 Dana (Ky.) 565. See Kilpatrick v. Barron, 125 N. Y. 751.

A defective acknowledgment in a former deed may be a fatal objection to the title. So held where the statute required a married woman executing a deed to be examined separate and apart from her husband, and that the officer examining her should explain the contents and question her as to her willingness, and the officer's certificate had omitted some of these particulars. Black v. Aman, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 131. See also Fryer v. Rockefeller, 63 N. Y. 268; Brown v. Witter, 10 Ohio 142; Ludlow v. O'Neil, 29 Ohio St. 181; Mullins v. Aiken, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 535.

Where there is a substantial defect with respect to the nature, character, situation, extent or quality of the estate, which was unknown to the purchaser, he will not be compelled to accept the title. Ellicott v. White, 43 Md. 145.

Reservations and Conditions.—A covenant in a former deed that a part of the lot shall be left vacant for courtyard and never built on. Wetmore v. Bruce, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 149; 118 N. Y. 319. But compare Riggs v. Purcell, 66 N. Y. 193, where the contrary view was taken of a similar covenant on the ground that the reservation operated to the advantage of the lot.

In Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184, a condition forbidding the erection of stable roofs on the premises beyond a certain height was held sufficient to defeat a decree.

One will not be compelled to accept a conveyance containing restrictions of which he had no previous knowledge, prohibiting the erection of dwelling houses of a less width than seventeen feet, and the laying out of streets, lanes, alleys, courts and avenues of a less width than fifty feet, and the building upon certain streets and avenues. Anders' Estate, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 45.

Equity will not enforce a contract to purchase against a vendee where a former owner conveyed the lot in question and adjacent lots by deeds containing restrictions as to the use of the premises, and afterwards re-purchased the lot, and re-conveyed it by a deed containing no restrictions, certain later mesne conveyances also containing no restrictions. The restrictions can be enforced by the adjacent owners. Raynor v. Lyon, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 227.

One will not be compelled to accept a title which may be incumbered with a condition, even though there be doubt as to the validity of the condition. Post v. Bernheimer, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 247.

In Drake v. Shiels (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 209, the court refuses to enforce a contract to buy a lease of premises known as "75 Fourth Avenue," it appearing that one wall of the building in question was not on the demised premises, as the vendor's title is to that extent defective.

A prohibition against use of the property for the manufacture of soap or other disagreeable purposes is such an incumbrance as will excuse a vendee from compliance. Raynor v. Lyon, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 227.

In Adams v. Valentine, 33 Fed. Rep. 1, the condition was that "no building shall be erected nearer to Olive street than the house of H. G. Otis now stands," and was deemed sufficient to defeat plaintiff's claim.

The restriction upon the title in Gilbert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165, was that no structure was to be erected on the land that would impair in any manner the view of the bay from any part of the dwelling of J. C. Green, and a decree was refused.

A condition as to character, location and use of buildings to be erected, held sufficient to defeat vendor's suit. Newbold v. Peabody Heights Co., 70 Md. 493.

A reservation of an easement. Hymers v. Branch, 6 Mo. App. 511; Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 246; Seaman v. Hicks, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 655; James v. Freeland, 5 Grant Ch. 302; Kronsbien v. Gage, 10 Grant Ch. 572; Boulton v. Bethune, 21 Grant Ch. 478.

A purchaser is not bound to accept a title that is clouded by a right of reverter in the heirs of the original grantor by reason of a diversion from the uses limited in his conveyance. Nor will the fact that the legislature attempted to authorize an absolute disposition by the original grantee, notwithstanding the limitation, make any difference. Second Universalist Soc. v. Dugan, 65 Md. 460.

See, generally, in reference to limitations upon the use of the premises, Bentley v. Craven, 17 Beav. 204; Corless v. Sparling, 1r. Rep., 9 Eq. 595; Brookes v. Drysdale, L. R., 3 C. P. Div. 52; Foley v. McKeown, 4 Leigh (Va.) 627.

Title Dependent on Irregular Legal Proceedings.—The vendee will not be compelled to accept a title that is defective, by reason of imperfect or irregular legal proceedings, as where necessary parties have been omitted in foreclosure proceedings, or sales have been irregularly conducted by guardians, personal representatives or public officers, and the vendor has acquired his title, either proximately or remotely, through such sales. Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen (Mass.) 25; Kilpatrick v. Barron, 125 N. Y. 751; James v. Meyer, 41 La. Ann. 1100.

See also Swayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. St. 436; Tevis v. Richardson, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 654; Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 290.

Equity will not decree specific performance in the vendor's favor where the title is imperfect because certain grandchildren of a testator, who pos-seased a vested remainder in the estate, were not made parties to foreclosure proceedings. Lockman v. Reilly, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 434.

See also Martin v. Porter, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 407; Littlefield v. Tinsley, 26 Tex. 353.

A purchaser will not be compelled to accept a title derived from a foreclosure sale, where the summons in the foreclosure was served under an order for publication made by the special term of the supreme court, instead of by a judge as required by statute. Crosby v. Thedford, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 150.

Specific performance will not be granted where the plaintiff claims title through a deed from an assignee in bankruptcy; and the facts that no debts were proved against the estate of the bankrupt before his discharge, and only one small debt afterwards; that the land was sold by the assignee in bankruptcy for but two dollars, without any proof that even that was paid, or that any binding contract for the sale was made; that no deed was given by the assignee until after the lapse of twenty-two years, when no conveyance could have been compelled; that the deed was then given without any order of the court, and that no possession ever accompanied the title under the assignee's sale, leave the plaintiff's title involved in infirmity and uncertainty. Palmer v. Morrison, 104 N. Y. 132.

Specific performance of an agreement to assign certain tax leases of the city of New York, refused, the leases being found irregular and defective. After such agreement it appeared that the promisee purchased and received a conveyance from the owner of the lands. But it was held that this did not cure the defects in the promisor's title, being adverse thereto. Bensel v. Gray, 80 N. Y. 517.

At an assignee's sale in bankruptcy the land was bid off by Reed. Townshend claimed to have purchased Reed's bid from Reed's administrator, and the assignee accordingly made a deed to Townshend. No possession accompanied the deed under the assignee's sale. Held, that one who, many years afterwards, claimed under Townshend could not give a title which, in a suit for specific performance, a purchaser should be compelled to accept, the heirs of Reed being the proper parties to have conveyed, and the administrator having had no interest or authority to assign. Palmer v.

Morrison, 104 N. H. 132. And see Scholle v. Scholle, 113 N. Y. 261.

A bill in equity was filed against the purchasers of an estate under an order from the probate court, for a specific performance of the contract. The sale not having been confirmed—held, that the court would not take jurisdiction of such a bill. Bickley v. Biddle, 33 Pa. St. 276.

Property in which A had a life estate, and her daughter B, a minor, the remainder in fee, was sold by order of court and purchased by A, who should have paid the price, or most of it, to the trustee, to be invested for B, but who, instead, retained it in her own right and as guardian of B. Notwithstanding this, she received a deed, under order of court. Held, that a purchaser would not be compelled to accept her title. Gill v. Wells, 59 Md. 492.

A will authorized the executors to sell or mortgage realty whenever necessary to do so, to pay any expenses or bequests therein provided for, or to save or improve any other portion of the property while undistributed. A report of the executors showed a balance of $904.93, to be provided for, but it did not appear whether this had been approved. Long before making this report, the executors had contracted to sell the land in question to plaintiff's vendor, for $6,000. They afterwards conveyed to plaintiff. Held, not a marketable title, the power of the executors to convey the land being a doubtful question of fact. Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312. See Scholle v. Scholle, 113 N. Y. 261.

A sale of land was made by an administrator, on September 20, 1860, and by the conditions of the sale, the deed was to be delivered on the first Monday of December. Administrator's intestate claimed title through a deed of commissioners appointed to make partition of land, and the defendant declined to accept a deed on the ground of defective title. Held, that in a bill to enforce a specific performance, a court of equity would not compel a purchaser to accept a title dependent on an illegal or invalid sale, while it remained open to revision at the discretion of a court of law, although the judgment unreversed might be conclusive of the parties' rights. Young v. Rathbone, 16 N. J. Eq. 224; 84 Am. Dec. 151.

A purchaser at a judicial sale will not be compelled to accept a title of two or three executors, where it is a matter of doubt whether there was a renunciation of office by the executor not joining in the deed, and where a question of law is fairly open, besides, on a matter of descent. (Reversing 36 Hun (N. Y.) 456). Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 1.

Where an infant's interest in the land had been sold in partition without the appointment of a guardian for the infant, the title was held defective. Swain v. Fidelity Ins., etc., Co., 54 Pa. St. 455; Vail v. Nelson, 4 Rand. (Va.) 478.

Plaintiff contracted personally to sell to defendant land to an undivided one-third of which she had title, title to the residue being in her infant wards. She then applied for, and obtained from the probate court, permission to sell her wards' land at private sale. No sale was, in fact made under this order of court, but a report was filed reciting a sale to defendant, which was confirmed and a guardian's deed ordered to be executed. Plaintiff tendered this guardian's deed to defendant together with her own deed to the premises; but defendant refused to accept them. Held, that defendant would not be compelled to take the title offered, as it was doubtful whether there was such a compliance with the order of court to sell as would bind the wards. Williams v. Schembri, 44 Minn. 250. See Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen (Mass.) 25. But compare Kip v. Hirsh, 103 N. Y. 565.

Titles Defective for Doubt and Uncertainty.—Under a will of a married woman, providing that her husband should "not only have out of my estate what the laws of this commonwealth prescribe, but the entire use, income and profits of all my real and personal estate during his natural life; and furthermore, that if in his judgment it shall be necessary to his personal comfort to expend and consume any portion of the principal or capital of my said estate, he may freely appropriate so much thereof, even to the last cent, as may be justly deemed necessary for that purpose; and I do give and bequeath the same to him accordingly"—held, that the husband's title was not sufficiently clear to justify a specific performance of an agreement to purchase. Butts v. Andrews, 136 Mass. 221.

Where an heir of a former owner had disappeared twelve years before and had failed to convey his interest, the title was held to be unmarketable. Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253.

Plaintiff held title through a devise to executors and trustees, with power to sell either publicly or privately. All the estate was bequeathed in trust to be divided among testator's children and their heirs, with the clause: "And if either of my daughters shall die without lawful issue, or leaving issue which shall not attain the age of twenty-one years, and without issue," then to be divided among his other children. Testator died in 1817, and in 1829, all the daughters having lawful issue, minors, the trustees, through a third person, conveyed one-third of the real estate to each daughter and her husband, there being no sale, but the transaction appearing from the deeds to be a scheme to free the land of the trust and bar the contingent remainder. There was a possibility that one of the daughters might have had issue dying under the age of twenty-one, but leaving issue, that might take as remainderman. On account of this doubt specific performance was refused. McPherson v. Smith, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 254.

Specific performance of a contract to sell land will not be decreed in favor of the vendor unless his ability to make a title be unquestionable. Thus, where executors sold a house and lot, the testator's title to five-sixths being clear, but for the other sixth of which no deed could be found either in the clerk's office or among the testator's papers, and the former owner being dead, her husband testified that she did make a deed of it, but there was doubt whether he was not mistaken as to the property conveyed, the purchaser was not required to complete the purchase. Griffin v. Cunningham, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 571.

In Francis v. St. Germain, 6 Grant Ch. 363, it appeared in December, 1854 that vendor's grantor was insane, and had been "since February or March, 1854," and his deed bore date February 14, 1854. See Frost v. Beavan, 17 Jur. 369; Elliott v. Ince, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 597; Hinchman v. Ballard, 7 W. Va. 152.

Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14 Allen (Mass.) 523.

A vendee found in the chain of title of the estate bargained for by him a record of an executor's sale of the land to one of the same surname, and a deed back, five days afterwards, to the executor, both deeds being recorded within five minutes of one another, and the transaction having taken place within twenty years. Where a deed recited that certain grantors were the heirs of one deceased, but did not state that they were the only heirs, title was rejected. Barnett v. Higgins, 4 Dana (Ky.) 565.

A title depending upon a judicial construction of odd phraseology in a will, will not be deemed "marketable" even though the court may incline to the belief that the title is good. For if there is a fair ground for doubt the court cannot determine the question in the absence of all parties whose interests such doubts involve. Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184; Cunningham v. Blake, 121 Mass. 333; Butts v. Andrews, 136 Mass. 221.

Contract of purchaser calls for a "first-class" title. He will not be compelled to take one which is good only upon the presumption that a certain person, whose conveyance, were he alive, would be indispensable, went away twenty-three years before and has not been heard from since. Vought v. Williams, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

Danger of Litigation.—In Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184, the court by Wells, J., says: "A defendant in proceedings for specific performance shall not be compelled to accept a title in the least degree doubtful. It is not necessary that he should satisfy the court that the title is defective, so that he ought to prevail at law; it is enough if it appears to be subject to adverse claims which are of such a nature as may reasonably be expected to expose the purchaser to controversy to maintain his title or rights incident to it. He ought not to be subjected, against his agreement or consent, to the necessity of litigation to remove even that which is only a cloud upon his title." See Butts v. Andrews, 136 Mass. 221; Christian v. Cabell, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 82.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to exchange land, it appeared that plaintiff's title was derived from settlers who had entered the land, but who had not yet received patents; that such settlers had made entry at the earliest period allowed by law, though by waiting they might have obtained title at less expense; that they had sold to complainant within a very few days after entry; that complainant had held possession of the land before entry, and had paid very inadequate prices to the settlers for it. The court refused a decree in the vendor's favor, holding that the chance that the entries would be canceled for fraud, on the ground that the settlers had entered it for complainant's benefit, contrary to the prohibition of U. S. Rev. St. §§ 2262, 2263, made the title too doubtful. Close v. Stuyvesant, 132 Ill. 607.

Lis Pendens.—The record of lis pendens notice will ordinarily be such a defect of title as will justify the purchaser in refusing the land. Sinn v. McLean, 80 Ala. 360; Earl v. Campbell, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 330; Bull v. Kutchens, 32 Beav. 615.

The presence of such notice does not necessarily create a flaw in the title. It must appear that the pending suit or claim has some merit or substance before defendant can successfully resist specific performance. Hayes v. Nourse, 114 N. Y. 595; 11 Am. St. Rep. 700.

A trifling variation in the description, or a trifling incumbrance on the title which cannot be removed, or a trivial defect in the property, may be the subject of compensation, and will not stand in the way of a decree of specific performance.¹ One who has contracted for a "satisfactory title" cannot be compelled to have no equitable relief. Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 262; May v. LeClaire, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 217; Wilson v. Brumfield, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 146; McKean v. Read, Litt. Sel. Cas. Car.) 78; Reed v. Noe, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 283; Cunningham v. Sharp, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 116.

A purchased of B 686 acres of land for cultivation, and the vendor's title to 209 acres thereof was found defective. Held, that the vendee should not be compelled to take the residue, although it lay distinct and separated from the other portion by a public road. Jackson v. Ligon, 3 Leigh (Va.) 161.

Plaintiff bought of defendants at auction a lot in New York city, paying 10 per cent. of the purchase price. Printed handbills had been issued and circulated by defendants, prior to the sale, giving a diagram of the lot, which represented it as a parallelogram, 25 by 100 feet, its size being so stated in the printed text. Plaintiff purchased, relying upon this handbill, without examining the lot. The terms of sale described it as "twenty-five feet, front and rear, more or less." The lot was to be conveyed by warranty deed free of incumbrance. A building upon the adjoining lot encroached upon the lot, and had stood there for more than 25 years. Defendants knew this at the time of the sale, but made no mention thereof in the handbill or in the terms of sale or at the time of the sale. Plaintiff refused to complete his purchase, and brought this action to recover the percentage paid. Defendants set up the contract, alleged a readiness and tender of performance and asked for a specific performance against plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff's bid having been obtained by the suppression of a material fact, the defendants could not enforce the purchase; that plaintiff was entitled both to the possession of the whole lot and to a title to it, not simply a right of action for its recovery, which, conceding the title to be good, was all that defendants could convey as to the part encroached upon; and held, further, that the insertion of the words "more or less" in the terms of sale did not, under the circumstances, affect the rights of the parties. King v. Knapp, 59 N. Y. 462.

Where a contract to convey land is void as to a part, the court cannot decree specific performance as to the rest of the land, unless the party is willing to accept it. Donner v. Redenbaugh, 61 Iowa 269.

Exceptions.—This is not an absolute requirement. For, under the decisions, the vendor might, under certain circumstances, compel the vendee to accept a substantial compliance on his part, with compensation for any insignificant portion which the vendor could not convey. For example a deficiency of 208 acres out of 6,000 acres would be so slight that their value might be a proper subject of compensation. Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 262. So with a deficiency of four acres out of 300. Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa 278.

And so, where two adjoining lots were sold together for one price, and the buildings on one of the lots projected two feet over on the other lot, performance was decreed against the vendee with compensation to him for any diminution in value to be deducted from the price. King v. Bardeau, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 38; 10 Am. Dec. 312.

In Morgan v. Brast, 34 W. Va. 332, the vendor sold a tract of land supposed to contain 300 acres, more or less, at $11 an acre. Upon a survey the tract was found to contain only 254 acres, of which the vendor could not give title to 20 acres. He was given a decree against his vendees for the 234 acres with an abatement of the contract price for the land lost.

accept one that is not satisfactory to him, even though it appear to be altogether unobjectionable.¹

"A purchaser cannot justify his refusal to perform his contract by a mere captious objection to the title rendered him; nor is it sufficient for him, when the jurisdiction of an equity court is invoked to compel him to perform his contract, merely to raise a doubt as to the vendor's title. Before he can successfully resist performance of his contract on the ground of defect of title, there must be at least a reasonable doubt as to the vendor's title—such as affects its value and would interfere with its sale to a reasonable purchaser, and thus render the land unmarketable. The defect in the record title may, under certain circumstances, furnish a defense to the purchaser. But there is no inflexible rule that a vendor must furnish a perfect record or paper title. It has frequently been held that defects in the record or paper title may be cured or removed by parol evidence."² If he refuses

Compare Foley v. Crow, 37 Md. 51, where the court holds that a vendor who from any cause, not involving bad faith on his part, is unable to convey all of the land which he has contracted to sell, and it appears that the part that cannot be conveyed is of small importance, or is immaterial to the purchaser's enjoyment of that which may be conveyed to him, may insist upon performance with compensation to the vendee or an abatement from the price, if that has not yet been paid. This is not to be done, however, if the portion which he cannot convey is considerable, or if it is by nature material to the enjoyment of that part about which there is no defect.

Trivial Objections to Title.—"As the law does not regard trifles, a bare possibility that the title may be affected by the existing causes which may subsequently be developed, when the highest evidence which the nature of the case admits, amounting to a moral certainty, is given that no such cause exists, will not be regarded as a sufficient ground for declining to compel a purchaser to perform his contract." Schermerhorn v. Niblo, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 161. Quoted in Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N. Y. 41. See Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371; Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573; Welfley v. Shenandoah Iron, etc., Co., 83 Va. 768.

While a purchaser will not be compelled to take a doubtful title, the doubt must be more than a bare possibility. Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa 278; Webb v. Chisolm, 24 S. Car. 487; Thompson v. Dalles, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 370; Laurens v. Lucas, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 217; Hayes v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 108 Mass. 400; First African M. E. Soc. v. Brown, 147 Mass. 296; Chambrelleng v. Purton, 125 N. Y. 610.

First African M. E. Soc. v. Brown, 147 Mass. 296, was a suit brought by the church against Brown to enforce an agreement to purchase land. Defendant refused the title on the ground that one John Scott, plaintiff's grantor, had filed in the public records a caveat setting forth that the deed from him had been obtained by fraud and giving notice thereby that it was his intention to dispute the validity of the deed. This claim Scott had not pressed for over six years. The court, by Devens, J., took the position that such a paper, not being entitled to record, constituted no cloud upon the plaintiff's title. See Nickerson v. Loud, 115 Mass. 94.

Lord Eldon in Stapylton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272.

The mere fact that the date of a deed is subsequent to the date of its acknowledgment, is not a substantial ground of objection. Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407.

The mere possibility that there may be outstanding unrecorded deeds to the land will not defeat a decree in the absence of a showing of the existence of such deeds. Dow v. Whitney, 147 Mass. 1.

Instances of Conditions of Title that Will Not Defeat a Decree.—A reservation of minerals and water privileges, where there is no evidence of the existence of minerals or of the possibility that water privileges could ever be required, is not a sufficient defect to preclude a decree. Winne v. Reynolds, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 407.

The possibility of there being an outstanding and unpublished will, which might defeat a conveyance by the heirs, cannot be set up as a defense where there is no evidence of the existence of such a will. Spring v. Sanford, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 550.

To the same point and further, that the decedent's estate had not been finally closed and there might be debts against it which the personal effects of decedent would be insufficient to pay, held not to be a valid objection. Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N. Y. 35. See Hayes v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 108 Mass. 400.

Bill in equity for the specific performance of a contract to sell real estate. The vendors were sole heirs at law of a party who died late in 1855. They made the contract to sell February, 1856. This cause came on for trial January, 1857. Strict search had been made, and no will of the deceased could be found. His personal estate was worth over $10,000, and the indebtedness of the estate, so far as ascertained, did not exceed $500. Held, that the possible existence of a will, or of other indebtedness, was not sufficient ground for refusing a specific performance. Schermerhorn v. Niblo, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 161.

Where a legacy is not expressly charged on the real estate, although no fund or property is specifically appropriated to its payment, and the personal estate is sufficient for its payment, and there are no debts and no suggestions of the irresponsibility of the executor, one who has contracted to buy a parcel of land from a devisee cannot escape his obligation by setting up the defense that the legacy remains unpaid. (Bockes, J., dissenting.) Wiltzie v. Shaw, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 195.

Equity will not compel the vendee of land to take an estate of which the vendor was not the owner at the time of the sale, or had not the legal or equitable means to make himself so. But the owner of the land sold for taxes has the legal means to perfect his title, and can compel his vendee to take the land. Ley v. Huber, 3 Watts (Pa.) 367.

Mortgages Barred by Limitation.—An uncanceled mortgage sixty years old is no valid objection to the title where there is no evidence to rebut the legal presumption that it has been satisfied. Belmont v. O'Brien, 12 N. Y. 394.

So with an unsatisfied mortgage thirty years old, where a satisfaction piece is shown, though not so authenticated as to be entitled to record. Pangburn v. Miles, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 42.

Other Instances.—A married woman, who owned land as her separate estate, conveyed the same, her husband joining upon a nominal consideration of one dollar, as recited in the deed. Plaintiff becoming the owner of the land, sold it to defendant, who refused the title because the married woman had not received valuable consideration for her conveyance. In a suit for specific performance, the married woman and her husband filed their answer, disclaiming any interest in the land, and ratifying their former deed. Held, that defendant might properly be compelled to take the title. Robinson v. Henning (Ky. 1887), 4 S. W. Rep. 322.

One Armstrong died in 1803 seised of land in New York City, which by will he devised to his son Robert. The latter, who then lived in New York, left, prior to 1842, twenty-two years old and unmarried. He returned on a visit that year and went away again, and in 1846 wrote his mother from Missouri that he was on his way home via New Orleans. This was the last heard from him. Until then he had frequently written to his mother. After 1846, letters were written him by members of his family but were never answered, and although frequent inquiries were made about him nothing further was heard of him. His relatives believed him dead, and his mother took possession of his property in question and built improvements upon it. She died in 1859. The family had never heard that Robert had married, and no widow or children ever made claim to the estate. At a partition sale in 1887, the purchaser declined to complete his purchase on the ground that Robert was not shown to be dead, or to have died intestate, or without widow, or issue surviving him. The court held the excuse untenable, and decreed a specific performance of the purchase. Ferry v. Sampson, 112 N. Y. 415.

A, being the owner of 13,500 acres of land, sold 322 acres, parcel thereof, to B, and there being some doubt of A's title, his brother joined him in the conveyance, with covenants of general warranty. The whole tract had been formerly purchased of a person in London, and a mortgage given on the land for the purchase money, which had never been recorded in this State, and had never been released, though there were strong reasons for believing the whole of the mortgage debt had been paid. Held, that this constituted no objection to a decree in favor of A against B for the balance of the purchase money. Richards v. Mercer, 1 Leigh (Va.) 125.

A died in 1872, leaving certain heirs-at-law, who, believing in the existence of a will that, however, was not discovered until 1877, made a compromise among themselves, some selling their interests to the others, who entered into possession of the property and sold it at public auction, when B bought it. B died, and the property was sold by order of the probate court, and bought by C, who refused to accept the title offered, because of the existence of the will which constituted A's legal heirs his universal legatees, and gave legacies of money. Decree was rendered requiring C to accept the title, the compromise having been made in view of the existence of the will, and therefore being binding upon the parties to the compromise, and the legal mortgage in favor of the special legatees not having been recorded. Dupuy's Succession, 33 La. Ann. 277.

In Batt v. Mallon, 151 Mass. 477, land was conveyed to a "trustee for" a married woman and to his successors and assigns. The trustee devised it to his wife for life, remainder to the said beneficiary who survived the trustee's wife and devised it to her daughter, who conveyed it to a third person. This last grantee obtained confirmatory releases from the grantor of the original trustee and from one who had been duly appointed successor in trust to the trustee. Upon due proceedings the trust was then terminated. Held, that the grantee could convey a marketable title.

Land was conveyed to a woman in 1851. A conveyance made by her in 1861 described her as a married woman, and the certificate of acknowledgment recited that she had been examined apart from her husband. Beyond this there was nothing to show the husband's consent to her conveyance. The land was sold at executor's sale, under the order of the surrogate, in 1888. Nothing could be learned regarding the existence of the woman or of her husband, nor of the marriage. Held, that the purchaser should be compelled to take the title. Cromwell v. Phipps, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 60.

In Fairchild v. Marshall, 42 Minn. 14, the vendor's title was derived through mesne conveyances from W, who had conveyed during coverture without his wife joining. W afterwards died, leaving the widow surviving. It was afterwards decided that the widow, by her election to take under W's will, had precluded herself from claiming dower. Washburn v. Van Steenwyk, 32 Minn. 336. Held, that the widow's election to take under the will barred her claim of dower in the land conveyed by him without her joining, and that plaintiff held thereunder by a marketable title not doubtful or unmarketable, and specific performance was properly decreed.

In the chain of title the land passed to Electa Wilds. The next conveyance was made by Electa Wilder, the officer taking her acknowledgment, having testified that the grantee in the former deed and the grantor in the latter were the same person, and it appearing that for fourteen years up to the time of the trial the title under the deed last named had not been questioned. The court decreed a specific performance in favor of the vendor. Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N. Y. 56.

An agreement for the purchase of land required a cash payment of ten dollars, the balance ($3,690), to be paid as soon as the abstract could be examined. There were attachment liens on the property, and, pending the vendor's removal of these liens, he demanded the reserved payment to be made within five days, and this not being done, declared the contract at an end. The purchaser, notwithstanding, was held to be entitled to a specific performance. Mastin v. Grimes, 88 Mo. 478.

But this doctrine is questioned in Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen (Mass.) 25.

And compare Moroney v. Townsend, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 357, where the court ruled that before the vendor can enforce specific performance he must be able to show that his title was "clear" before suit was brought.

It is no defense to a suit to enforce an agreement to purchase land that there are mortgages on it of which the vendee knew and to which he did not object. He is only required to remove them on the consummation of the trade. Oakey v. Cook, 41 N. J. Eq. 350.

Specific performance of a contract will not be refused on account of a conflict between the rights agreed to be granted, and other rights secured by a prior grant, if it is in the power of the grantor to fulfill his agreement. Conant v. Bellows Falls Canal Co., 29 Vt. 263.

The general rule that the vendor can compel the acceptance of his deed even though he be unable to give a good title, until the time of the decree, is not to be applied where the vendor has been in

And the court will even allow him a reasonable time, as a matter of favor, to perfect his title.¹ But this will never be done where it would prejudice the rights of the vendee, as it would where time was of the essence of the contract.²

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish his title when it is put in issue by the defendant.

The purchaser who knows that the title is insufficient at the time he contracts for it and that it will take time to make it perfect, or who, learning this after his purchase, acquiesces in the delay and enters further into the execution of the purchase, is bound by such acquiescence, and will not be heard to complain of the title offered him, or the delay in perfecting it.³ But if, after he has gone into possession under such a contract, he discovers that the vendor is unable to fulfill his promise to make title by the day named, and, immediately upon such discovery, surrenders possession, the fact that he originally contracted with a knowledge of the condition of the title will not authorize a court to compel him to accept such title as the vendor can furnish.⁴ Nor will the fact of his having gone into possession preclude his objecting to the final execution of the contract, where he has discovered a defect in the title, provided he abandons possession as soon as he learns of the defect.⁵

Where the defects of title are in view at the time the contract is made, and the vendor expressly sells such title only as he possesses, without binding himself to warrant the title in any way, he may enforce his contract against the purchaser and compel the any way guilty of fraud. "The injured party has a right to elect to rescind and recover the purchase money, or he may proceed upon the covenant in his deed. If the rule were otherwise, it would offer a reward for injustice, and a party knowing he had no title could sell, and if the property declined in price, he could purchase the outstanding title for less than he received and tender it to the purchaser. And if the property advanced, all he would be required to do would be to refund the purchase money with legal interest. All the wrongs would be on his side, and yet he would enjoy all the advantages of the market. The risk of loss would be entirely thrown upon the innocent, while the chance of gain would be on the side of the guilty party. But as the rule of law is different, the innocent party has his election either to take the title if it can be had of the vendor, or recover the purchase money with interest." Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 503; 68 Am. Dec. 274.

But in People v. Open Board, etc., 92 N. Y. 98, a title was found to be defective in a suit to enforce specific performance of an agreement to buy the land; and it was held that the purchaser was entitled to be relieved from his contract, and that an order of court directing him to complete the purchase, if the vendor should obtain evidence showing a confirmation of an executor's sale to himself, such evidence to be taken in a proceeding to be instituted within sixty days, was improper, and should be set aside. Reversing 28 Hun (N. acceptance of such title as the parties contemplated in the original agreement.¹ And where the defect or failure of title is the result of any fault on the part of the vendee, the vendor will be entitled to a decree.²

Where, by the terms of a sale, provision is made by which the purchaser may examine the title, and, if not satisfied, may refuse it, the vendor has no right to a specific performance, even though the court of appeals pronounces the title good, if the vendee in good faith is not satisfied with it.³

It is no defense to the vendor's suit that he has no title to the land if he shows that he is able to procure a conveyance from the real owner.⁴ And the same rule which forbids a vendee, in his suit for specific performance, from asserting his rights against the secret prior equities of innocent third parties, prevents a vendor from compelling the purchase, where it appears that the land was subject to such equities at the time the contract was made and the purchaser was ignorant thereof.⁵

Where the deed contains an undertaking on the part of the grantee to perform certain acts, this undertaking becomes binding on the grantee upon the delivery of the deed to him. And if he then refuses to fulfill the obligations created by the deed the court will compel him to fulfill them.⁶

1. Palmer v. Richardson, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 16; Broyles v. Bee, 18 W. Va. 514.

Where the purchaser knew, at the time of the purchase, that the land was subject to a pre-emption right in a third person, he was compelled to take the title subject to the incumbrance, and with compensation therefor, although such incumbrance was not mentioned in the contract of sale. Winne v. Reynolds, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 407.

It is no defense to a suit for the specific performance of a contract of purchase of land in gross that some three acres of the land is occupied by a third party where the defendant purchaser by reason of his occupancy of the adjacent land at the time of the sale is chargeable with notice as to the three acres. Blakemore v. Kimmons, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 470.

If the vendor agrees to make a "good and sufficient conveyance, with full warranty only against" his heirs and personal representatives, he is bound only to convey such title as he has. Thompson v. Hawley, 14 Oregon 199.

2. Where a purchaser had the uninterrupted possession of the land but through his own fault prevented the title from being conveyed, it was held that he should be compelled to execute the contract though he had commenced an action before the bill was filed, and obtained judgment for breach of covenant. Hughes v. McKinsey, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 38.

5. Thus, where property known to be subject to a lease, was bought at foreclosure sale by one who was in ignorance of the tenant's right to remove a valuable building from the realty, the vendor was denied a specific performance. Beckenbaugh v. Nally, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 160.

The rule of equity, that one who hears another bargain with a third person for an estate, and sees such third person pay for it, or expend money on it, without making known his own title, shall not be permitted to disturb him in the enjoyment of the estate, cannot be applied to cases of parol contract, where all the parties fully understand the state of the title, and one of them seeks relief from another. Wilton v. Harwood, 23 Me. 131.

6. Post v. West Shore R. Co., 123 N. Y. 580.

c. CONSIDERATION; WHEN INCAPABLE OF ENFORCEMENT.—In these contracts, the nature of the consideration has an important bearing upon the question whether they shall be enforced. Where the consideration consists of personal acts on the purchaser's part, which by their nature are incapable of equitable supervision and enforcement, equity will not compel the conveyance for which such acts are the consideration. This under the rule that equity will not compel one party to a contract to fulfill his obligation unless it can render a like decree against the other.¹

d. DESCRIPTION—(1) In General.—If a decree for the specific performance of a contract relating to real estate is to possess any value, the contract must describe the land involved with such accuracy and clearness that it can be identified, its quantity known, and its boundaries determined beyond the possibility of future controversy.²

1. Wollensak v. Briggs, 119 Ill. 453. But compare Burton v. Shotwell, 13 Bush (Ky.) 271. In that case a contract by B for a sale of land to S, to be paid for in a transfer by S to B of shares in a corporation to be thereafter formed, cannot be specifically enforced against S, if the organization of the company has been abandoned without fault of S. But if it is the fault of S, he may be compelled to accept the conveyance, and pay a sum of money to be ascertained as equivalent to the stock.

Where defendant had offered to convey land upon condition that plaintiffs would take care of and support him during his life, and plaintiffs had performed their part of the contract as fully as defendant would permit, the court refused them a decree compelling defendant to convey. Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483; Lindsay v. Glass, 119 Ind. 301; Denlar v. Hile, 123 Ind. 68. Compare Watson v. Mahan, 20 Ind. 223.

Graham v. Hendren, 5 Munf. (Va.) 185; Patrick v. Horton, 3 W. Va. 23; Mathews v. Jarrett, 20 W. Va. 415. Compare Hanley v. Blackford, 1 Dana (Ky.) 1; 25 Am. Dec. 114.

In Reed v. Lowe (Utah), 29 Pac. Rep. 740, the suit was to enforce a contract to convey "a piece of land from 6 by 10 or 6 by 20 rods deep," to be taken either way from the grantor's house. The evidence was that the grantor's lot was 20 rods square at the corner of two streets in the city of Ogden. The house was on the corner, and there was a vacant frontage on one street of 16 rods, and on the other of 18 rods. The court held the specific performance of this contract to be impracticable on account of the uncertainty as to which frontage the six rods was to have.

Instances—Defective Descriptions.—Specific performance was refused in the following instances for deficient descriptions:

In Bread v. Munger, 88 N. Car. 297, the description was omitted altogether, only the quantity of land ("one hundred acres") being named. Decree refused. So in Jones v. Carver, 59 Tex. 293, the contract being to convey "a piece of land supposed to be forty acres."

"We will give you our woolen mills, situated in the northwest corner of public square of Franklin, Indiana, for 640 acres of land in Anderson county, Kansas." Held, too vague as to the Kansas land. Baldwin v. Kerlin, 46 Ind. 426.

"Five acres, lot 3, sec. 23," etc., there being nothing further to show what five acres is meant, is too vague. Nipolt v. Kammon, 39 Minn. 372.

A "tract containing 9 acres and 66 poles near the junction of B street, Nashville," etc. Dobson v. Litton, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 616.

"Five acres located near a certain factory" with no means of identification. Hamilton v. Harvey, 121 Ill. 469.

"A certain piece of land in the county aforesaid adjoining the lands of" A and B, "being a part of the Alexandria tract, supposed to contain 30 or 35 acres." Grier v. Rhyne, 69 N. Car. 346.

"A tract of land lying on the north side of the Watery Branch in the County of — and State of —, containing 150 acres." Capps v. Holt, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 153.

"A lot of land joining a small tract now occupied by Michael Micue." Jordan v. Fay, 40 Me. 130.

"Two lots of land situated in H Township, B County," without any statement as to ownership or other means of identifying the lots. King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. 316. See Nichols v. Williams, 22 N. J. Eq. 63.

"One house and lot in the town of Hillsborough purchased of me" in a receipt for the purchase money. Murdock v. Anderson, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 77. See Ellis v. Deadman, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 466.

"Some lots in the city of Oakland," vendor having a large number of lots there. Ferris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645.

A tract "adjoining the Saltworks estate, containing about 350 acres, and known as the Campbellsville tract," where no evidence was given identifying "the Campbellsville tract." Preston v. Preston, 95 U. S. 200.

"One house and lot in the town of H, purchased of me." Murdock v. Anderson, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 77. See Allen v. Chambers, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 125.

"Estate on Congress street owned by Sarah A. Hill" insufficient where it did not appear that the estate sought to be conveyed was the only property answering that description. Doherty v. Hill, 144 Mass. 467.

"A lot on the right hand of S street, going towards the river, being twenty feet wide and running back to T street" where the lot appears to be merely a portion of a larger tract owned by defendant. Holthouse's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 340.

"Ellen Whelan paid me $20 for a piece of land I have sold her before witness (no survey), which I do promise to give her a warranty deed when required. Said land being in Mitteneague or West Springfield." Whelan v. Sullivan, 102 Mass. 204.

A contract "for the sale of the houses on Smithfield street," without any further designation of the situation, size, material of, and area of ground embraced by the houses, and without disclosing to whom they belonged at the date of the alleged contract, is not sufficiently certain to be enforced by specific execution in equity. Hammer v. McEldowney, 46 Pa. St. 334.

Thus, in Hyde v. Cooper, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 250, plaintiff's prayer was denied because the memorandum of agreement to sell did not describe the land, but referred for its identification to a verbal agreement between the parties.

And in Patrick v. Sears, 19 Fla. 856, where the agreement was to convey five acres near K city, to be selected by the vendee's agent, specific performance was not granted.

The quantity must be known where the boundaries are not given.

"I agree to deed to said Lynes from 26,000 to 28,000 feet of land situate on Walden street and Vassal lane in Cambridge when the bounds are fixed and the streets laid out," etc. Specific performance refused. Lynes v. Hayden, 119 Mass. 482.

The following descriptions were held to be too uncertain to authorize a decree:

"Received of M. H. $100 as part payment on a piece of property on the corner of Main and Pearl streets, city of Natchez, county of Adams, State of Mississippi." Holmes v. Evans, 48 Miss. 247; 12 Am. Rep. 372.

"A subscription for church of $50 and a lot to build on." Church of the Advent v. Farrow, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 378.

"A lot for a paint shop, on the west side of" a road named, the location to be determined later. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 18 N. J. Eq. 489.

"One hundred and seven acres of land on Laurel." Reed v. Reed, 93 N. Car. 452.

"Fifty acres of land on Pond waters in Morgan county, Ky." Caskey v. Williams (Ky. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 11.

"Forty acres off the South Fork end of my tract of 147 acres on Beech Fork in C. county." Westfall v. Cottrills, 24 W. Va. 763.

"Fifteen acres more or less" is not conclusive as to the amount of land to be conveyed. Hodges v. Knowing, 58 Conn. 12.

"Rec'd of L. $408.45, first payment on the Bradley Sand Bank purchase," etc., insufficient, there being no showing as to the county or State. Johnson v. Kellogg, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 262.

"Rec'd of C. F. $500 on account on the price of the lot of ground formerly occupied by A. G. Ward." Fisher v. Kuhn, 54 Miss. 480.

"That two acres of land be sold." Carr v. Passaic Land, etc., Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 424.

"The 120 acres of land in Shannon County, Missouri." Miller v. Campbell, 52 Ind. 125. See also Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Babcock, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 228.

A failure to name the city, county, or State will render the description too uncertain. Ross v. Allen, 45 Kan. 231. But compare Ross v. Purse (Colo. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 473.

A contract whereby the purchaser of land agrees to lay out a town, and reconvey a block to the vendor, including the land on which his house stands, of an average size with the other blocks of the town, not to exceed a certain number of feet square, is too uncertain in its terms to be enforced after the town is platted, and the size of the blocks established; and the continuance of the vendor in possession is not such part performance as cures the defect. Hollenbeck v. Prior, 5 Dak. 298.

A description by section but not by township and range. Johnson v. Craig, 21 Ark. 533.

Instances—Descriptions Sufficient.—But in the following cases descriptions precisely similar have been held sufficiently definite to justify a decree of specific performance:

It is sufficient to describe it as "the A B farm" provided the tract thus called is capable of being otherwise identified. Simmons v. Spruill, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 9.

"Mem. 28 of May, 1852. I agree to sell R. H. Ives the Peckham farm, now owned and occupied by me, say about forty-five acres in Newport, for fifteen thousand dollars, payable the 25th of March, when possession is to be given." Ives v. Hazard, 4 R. I. 14; 67 Am. Dec. 500.

"The Knapp House property." Goodenow v. Curtis, 18 Mich. 298.

"Mr. Ogilvie's House." Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53.

"The house," etc., "in Newport." Owen v. Thomas, 3 M. & K. 353.

"The Snow Farm." Hollis v. Burgess, 37 Kan. 487.

"A certain tract, called Mount Hope, containing about forty acres situated on the southerly side of Neponset River in Quincy." Old Colony R. Co. v. Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 25; 66 Am. Dec. 394.

Specific performance of a contract will not be refused because, in the description of the land, it omitted to state the town in which it lies, where the description is otherwise rendered definite. Robeson v. Hornbaker, 3 N. J. Eq. 60.

An agreement was to convey fifty-nine acres of a certain section, which contained about eighty acres, without stating definite boundaries; the complainant asked for a deed in the words of the bond, and the relief was granted, the agreement being held to be sufficiently certain, although under certain circumstances it might require further litigation between him and the owner of the residue to locate their tracts. Ring v. Ashworth, 3 Iowa 452.

That a deed describes land as on the south side of a river, and refers to the patent which places it on the west side, is immaterial, the identity sufficiently appearing, and specific performance should be decreed. Newson v. Davis, 20 Tex. 419.

A contract of sale designated the premises as part of the "land lately bought by L from O; to-wit, a part bounded by the section line running from the northeast corner of said tract to stake put up by B, on the southeast; thence in a due northeast course until it strikes the main road; thence along the said road till it strikes the northern line of said tract; thence to the beginning." Held, that the description was sufficiently definite to support a decree for specific performance. Hooper v. Laney, 39 Ala. 336.

"The lot of land containing fourteen acres more or less, which lies on the northerly side and adjoining the estate owned by Sally Wheelock in the town of Grafton, Mass." Baker v. Hathaway, 5 Allen (Mass.) 103.

Ten acres in a certain section lying south of a certain railroad track, if there be but ten acres in such section south of the track named. Edwards v. Fry, 9 Kan. 417.

In a contract for the conveyance of land, the land was described as "lying on the southwest side of Black

The words of description are presumed to relate to an estate owned by the vendor; and where the description applies equally well to land owned by him and to land owned by another, through the terms of description being too general, the presumption always prevails that they were intended to apply to that of the vendor.¹

river, adjoining the lands of William Haffland and Martial." Held, that the description was sufficiently certain to entitle the vendee to a specific performance of his contract. Kitchen v. Herring, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 190.

That part of a certain government subdivision "lying south of the grove," held sufficiently certain. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306; 14 Am. St. Rep. 216.

Letters containing an offer of sale subsequently accepted, which describe the land as "situated 6 miles N. W. from V., Tex., consisting of 2,500 acres of land," and as "situated on the south side of White Oak creek, one mile from the bottom," and describe the buildings, etc., are sufficiently definite as to the property sold to justify a decree of specific performance. Watson v. Baker, 71 Tex. 739.

A contract to convey described the land as beginning at a given point, and running in a given direction, on a certain road, 400 feet, extending back along another line to "another line to be fixed, sufficient, with said frontage, to make two acres of land." Held, that, as the last line might be determined absolutely, the description was sufficient. Felty v. Calhoun, 139 Pa. St. 378.

In another case the land was described as "part of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 23, T. 24, R. 26, 37 acres, and S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 23, T. 24, R. 26, 80 acres; total, 117 acres," and a specific performance was decreed. Egbert v. Chas. H. Heer Dry Goods Co., 102 Mo. 512.

A memorandum of an agreement to convey which describes the land as "1 acre in S, described as follows: to-wit, in the S. W. corner of section 5, township 16, range 22, all sold to W M for value received," and is signed by defendant, is sufficient to be enforced by specific performance. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66.

See also Brown v. Munger, 42 Minn. 482.

1. See Dobson v. Litton, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 616.

With this presumption, "a house and lot situated on Amity street, Lynn, Mass.," was held a sufficient description where no other such property appeared to belong to the vendor. Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545; 96 Am. Dec. 671. See Scanlan v. Geddes, 112 Mass. 15.

But, where it appears that other lands of the vendor come within the same description, identification becomes impossible and specific performance will be denied. Doherty v. Hill, 144 Mass. 467.

So, where the instrument refers to the land as occupied by the vendor that reference identifies the land sufficiently to authorize a decree. McFarland v. Reeve, 5 Del. Ch. 118; Simmons v. Spruill, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 9; Falls of Neuse Mfg. Co. v. Hendricks, 106 N. Car. 485; Docter v. Hellberg, 65 Wis. 415.

A contract for the sale of "ten acres of land bought of B, and now in my possession, . . . $500 to be paid when the contract is delivered," is not void for uncertainty, either as to the land or as to the time of payment, and parol evidence is admissible to show that the land was the same which the vendor held under a contract between himself and B, which contract was to be assigned to the vendee on payment of the $500. Stout v. Weaver, 72 Wis. 148.

Where the land was described as "the house and lot now occupied by James H. Henham," and the description was supplemented by extraneous testimony, it was held sufficiently identified to support a decree pro confesso. Angel v. Simpson, 85 Ala. 53.

In Waring v. Ayers, 40 N. Y. 357, the description was, "two lots owned by me in 116th street, New York, between 8th and 9th avenues, said lots being 25 feet front by about 75 feet deep." It was found by parol evidence that no other lots than the two involved in the suit would answer the description and a decree was granted.

The language of an agreement was as follows: "I have this day sold my lot to A B, on the plat in the town of South Bend, on the plat of said town

Where the description is inconsistent with itself, specific performance is not possible.¹

It must be evident that there was a distinct mutual understanding as to the identity of the tract and the amount of lands covered by the contract.² Where the intention of the parties in this particular can be ascertained from the entire instrument and the acts of the parties, even though the descriptions and terms be obscure, a decree will be granted.³

The land to be conveyed must be identified by the language of the agreement in an intelligible way. If the description, so far as it goes, is inconsistent, the ambiguity may be explained and the defective description made complete by parol testimony, provided that a new description is not introduced into the body of the contract, and provided the land is identified by the writing.⁴

on the river bank, etc. (Signed) C. D." Held, that parol evidence was admissible to identify the particular lot intended to be conveyed, and the contract was therefore sufficiently certain to be the ground of a bill for specific performance. Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316; 56 Am. Dec. 505.

"I have this day purchased of W., Silver Lake Place," etc., giving the name of the owner, the town near by, and the number of acres. Winn v. Henry, 84 Ky. 48.

Land situated six miles from V, Texas, containing 2,500 acres, situated on the south side of White Oak Creek, one mile from the bottom, and describing the buildings thereon. Watson v. Baker, 71 Tex. 739.

1. In Blankenship v. Spencer, 31 W. Va. 510, a decree was refused where the land was described as "a certain piece of land containing sixty-seven and one-half acres, being the lower end of a certain survey sold and conveyed to S by W, and adjoining the lands of H and of R, in the district of F, in the county of G, in the State of W. Va.," and the survey was shown by extrinsic evidence to contain one hundred and seventeen acres.

Where a tract was originally surveyed in a block with other tracts of land, and from fixed monuments on the ground, and other circumstances, it appears probable that there is a serious interference between the various tracts, the title will not be deemed marketable so as to entitle a vendor thereof to a decree for specific performance of a contract for its sale. Holt's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 257.

An executory contract for the sale of land will not be specifically enforced in favor of the vendor when the land offered by him is not all within the boundaries of the premises described in the contract, and that within the boundaries is less than is described in the written memorial. Snedaker v. Moore, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 542.

Where the inconsistency could not mislead and the true meaning is evident in the instrument, the rule does not prevail. Brookman v. Kurzman, 94 N. Y. 272; 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 237.

But it has been held in Illinois, that where the decree does not rest entirely on parol evidence a latent ambiguity in the description amounting to an actual conflict in the boundaries may be explained by parol, and that such evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of identifying the premises or applying the calls of the deed. Thus, in Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388; 55 Am. Rep. 869, the land was described as the "north half of the north half" of a certain lot, "namely, known as the Cook & Glover block," there being a discrepancy of two and a half feet between the two, and the court rejected the former description as repugnant to the latter and held that the contract was for the conveyance of the latter. See Cossitt v. Hobbs, 56 Ill. 231; McLennan v. Johnston, 60 Ill. 306.

2. Tedford v. Trimble, 87 Mo. 226; Cortelyou's Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 576.

3. White v. Hermann, 51 Ill. 243; 99 Am. Dec. 543; Puttman v. Haltey, 24 Iowa 425; Lewis v. Reichy, 27 N. J. Eq. 240; Hodges v. Horsefall, 1 R. & M. 116.

4. Miller v. Travers, 8 Bing. 244; Nichols v. Johnson, 10 Conn. 192;

(2) Parol and Extrinsic Evidence.—Where a sufficient description is given, parol evidence must be resorted to, in order to fit the description to the thing; but where an insufficient description is given, or where there is no description, such evidence is inadmissible.¹ But the courts never receive parol evidence both to describe the land and then to apply the description.²

A patent ambiguity in the description is not to be explained by parol testimony, but the courts will endeavor to give all possible effect to the intention of the parties as they can ascertain it from the remainder of the contract, even to the contradiction of an erroneous call in the description.³ Where, however, the

Compare the earlier Indiana case of Torr v. Torr, 20 Ind. 118; also, Waring v. Ayres, 40 N. Y. 357.

A contract for the conveyance of a right of way was held to be sufficiently definite for the court to enforce specific performance where the terminal points and line of way were so fixed as to be readily determinable by the government surveys, though the length of way was not stated with certainty in the contract. Puttman v. Haltey, 24 Iowa 425.

"I agree to sell A two acres and 150 square perches of land, commencing 170 feet from the south side of Green street with a front of one acre on Broad street, at $1,225," held too vague a description to identify the land without parol proof of metes and bounds. Crockett v. Green, 3 Del. Ch. 466.

See McGrane v. Kennedy (Supreme Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 119.

1. Murdock v. Anderson, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 77.

See Allen v. Chambers, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 125; Combs v. Scott, 76 Wis. 662.

In Gerrish v. Towne, 3 Gray (Mass.) 82, the court, by Bigelow, J., says: "Where general terms only are used to designate the subject-matter of the agreement or conveyance, or the description is of a nature to call for evidence to ascertain the relative situation, nature, and qualities of the estate, then parol evidence is not only admissible, but is absolutely essential to ascertain the true meaning of the instrument, and to determine its proper application with reference to extrinsic circumstances and objects. In such cases parol evidence is not used to vary, contradict or control the written contract of the parties, but to apply it to the subject-matter, and thereby to render certain what would otherwise be doubtful and indefinite. For this reason, any evidence which tends to indicate the nature of the subject-matter included in a written contract, which would otherwise be uncertain and ambiguous, and to determine its applications relatively to other objects, is admissible, as affording just means of interpretation of the intention of the parties. In the application of this general rule, it has, therefore, been held competent for parties to a written contract to show in aid of its interpretation the position of the land and its condition, the mode of its use and occupation, that it had acquired a local designation or name by which it was known and distinguished, and also to show whether it was parcel of a particular estate."

Parol evidence is admissible to apply the description to the land. Ferguson v. Staver, 33 Pa. St. 411; Smith's Appeal, 69 Pa. St. 474; Hollis v. Burgess, 37 Kan. 487; Ross v. Allen, 45 Kan. 231.

It is no defense to a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale of the next lot that the courses and distances in the description of an improved city lot will cause it to overlap such adjoining lot five feet where the description of the improved lot also designates it by a specific street number, and bounds it by two party-walls, as these will con-reference to the land to be sold is vague and uncertain and a description will have to be supplied, such uncertainty cannot be cured by parol testimony.¹

Insufficiency in the description of a portion of the land included in the contract, will, as a general rule, prevent the court from taking jurisdiction to enforce the balance of the contract. In such cases a partial enforcement with compensation for the deficiency will be refused and the suitor relegated to his legal remedy.²

A modification of the general principle that a description in the contract which will not identify the tract will be insufficient to enable a court of equity to enforce the agreement is found where the parties by their subsequent conduct have determined the identity of the land, as where the purchaser has gone into possession of it. No question can ordinarily arise thereafter as to the certainty of the description, for the fact of taking possession has served to identify the tract and thus made it possible for parol proof to be heard in aid of the description, if needed.³

Goodenow entered into an agreement with Curtis to purchase certain premises well known as the "Knapp House property," understanding that he was purchasing the entire piece so called and inclosed, and Curtis knowing that Goodenow was contracting with that understanding. The description in one of the deeds as dictated by Curtis, specified the lots as the "Knapp House property," importing that the lots conveyed constituted the whole of the property so called. Goodenow took possession under his purchase of the whole property, and afterwards discovering that his deed did not cover the whole piece, filed a bill to compel Curtis to convey to him certain lots included within the piece, but omitted in the conveyance. Held, that Goodenow was entitled to the relief sought. Goodenow v. Curtis, 18 Mich. 298.

An agreement to convey a right of way eighty feet wide over a tract of land becomes sufficiently definite to be enforced in equity, if the grantee subsequently enters upon the land and lays out his road with the acquiescence of the grantor. Purinton v. Northern Ill. R. Co., 46 Ill. 297.

Upon a suit for specific performance of a written contract to purchase "forty acres of the eighty-acre tract at Biggs," plaintiffs offered evidence that defendant agreed to purchase the east half of the tract if plaintiffs would agree to sell the west half to one B, and that the west half had been sold to B under a contract made at the same time as defendant's. The evidence was held to be admissible, and that it showed an agreement by defendant to purchase

If the writing is explicit enough to fix the identity of the tract concerned, the fact that it does not give, in accurate detail, the dimensions and boundaries will not prevent a decree.¹ So where the contract refers for greater particularity as to description to another writing, there may be a decree.²

Extrinsic evidence is not always needed to fix the particular parcel of land which the parties had in mind. Such questions have been determined by judicial construction. For example, a contract to convey by congressional township, section and range, without naming the county, has been held to be sufficiently explicit, the court taking notice of the United States system of surveys.³ So an exception of a certain number of acres at one corner of a tract has been construed to mean so many acres laid off in a square at the corner named;⁴ and the particular word employed, if capable of more than one meaning, is by construction limited and applied so as to give full effect to the language of the contract.⁵

the east half of the tract. Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245.

In Overstreet v. Rice, 4 Bush (Ky.) 1; 96 Am. Dec. 279, the contract described the land thus: "We . . . have this day swapped farms." The parties identified the lands exchanged by entering into possession, and a decree of specific performance was awarded.

A vendor cannot resist a bill to enforce the specific performance of a contract to convey lands on the ground of uncertainty of description, where the bill describes the property by metes, bounds and other means, and the answer admits that it is the land which defendant actually agreed to sell. *Flaharty v. A letter to the owner of a building proposing to lease it, specifying the term and rental, upon condition of alterations in accordance with "plans to be mutually agreed upon," and a letter from the owner accepting the offer, do not, in the absence of any agreement on the plans for alterations, constitute a contract for a lease, of which specific performance will be enforced. *Mayer v. Under such circumstances, the condition as to alterations was not waived by a subsequent letter from the owner refusing to lease the premises, nor by a tender of the rent at the time for the beginning of the term. Mayer v. McCreery, 119 N. Y. 434.

2. Cooper v. Chittenden (Neb. 1891), 50 N. W. Rep. 2; Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12.

A parol contract to exchange lands will not be specifically enforced unless it is proven that the parties have good title to their respective lands; and, if the validity of the plaintiff's title is dependent on the question whether he had ten years' adversary possession of the land, he must, before he can enforce such contract, specifically establish that fact by clear evidence; and, where it appears that he has declined to defend an action of ejectment brought by a stranger to test his title, this will be regarded as showing that his title is so doubtful that the court ought not to require it to be received as a good title by the other party to the contract; and, being unable to make the other party a good title, the contract will not be enforced. Boggs v. Bodkin, 32 W. Va. 566. See Bigelow v. Armes, 108 U. S. 10.

Where two parties promise to exchange lands, "each agreeing to furnish good titles satisfactory to both parties," but without mentioning in such agreement certain mortgages with which each property is incumbered, a decree for specific performance may be granted at the suit of one party, notwithstanding the allegation of the other that the party seeking to enforce the contract is unable to clear off his mortgage and to give a good title. *Oakey v. At the time of leasing certain property, the lessor covenanted with the lessee and his assigns to convey the property in question for a specific sum, at any time before the expiration of the lease. Held, that the filing of a bill for specific performance, with a tender of the price stipulated, was such a substantial compliance on the part of the assignees of the lessee with the terms of the covenant, as to entitle them to have it specifically executed. Other Contracts in Connection with Lease.—West Virginia Oil, etc., Co. v. Vinal, 14 W. Va. 637.

The supreme court has power to decree a specific performance of a covenant by a landlord in a lease, to make repairs. But this power will only be exercised when it appears that the tenant would be irreparably injured without a specific performance of the covenant to repair, and that damages would not afford a sufficient compensation. Valoton v. Seignett, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 121.

A defendant lessor who has reserved in his lease the right to cancel the lease in case a sale of the land is made, is liable to specific performance in favor of the purchaser with damages for delay, where a sale has been made with his consent within the time specified in the lease and he has refused to cancel the lease. Thurman v. Pointer, 67 Miss. 297.

Equity will entertain a bill by a lessee for specific performance of an agreement in the lease, that the improvements made upon the premises by the lessee should, after the expiration of the term, remain the property of the lessor, on his making fair compensation therefor to the lessee, though the bill is purely for compensation and damages, provided specific performance may be decreed, and the complainant can have adequate relief only in equity. Berry v. Van Winkle, 2 N. J. Eq. 269.

An agreement by a surety to reconvey will be specifically enforced, where a defaulting administrator and his wife, to secure such surety, conveyed to him certain real estate, in consideration of the verbal promise of such surety to pay a certain amount of such defalcation, and to reconvey one of such tracts of land to such wife. m. PAROL CONTRACTS RELATING TO LAND; STATUTE OF FRAUDS—(1) In General.—Perhaps the one branch of this subject which is involved in the greatest confusion and uncertainty by reason of the conflict of decisions, is that which governs the specific enforcement of parol contracts in relation to real estate and determines the scope and applicability to such contracts of the Statute of Frauds.²

Nearly all the States permit the enforcement of parol contracts of tenancy, the limitation being made that such leases shall not extend beyond a term named, ranging in the several States from one to three years.³ The courts will not enforce an executory parol

the real consideration being an agreement to support her parents during their lives. Held, that a court of equity would compel the performance of the agreement and charge the support on the land. Watson v. Smith, 7 Oregon 448.

In Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332; 66 Am. Dec. 773, the court, by Williamson, Ch., said: "There can be no doubt but that a person may make a valid agreement, binding himself legally to make a particular disposition of his property by last will and testament. The law permits a man to dispose of his own property at his pleasure; and no good reason can be assigned why he may not make a legal agreement to dispose of his property to a particular individual, or for a particular purpose, as well by will as by conveyance, to be made at some specified future period, or upon the happening of some future event." See Rivers v. Rivers, 3 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 195; 4 Am. Dec. 609; Jones v. Martin, 3 Amb. 882; Podmore v. Gurnsey, 7 Sim. 644; Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480.

Carmichael v. Carmichael, 72 Mich. 76; 16 Am. St. Rep. 528, was a suit based upon a mutual agreement between husband and wife by which the two were to make a certain testamentary disposition of their several estates each in favor of the other as to a part, and in favor of their children as to the residue. The husband died having fully performed his part of the agreement and the wife accepted her portion thereunder by his will. It was held that the other parties in interest could compel her to perform the agreement and restrain her from the execution of any will in violation thereof. See also Bird v. Pope, 73 Mich. 483, reported in note to 16 Am. St. Rep., p. 534.

But in a recent Kansas case, a testamentary agreement in relation to land was held to be incapable of specific enforcement. Hazleton v. Reed, 46 Kan. 73. See also infra, this title, Parol Contracts Relative to Land.

3. The one-year limitation prevails in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Florida, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, Nebraska, New York, contract in relation to land. And, if there be a memorandum of the agreement, it must be definite in its terms.¹

Oregon, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Indiana and North Carolina permit parol leases for any period less than three years.

1. In Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 131, the court by Kent, Ch., said: "This case, like many others, shows the utility of the Statute of Frauds, and the danger of relaxing the sanction of its provisions. I agree with those wise and learned judges, who have declared that the courts ought to make a stand against any further encroachment upon the statute, and not go one step beyond the rules and precedents already established." See Beard v. Linthicum, 1 Md. Ch. 345; Gough v. Crane, 3 Md. Ch. 133.

The Memorandum.—A memorandum of an agreement to convey which describes the land as "1 acre in S, described as follows, to-wit, in the S. W. corner of section 5, township 16, range 22, all sold to W M, for value received," and was signed by defendant, is sufficient to be enforced by specific performance. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66.

Specific performance of a real estate contract in writing, that has been lost for twenty-three years will not be decreed where the only evidence as to its terms is by one who professes to give only its principal points. Vanhorn v. Munnell (Pa. 1891), 22 Atl. Rep. 985.

In Ross v. Allen, 45 Kan. 231, a memorandum in the following terms was held insufficient under the Statute of Frauds to sustain a suit by the vendor for specific performance: "Leavenworth, March 19, 1887, Received one hundred dollars of Mrs. D. Byington, account of Chas. J. Ross, to apply on payment of eight thousand dollars ($8,000) for property number 617 and 619 Delaware street, block 74, city proper; two thousand to be paid when abstract and title is furnished, two thousand in ninety days, and balance two years, with interest at 8%; abstract to be furnished within 30 days. J. M. Allen, Agent."

A letter and its answer may constitute a sufficient memorandum of sale to entitle the purchaser to specific performance. Blair v. Snodgrass, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 1; Lee v. Cherry, 85 Tenn. 707; Kennedy v. Gramling, 33 S. Car. 367; Otis v. Payne, 86 Tenn. 663;

Hollis v. Burgess, 37 Kan. 487; Matteson v. Scofield, 27 Wis. 671.

And it is not absolutely essential that the letters should be addressed by one of the parties to the other. Hollis v. Burgess, 37 Kan. 487; Van Epps v. Clock (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 21.

A record of the resolution of a board of supervisors, sufficient memorandum. Grimes v. Hamilton Co., 37 Iowa 290.

A as B's agent wrote to C proposing to purchase for B land owned by C and his brothers. C wrote A a letter accepting his proposal. These letters were inclosed to B, who wrote to A thanking him for the purchase. C and his brothers brought a bill for specific performance of the contract. Held, that the contract should be enforced. Wyeth v. Mahoney, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 645.

An executory parol agreement to give a lien on land will not be specifically enforced. Ladd v. Stevenson, 112 N. Y. 325.

Executory Parol Agreements.—An executory parol agreement in reference to an interest in lands will not be enforced in equity. Small v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 753; Fort Smith v. Brogan, 49 Ark. 306; Hickman v. Grimes, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 86; 10 Am. Dec. 714; Gill v. Bicknell, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 355; Moote v. Scriven, 33 Mich. 500; Schulter v. Bockwinkle, 19 Mo. 647; Walker v. Hill, 21 N. J. Eq. 191; Buck v. Copeland, 2 Call (Va.) 218; Popp v. Swanke, 68 Wis. 364.

Exceptions.—Equity will enforce an executory agreement made in contemplation of marriage, to the effect that the wife will share with the husband's heirs in lieu of dower. Brooks v. Austin, 95 N. Car. 474.

In Tennessee, a parol contract for the sale of real estate is not void, but voidable, and where both parties to a bill for specific performance treat the contract as valid, and differ only as to the amount due, it is error to dismiss the bill on the ground that the contract is in parol. Brakefield v. Anderson, 85 Tenn. 205.

Trusts.—Unless a trust has been created which it is the duty of equity to fulfill, an executory real estate contract in parol will not be enforced.

If one agrees by parol to take a lease of land for another, but takes the lease in his own name, equity will enforce the agreement, and compel him to make title to the principal; and, in such a case, the statute requiring contracts for leasing or agreeing to lease lands to be in writing does not apply. Hargrave v. King, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 430.

Compare Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447, where it was held that the mere refusal of a trustee to execute a parol trust, or the denial of its existence, is not such a fraud as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and authorize equity to enforce the trust.

Compare Farnham v. Clements, 51 Me. 426.

Where the contract is in several separate writings, parol evidence is inadmissible to connect them. "They must afford intrinsic proof that they relate to the same contract." Blair v. Snodgrass, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 1; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Beidler, 45 Ark. 17. Compare Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66.

T, at her son's request, bought land for him, mortgaging it to her vendor for part of the purchase money, and then conveyed it to her son by a deed, which, after the usual warranty clause, said "except as to the notes given for the purchase money." Afterwards she was put to expense for the son who said verbally that he would convey the land to T to repay her. Held, that neither the exception from the warranty clause in the deed nor the matters resting in parol, conferred on T's heirs any rights in the land which they could assert as against the heirs of her son. Boozar v. Teague, 27 S. Car. 348.

Partnership in Lands.—Equity will not compel the specific performance of a verbal contract to enter into partnership to trade in lands. Meason v. Kaine, 63 Pa. St. 335.

A parol contract whereby one party agrees to bid off in his own name and enter into a contract for the purchase of land, and pay from his own funds the necessary amount for that purpose for the joint benefit of both, the other to reimburse one-half of the money so paid, cannot be enforced in equity. Such an agreement does not constitute a partnership between the parties, which would render an arrangement by parol valid. Nor does the party refusing to perform commit a fraud, where the contract is void, and there has been no part performance or parting with valuable consideration by the other. Levy v. Brush, 45 N. Y. 589.

Instances.—In New Jersey, in a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell land, made by L, president of the defendant company, parol evidence was held inadmissible to show that the defendant company was the real vendor, and hence liable on the contract, no fraud or mistake being alleged. Schenck v. Spring Lake Beach Imp. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 44.

Three persons verbally agreed that if either should be the purchaser of a lot of land at an administrator's sale, they all should be equally interested in the purchase, and that when the purchaser received the deed, he should convey one-third to each of his associates. The purchaser having refused to convey, on tender of one-third part of the purchase money by one of them, a bill in equity was brought to compel conveyance. Held, that equity would not afford relief, the agreement being within the Statute of Frauds. The defendant did not hold the land as trustee, nor was there any resulting trust. Farnham v. Clements, 51 Me. 426.

The parties verbally agreed that an existing mortgage should be considered security for a further advance, but did not in fact execute or contemplate the execution of any further writing; a court of equity refused to hold the land as security for the debt, or to compel the execution of a proper mortgage. Stoddard v. Hart, 23 N. Y. 556.

Specific performance of a parol agreement to convey land will not be decreed, even though the agreement was to convey to A's wife, after foreclosure, a part of the property which she joined A in mortgaging to the defendant in consideration of his promise. Green v. Groves, 109 Ind. 519.

A bill seeking the specific performance of a contract of sale of a stock of goods, the seller, as a part of the transaction, verbally agreeing to give the buyer a three years' lease of the storeroom, held to be properly dismissed, the contract being within the Statute of Frauds. Strehl v. D'Evers, 66 Ill. 77.

When A employs B to purchase real property, and B buys for himself with his own money, it is within the statute if there is no contract in writing, and A cannot compel B to convey. Wallace v. Brown, 10 N. J. Eq. 308.

(2) Pleading the Statute.—The defendant must claim the benefit of the Statute of Frauds, for otherwise, the parol agreement being admitted or proven, a specific enforcement will be decreed, the statute being an affirmative defense which must be pleaded

A made a parol agreement with the owner of land to bid it in at a tax sale, and to reconvey when the owner should refund the taxes so advanced. Held, that the agreement to reconvey was invalid as a trust for want of a writing; that it was not a mortgage, and not enforceable in equity. Hain v. Robinson, 72 Iowa 735.

Where it was alleged, upon the testimony of a single witness, that a trustee sold land and bid it in for a creditor, but no memorandum was made, nor was there anything like part performance, and the prior owner retained possession under an agreement to take the land at the bid, the court refused, upon the evidence, to charge the party with the responsibilities of a contract. William & Mary College v. Powell, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 372.

Under the Mississippi rulings, which recognize no efficacy in part performance, the written contract must definitely distinguish the lands intended to be conveyed, even though the purchaser under it has entered on a specific tract. Fisher v. Kuhn, 54 Miss. 480. See McGuire v. Stevens, 42 Miss. 724; 2 Am. Rep. 649; Beaman v. Buck, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 210; Box v. Stanford, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 93; 51 Am. Dec. 142; Doherty v. Hill, 144 Mass. 467.

Mixed Contract.—It is not sufficient that a part of the contract is in writing. It must all be written or it is a parol contract. Farwell v. Lowther, 18 Ill. 252; Seymour v. Belding, 83 Ill. 222; Frazer v. Howe, 106 Ill. 574; Cloud v. Greasley, 125 Ill. 313; Fry v. Platt, 32 Kan. 65.

Specific performance of an instrument acknowledging the receipt of $100 "as part cash payment on the purchase of lots, total purchase price, $1,100, balance due, $450, on delivery of papers," cannot be decreed, as the contract is required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, whereas, on the face of the instrument it is evident that other terms and conditions must exist aliunde to make it a complete contract. Brundige v. Blair, 43 Kan. 364.

A written agreement to convey land

"for $25,000, and mortgage to remain at five per cent. for five years," was held, in Massachusetts, not to be a sufficient memorandum of sale to be specifically enforced in equity. Grace v. Dennison, 114 Mass. 16.

Signatures.—It is not necessary that both parties sign the memorandum; signature by the party against whom a decree is sought being sufficient, although there must be proof that both parties assented, or acted upon it. Davis v. Robert, 89 Ala. 402; Farwell v. Lowther, 18 Ill. 252; Old Colony R. Co. v. Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 25; 66 Am. Dec. 394; Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407; Slater v. Smith, 117 Mass. 96; Atkinson v. Whitney, 67 Miss. 655; Miller v. Cameron, 45 N. J. Eq. 95; Dynan v. McCulloch, 46 N. J. Eq. 11; Woodward v. Aspinwall, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 272; Smith's Appeal, 69 Pa. St. 474; Ives v. Hazard, 4 R. I. 14; 67 Am. Dec. 500; Sylvester v. Born, 132 Pa. St. 467; Creigh v. Boggs, 19 W. Va. 240.

But compare Jacobs v. Peterborough, etc., R. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 223.

A decree for specific performance of a contract not signed by all the persons named as parties thereto, refused. McIntire v. Bowden, 61 Me. 153.

A vendee taking possession of land under the vendor's written proposition, who changes it so that it cannot be restored to its original condition, cannot contend that he did not sign an agreement to purchase it. Lawrence v. Saratoga Lake R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 467.

A contract for the sale of land was signed by the vendor alone. The vendee corporation took possession, and, on its insolvency, its successor, occupied and used the land. Held, that the vendor's administrator could maintain a suit for specific performance against the latter company, although the West Virginia statute requires contracts for the sale of land to be signed by the party to be charged. Steenrod v. Wheeling, etc., R. Co., 27 W. Va. 1.

The fact that a contract for the sale of land was signed by the vendor only, is no defense to a suit for specific performance, as the filing of the complaint by the vendee binds him to the execu-or deemed waived.¹ So the defendant may waive the benefit of the statute by his failure to object to the introduction of parol evidence establishing the contract sought to be enforced.² And it has been held that where the answer admits the agreement and that it was partially executed, the Statute of Frauds cannot be invoked,³ although the preponderance of authority seems to indicate that the defendant's admission of the contract will not estop him from pleading the statute.⁴

It has been held, however, in New York, that the denial in the answer of any essential particular of a parol contract concerning an interest in lands will defeat a specific enforcement;⁵ but the contrary doctrine is announced in Delaware.⁶ The defendant need not plead the statute if he denies the contract.⁷ The Option.—An option on land signed by the vendor may be accepted verbally. Smith's Appeal, 69 Pa. St. 474; Corson v. Mulvany, 49 Pa. St. 88; 88 Am. Dec. 485.

In Child v. Godolphin, 1 Dick. 39, Lord Macclesfield said: "If the defendant confessed the agreement the court would decree specific performance notwithstanding the statute, for such confession would not be looked upon as perjury or intended to be prevented by the statute." See Wanley v. Sawbridge, 1 Bro. C. C. 414; Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. C. C. 559; Dick, 664; Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox 369; Auter v. Miller, 18 Iowa 405.

courts will not permit the statute to be invoked to shield a fraud.¹

In the absence of an averment in the pleadings as to the character of the contract, it will be presumed to be in writing and valid.²

(3) Part Performance.—See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.³

(4) Parol Testamentary Agreements.—Parol agreements to make specific testamentary provision have been a source of difficulty to the courts. Such agreements are difficult to prove, and the courts, in order to prevent frauds, require strict proof. But where the evidence establishes a plain contract and a substantial performance on the promisee's part, a decree will be granted.⁴

that the general denial does not put the Statute of Frauds in issue. Livesey v. Livesey, 30 Ind. 398.

Thus, in Adkinson v. Tanner, 68 Ill. 247, G contracted with T to sell and set up for T certain machinery and fixtures, to be paid for in installments, the last of which was to fall due in fourteen months, the payments to be secured by chattel mortgage on the machinery when set up. T while insolvent obtained the machinery and fixtures, and then refused to give the mortgage. Held, that equity would enforce the contract and not let T avail himself of the Statute of Frauds.

Defendant's husband made an oral agreement to execute a mortgage upon land which he intends buying, to secure a loan made to him upon the faith of that promise, and then took title to the land in himself and wife. Held, that the wife having refused to execute the mortgage, could not plead the Statute of Frauds as a defense to an action to enforce the oral promise against the land. Leahey v. Leahey, 11 Mo. App. 413.

2. Slingerland v. Slingerland, 46 Minn. 100.

While ordinarily, when the complainant avers that two parties entered into an agreement for the sale of land, it will be presumed, nothing else appearing, that the agreement is in writing, yet that assumption will not be made in favor of a cross-complaint for specific performance of a land contract containing stipulations that by his answer in the same cause, defendant declares to have rested in parol. Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533; Good v. Taylor (Cal. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 220.

A man and his wife promised to adopt plaintiff, and to leave her their estate. The adoption was never effected. Plaintiff lived with them, worked for them, and obeyed them until the man's death, and then continued to live with his wife and to obey and work for her. Held, that plaintiff could enforce her rights to the property, and that these acts of performance took the promise out of the Statute of Frauds. Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647; 60 Am. Rep. 270.

See VanDyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370; 12 N. J. Eq. 143; Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246; Maddox v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431; 68 Am. Dec. 535; Benge v. Hiatt, 82 Ky. 666; 56 Am. Specific performance of a promise to make a will in favor of plaintiff denied under peculiar facts. Cox v. Cox, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 305.

In Hudson v. Hudson, 87 Ga. 678, a son who had fulfilled his obligations to reside on the "home-place" and care for his father under a promise by the father to devise the place to him, was allowed a sum of money against the father's estate equivalent to the value of such "home-place" upon a quantum meruit.

A father made a verbal arrangement with his son, that if the son would live upon a designated farm belonging to the father, and cultivate and improve it at his own expense, that he would give the farm to his son when he (the father) should have done with it. In reliance upon this agreement, the son entered into possession of the farm, and repaired, cultivated and improved it for twenty years, till he died, and thereafter his wife and his heir at law continued the performance of the contract till the father died. The contract was held to be a valid one and enforceable in equity by reason of the performance of it by and in behalf of the son, although not in writing. Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27.

Where the contract was that if the daughter and her husband would live with the promisor, cultivate his farm, and care for and support himself and wife during their lifetime, such daughter should have a half interest in the farm, it was held, that the daughter possessed no interest, legal or equitable, until complete fulfillment on her part and the death of both parents. Flower v. Cruikshank, 77 Iowa 110.

1. The contract must be pleaded with the utmost accuracy and certainty and the proof must not only correspond in all essential particulars with the terms of the contract as pleaded, but be so explicit as to leave no room for reasonable doubt. Semmes v.

Worthington, 38 Md. 298; Fardy v. Williams, 38 Md. 298.

2. A parol contract between father and son that in consideration that the son would cultivate the farm on which they lived, pay taxes, etc., and pay the father annually $100 as long as he lived, the farm, upon the father's death, should belong to the son, even if fully performed by the son, must be clearly and satisfactorily proven to entitle him to a decree for specific performance. Ackerman v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. Eq. 315.

A verbal promise by a father to convey land to his daughter upon consideration of her residing upon the land and improving it, will not be specifically enforced after the father's death, where the evidence as to the making of the contract is conflicting, and it appears that the daughter, after her father's death, offered to buy the land from the other heirs. Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448.

Shahan v. Swan (Ohio, 1891), 26 N. E. Rep. 222, was a suit brought by Mary J. Swan, to enforce specific performance of a parol contract, made forty-six years before. The plaintiff, when a child about two years old, attracted the attention of the defendant's decedent, James E. Woodbridge and his wife, who were wealthy and without children, and who entered into negotiations with the child's mother, whereby the child was delivered to them and became a member of their household, taking their name and being entered in the family bible as their child, and educated by them, and subsequently introduced into society as their daughter.

Years afterwards, Woodbridge and wife died, making no substantial provision for the child, and suit was brought to compel a performance of the implied contract to devise the entire estate of the adoptive parents. Plaintiff's application was denied on the ground that the evidence did not establish the fact that the acts upon which plaintiff based her claim were done pursuant to any clearly defined contract, and that such acts did not satisfy the court's requirements as to part performance sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. The opinion reviews a large number of like cases, both English and American, and is reported with a copious note by Edgar B. Kinkead in 32 Cent. L. J. 205.

In Wall's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 460; 56 Am. Rep. 288, the court, by Green, J., said: "Claims of this nature against dead men's estates, resting entirely in parol, based largely upon loose declarations, presented generally years after the services in question were rendered, and when the lips of the party principally interested are closed in death, require the closest and most careful scrutiny to prevent injustice being done. We cannot too often repeat the cautions we have so frequently uttered upon this subject, and we feel that the present occasion is one which demands both their repetition and their application." See Pollock v. Ray, 85 Pa. St. 428. Compare Thompson v. Stevens, 71 Pa. St. 161; Graham v. Graham, 34 Pa. St. 475; Hudson v. Hudson, 87 Ga. 678.

In Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522; 55 Am. Rep. 222, an agreement upon which the suit was based had been made between a husband and wife, who were without children, and the guardian of the husband's niece, a child seven years old; that if the child would live with them during their lifetime and until the death of both, and become and act toward them as their child and permit herself to be known as their child, and do such work in the way of housekeeping as she was capable of doing, and care for them in sickness, they would treat her as their child and make her their heir, and at their death would give their entire estate to her. It was held that this contract being in parol was governed by the Statute of Frauds and that part performance did not save the case.

This, however, was not an equity case.

In Woods v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186; 55 Am. Rep. 409, an agreement by the promisor to take, maintain and educate an orphan girl eleven years old and, for her services until she becomes eighteen, to leave her at his death "a child's part of his estate," was held to be founded on too slight a consideration and to be too uncertain to warrant a decree.

And in Wallace v. Reppleye, 103 Ill. 249, an agreement to make the child an heir was held incapable of enforcement by reason of uncertainty as to the amount comprised in an heir's share.

A parol promise to devise all one's property to a child made to the child's father in consideration of his allowing the promisor to adopt the child, being void under the Statute of Frauds, is not enforceable in equity, though the child lived with the promisor as his daughter till her marriage, but never had possession of the property. Pond v. Sheean, 132 Ill. 312.

On a suit to compel the specific performance of a verbal contract to devise certain land to complainant, the evidence showed that complainant had been in the employ of the deceased from her childhood until she became twenty-one years of age. Complainant then married, and deceased promised that, if she would continue to live with and serve her, she, decedent, then eighty-three years old, would leave complainant the land in question. Complainant thereupon continued to serve deceased for twelve years longer. The only witness to this contract was complainant's husband. Defendant, the son of the deceased, introduced evidence of declarations by deceased inconsistent with any such agreement as alleged by complainant. He also showed that with his mother's consent he had made extensive improvements on the property in controversy after the date of the alleged contract. Just before her death deceased gave complainant $3,000 in money. The evidence was conflicting whether this was a gratuity or in payment of the services rendered. Held, that complainant had not clearly established the contract, nor shown such part performance of it as to entitle her to a decree of specific performance. Sturges v. Taylor (N. J. 1890), 20 Atl. Rep. 369.

1. Mortgages.—Any agreement in parol in reference to the execution or satisfaction of a mortgage will be enforced in favor of a complainant who has performed his part, but not otherwise. Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal.

As where a mortgagee orally agrees to re-convey land, which he has purchased at a foreclosure sale, upon a repayment of the debt by the mortgagor. Combs v. Little, 4 N. J. Eq. 310; 40 Am. Dec. 207; Coble v. Branson, 98 N. Car. 160; Rose v. Bates, 12 Mo. 30. Compare Corliss v. Conable, 74 Iowa 58.

B sold to A, giving a bond for a deed, a tract of land that had been sold on a mortgage foreclosure, and, to cut off a dower right of the mortgagor's wife, procured an assignment of the certificate of purchase to C, B's son, who received a master's deed, investing him with a clear legal title. A, after paying the purchase money, procured B to become his surety on a note for $1,000, orally agreeing that the title might remain in C as an indemnity to B until the note be paid. On a suit by A's assignee for specific performance, the agreement was held to be not within the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance was ordered. Worden v. Crist, 106 Ill. 326.

A parol agreement by the mortgagee to release the mortgagor from his personal liability if he will convey the lands to a third person may be enforced by the mortgagor after performance on his part. Coyle v. Davis, 20 Wis. 564.

H contracted with D for the purchase of land, and B furnished or loaned the money to H to pay for the land, and took a deed for the same in his own name, with the consent of H, agreeing with him verbally at the same time, that he, H, should have five years in which to repay the money, and that he might have the land at any time within that period on paying the sum loaned and 10 per cent. interest. Held, that this was not a contract prohibited by the Statute of Frauds, but that the parol agreement created a valid and legal trust in favor of H, and that the latter having tendered performance within the time, and brought suit to enforce the trust was entitled to a judgment decreeing its execution. Bailey v. Harris, 19 Tex. 108.

Where A obtained the legal title to land as security for the money advanced by him to B, the vendor, for C, the vendee, promising to reconvey the same to C, on the repayment of the sum advanced, with 20 per cent. interest, but fraudulently sold the land to another, who bought with notice, held, that the contract was not void under the Statute of Frauds, and that under such circumstances a court of equity would adjudge the defendant's trustees for the party defrauded, and decree a specific performance of the contract, or pecuniary compensation for the property. Jackson v. Gray, 9 Ga. 77.

Contracts to Exchange Lands.—These may be enforced by either party. But great care should be exercised in determining what is part performance. Overstreet v. Rice, 4 Bush (Ky.) 1; 96 Am. Dec. 279.

Exchange of possession will take the case out of the statute. Parrill v. McKinley, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 1; 58 Am. Dec. 212; Bennett v. Abrams, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

Parol Agreements of Partition.—Petrar v. Howell, 20 Ark. 615; Weed v. Terry, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 344; 45 Am. Dec. 257.

Contracts in Compromise of Controversies.—Watkins v. Watkins, 24 Ga. 402.

E, who by his father's will was to receive the bulk of the estate and was threatened with a contest, made an agreement with the other heirs by which each undertook to bear his proportional part of an indebtedness owing by one of them to E, and agreed to set aside the will, and to insist upon the settlement of the estate as intestate. Held, that, although it was understood that a more formal agreement was afterwards to be drawn up, and a provision inuring to the benefit of E was omitted from the contract, specific performance could not be resisted by his heirs while the complainants offered to carry out the parol part of the contract. Hall v. Hall, 125 Ill. 95.

Rights that the purchaser has established by part performance he will not be permitted to lose altogether, where the vendor has put it out of his power to fulfill the contract specifically, by putting the title to the land into the hands of an innocent purchaser. Compensation will be awarded him in equity in the same manner that it would be awarded upon the breach of a written contract.¹

(6) Evidence.—From the nature of the contract it follows that in equity its terms and provisions must be established with certainty, and that the same certainty must be maintained as to the facts constituting part performance, where that is depended upon to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds. And so of the consideration, the description of the land, and all other incidents to the contract, unless its essential features have been admitted by the defendant.² Sometimes, however, courts, in their discretion,

Plaintiff and defendant were in effect opposing parties in five actions. On the day of the trial of the most important, defendant promised orally, in consideration of a compromise and dismissal of the actions, to convey real estate to plaintiff on the day plaintiff married a certain lady. Plaintiff dismissed his actions, paid the agreed amounts in the others and married the lady. Held, sufficient part performance. Slingerland v. Slingerland, 39 Minn. 197.

Evidence as to Description.—Equity will not enforce a parol contract on the ground of part performance, where the description is so indefinite that the contract would not be enforced had the memorandum required by the Statute of Frauds been made. Blankenship v. Spencer, 31 W. Va. 510.

Where Evidence Is Contradictory.—A parol agreement for the sale or gift of lands will not be specifically enforced, where the parol evidence of it is contradictory. Rowton v. Rowton, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 92; Griggsby v. Osborn, 82 Va. 371; Gallagher v. Gallagher, 31 W. Va. 9; Reno v. Moss, 120 Pa. St. 49.

In a suit for specific performance of a parol contract to convey land, brought have granted the relief even where the proof might be said to lack definitiveness and conclusiveness.¹ The plaintiff must

by a son against his father, where the son's evidence that he had signed a deed to lots, in which the father had a life estate and he a remainder, in performance of his part of the contract and that it was understood in the family that he was to have the land in controversy, is met by evidence of the father denying the agreement altogether, and that there ever was any such understanding in the family, proof of the agreement and part performance, taken in connection with the fact that complainant had delayed bringing the action for fifteen years, is too uncertain to authorize a court of equity to interfere with the relief sought. Ridgway v. Ridgway, 69 Md. 242.

Under Iowa Code, § 3667, if a parol contract to convey land can be proven by the evidence of the defendant, specific performance will be decreed against him. Dewey v. Life, 60 Iowa 361.

The vendee under an oral contract for the sale of land cannot recover upon the loose declarations and admissions of the vendor as to the existence of the contract, unless corroborated by evidence which leaves no room for doubt. Berry v. Hartzell, 91 Mo. 132.

Evidence as to Matters Not Pledged.—

In a bill for the specific performance of a parol contract for the conveyance of land, the general facts relied upon, showing a part performance, must be specifically set forth. And where evidence has been taken in the case showing valuable improvements made by complainant on the land in controversy, but there was no allegation in the bill with respect to such improvements, held that such evidence could not be considered in the decision of the cause. Bornier v. Caldwell, 8 Mich. 463.

Evidence Competent in Particular Cases.—Where the land is contracted for at so much per acre, the purchase money to be paid in installments, to be secured by bond and mortgage, the deeds under which the defendant held the land are competent prima facie evidence of the number of acres, to show that the bonds and mortgages, tendered in pursuance of the contract, were for the proper amounts and evidence to show that the plaintiff had cut timber on part of the tract, under the contract, is relevant. Hanna v. Phillips, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 253.

Variance.—Specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands will not be decreed where the proof of the contract is uncertain and contradictory, and variant from the allegations of the bill. Goodwin v. Lyon, 4 Port. (Ala.) 297.

On a bill for specific performance of a verbal contract for the sale of land, where the Statute of Frauds was not pleaded, proof on the part of the vendor that he had verbally sold the land to the deceased husband of the complainant in his lifetime—held not to be material to the issue, the question being whether he had sold to the complainant. The equities of the heirs of the deceased party could be settled in another suit. Adkinson v. Tanner, 68 Ill. 247.

Evidence Establishing Part Performance.—The evidence of a parol sale of lands between parents and children must be very clear to avoid the statute; all the acts necessary to its validity must have especial reference to it, and nothing else. Poorman v. Kilgore, 26 Pa. St. 365; 67 Am. Dec. 524; Cox v. Cox, 26 Pa. St. 375; 67 Am. Dec. 432.

In a bill for specific performance, the agreement as alleged, must be sustained by proof, and sufficient performance be shown to take it out of the Statute of Frauds; and it must also show certainty as to time and price, and also mutuality. Olive v. Dougherty, 3 Greene (Iowa) 371.

Where the evidence adduced by the plaintiff in support of his bill for specific performance, consisted mostly of facts tending to show a part performance of the agreement by him, such as money paid, possession taken, improvements made, and money expended, and such evidence was objected to generally as inadmissible—held, that such objection was not sustainable. Annan v. Merritt, 13 Conn. 478.

In order to enforce the fulfillment of a parol contract for the sale and conveyance of land, the complainant must show the existence of the contract, and also either that he paid a part of the purchase money or that he took possession under the contract. Fairbrother v. Shaw, 4 Iowa 570.

As to evidence sufficient to establish part performance, see Townsend v. Hawkins, 45 Mo. 286.

If the contract contains a description of land complete and definite on its face a denial of the description becomes matter of defense.² And if the defendant show a discrepancy in the description or quantity of the land or misrepresentation by the vendor in reference thereto, he will defeat the vendor's suit.³

(7) Parol Gifts.—A parol gift of land, partly executed, may be enforced on the ground that the change of the donee's condition, the making of improvements to the permanent benefit of the land, and the expense and loss incident thereto to the donee, constitute a sufficient consideration to relieve the contract from the operation of the Statute of Frauds.⁴

a parol contract for the sale of land to be used as a cemetery. In an action for specific performance defendant was given judgment on the ground that improvements made by plaintiff were made against the will of defendant. It appeared that the latter had assisted in staking out the land, and that the plaintiff had built a fence with the knowledge of defendant, and without objection from him. Held, that a new trial should be granted. Evergreen Cemetery Assoc. v. Armstrong, 37 Minn. 259.

Where, at a first meeting it was agreed by plaintiffs and defendant that they would take the land next day if they liked it, and defendant should take a bond in part payment, and both plaintiffs testified that the next day the bond was delivered in pursuance of the agreement, but defendant claimed that he only took the bond for examination, held that there was sufficient evidence of part payment to support specific performance. Miller v. Nelson, 64 Iowa 458.

A father orally agreed to give land to his daughter and her husband if they would settle down near him, the husband then having an offer of work permanently in a distant place. No definite agreement was made as to the time during which they should live there, nor was there anything definite concerning improvements. The daughter and her husband continued to live on the land for several years and put improvements upon it. Held, that they could compel a specific performance of the parol contract to convey to them. Welch v. Whelpley, 62 Mich. 15.

A court of equity will be much more liberal in allowing parol evidence to contradict or control a written instrument, in order to reach the equities of a case than courts of law. Stoutenburgh v. Tompkins, 9 N. J. Eq. 332.

Defendants in ejectment testified that the disputed property had been given to them in fee, and that the donor had agreed to make a deed to them. Other witnesses testified that the donor had admitted making a gift. It also appeared that he was under obligations to defendants for support furnished him during minority. The donor alone testified that the gift was conditional. Held, that the evidence showed an intention in the donor to convey an absolute estate to defendants. International Bank v. Fife, 95 Mo. 118.

The complaint for specific performance described the premises, particularly alleging that they were the same set out in the agreement, which was not denied by the answer, and all the evidence referred to the same property. Held, that the evidence was sufficient, as to description, and a decree granted. Sanders v. Streitz, 17 Neb. 557.

In a suit by a son against his father to enforce specific performance of an agreement to convey, the complaint alleged that defendant divided his land between his children, and made a will devising it accordingly; that he caused the tract allotted to complainant to be surveyed, had it transferred to him on the assessment books, and put him in possession; that, relying on defendant's promises of a gift, complainant made valuable improvements on the land, rented it and paid the taxes, and thereafter the father served notice on the tenant to quit, and was seeking to dispossess complainant. The bill prayed for specific performance, injunction pending suit, and general relief. Held, that the bill stated facts entitling complainant to the injunction asked, and to compensation for his improvements, and a decree establishing a lien on the land therefor. Duckett v. Duckett, 71 Md. 357.

Where a nephew, in pursuance of the parol promise of his uncle that, if the nephew will take certain lands and make improvements thereon, he will purchase it for the nephew's benefit, leaves his own land, takes possession of the purchased land, and makes the improvements, there is a sufficient part performance to take the contract out of the statute. Hunter v. Mills, 29 S. Car. 72.

In a recent West Virginia case it was held upon the parol contract sued on, between father and son, that, if the son would enter upon a certain parcel of land and improve it, the father would convey the same to him, where it appeared that in pursuance of such agreement, the son has entered upon the land, and occupied and improved it, the contract should be specifically performed. Lorentz v. Lorentz, 14 W. Va. 761.

A father verbally gave his son a tract of land and put him in possession, and the son made improvements on it and grew a crop of wheat. A person seeking to buy the land bargained with the son, whose rights he knew, but, failing to agree with him, closed a contract with the father, which it was agreed should be kept from the son's knowledge. The father afterwards refused to give a deed except subject to his son's claim for the wheat crop, and the purchaser filed a bill against him for specific performance. Held, not maintainable. Dowling v. Bergin, 47 Mich. 188.

Defendants' ancestor, a feeble, childless widower, 66 years old, and wealthy, on consideration that complainants, his niece and her husband, would live with and care for him until his death, gave them his verbal promise to convey to them the premises in return for their care. They did their part of the contract, making valuable improvements on the land, but his deed was vacated after his death, at the suit of his heirs, for mental incapacity. The property was but a small portion of his estate, and he was mentally sound when the agreement was made. Held,

This, however, has been denied, in some cases, where it has been held that the only remedy of the donee who had taken possession and made improvements was pecuniary compensation for the improvements.¹ But where courts have sustained the that defendants should be required to execute the contract. Fishburne v. Furguson, 85 Va. 321.

Equity will enforce a parol promise of a parent to a child to convey land to him on condition fulfilled, that the latter take possession and expend money, etc., in improving it, there being such performance as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Bright v. Bright, 41 Ill. 101; Moore v. Pierson, 6 Iowa 279; 71 Am. Dec. 409; Bohanan v. Bohanan, 96 Ill. 591; Kurtz v. Hibner, 55 Ill. 514; 8 Am. Rep. 665; Ford v. Steele (Neb. 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 271.

But not where the donee did nothing beyond entering into possession under the promise. Anderson v. Scott, 94 Mo. 637.

A mere expression of an intention to make a gift of land, without proof that the promisee expended money or labor on the faith of it, will not sustain a suit for specific performance, especially where the suit is not brought until eleven years from the time when the promise is alleged to have been made, and three years after the death of the promisor, and no sufficient reason is shown for the delay. Galloway v. Garland, 104 Ill. 275; Clark v. Clark, 122 Ill. 388; Pullman v. Johnson, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 612.

Nor where the proof of the gift was not conclusive. Griggsby v. Osborn, 82 Va. 371; Jones v. Tyler, 6 Mich. 364.

A court of equity will not enforce specific performance of an alleged parol gift of real estate, as against the heirs of the grantor, unless the evidence clearly establishes an executed intent to make the gift, or possession or improvements in reliance upon it. Johnston v. Johnston, 19 Iowa 74.

Where a father promised his daughter, by parol, long before her marriage, to give her certain lands in case she married with his consent, and, after her marriage, put her in possession thereof, and she, with her husband, made certain improvements, and the father denied, in answer to a bill asking a conveyance, that he consented to the marriage, or gave her possession in pursuance of any promise, the court refused to decree a conveyance. Worley v. Walling, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 208.

In Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34; 3 Am. Rep. 657, the court, by Grover, J., said: "The ground upon which this equitable jurisdiction is exercised, although sometimes said to be part performance, really is to prevent a fraud being practiced upon the parol purchaser by the seller, by inducing him to expend his money upon improvements upon the faith of the contract, and then deprive him of the benefit of the expenditure, and secure it to the seller by permitting the latter to avoid the performance of his contract. In the case supposed, there has been no part performance of the contract, strictly speaking, except the taking possession; no part of the purchase-money having been paid, and yet the cases are numerous where performance of such contract has been decreed in equity, where possession has been taken under the contract and large expenditures upon permanent improvements made. In the present case possession has been taken under the promise and the expenditures upon improvements made, yet it is insisted that equity will not enforce the promise for the reason that it was to give, instead of having been to sell the land for a valuable consideration. Permitting the promisor to avoid performance operates as a fraud as much in the latter as in the former case, so far as expenditures upon improvements are concerned."

Possession of land worth $400 having been taken under a parol gift, permanent improvements, costing $187, will be deemed sufficient in value to justify a decree of specific performance, even though the value of the use and occupation has exceeded the cost of the improvements. Wells v. Davis, 77 Tex. 636.

A promise by a father to a son, that, if he will remove from North Carolina and settle in Alabama, he will give him a particular plantation and slaves, cannot be enforced in equity by specific performance as a contract, it being a donee's right to a conveyance they have required strict proof of the terms of the gift and the acts done in part performance.¹

Specific performance will not be granted on the uncorroborated declarations of parties deceased.² Even though acts of part performance be shown, the decree is granted in the discretion of the court in view of the circumstances of the case.³

2. Contracts Which Concern Personal Property—a. IN GENERAL.—Two other general classes of contracts, in addition to those affecting real estate, fall within the jurisdiction of equity in this department of its powers—namely, those which concern personal property and those which relate to personal conduct.

It was once the rule in England to refuse applications for the specific enforcement of contracts relating to chattels. It was but the rare exception when the chancellor extended his powers to reach such agreements. But the practice in the United States has been much more liberal, especially of recent years, and such is the tendency in the English courts to-day. The fact remains, nevertheless, that for the breach of such agreements, in most cases, the law affords an adequate remedy, and there is no occasion for equitable interposition.⁴

mere gratuity, although the son is by it induced to break up at a loss, and is put to trouble and expense in the removal; and part performance, by putting the son in possession, and his making improvements, will not warrant a court of equity in decreeing a conveyance by the heirs or devisees of the father after his death, no conveyance or written agreement, or promise to convey, being proved. Forward v. Armistead, 12 Ala. 124.

Equity will not enforce the specific execution of a parol gift of land by a father to his son, though accompanied by delivery of possession, either against the father himself or his heirs at law and personal representatives after his death. Pinckard v. Pinckard, 23 Ala. 649.

1. Truman v. Truman, 79 Iowa 506. In Pullman v. Johnson, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 612; it was said that mere declarations by a father of an intention to give his daughter certain land, and not resting on a valuable consideration, were insufficient, in the absence of an actual conveyance by him to create an enforceable obligation in her favor.

As a general rule the specific performance of contracts relating to chattels will be denied; this on the ground that the law affords an adequate redress. Kelly v. Dee, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 286; Dilburn v. Youngblood, 85 Ala. 449; McGarvey v. Hall, 23 Cal. 140; Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121; 25 Am. Dec. 60; Parker v. Garrison, 61 Ill. 250; Caldwell v. Myers, Hard. Car.) 304; 16 Am. Dec. 606.

In Young v. Daniels, 2 Iowa 126; 63 Am. Dec. 477, the court by Wright, C. J., said: "In contracts respecting real property, however, courts of equity are in the habit of interposing to grant relief to a far greater extent than in cases respecting personal property; and while in cases respecting chattels this jurisdiction is limited to special circumstances, in cases of land contracts it is universally maintained.

When the courts compel the specific performance of contracts relating to chattels, they weigh such contracts with greater nicety than they do real estate contracts and never enforce them as a matter of course.¹

In respect to their subject-matter, contracts touching personal property cover a wide range. The following have been considered proper subjects for equitable cognizance:

"As a general rule, contracts relating to personalty, unless possessing some element to show that relief at law may not be adequate, will not be enforced in equity." Cohen v. Mitchell, 115 Ill. 124.

1. Roundtree v. McLain, 1 Hempst. (U. S.) 245; Mechanics' Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 299; Savery v. Spence, 13 Ala. 561; Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 218; Justices v. Croft, 18 Ga. 473; Sullivan v. Tuck, 1 Md. Ch. 59; Waters v. Howard, 1 Md. Ch. 112; Phillips v. Berger, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 608; Cushman v. Thayer Mfg. Jewelry Co., 76 N. Y. 365; 32 Am. Rep. 315; Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 343; Lloyd v. Wheatley, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 267.

It is not of itself a sufficient ground of demurrer, that a bill seeks the performance of a contract relating to personal property, as in many instances a court of equity compels a specific performance of such contracts. Carpenter v. Mutual Safety Ins. Co., 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 408.

A contract should be enforced in every case where its subject is something susceptible of substantial enjoyment; provided always that the circumstances surrounding and connected with the contract bring it within the equitable rules which entitle it to the relief sought, and where the remedy at law is uncertain and insufficient. Johnson v. Rickett, 5 Cal. 218.

It is not a fatal obstacle to the enforcement of a contract that it does not relate to lands. Treasurer v. Commercial Coal Min. Co., 23 Cal. 393; Parker v. Garrison, 61 Ill. 253; Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 231; 33 Am. Dec. 733; Deen v. Milne, 112 N. Y. 303.

Whenever the loss by reason of a violation of the contract cannot be correctly estimated in damages, or wherever, from the nature of the contract, a specific performance is indispensable to justice, a court of equity will not be deterred from interfering because the contract relates to personal property. Sullivan v. Tuck, 1 Md. Ch. 59; Hoy v. Hanaborough, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.)

533; Furman v. Clark, 11 N. J. Eq. 306.

Where the relief prayed for is the delivery of written instruments to which plaintiff is entitled, and not the performance of an executory contract except as to minor details, equity has jurisdiction. Doleret v. Rothschild, 1 S. & S. 590; Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 178; Shockley v. Davis, 17 Ga. 177; 63 Am. Dec. 233; Henderson v. Johns, 13 Colo. 280; Williams v. Carpenter, 14 Colo. 477.

Title Deeds.—Hill v. Rockingham Bank, 44 N. H. 567; Snoddy v. Finch, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 355; 70 Am. Dec. 216.

And when it appears that for his contract, the plaintiff's remedy at law is doubtful in its nature, extent, operation or adequacy, equity will grant him a decree, even though the relief sought concerns only personalty. Southern Express Co. v. Western N. Car. R. Co., 99 U. S. 191.

In Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 231; 33 Am. Dec. 733, the court, by Wilde, J., said: "It is objected that the court ought not to exercise jurisdiction in equity for a specific performance of agreements relating to personal property. And generally that rule has been observed in the English courts, but has been subject to numerous exceptions and has been uniformly limited to cases where a compensation in damages furnishes a clear and adequate remedy. If the party complaining has no such remedy, it is quite immaterial whether the contract relates to real or personal estate."

Trust.—Where there exists a trust in relation to personal property equity will compel its execution. Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121; 25 Am. Dec. 60; Peer v. Kean, 14 Mich. 354; Pooley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34; Wood v. Rowcliffe, 2 Phil. 382.

Equity will enforce the performance of a contract in relation to personalty merely, as for the use of furniture, not incident to a contract in relation to realty. City Council v. Page, Spears Eq. (S. Car.) 159.

*b. CONTRACTS OF SALE AND DELIVERY.*¹—The prime element in determining whether the breach could be adequately compensated in damages is found in the character of the property concerned. Where it is of peculiar interest or value, as where it possesses a pretium affectionis, the enforcement of the contract is decreed with the same freedom as though the property were land.² But goods possessing an easily ascer-

In Bozon v. Farlow, 1 Meriv. 459, the chancellor refused to decree specific performance of a contract to assign an attorney's business on the ground that the court was not able to carry its decree into execution.

Compare Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 S. & S. 74.

In suits to enforce contracts concerning chattels, "care should be taken that there be no unnecessary encroachment on the province of the courts of common law." Smaltz's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 312.

1. In Rothholz v. Schwartz, 46 N. J. Eq. 477; 19 Am. St. Rep. 409, the court, by Pitney, V. C., said: "The jurisdiction of this court to decree specific performance of contracts for the sale of chattels is as well settled as it is for those of the sale of realty and is based upon the same grounds—namely, the inability of the courts at law to give such remedy. And so the question whether the court will in a particular case exercise its jurisdiction is to be determined upon the same considerations in both cases, the most important being the question whether there is a full, complete, and adequate remedy at law. And the reason why the jurisdiction is seldom exercised over sales of chattels is, that the remedy at law in such cases is usually adequate and satisfactory." Citing Cutting v. Dana, 25 N. J. Eq. 265.

Contracts for the Sale and Delivery of Property Possessing Unusual Value or Under Circumstances Demanding Specific Performance.—For example, a contract calling for ship timber in large quantities, Buxton v. Lister, 3 Atk. 384.

A contract for the purchase of coal tar, which is obtainable in the city solely from defendant, and absolutely necessary to plaintiff's business, will be specifically enforced. Equitable Gas Light Co. v. Baltimore Coal Tar & Mfg. Co., 63 Md. 285.

Two manufacturers of glue from fish-skins, under a supposed valid patent, made a contract with a view to avoid competition between themselves, and secure a reasonable profit. The fish-skins of which the glue was made were of limited production, and the agreement provided for a certain division of the available product between plaintiff and defendant. On discovering the invalidity of the patent, defendant contracted to take the whole supply of numerous producers for long terms, and then refused plaintiff its share of such supply under the terms of the agreement. Specific performance decreed. Gloucester Isinglass, etc., Co. v. Russia Cement Co., 154 Mass. 92.

The plaintiff sold his horse and wagon, and the good-will of his business, which consisted of a list of his customers, to whom he was accustomed with regularity to supply an article dealt in by him. The defendant agreed to pay in installments; and if he failed tainable market value, as cotton or wheat, or ordinary merchandise easily found in the market, cannot be made the basis of equitable consideration. The only relief for the breach of contracts of which they are the subject lies in damages.¹ Within this rule fall contracts for stocks and bonds, the value of which in the market is known, or easily determined.²

Other elements may be considered, such as the insolvency of the defendant, the existence of a trust which it would be the duty of the chancellor to execute, or the danger of fraud in case the contract is not specifically performed.³

to do so promptly to deliver back to the plaintiff the horse and wagon and the list of customers. He failed to make the payments as agreed, and returned the horse and wagon, but refused to furnish a list of the customers. Held, that a court of equity would enforce the specific performance of the contract. Palmer v. Graham, 1 Pars. Sel. Cas. (Pa.) 476.

In Womack v. Smith, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 478; 54 Am. Dec. 51, the court, by Totten, J., said: "The remedial power of a court of equity to decree the delivery of a specific chattel is limited to a class of cases where the chattel has a special and peculiar value and where the remedy at law in damages would be entirely inadequate; as where the chattel is a family relic, or ornament, or heirloom, or other thing of kindred nature."

The sale of a dyer's receipt with the good will of the business was enforced in Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 S. & S. 74.

1. Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 119; Ferguson v. Paschall, 11 Mo. 267.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of a certain number of bales of cotton at a fixed price, which was paid when the contract was made, cannot be granted, as the remedy at law for the breach of such a contract is adequate. Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 119.

A decree was refused in Paddock v. Davenport, 107 N. Car. 710, where plaintiff sought to enforce the sale of trees standing on defendant's land, no showing being made that damages would not be adequate relief. But compare Buxton v. Lister, 3 Atk. 384.

2. A court of equity will not compel specific performance of a contract to deliver government bonds, or marketable railroad shares. Ross v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 36; Fallon v. Railroad Co., 1 Dill. (U. S.) 121; Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass.

Specific performance of a contract to deliver stock will be refused in case it appears that there is no fiduciary relation between the parties; that the value of the stock can be estimated in money, and that there are no allegations of defendant's insolvency. Avery v. Ryan, 74 Wis. 591.

3. Avery v. Ryan, 74 Wis. 591.

Insolvency.—See Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 231; 33 Am. Dec. 733.

Where a vendor received the entire consideration for personal property, but in fraud of the vendee's rights was about disposing of the same, and was insolvent, and the vendee would encounter difficulty in attempting to replevy the property, as it formed an undivided portion of a larger quantity, and had not been delivered, and was in the possession of several persons, it was held that equity should entertain jurisdiction of a bill for injunction in the nature of a specific performance of the agreement of sale. Parker v. Garrison, 61 Ill. 250.

Trust.—One who buys stock in behalf of another may be compelled to fulfill his trust by transferring it to him. Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121; 25 Am. Dec. 60; Draper v. Stone,

c. AGREEMENTS TO TRANSFER CORPORATE STOCK.¹—If it appears that corporate stock contracted for is desired for a special and legitimate personal purpose,² or that its market value cannot be fixed with certainty because the stock is not upon the market, it is manifest that a judgment in damages would be inadequate and impracticable, and specific performance may be granted.³ But in Pennsylvania, Equity will decree the specific performance of a covenant to convey personal property contracted to a trustee in aid and enforcement of the provisions of a trust mortgage. Chaffee v. Sprague (R. I. 1888), 13 Atl. Rep. 121.

Specific performance will be granted to compel the delivery of promissory notes and other instruments in writing to the persons entitled to the possession thereof, when an express trust in reference to the same has been created by the terms of the contract. Henderson v. Johns, 13 Colo. 280.

It has even been held in New Jersey, that equity will entertain jurisdiction in favor of the vendor against his vendee for the payment of the consideration for the delivery of chattels sold. 3. Special Value to Promisee.—The defendant subscribed for most of the stock of a corporation organized to buy and operate a steamboat, of which he was to be the master. By agreeing to employ her husband on the boat, and that "in case of misunderstanding, or not being able to agree, or in case of the husband's death," the defendant would take her stock "at not exceeding cost; or, if boat depreciates in value, at a fair cash valuation," the defendant induced the plaintiff to take stock in the corporation. The plaintiff agreed to give the defendant the refusal over any other purchaser. The plaintiff assigned her stock as collateral, and her interest therein was attached. The pledgee and the attaching creditors were made parties to a suit by the plaintiff for specific performance, and they agreed to release their interest, and to look to the proceeds. Upon the foregoing facts the court held that the stock had a peculiar value to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance on the principle of mutuality of remedy, and also because the pledge of the stock and the attachment rendered her remedy at law inadequate. Bumgardner v. Leavitt (W. Va. 1891), 13 S. E. Rep. 67.

Stock Not on the Market, or of Uncertain Value.—Specific performance will be decreed where the shares are limited, having no fixed or marketable value, are not quoted in the commercial reports, nor selling upon the market. A judgment for damages at law may not afford adequate relief. Frue v. Houghton, 6 Colo. 318.

See Goodwin Gas Stove, etc., Co's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 514; Treasurer v. Commercial Coal Min. Co., 23 Cal. 390; Leach v. Fobes, 11 Gray (Mass.) 506; 71 Am. Dec. 732; *Adams v. the power to enforce contracts to transfer stock is denied altogether.¹

d. AGREEMENTS TO SUBSCRIBE FOR CORPORATE STOCK.—Agreements to subscribe for capital stock have been enforced specifically, and so have other agreements in reference to capital stock; but not by all courts.²

e. AGREEMENTS TOUCHING PATENTED ARTICLES AND PATENTS.—These agreements afford the best illustration of the kind of personal contracts which are the subject of equitable cognizance. Even courts which have construed the powers of the chancellor with the greatest strictness, as those of Pennsylvania, have uniformly given to interests arising out of letters patent 596; Cheale v. Kenward, 3 DeGex & J. 27.

Specific performance of an agreement to transfer stock will be decreed, where the contract to convey is clear, and the uncertain value of the stock renders it difficult to do justice by an award of damages. White v. Schuyler, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 300; 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38; Treasurer v. Commercial Coal Min. Co., 23 Cal. 390.

Trust.—Specific performance of a contract for the sale and delivery of shares of stock may be decreed where it appears that the stock has been purchased by defendant with money delivered to him by plaintiff for that purpose, and that the stock is not easily purchasable in open market, and that a judgment in damages would be inadequate; and the fact that the contract was made in Massachusetts, where it was void under the Statute of Frauds is not material, the contract having been performed by the plaintiff, and partly performed by the defendant, and defendant's relation to the plaintiff being a fiduciary one. Johnson v. Brooks, 93 N. Y. 337.

But, if it appears that there is no trust relation between the parties, that defendant is not alleged to be insolvent, and the value of the stock can be estimated in money, specific performance will be denied. Avery v. Ryan, 74 Wis. 591. See, also, Blake v. Flatley, 44 N. J. Eq. 228; Gottschalk v. Stein, 69 Md. 51.

Where the contract is for stock and real estate it may be enforced as to both. Bissell v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 5 McLean (U. S.) 505; Leach v. Fobes, 11 Gray (Mass.) 506; 71 Am. Dec. 732; New Brunswick Land Co. v. Muggenridge, 4 Drew. 686. Compare Burton v. Shotwell, 13 Bush (Ky.) 272.

A with several others agreed to subscribe conditionally for a certain amount of stock of an incorporated railroad company. Subsequently B and C agreed with him in writing that, if he would subscribe unconditionally, they would each take one-fourth of such stock off his hands, by subscribing for it in their own names, and afterwards A subscribed absolutely. Held, that A was entitled to a decree for a specific performance of the latter agreement. Austin v. Gillaspie, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 261.

Other Agreements.—A sale of turn-pike stock belonging to the State, by commissioners of the sinking fund, under the Kentucky act of March 7, 1871, is valid and binding on the State, although the commissioners refuse to execute the contract of sale and the legislature afterwards repeals the act authorizing the sale to be made. And the court will compel the commissioners to execute the contract and transfer the stock, as if the act authorizing the sale had not been repealed. Baldwin v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 417.

Specific performance of a particular contract between stockholders involving interests of minority stockholders refused, as against public policy. See Converse v. Hood, 149 Miss. 471.

No Jurisdiction to Compel the Subscription of Capital Stock.—Strasburg R. Co. v. Echternacht, 21 Pa. St. 220; 60 Am. Dec. 49.

Or Issuance Thereof.—Where it appears from the bill in a suit to compel the issuance of stock by defendant that there can be no specific performance of the contract under which com-

the same consideration that they have to interests in real property; and the practice has been universal, to grant specific performance of such agreements, where the remedy at law was inadequate.¹

3. Contracts Calling for Personal Conduct—a. IN GENERAL.—These include two general classes of agreements, viz: first, those calling for some single and definite act, and, second, those which involve the exercise of skill or discretion or the performance of varying and continuing duties. As a general rule, the courts refuse to entertain jurisdiction to enforce contracts for the performance of specific acts and services. When a contract of this kind is enforced specifically, it is exceptional, and is enforced by reason of the presence in the case of some equitable feature which renders such enforcement proper.²

(1) Compromises.—Compromises are favored in equity. It sometimes happens that a compromise forms the basis of a contract, which, although involving the doing of some parplainants claim, and that the recovery, if any, must be limited to a money decree for damages for non-performance, the complainants have an adequate remedy at law, and specific performance will be denied. Sumnerlin v. Fronteriza Silver Min., etc., Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 249.

While the issuance of stock will not be decreed the issuance of certificates of stock may be. Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co., 75 N. Y. 211; Purchase v. New York Exchange Bank, 3 Robt. (N. Y.) 164; Pollock v. National Bank, 7 N. Y. 274; 57 Am. Dec. 520.

1. For construction of a contract concerning inventions, in suit for specific performance, see Hopedale Mach. Co. v. Entwistle, 133 Mass. 443.

Assignments of Patents and Patent Rights, Enforceable.—Hapgood v. Rosenstock, 23 Fed. Rep. 86; Hull v. Pitrat, 45 Fed. Rep. 94; Blackmer v. Stone, 51 Ark. 489; Corbin v. Tracy, 34 Conn. 325; Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 337; Whitney v. Burr, 115 Ill. 289; Binney v. Annan, 107 Mass. 94; 9 Am. Rep. 10; Reese's Appeal, 122 Pa. St. 392. Compare New York Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co., 32 Fed. Rep. 783; Desper v. Continental Water Meter Co., 137 Mass. 252.

Renewal of license under patent may be enforced. Domestic Telegraph Co. v. Metropolitan Telephone Co., 39 N. J. Eq. 160.

Specific performance granted to a capitalist to compel an inventor to assign an interest in a patent, according to an oral agreement made before issuance of the letters, and to account, etc. Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279; 19 Am. Rep. 459.

Equity will not aid an inventor to secure for himself a patent in direct violation of his agreement to assign it. Runstetler v. Atkinson, 4 McArthur (D. C.) 382.

Agreements to Furnish Patented Article.—Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185; 9 Am. St. Rep. 679.

Where a patentee licenses another to manufacture the patented article, and the licensee agrees to pay royalty, to make monthly reports of sales, to admit the validity of the patent, and co-operate in maintaining the patentee's business and the patent under which the license is issued, and the patentee reserves the power to revoke the license, the contract cannot be specifically enforced, the covenant as to co-operation being too vague, and the patentee's remedy, by revocation of the license or action at law, being ample. Washburn, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Freeman Wire Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 410.

2. See infra, this title, Contracts of Service.

A bill in equity by one who claims to be the highest bidder at an auction sale of land, against the auctioneer and the person to whom the land was struck off, to compel the auctioneer to sign a memorandum declaring plaintiff purchaser, cannot be maintained. Marcus v. Boston, 136 Mass. 350.

ticular act or series of acts, is yet capable of a specific performance.¹

(2) Agreements to Build or Repair.—It was once considered properly within the jurisdiction of chancery to compel the specific performance of a contract to construct buildings and to make repairs therein, but this power is no longer generally recognized. It would be impracticable if not impossible for an officer of the court to carry out such a decree.²

1. An agreement between a creditor and a third person, founded on a valuable consideration, to compromise the claim of the former against his debtor, will be specifically enforced by a court of equity. Phillips v. Berger, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 527.

Where the complainant has no adequate remedy at law, or where some other element of equity jurisdiction is mixed up in the transaction, as here, creditors of an insolvent firm agreeing to sell their claims to one of their number at 25 per cent., equity will interfere to decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of a debt. Cutting v. Dana, 25 N. J. Eq. 265.

But compare Acker v. Phoenix, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 305, where the chancellor refused to enforce specific performance of an agreement among creditors to receive a portion of their debts in satisfaction of the whole. And Sutherland v. Straw, 2 Fed. Rep. 277, where the decree was refused because enforcement involved a great number of details.

A compromise will be enforced regardless of the adequacy of the consideration. Leach v. Fobes, 11 Gray (Mass.) 506; 71 Am. Dec. 732; Weed v. Terry, Walk. (Mich.) 501; 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 344; 45 Am. Dec. 257; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 554; Gaines v. Molen, 30 Fed. Rep. 27.

The indorser of notes given in settlement of the debts of an insolvent firm, and the assignee, who has transferred to him the firm property as indemnity, are entitled to specific performance of an agreement by a creditor, whose claim is not included in the settlement to sell them such claim for less than its face value, and to an injunction against his suit on it, where the chattel bargained for is specified, and the damages which can be recovered for the breach of contract are uncertain. Gottschalk v. Stein, 69 Md. 51.

A promise to vacate a judgment and discontinue a pending action will be specifically enforced. Deen v. Milne, 113 N. Y. 303.

2. Thus it has been held that a decree will not be granted to compel a railroad to repair cattle guards, the plaintiff having an ample remedy at law. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 26 Ind. 50.

Nor to construct or repair a railway. Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R., etc. Co., 11 Sawy. (U. S.) 33; Port Clinton R. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 13 Ohio St. 544; Kansas, etc., R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka R. Co., 135 Mass. 34; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 495; 46 Am. Rep. 439; Ross v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 36; Fallon v. Railroad Co., 1 Dill. (U. S.) 121. Compare Crane v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 402; 17 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 174. Nor to make good a gravel pit. Scholefield v. Whithead, 2 Vern. 127. Nor to build a bridge. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Rust, 17 Fed. Rep. 275. Nor to repair a building. London v. Nash, 3 Atk. 515; Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 366; 15 Am. Rep. 430; Raymer v. Stone, 2 Eden 128.

On the other hand, the courts have enforced a contract to build a railway crossing. Post v. West Shore, R. Co., 123 N. Y. 581. And to build stairways for the joint use of adjacent properties. Gregory v. Ingwersen, 32 N. J. Eq. 199. And see Franklyn v. Tutton, 5 Madd. 469; Price v. Penzance, 4 Hare 506. And to maintain a railway station at a stipulated location. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306.

It has been held that the court may compel the performance of an agreement to build fences. Jones v. Seligman, 81 N. Y. 191. Contra, Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Washburn, 25 Ind. 259. And perhaps to rebuild tenements. London v. Nash, 3 Atk. 515.

The rule is almost universal that a covenant to build may not be enforced

(3) Payment of Money.—Equity will not compel the specific performance of a simple promise to pay or advance money, as the remedy at law is adequate.¹ But a promise to make payment in some specified medium, as in gold or silver, has been held to be capable of being specifically enforced on account of the fluctuations in the values of the medium agreed on,² although the contrary doctrine is also announced and seems to be sustained by the better reasoning.³

specifically, for the execution of such contract would be impracticable if not impossible for a court to supervise, whereas the remedy of damages would afford full redress. South Wales R. Co. v. Whythes, 5 DeG. M. & G. 880; Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. C. C. 166; Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 366; 15 Am. Rep. 430; Mastin v. Halley, 61 Mo. 196.

A court of equity will not compel the specific performance of a contract by the common council of a city, to erect a city hall on a lot conveyed to the city by the plaintiff, nor restrain the erection on another lot. Kendall v. Frey, 74 Wis. 26.

Still it has been decided that an agreement to build will be enforced where the consideration for the agreement was the conveyance of land on which the building was to be erected and the plaintiff had already executed his part of the contract by conveying the land. Ross v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 40.

And in an old Virginia case, a contract to build a tavern, at the joint risk and expense and for the joint benefit of the parties, was decreed to be specifically performed at the instance of one of them, who had furnished the land to be built upon, and performed his part of the contract, the others objecting, on the ground that a change of circumstances rendered the scheme unadvisable. Birchett v. Bolling, 5 Munf. (Va.) 442.

And it was held in Stuyvesant v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 11 Paige (N. Y.) 414, that equity will enforce the specific performance of covenants to make improvements on the covenantor's own land, where the covenantee cannot be compensated for the breach by damages.

In a Minnesota case, however, it was held that where by the permission of plaintiff a nuisance was created under an agreement that defendant would remove it within a period named, the plaintiff's only remedy was by an action in damages. Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Bassett, 31 Minn. 390.

1. Bradford, etc., R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 123 N. Y. 327. See also Crampton v. Varna R. Co., L. R., 7 Ch. 562; Sichel v. Mosenthal, 30 Beav. 371; *Pierce v. 2. Performance of an agreement to pay in gold or silver coin should be specifically enforced, as, since the legal-tender enactment, gold, silver, and legal-tender notes have different marketable values. Hall v. Hiles, 2 Bush (Ky.) 532.

A note given in 1863, in payment for land, expressly made payable in gold, the difference between the gold and currency being considered in valuing the land, will be specifically enforced in equity as a binding contract, irrespective of the question whether Treasury notes are a legal tender; and upon failure on the part of the maker to pay the gold, judgment will be rendered against him for the value of the gold in paper currency. Hord v. Miller, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 103.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands for continental money may be decreed against the vendor. Chapline v. Scott, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 91. But see Hopkins v. Stump, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 301.

The court of chancery in Maryland, has never directed anything to be done in consequence of an agreement for the purchase of property with continental paper money, as against the vendor, unless he has expressed, in writing, his willingness to convey on the receipt of such sum as the chancellor should think right, or unless the circumstances of the case rendered what was decreed essential to justice. Lawrence v. Dorsey, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 205.

3. Such a contract can only be enforced, if at all, by a decree for the pay-

(4) Fulfillment of a Trust in Relation to Money.—Agreements to fulfill a trust with reference to the payment of money, are enforceable.¹

(5) Agreements to Insure.—Equity will enforce a valid oral contract to insure. This is done, where the loss has occurred, not by actually requiring that a policy issue, but by a decree for the payment of the loss as if a policy had issued.² The courts have not uniformly enforced contracts to issue policies of insurance.³ They have required the strictest proof of the terms of ment of the sum of money without any allowance for the difference in value. Howe v. Nickerson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 400.

A contract to pay money in gold and silver cannot be specifically enforced, nor can any other damages be recovered, upon its breach, except interest. Wilson v. Morgan, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 174; 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 386.

Where the consideration for the conveyance of land was a sum in Confederate money, which became worthless before the contract was completed and the money paid—held, that specific performance would not be decreed, although the plaintiff offered to pay what the Confederate notes were worth at the time of the contract. Love v. Cobb, 63 N. Car. 324.

1. See Buck v. Swazey, 35 Me. 41; 56 Am. Dec. 681; Boyd v. Soule, 8 Gray (Mass.) 554.

Thus, where one has placed the means for paying a debt in the hands of another, upon his covenant to pay the same, he may maintain an action in equity to compel a performance of the covenant, without first paying the debt; he is not limited to his action on the covenant. Woodruff v. Erie R. Co., 93 N. Y. 609; 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 501.

Plaintiff for a nominal consideration, conveyed to defendant certain lands, in which they were jointly interested. Defendant agreed verbally to hold the lands in trust, and that on a sale certain advances made by the parties, respectively, should be repaid out of the proceeds, and the balance equally divided between them. The court decided that although no trust in the land could be established by parol, the plaintiff could, after a sale by the defendant, enforce the agreement for a division of the proceeds. Sprague v. Bond, 108 N. Car. 382.

2. Baile v. St. Joseph, etc., Ins. Co.,

73 Mo. 371, in which case the court, by Sherwood, C. J., said: "This method of enforcement proceeds on the ground of avoiding circuity of action, and doubtless upon the further ground that equity, once possessed of a cause, will, before releasing its grasp on the res, avoid a multiplicity of suits by doing full, adequate, and complete justice between the parties, by entering that judgment to which the party will be ultimately entitled." Citing Real Estate Sav. Inst. v. Collonious, 63 Mo. 290. And see Covenant Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Sears, 114 Ill. 108; Kentucky Mut. Ins. Co. v. Jenks, 5 Ind. 96; Hughes v. Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co., 55 Ga. 111; Carpenter v. Mutual Safety Ins. Co., 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 408.

Where an insurance company, having made a contract of insurance, refuses to issue a policy to the assured, a court of equity, even after the loss, will compel the delivery of the policy. And having obtained jurisdiction of the case for that purpose, will proceed to give such final relief as the circumstances of the case demand. Taylor v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390.

Where a contract to insure a building has been made with the agent of an insurance company who has authority to issue policies, and the premium has been paid, but before the policy is issued the building is consumed by fire, a court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce the payment of the policy, at the suit of the assured, against the company. Woody v. Old Dominion Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 362; 31 Am. Rep. 732. See Haden v. Farmers', etc., F. Assoc., 80 Va. 683. So a life insurance contract may be enforced where loss has occurred before the policy was issued. Hebert v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 12 Fed. Rep. 807.

3. See Knott v. Shepherdstown Mfg. Co., 30 W. Va. 790.

the agreement.¹ And it has been held that such contracts had no standing in a court of equity.²

(6) Agreements to Indemnify and to Give Security.—These have generally been enforced, although the authorities are not harmonious.³

(7) Penal Bonds.—The fact that a contract in the form of a bond contains a liquidated penalty for non-performance does not necessarily limit one who has suffered from its breach to his legal remedy upon the penal condition. He may still have specific performance if that would afford him a more satisfactory redress than the assessment of the penalty in his favor.⁴

1. A court of chancery will not compel an insurance company to issue a policy of insurance, in pursuance of an alleged contract, unless the proof is clear that such contract has been consummated. Neville v. Merchants', etc. Mut. Ins. Co., 19 Ohio 452.

2. Equity will not compel the delivery of insurance policies in pursuance of a contract, an adequate remedy at law existing. Nestel v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 12 Phila. (Pa.) 477.

3. Compare INDEMNITY CONTRACTS, vol. 10, p. 402.

Contracts of Indemnity Enforceable.—See Chamberlain v. Blue, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 491; Shockley v. Davis, 17 Ga. 177; 63 Am. Dec. 233; Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 225; 41 Am. Dec. 549, 570; Champion v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 398; 10 Am. Dec. 343; Ranelagh v. Hayes, 1 Vern. 189.

In a proper case, specific performance of a general covenant of indemnity, may be decreed notwithstanding it sounds only in damages. The grantor in a deed, conveying a lot of land to R, executed a bond of indemnity to R, against a mortgage of the same lot to T; also against certain paramount liens affecting the land. The indemnity bond was accompanied by a mortgage to R of other lands, also covered by the mortgage to T. Held, that R was entitled in equity to be indemnified for the loss of the lot out of the proceeds of the other lands mortgaged to him for an indemnity; that he had not, under the indemnity bond accompanying the mortgage a sufficient remedy at law to bar relief in equity. Reybold v. Herdman, 2 Del. Ch. 34.

To the Contrary.—On a dissolution of partnership, one partner gave to the other a bond of indemnity against the debts of the concern. The principal obligor died insolvent, without legal representatives, leaving the debts unpaid. The obligee in the bond filed a bill against the sureties for a specific performance of their contract. Held, on demurrer, that the court could not decree specific performance of such a contract. Foote v. Garland, 1 Smed. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 95.

Agreements to Furnish Security May be Enforced Specifically.—Robinson v. Cathcart, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 590.

To the Contrary.—An executory contract for the transfer of stock as collateral security for a debt, where the debtor has died insolvent, will not be enforced by a court of equity to the injury of other creditors. City Fire Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 33 Conn. 476.

A parol contract for a mortgage of personal property, based upon a valuable consideration, and not such as must be in writing by the Statute of Frauds, will be enforced in equity when there is no complete remedy at law. Triebert v. Burgess, 11 Md. 452.

Contra.—A promise to execute a mortgage for a purchase of chattels cannot be enforced. The only remedy is damages. Johnson v. Hoover, 73 Ind. 395.

Plaintiff sold a stock of goods to defendant, receiving a part of the purchase price therefor. Certain securities were to be executed for the balance of the purchase money; but, after being put in possession defendant refused to give such security. The latter had no property outside of the goods sold. Held, that plaintiff could maintain a bill for specific performance. Rothholz v. Schwartz, 46 N. J. Eq. 477; 19 Am. St. Rep. 409.

(8) Relating to Promissory Notes and Transfer of Debts.—Contracts for the delivery, execution, assignment, or cancellation of promissory notes, and for the transfer of debts and claims may be enforceable specifically;¹ and so may agreements to transfer debts.²

(9) Agreements to Arbitrate.³—Agreements to submit controversies to arbitration, or to refer unsettled questions of price and value to arbitrators, are, if executory, incapable of equitable enforcement.⁴ Nor can the courts compel arbitrators to whom questions have been referred to render an award.⁵ But where the agreement has been acted upon by the parties, and partially executed by them, or where the fixing of the price or value is not of the essence of the agreement, the court will enforce the

To the Contrary.—A contract which binds defendant in a penal sum for the performance of certain work, and plaintiff to pay for such work when completed, does not entitle plaintiff to a decree for specific performance. Breach of such a contract may be compensated in damages. McCarter v. Armstrong, 32 S. Car. 203; aff'd 11 S. E. Rep. 634.

The court cannot enforce specific performance of a condition, the non-performance of which forfeits the estate. The grantor has fixed his remedy, and must avail himself of it. Woodruff v. Water Power Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 489.

1. An agreement for the transfer and delivery of certain promissory notes may be enforced in a court of equity. Gottschalk v. Stein, 69 Md. 51; Shockley v. Davis, 17 Ga. 177; 63 Am. Dec. 233.

A promise by a holder of notes to deliver them up to the maker to be canceled, may be specifically enforced. The maker should not be compelled to await an opportunity to defend an action on the notes. Tuttle v. Moore, 16 Minn. 123.

See Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 178; Henderson v. Johns, 13 Colo. 280.

The maker of a promissory note who obtains possession of it from the holder under a promise to return it or execute a new one of the same tenor and effect, for the same amount, and destroys the same, and refuses to give a new one, a court of equity will have jurisdiction to compel him to make the new note notwithstanding there may be a remedy at law. McMullen v. Vanzant, 73 Ill. 190.

Compare Callier v. Vivian, 8 Ala. 903.

To the Contrary.—Plaintiff had promised to give defendant the note in suit, at his death, if defendant would board and lodge him during his life, and that if defendant failed to do so he should pay the note, and plaintiff should pay for the board. Held, that as defendant had full indemnity by the payment for the board, the contract would not be specifically enforced. Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157.

Where the parties to a contract for the sale of lands stipulated that in case they could not agree on the price, it should be left to two disinterested men to fix the same, and although the price was to be paid in the year following, no price had been fixed by the parties or by arbitrators some ten years after. Held, that, in the absence of peculiar equitable circumstances, a specific performance could not be decreed. Griffith v. Frederick Co. Bank, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 424.

The practice in Georgia, of compelling the performance of award, by bill in equity—explained. Overby v. Thrasher, 47 Ga. 10.

As to awards of church councils, generally, see Stearns v. First Parish, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 114.

Courts of equity have jurisdiction to enforce a specific performance of awards, on the ground that such performance is an execution of the agreement of parties as fixed by the arbitrators. McNeil v. Magee, 5 Mason (U. S.) 244.

A court of equity will decree the specific performance of an award, although the agreement for arbitration fixed a penalty for failure to comply with the award, and the losing party is ready to pay the penalty. Whitney v. Stone, 23 Cal. 275.

Where a dispute existed between the owners of contiguous lands, as to their dividing line, and it was agreed in writing to submit the matter to arbitration, and to stand to and abide by such lines as should be made and laid down by the referees, and an award was made designating dividing lines between the parties, which the recusant party failed to show were erroneous—held, that it was a proper case for a decree of specific performance. Thompson v. Deans, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 22.

Specific performance of an award, legally void by reason of an apparent non-compliance with the terms of submission, caused by a mere clerical error, will yet be decreed in equity, unless its performance would work injustice. Buys v. Eberhardt, 3 Mich. 524.

An agreement binding defendant to sell to plaintiff a certain defined right of way over defendant's land, at a price to be fixed by arbitrators, will, when the award is duly made, be specifically enforced, as the arbitrators' award is equivalent to a liquidation of the consideration by the landowners. Maury v. Post, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 454.

A bill in equity lies to compel the execution of a deed of land, ascertained by an award of arbitrators agreed upon by the parties to settle the boundary line between their adjoining lands, to belong to the plaintiff. Caldwell v. Dickinson, 13 Gray (Mass.) 365.

Awarding costs, which it is beyond the power of the arbitrators to do, is no ground for refusing specific performance of the residue of the award. Caldwell v. Dickinson, 13 Gray (Mass.) 365.

Award Calling for the Payment of Money.—Equity will enforce an award of arbitrators which provides a specific remedy, or prescribes the execution of a specific act, other than the payment of money. Story v. Norwich, etc., R. Co., 24 Conn. 94.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce specific execution of an award concerning land, or of an agreement for the sale and purchase of land, which involves the enforcement of an award for the payment of money, if the payment of the money is but a part of the award. Wood v. Shep-

b. CONTRACTS OF SERVICE.—The specific performance of a contract of personal service will not be enforced, for there is no practicable means of executing the decree. Contracts to be performed in the remote future, or the execution of which involves the performance of a continuous and protracted series of acts, or the doing of some act or thing which demands the exercise of the individual skill, discretion, taste, or talent of the promisor, are, of necessity, incapable of judicial supervision or control. For the breach of such agreements, the party injured must be left to his remedy in a court of law.¹

And it seems to enforce the decision of an ecclesiastical council to which matters in controversy had been referred, where the decision directed a dissolution of pastoral relations and the payment of money. Stearns v. First Parish, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 114.

Specific performance of an award to pay a certain number of dollars in gold, cannot be decreed by a court of equity. Howe v. Nickerson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 400.

A bill in chancery will not lie to compel the specific performance of an award for the payment of a sum of money. Turpin v. Banton, Hard. (Ky.) 320.

1. Compare MASTER AND SERVANT vol. 14, p. 787.

An agreement requiring personal service will not be specifically enforced. Willingham v. Hooven, 74 Ga. 233; 58 Am. Dec. 435.

Equity will not enforce specific performance if the execution of the contract would require the supervision of the court. Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403; Danforth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 12; Buck v. Smith, 29 Mich. 166; 18 Am. Rep. 84; Blanchard v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 31 Mich. 43; 18 Am. Rep. 142; Port Clinton R. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. But a contract for the lease of mines to be worked in a specified manner does not come within this doctrine. Wharton v. Stoutenburgh, 35 N. J. Eq. 266. Compare Starnes v. Newsom, 1 Tenn. Ch. 239, where it was held that chancery cannot enforce the specific performance of a contract to cultivate a particular crop in a designated way, and to cut, cure and deliver it in a certain prescribed manner, nor to estimate damages for its breach.

In Blanchard v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 31 Mich. 43; 18 Am. Rep. 142, the contract by the railroad company was to build, erect and maintain a depot suitable for the convenience of the public, and that at least one train per day should stop when trains run on the road, and that freight and passengers should be regularly taken at such station. This was held incapable of enforcement.

Equity will not compel the specific performance of a contract with a city to maintain land as a public park and permit no nuisances thereon, etc., as it contains covenants of continuous service, the enforcement of which might require the constant supervision of a court; and, further, because every alleged violation of it would require the consideration and determination of questions of fact. Kidd v. McGinniss (N. Dak. 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 221.

Continuous Services Cannot be Specifically Compelled.—Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ala. 498; Danforth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 12; *McCann v. able. Mowers v. Fogg, 45 N. J. Eq. 120. See Bourget v. Monroe, 58 Mich. 563.

A logging contract between A on one side and a firm composed of A and B on the other, cannot be specifically enforced on behalf of A's personal representatives after his death, because a court of equity has no means of seeing to its execution, and the judgment and business faculty of the deceased partner cannot be supplied. Roberts v. Kelsey, 38 Mich. 602.

By a contract in writing the defendant agreed to repair the plaintiff's steam sawmill; build fences, etc., and the plaintiff to sell to the defendant, as soon as the repairs were finished, one undivided half of the premises on which the mill was situated, plaintiff and defendant then to form a partnership to work the mill for one year, at the end of which time, if the plaintiff wished to retire, defendant was to pay him for the premises a fixed sum; but if plaintiff did not choose to retire, the partnership was to continue for five years. Held, that this was not a proper case for specific performance, and the plaintiff's bill for that purpose was dismissed. Reed v. Vidal, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 289.

In the case of Mary Clark, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 122; 12 Am. Dec. 213, the court, by Holman, J., said: "A covenant for service, if performed at all, must be personally performed under the eye of the master; and might, as in the case before us, require a number of years. Such performance, if enforced by law, would produce a state of servitude as degrading and demoralizing in its consequences as a state of absolute slavery."

A contract by a railroad company with a city to locate its terminus, principal offices and machine shops therein, and to continue them there, even though its own interests and those of the public might subsequently demand their removal, is not enforceable in equity, and the city's only remedy for its breach is in damages. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393; 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 637.

Equity will not enforce the performance of a contract to keep in repair a railway within a period of many years. Oregonian R. Co. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 733.

But it was held in Chubb v. Peckham, 13 N. J. Eq. 207, that a father, having conveyed his entire estate to his children, on their stipulation to support and maintain comfortably their parents suitably to their condition, and wherever they might choose to reside, had a decree for specific performance in his favor, though the conveyed property was wholly inadequate to such support.

Nor Contracts to be Performed in the Remote Future.—See Alworth v. Seymour, 42 Minn. 526.

Specific performance of a verbal contract, which is executory, and depends on a future event which may never happen, will not be decreed. Bradley v. Morgan, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 369.

A railroad corporation, in consideration of a grant of a right of way through the premises of S, contracted to place beside their road, on said premises, a platform convenient for lading and unlading cars, and to take from that platform all produce to be shipped by S, and to bring and place on it all freight shipped by or for him to that place from any other point on their road, provided the railroad had three days' notice of any such freight to be transported. Held, that a bill in equity would not lie in favor of S against the railroad, to compel a specific performance of the contract. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Speer, 32 Ga. 550; 79 Am. Dec. 305.

Nor Those Which Run for an Uncertain Period.—See Morris v. Peckham, 51 Conn. 128.

A judgment creditor agreed with one of three defendants, who was the principal in the debt upon which the judgment was recovered, the others being sureties, that so long as the principal would pay the interest on the judgment, and if he would pay the costs, the matter might stand as though no judgment had been obtained, which agreement was for an indefinite length of time. Held, that such an agreement could not be enforced in a court of equity. Gardner v. Watson, 13 Ill. 347.

But specific performance was decreed in Cornwall, etc., R. Co.'s Appeal, 125 Pa. St. 232; 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 233, where the suit was to enforce an agreement between two railroad companies in reference to a crossing of their tracks at grade, the agreement providing that "in the use or working of the railroads of the parties hereto at or near the point of crossing, all trains, engines or cars of the party of the second part shall come to a full stop at a distance of at least 200 feet from the point of crossing, and shall not proceed until the proper signal shall have been given by the watchman in charge. All engines and trains of the party of the first part shall have priority of passage over the trains and engines of the party of the second part."

And in Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, a contract of a railroad company which permitted other railway companies to use its right of way was enforced, although such duties would be continuous.

So, as against the successors of the contracting parties, specific performance was decreed of a contract between two railroad companies, whereby one granted to the other and its successors the right to cross the tracks of the former, upon certain conditions, including payment of $800 a year on account of the expense of keeping a flagman at such crossing, and the latter agreed to comply. And this, in a proceeding under the Law of 1850, ch. 140, § 28, subd. 6. Rome, etc., R. Co. v. Ontario Southern R. Co., 16 Hun (N. Y.) 445.

Nor Contracts Calling for the Exercise of Peculiar Skill, Judgment, Care and Attention, Talents, or Peculiar Confidence and Esteem.—*Iron Age Publishing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Compare Josline v. Stokes, 38 N. J. 31.

Where the duties to be fulfilled are continuous, and involve the exercise of skill, personal labor, and cultivated judgment, as to deliver marble of certain kinds, and in blocks of such a kind that the court is incapable of determining whether they accord with the contract or not, the contract will not be enforced in a court of equity. Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 339.

Equity will not require the specific performance of continuous duties which involve personal labor and care; as, for example, the running of the cars of a street railroad along a particular street, daily, "at such regular intervals as may be right and proper," whether the obligation of the railroad company be rested on contract or the provisions of its charter. McCann v. South, etc., R. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch. 773. See Lattin v. Hazard (Cal. 1891), 27 Pac. Rep. 515.

An agreement to employ one on an annual salary if he will take a certain interest in the corporation, and on failure to so employ him to repurchase his stock at a fair price to be determined by arbitration, not enforceable. Noyes v. Marsh, 123 Mass. 286.

Courts of chancery will refuse to decree specific performance of a contract under which the defendant, who is a mechanical expert and inventor, agrees to produce and construct by his labor, skill, and inventive genius, for the plaintiff, who is a manufacturer, certain improved machinery for manufacturing speaking tubes, no details of specifications being given in the contract as to the form, material, structure, principle or mode of operation of the proposed machines, but all those matters being left wholly to the judgment and discretion of the defendant. Wollensak v. Briggs, 119 Ill. 453.

Equity will not enforce the specific performance of a contract to sing at concerts, etc., but the party will be left to his legal remedy. Sanquirico v. Benedetti, 1 Barb. (N. De Rivafinoli v. Corsetti, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 265, was a suit for injunction and specific performance brought by a manager of an Italian opera to compel the performance of a contract to sing. The court, by Walworth, Ch., said: "Upon the merits of the case. I suppose it must be conceded that the complainant is entitled to a specific performance of this contract, as the law appears to have been long since settled that a bird that can sing and will not sing must be made to sing. . . . Although the authority before cited" [old adage] "shows the law to be in favor of the complainant, so far at least as to entitle him to a decree for the singing, I am not aware that any officer of this court has that perfect knowledge of the Italian language or possesses that exquisite sensibility of the auricular nerve, which is necessary to understand and enjoy with a proper zest the peculiar beauties of the Italian opera, so fascinating to the fashionable world. There might be some difficulty, therefore, if the defendant was compelled to sing under the direction and in the presence of the master in chancery, in ascertaining whether he performed his engagement according to its spirit and intent. It would also be very difficult to determine what effect coercion might produce upon the defendant's singing, especially in the livelier airs; although the fear of imprisonment would deepen his seriousness in the graver parts of the drama. But one thing, at least, is certain: his songs will be neither comic nor even semi-serious, while he remains confined in that dismal cage, the debtor's prison of New York." In accordance with the opinion, as above, specific performance was refused.

Equity will restrain the breach of negative covenants in such contracts by injunction, as where the defendant has agreed to sing or act, or work for no one else but plaintiff, and is proposing to contract with others. INJUNCTION, vol. 10, p. 948. See also Lumley v. Wagner, 1 DeG. M. & G. 604; 13 E. L. & E. 252 (overruling Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333); Bradley v. Bosley, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 125; Montague v. Flockton, L. Mayer*, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 567; Butler v. Galletti, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 466. Compare Cort v. Lassard, 18 Oregon 221.

This was not the early American practice, however, for some of the leading cases follow Kemble v. Kean, 6 Sim. 333, and hold that inasmuch as such covenants cannot be affirmatively enforced their breach cannot be enjoined. See Sanquirico v. Benedetti, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 315; Hamblin v. Dinneford, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 529; Burton v. Marshall, 4 Gill (Md.) 487; 45 Am. Dec. 171; Hayes v. Willio, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 167.

Cort v. Lassard, 18 Oregon 221; 30 Cent. L. J. 226, was a suit to enforce a contract made by certain acrobats to perform exclusively for plaintiff for a period of six weeks, by enjoining the making of similar engagements with others in violation of the agreement with plaintiff who was a theatrical manager. Injunction was refused because the services involved no peculiar talent, the court, by Lord, J., saying: "If the services contracted for by the plaintiff to be rendered by the defendant were unique and extraordinary, involving such special merit or qualifications in them as to make such services distinctly personal and peculiar, so that in case of default by them the same or like services could not be easily procured, nor be compensated in damages, the court would be warranted in applying its preventive jurisdiction and granting relief, but otherwise, or denied, if such services were ordinary and without special merit, and such as could be readily supplied or obtained from others without much difficulty or expense.

1. An agreement to execute articles of partnership will be enforced in equity, but not to compel the parties to act under them after execution. Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 337.

A mere agreement to form a partnership does not, of itself, create a partnership; nor does the relation of partners exist between the parties thereto, until they enter on the execution of the agreement. While it remains executory, if one of them refuses to carry it into effect, the only remedy of the other is by an action at law for the violation of the agreement or by a bill in equity to enforce specifically its performance. Wilson v. Campbell, 10 Ill. 383.

And see Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 449; 41 Am. Rep. 720; Hercy v. Birch, 9 Ves. 357; Scott v. Rayment, L. R., 7 Eq. Cas. 112; Roberts v. Kelsey, 38 Mich. 602; Meason v. Kaine, 63 Pa. St. 335; New Brunswick, etc., Co. v. Muggeridge, 4 Drew. 686; Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co. v. Harrison, 17 Beav. 294.

Courts of equity cannot specifically enforce an agreement to enter partnership, and as a member of the firm to use and exercise personal skill and judgment according to the shifting needs of property and business from time to time, in the control and management of the partnership affairs. Buck v. Smith, 29 Mich. 166; 18 Am. Rep. 84.

Equity will not enforce an agreement to enter into partnership which is silent as to the duration of such partnership, since such a partnership may be dissolved at the will of either partner as soon as it is formed. Buck v. Smith, 29 Mich. 166; 18 Am. Rep. 84.

But it was held in Whitworth v. Harris, 40 Miss. 483, that although a partnership is of indefinite limitation, a court of equity will decree specific performance of the articles where it is necessary, in order to invest the complainant with the legal rights for which he contracted.

And see, generally, PARTNERSHIP, vol. 17, p. 824.

1. See note to Atwood v. Cobb, 26 Am. Dec. 661.

In Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. C. C. 469, the court by Lord Loughborough, said: "There is nothing of more importance than that the ordinary contracts between man and man should be fixed and certain, and that it should be certainly known when a man is bound and when not."

The contract which is sought to be specifically executed must not only be proved, but its terms must be so precise that neither party could reasonably misunderstand them. If the contract is vague or uncertain, or the evidence to establish it is insufficient, a court of equity will not exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction to enforce it, but will leave the party to his legal remedy. Colson v. Thompson, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 336; Carr v. Duval, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 77; Kendall v. Almy, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 278; Bowen v. Waters, 2 Paine (U. S.) 1; Preston v. Preston, 95 U. S. 200; *Zeringue v. (Va.) 185.

A contract, the consideration whereof was to give one who was to organize a new railroad corporation "securities thereof and a contract for the construction of a part of said road" was held too vague in that particular to justify specific performance. Ballou's Appeal, 133 Pa. St. 64.

Where, by the terms of an agreement to convey real estate, the deed was to be delivered "upon receipt of balance of cash payments, and the securities for deferred payments, herein stipulated," there being no other reference to securities, or statement of what they were to be, specific performance is impossible by reason of the indefiniteness in that particular. Holliday v. Hubbard, 45 Minn. 333.

An action will not lie for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, where the consideration named is that the purchaser shall erect thereon "a certain building," without any further description. By reason of its uncertainty the contract cannot be performed. Mastin v. Halley, 61 Mo. 196.

A contract that one may erect and occupy as long as he desires, an office on the land of another, is too uncertain to be enforced. Nelson v. Kelly, 91 Ala. 569.

A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation "that two acres be sold," is too uncertain to authorize a court to decree the specific performance of a sale. Carr v. Passaic Land, etc., Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 85.

A promise to convey 160 acres "in any one of the following counties," naming them, is incapable of enforcement. Newman v. Perrill, 73 Ind. 153. See Shelton v. Church, 10 Mo. 774; Reed v. Hornback, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 375.

Where the agreement gives a defective and uncertain description of the land to be conveyed, it cannot be specifically enforced, in the absence of an allegation of a mistake and a prayer for its reformation. Gigos v. Cochran, 54 Ind. 593.

A bill in equity will not lie to enforce the specific performance of a bill of sale of 500 head of cattle, to be selected out of a large herd, of which they form a part. McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 451.

A deed of sale and compromise contained the stipulation that the vendee or his assigns "shall build and keep in repair such bridges as may be necessary over the land herein acquired." Held, too indefinite for specific performance. Zeringue v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 239.

The complaint prayed the specific performance of a contract for the right to make and sell certain knit goods, and averred that its terms were expressed in a written instrument, which was prepared for execution but never signed. The instrument failed to give the weight of the goods per yard, to which plaintiff's right to manufacture was obviously to be restricted. Held, that, in the absence of any evidence showing what weight was agreed upon, there was no sufficiently definite contract. Kayser v. Arnold (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 412; 124 N. Y. 674.

A bill for the specific performance of a contract to make certain speaking tubes, which did not stipulate as to their form, material, or principal of operation, was held not maintainable; and this though praying discovery of the structure of those already built. Wollensak v. Briggs, 20 Ill. App. 50.

Specific performance of a contract will not be decreed, where there is a strong doubt whether the parties understood the contract alike. Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 526.

A specific execution of general promises by one to establish a passway over his land, where no specific contract was made by him with any person, cannot be had. Hall v. McLeod, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 98; 74 Am. Dec. 400. See Stanton v. Miller, 58 N. Y. 192.

Where the uncertainty was in reference to the location of a footpath which the purchaser was to lay out, it was held sufficient to defeat a decree for specific performance. Taylor v. Gilbertson, 2 Drew. 391.

Doubt as to Terms.—The principle, that, where doubt exists, a court of chancery will not decree, does not refer to a particular fact in a cause, but to the terms of a contract. When those are doubtful, chancery cannot aid; but, after ascertaining the facts of a cause, the decision will be given according to the preponderance of testimony. Walton v. Coulson, 1 McLean (U. S.) 120.

If the evidence leaves any uncertainty as to the existence of the contract, or as to its terms, a decree ought to be withheld. Cutsinger v. Ballard, 115 Ind. 93; Baldwin v. Kerlin, 46 Ind. 426; Miller v. Campbell, 52 Ind. 125; Gigos v. Cochran, 54 Ind. 593; Newman v. Perrill, 73 Ind. 153.

A executed to B several notes for the payment of money due at subsequent periods. B executed to A a bond for the conveyance of real estate, and agreed if A could not pay the notes when due, he would not sue or harass him for their payment until he could make payment out of the proceeds of the real estate. One note was transferred, and suit was brought thereon. Held, that the agreement not to sue was too vague and indefinite to warrant the interference of a court of chancery to enforce a specific performance or to rescind the contract. Knuckolls v. Lea, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 577.

Equity will not compel the specific performance of an agreement to care for complainant and provide for her in case of her "general debility or sickness." Mowers v. Fogg, 45 N. J. Eq. 120.

The rule that a specific performance will be refused where the contract is vitiated by uncertainty is applied with much greater strictness against assignees and representatives of the contracting parties. Odell v. Morin, 5 Oregon 96.

Certainty as to Terms, Price, and Time.—See South Wales, etc., R. Co. v. Wythes, 5 DeG. M. & G. 880; Taylor v. Portington, 7 DeG. M. & G. 328; Cooper v. Hood, 26 Beav. 293; Bromley v. Burgess, 11 Md. 452.

An agreement calling for "satisfactory security" cannot be specifically enforced, this not being sufficiently specific. Ladd v. Stevenson, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 541.

So with a promise to "secure" a creditor. Cole v. Dealham, 13 Iowa 551; Day v. Griffith, 15 Iowa 104.

An agreement to renew a lease for as much as any one else would pay, with option on the part of the lessee to accept or refuse the lease, is wanting in certainty and mutuality, and therefore does not merit the interposition of a court of equity to enforce it. Gelston v. Sigmund, 27 Md. 334.

Specific performance of a lease of land for the lessor's life, in consideration of support by the lessee, will not be enforced, though partly executed by the lessee if there be uncertainty as to what the understanding was as to the nature or extent of the tenancy or as to the consideration to be rendered by the tenant, but the lessee will be allowed instead the present value of the improvements during the lifetime of the lessor. Rutan v. Crawford, 45 N. J. Eq. 99.

A contract for the sale of land evidenced by a receipt, running to a real-estate exchange, of "$100, as earnest on purchase of my residence," describing it, "for the sum of $20,500 cash; possession given May 15, 1888," cannot be enforced by the vendor, though the purchaser afterwards made a payment thereon, and wrote the vendor that he wished to close "that deal up," and asked for a deed, and promised to give a check for the same, as no purchaser is named in the memorandum, and the terms as to payment and security are vague. Shipman v. Campbell, 79 Mich. 82.

A receipt for part of the purchase money of land, defining the lot but not stating the price or other terms of sale, is not sufficient to entitle the vendee to a specific performance of the agreement of sale. Sole v. Hickman, 20 Pa. St. 180.

Where there was a written offer to convey land within a time fixed, at a price named, of which a small part was to be paid upon the execution of the deed, and the balance to be secured by a mortgage on the land, with interest at six per cent.—held that the failure to designate any time when the unpaid balance of purchase money was to be paid, left a material part of the contract undetermined; and hence, even if such offer had been accepted, a decree for specific performance would not be made. Potts v. Whitehead, 20 N. J. Eq. 55.

A wrote B in reference to the purchase of land, saying that he had offered $40 per acre, but that he then thought $35 per acre would be a big price for it, and that "to buy the land now and pay cash down and not get possession until next spring, and have the taxes to pay on it this fall, I would not want to pay over $2,000 for the sixty acres. And, counting taxes and interest on the money, that would make it a little over $35 per acre.

... If that will buy the land I will take it and pay all the money down." This offer was accepted. Held, that this contract was incapable of specific performance, as it was not apparent how much was offered. Burkhalter v. Jones, 32 Kan. 5.

A mere understanding between husband and wife that land bought by the husband in the wife's name should in certain contingencies revert to him, is not enforceable in equity. There should be a definite agreement to convey. Johnson v. Johnson, 16 Minn. 512.

A memorandum authorized a sale of land "at $1,800 net. Incumbrance, $1,100," and the agreement for the sale stated the terms as, "Price of property, $1,900. Terms of sale, cash; balance,——; incumbrance to be assumed by the purchaser." Held, so uncertain as to preclude specific performance. Repetti v. Maisak, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 366.

Specific performance will not be decreed upon a contract to convey land to a wife and such of her's and her husband's children as he and she shall designate, while both parents are alive, until such a designation has been made. Watkins v. Turner, 34 Ark. 663.

It is not possible to enforce a written contract which does not specify the time it is to continue, where it appears that the parties made a contemporaneous agreement that the contract should continue in force, "only so long as both parties should desire," and that defendant has terminated it. Real Estate Title Ins., etc., Co's Appeal, 25 Pa. St. 549.

Specific performance will be denied of an agreement to convey, when the agreement fails to show whether the conveyance was to be before or after payment. Roberts v. Campbell, 59 Iowa 675.

A court of equity will not enforce a contract for the conveyance of real estate, which stipulates that credit is to be given for part of the price, but does not show the time of credit. Williams v. Stewart, 25 Minn. 516; Schmeling v. Kriesel, 45 Wis. 325.

The term or duration of a lease is an essential part of it, and a court of equity cannot decree a specific performance of a contract to give a lease which does not specify the term for which it is to be given. Myers v. Forbes, 24 Md. 598.

Specific performance will be refused where the contract fixes no time for performance. Gates v. Gamble, 53 Mich. 181.

When a mode of ascertaining the price is fixed by the contract, that mode must be pursued. The limit to which the court will go in fixing a price is to ascertain it, when the contract simply provides that it shall be fair. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 44 N. J. Eq. 349.

Where the price is not given and no mode of determining it is agreed upon the contract cannot be enforced.

Pray v. Clark, 113 Mass. 283. See infra, this title, Incompleteness.

Defendant promised complainant and others who went onto land in defendant's possession under a desert-land entry and erected buildings thereon, that as soon as he should acquire title he would, at a nominal price, convey to each resident who should have improvements on the land, the portion occupied by such improvements. It was held that the promise was too uncertain as to the value of improvements to be made, the exact amount of land to be deeded, and the price to be paid, and specific performance was refused. Metcalf v. Hart (Wyoming, 1891), 27 Pac. Rep. 900.

Arbitrating the Price.—Where the contract provided for determining the price by arbitration it was held that in the absence of an award the contract was too uncertain to be enforced; Blundell v. Brettargh, 17 Ves. 232; Vickers v. Vickers, L. R., 4 Eq. 529; Graham v. Call, 5 Munf. (Va.) 396; Baker v. Glass, 6 Munf. (Va.) 212; Hopkins v. Gilman, 22 Wis. 476; unless the fixing of the price is not essential. Dinham v. Bradford, L. R., 5 Ch. 519; Milnes v. Gery, 14 Ves. 400.

But where equity demands the enforcement of the contract the court will fix the value itself and decree specific performance. Arnot v. Alexander, 44 Mo. 25; 100 Am. Dec. 252. See supra, this title, Agreements to Arbitrate.

Particular Instances—Contracts Held Too Uncertain to be Enforced.—Specific performance of a contract for conveyance of land, in the form of a receipt, running to a real-estate exchange, of $100 as earnest on purchase of my residence, and describing it, "for the sum of $20,500 cash; possession given May 15, 1888," was refused to the seller, though the purchaser had afterwards made a payment thereon, and written the seller that he wished to close "that deal up," and asked for a deed, and promised to give a check for the same. The memorandum does not specify any purchaser or times of payment, or the agreement that the property was to be taken subject to a mortgage, which was to be deducted from the price named. Shipman v. Campbell, 79 Mich. 82.

A contract in the following terms: "Received of L G B the sum of $100, being a deposit of the one-quarter interest of the C tract of forty-three and one-half acres. . . . The terms of this transaction are $4,000 for said interest in said tract; $1,500 cash within sixteen days from date, as soon as L G B is satisfied as to the title of said tract; and $2,500 on mortgage as per deed, and agreement from Callis (Tom) to K & W. It is hereby agreed that B shall pay the interest on a certain promissory note for $1,700, at ten per cent. interest from April 5th." Held, too uncertain to justify a decree for specific performance. Burnett v. Kullak, 76 Cal. 535.

A contract which provided for the sale of stock for $10,500—$3,000 cash, and the balance to be paid to suit the vendee, within five years; interest at five per cent., and contained no agreement as to the time of any of the payments of principal or interest; no statement as to the time when the stock is to be transferred; with no security for the deferred payments, is too uncertain and ambiguous to be enforced. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Todd (Del. 1888), 14 Atl. Rep. 27.

A promise to take, maintain, and educate an orphan girl, eleven years old, and for her services until she becomes eighteen to leave her at the promisor's death a "child's part of his estate," cannot be specifically enforced, the amount being uncertain. Woods v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186; 55 Am. Rep. 409.

The contract sought to be enforced was an agreement to convey land at a specified price and provided that the vendees should prospect the land for coal, and, if they found enough in their opinion to warrant them, should organize a company, and issue to the vendor a certain amount of unassessable stock, but if not, the vendees might abandon the contract on notice in writing. Specific performance refused. Sturgis v. Galindo, 59 Cal. 28; 43 Am. Rep. 239.

Plaintiff's testator and defendant owned a mill in partnership, which was erected upon defendant's land with the oral agreement that the land was to be partnership land, one-half to be deeded to testator on payment of half its value. No price was agreed on, and no deed executed, nor were any such facts admitted by the answer, though it failed to set up the Statute of Frauds. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to a specific performance of the agreement to convey. Pitt v. Moore, 99 N. Car. 85.

A parol agreement between a married woman and her accommodation in-dorser, to the effect that, in consideration of his indorsing another note for her, she would make a note and mortgage in his favor in such amount as to secure him against loss, this note to be payable at the same time as the accommodation note, and to bear the same rate of interest, is not such a contract as can be specifically enforced; the agreement not being final, and being indefinite and uncertain in its terms. Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 553.

A clause in a lease which read thus: "The party of the first part agrees, in case said parties of the second part shall then be tenants of said premises, to first offer the said property so demised, for sale to and purchase by them, for the sum of $20,000," does not mean that the lessor agrees, so long as the lessees shall be tenants of the premises, to offer them for sale to them at that price. The proviso is imperfect and incomplete. Buckmaster v. Thompson, 36 N. Y. 558.

An agreement in a lease that, "if the premises are for sale at any time, the lessee shall have the refusal of them," is too uncertain to be enforced specifically. Fogg v. Price, 145 Mass. 513.

A contract wherein A agrees, that if B will take care of and support the promisor during life, he will assure to B and his family a house and lot after death, and to secure the title, by placing a deed in escrow, the title to be given to such members of the family of B as A might choose, cannot be specifically enforced, because of uncertainty as to the persons to whom the conveyance or devise was to be made. Stanton v. Miller, 58 N. Y. 192.

Contracts Which Have Been Deemed Sufficiently Definite.—In many courts, contracts equally uncertain have been specifically enforced. See Fleming v. Carter, 87 Ill. 565; Wilbourn v. Bishop, 62 Miss. 341; Marsh v. Milligan, 3 Jur. N. S. 979.

Following are instances:

An agreement to sell land for an amount aggregating "about $700" and a sum sufficient to reimburse to the vendor all expenses incurred in a suit then pending as to said land, was held sufficiently definite as to consideration to be specifically enforced. Wilbourn v. Bishop, 62 Miss. 341.

Uncertainty as to the term and character of service is not necessarily such uncertainty as will defeat the enforcement of a contract of which such service is the consideration. Lafollett v. Kyle, 51 Ind. 446.

Where by such contract the purchase money is made payable "in the fall," this is sufficiently definite to support a decree, as in such case the money falls due on the last day of the "fall." Dark v. Bagley, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 33.

An agreement by a corporation to assign part of its accounts as collateral security to a bank of which it had borrowed money, recited that whereas the corporation was indebted to the bank and had on its books not less than $300,000 in good accounts, therefore the corporation set aside and assigned to the bank "$150,000 of such good and collectible accounts now existing or that shall hereafter accrue or be acquired in the conduct of the business of" the corporation. This was held to be sufficiently definite and certain to authorize the specific performance, the majority of the court holding that it gave the bank the right to select $150,000 of the best accounts of the corporation. Preston Nat. Bank v. George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 84 Mich. 364.

In Dieter v. Fallon, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 605, the court held the plaintiff entitled to specific performance of the following writings which it considered sufficiently definite. The facts, as they appeared to exist, were as follows: Fallon, who owned a hotel and farm known as the "Lake View Hotel Property," and adjoining property known as the "Au Sable Chasm," negotiated to convey the hotel property, and lease the other property, in exchange for land of Dieter. After both parties had examined the other's property, Fallon made the following proposition: "I will exchange the Lake View property, meaning thereby in good faith all, without further detail, of real and personal property now in use or existing, and so called heretofore, when negotiating for the Fifth avenue, Gates avenue, and Patchen avenue properties, as heretofore spoken of, all properties to be mortgaged as spoken of, i. e., 25,000, 10,000, and 12,000, respectively, for the New York properties, and said hotel property to be given with $10,000 in all only upon it, including what is now thereon or given up to make up $30,000, by Mr. D P S. Of course it is included in the above that, as to the Chasm, all is, as already supposed, assented to—lease five years, at $3,000 and 500 additional yearly," etc. Dieter wrote under such proposal: "I hereby accept. D." On the same day Fallon wrote Dieter that he had not attempted to go into formal detail, but meant it merely to be "what, in effect, I already stated to you." After all the necessary papers had been prepared, Fallon refused to perform.

A railroad company having taken possession of land, agreeing to build a neat and good bridge, and a neat and tasteful railroad station, cannot contend that this agreement is too indefinite for its specific performance to be compelled. Lawrence v. Saratoga Lake R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 467.

A contract to convey so much of a designated tract as was necessary for the purpose named, has been held sufficiently certain to be enforced. Rumble v. Heygate, 18 W. R. 749; Sanderson v. Cockermouth, etc., R. Co., 11 Beav. 497; Prater v. Miller, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 628; State v. Baum, 6 Ohio 383; Stuart v. London, etc., R. Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 721; Pearce v. Watts, 20 L. R. Eq. 492.

Where a written instrument contains all the facts of a contract, except such as may be legitimately proved by parol, it is sufficiently certain to be enforced. Colerick v. Hooper, 3 Ind. 316; 56 Am. Dec. 505.

Specific performance of a contract to convey land will not necessarily be refused because the memorandum describes the purchaser as "Mr. Lee." This is but a latent ambiguity. Lee v. Cherry, 85 Tenn. 707.

Parol evidence is admissible to cure uncertainty in the contract of which specific performance is asked, when it appears that, in framing the agreement, the parties intended to rely in part on parol proof. Fowler v. Redican, 52 Ill. 405. But compare Hyde v. Cooper, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 250.

Specific performance of a contract to convey lands, decreed, in a case where the vendor claimed that the agreement to convey was intended as a mere memorandum upon which to base a future contract. Losee v. Morey, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 561.

Slaves described as "the stuff or truck which her father gave her" held to be a sufficient description, the parties being shown to be ignorant and uneducated. Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432.

A promise by a railroad company, on receiving a grant of a right of way, to permit other roads to use the right of way on such terms as might "be agreed upon by such companies," is sufficiently definite to be capable of enforcement in equity. Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1.

A contract to give a mortgage is not so indefinite as to be incapable of specific enforcement because no time is limited for the payment of the mortgage. Triebert v. Burgess, 11 Md. 452.

A son agreed with his father to remove with his family to the latter's house, take care of the father, and turn over to him annually a certain proportion of the crops, in consideration of which the father was to convey to the son a certain parcel of land. The only uncertainty related to the time at which the deed was to be given. Held, sufficient to sustain a bill for specific performance against the administrator and heirs-at-law of the father. Lamb v. Hinman, 46 Mich. 112.

Defendant agreed that, if the orator would buy a certain mill site and erect thereon a mill and dam, he should have the right to flow defendant's land if it was necessary to do so. Subsequently it was agreed that the orator should have the right to flow defendant's land by a dam five feet in height. Held, that the agreement was not so indefinite as to the extent of flowage that it could not be specifically enforced. Olmstead v. Abbott, 61 Vt. 281.

If the owner of land makes a verbal agreement with another to lease him the same for one year, with the privilege of two years more, at an annual rent of $600, and a lease is to be executed containing the usual covenants, and the lessee takes possession and pays the rent for the first year, the agreement is sufficiently certain to support a decree against the lessor for specific performance. Clark v. Clark, 49 Cal. 586.

Where a substantial portion of the contract is sufficiently certain to enable a court of equity to enforce it, a decree will be granted compelling the performance of that part. Sarter v. Gordon, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 121.

3. Reasonableness.—The contract must be reasonable, to justify a decree for its specific performance.¹

St. 484; Holthouse's Appeal (Pa. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 340. Compare Munro v. Edwards, 86 Mich. 91.

Preliminary Negotiations.—Arrangements and understandings between the parties which are no more than the preliminary negotiations for a contract will not be enforced. Duff v. Hopkins, 53 Fed. Rep. 599; Carr v. Duval, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 77; Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 84; Los Angeles Immigration, etc., Assoc. v. Phillips, 56 Cal. 539; Pacific Rolling Mill Co. v. Riverside, etc., R. Co. Vaughn, 40 Mich. 356; Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 591.

Enforcement of Part.—The courts will not decree the specific performance of particular stipulations, to be separated and dealt with apart from the rest of the contract, if they do not clearly appear by the contract to stand by themselves wholly unaffected by any others. Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 604.

In Ross v. Purse (Colo. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 473, the court, by Elliott, J., said: "The four things that must appear in such contracts as essential prerequisites to suits for specific performance are, first, the names of the parties; second, the terms and conditions; third, the interest or property, and, fourth, the consideration." Eppich v. Clifford, 6 Colo. 493.

Unfinished Negotiations.—It is not every loose conversation that is to be turned into a contract, although the parties may seem to agree. The question of assent to a proposition alleged to have been made and accepted without any expectation of contracting, should be carefully weighed with all the circumstances. Accordingly, the following instruction was held to be proper upon an issue of fact material to the specific performance: "If the jury believe that all the terms of the contract were not finally arranged the first day, but that the entire contract was to be arranged and reduced to writing the next day, there was no binding contract between the parties, unless a contract was approved to have been made on the next day or some subsequent day." Brown v. Finney, 53 Pa. St. 373.

A contract for the sale of land by which the vendor agrees to take, in part payment, a house and lot of the vendee at its cash value to be fixed by two persons, where the parties agreed to appoint such persons, but not within any specified time, and never have done so, is too incomplete to be enforced in equity. Baker v. Glass, 6 Munf. (Va.) 212.

Where, by an agreement for the sale of land, the price was to be afterwards ascertained and fixed by the parties, and one of them died before the price had been fixed by them, held, that the agreement was too incomplete and uncertain to be enforced specifically in equity. Graham v. Call, 5 Munf. (Va.) 396.

Nor will specific performance be decreed of a stipulation in a contract for the sale of real estate, that the purchase money shall be paid "on such terms as may be agreed on between said parties." Huff v. Shepard, 58 Mo. 242; Mayer v. McCreery, 119 N. Y. 434.

The specific performance of a covenant to renew a lease, in which the rent is not fixed, will not be decreed in equity. Robinson v. Kettletas, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 67.

An agreement for conveyance which fails to name the purchase price and times of payment is not enforceable. Webster v. Brown, 67 Mich. 328; Woodruff v. Woodruff, 44 N. J. Eq. 349; Edichal Bullion Co. v. Columbia Gold Min. Co., 87 Va. 641.

4. Legality; Public Policy.¹—Equity will not assume jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of a contract that is illegal in any of its features. If the nature of the contract is such that its enforcement would be in violation of public policy, specific performance will not be granted. The least taint of illegality or want of equity will preclude a decree.²

In Clitherall v. Ogilvie, 1 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 250, a young man just of age sold certain land for one-fourth its value, and the court refused to compel him to execute the contract and left the other party to his legal remedy. The chancellor said: "That being an unreasonable contract and a very hard bargain, it would be both unreasonable and unjustifiable to decree a specific performance of the agreement."

Partly Invalid.—A contract which is void as to a part will not be enforced. Hall v. Loomis, 63 Mich. 709.

Usurious Agreements.—Where an agreement cannot be enforced as made, on account of usury, the court will not reduce the rate of interest to that allowed by law and then enforce it. Farwell v. Meyer, 35 Ill. 40.

Void Contract.—Equity will not enforce specific performance of a void contract. Bagan v. Kamp, 30 Ala. 276; Moses v. McClain, 82 Ala. 370.

Where an attorney in fact sells land of his principal, taking a note for the purchase money, and giving a bond for title, the principal being at the time dead, which fact was unknown to both parties, the contract of sale is void, and the attorney, having afterwards obtained the title to the land himself, cannot enforce a specific execution of the contract by the vendee. Jenkins v. Atkins, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 294; 34 Am. Dec. 648.

Ultra Vires.—See Wilks v. Georgia Pac. R. Co., 79 Ala. 180.

But a corporation which has suffered a plaintiff to perform his part of a contract which was not regular or legitimate as to it will not be permitted to take advantage of such irregularity by refusing to perform if such refusal would injure plaintiff. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 129 U. S. 305.

Where a bank had power, under its charter, to take and hold lands for the convenient transaction of its business, and to secure debts, but for no other purpose—held, it had no right to purchase lands for the purpose of selling them again; and the court refused to assist it in enforcing a contract made with that intent. Bank of Michigan v. Niles, Walk. (Mich.) 99.

A purchase after the contract was made, in part performance of it, will not change the case. Bank of Michigan v. Niles, Walk. (Mich.) 99.

In general no contract which deprives a person of his liberty can be specifically enforced. In re Baker, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 485. See Case of Mary Clark, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 122; 13 Am. Dec. 213.

Champertous Agreements.—A champertous agreement will not be enforced. Bowman v. Cunningham, 78 Ill. 48. See Miller v. Newell, 20 S. Car. 137; 47 Am. Rep. 833.

A court of equity will not, any more than a court of law, enforce a contract which it sees to be tainted with the crime of maintenance; but it is not maintenance in a creditor to purchase bona fide a chose in action for the purpose of securing or recovering payment of an antecedent debt, especially if he is already beneficially interested in the claim purchased; nor is an assignment to one of the cestuis, of a balance due from a trustee who has neglected to account, a purchase by a stranger, of a claim for the damages of an ordinary tort. Sayles v. Tibbits, 5 R. I. 79.

Public Policy.—To decree the specific performance of a parol agreement made with a married woman, to mortgage her leasehold property, without the knowledge of her husband, induced by professions of a brother, that it was to secure to her a provision in the event of her becoming a widow, would violate the principles of both law and equity. Berry v. Cox, 8 Gill (Md.) 466.

Public Policy—Evasion of Law.—A contract that is against the spirit and policy of the law, or that is an attempted evasion of the law, will not be enforced. As, an invasion of the pre-emption laws. Dial v. Hair, 18 Ala. 798; 54 Am. Dec. 179; Kremer v. Earl (Cal. 1891), 27 Pac. Rep. 735; Brake v. Ballou, 19 Kan. 397; Gaines v. Molen, 30 Fed. Rep. 27; McDermid v. McCastland, Hard. (Ky.) 21.

But it was held in Carkins v. Anderson, 21 Neb. 364, that, where certain acts are prohibited by statute merely, and the parties concerned in them are not in pari delicto, the party upon whom no penalty is imposed is entitled to a decree enforcing the contract, for example, in the case of the sale of a timber claim on the public domain, the buyer agreeing to enter it under the homestead laws and then convey part of it to the seller, who has expended money on it. And compare Gaines v. Molen, 30 Fed. Rep. 27; Southerland v. Whittington, 46 Ark. 285; Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 314.

A contract to combine and prevent free bidding at a judicial sale cannot be enforced. Baggot v. Sawyer, 25 S. Car. 405.

Restraint of Trade.—The courts will not enforce rights founded on a contract to "corner" lard. Leonard v. Poole, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 213.

A court of equity will not enforce the specific performance of an agreement by which a party stipulates with another that on payment by him of a sum of money for railroad stock, new directors to be nominated by the vendee shall be substituted in place of all the present directors, except two, such an agreement being an attempt to interfere improperly with the rights of others, and contrary to public policy. Fremont v. Stone, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

And even if such an agreement is unobjectionable in all respects a court of equity will not compel its specific performance where the vendee of the stock has paid for and received it without requiring any change in the board of directors. Fremont v. Stone, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

Contracts in restraint of trade, to be good at law, must be founded on a valuable consideration, be reasonable, and impose no general restraint on trade and industry. The presumption of equity is that such contracts are bad; and although good at law, wherever the terms be at all hard or even complex, equity will not enforce them. Keeler v. Taylor, 53 Pa. St. 467; 91 Am. Dec. 221.

Certain shareholders in a private corporation agreed to put their stock for three years in the hands of trustees, with power to vote it at all stockholders' meetings, during such time, the stock only to be sold subject to the agreement, and further that they would sell to one another in preference to any third person, provided they could obtain the price offered for it by outsiders. The contract being a restraint on the alienation of property was held to be incapable of enforcement in equity. Moses v. Scott, 84 Ala. 608.

The case of Gray v. Oxnard Brothers Co., 59 Hun (N. Y.) 387, is a recent and interesting decision upon the specific enforceability of a contract creating and maintaining a sugar trust. The facts of the case were as follows: The North River Sugar Refining Company combined with other sugar manufacturers, to control the sale of sugar in the United States. The several parties to this combination executed a contract among themselves which provided, among other things, that the capital stock of each corporation becoming a party thereto should be transferred to certain trustees, and the subscribing parties to receive in lieu thereof certificates of stock in the combination in proportion to the value of the stock surrendered; and that the profits of each corporation should be paid over to the trustees, to be distributed as dividends on the capital stock. After the execution of this agreement, the North River Sugar Refining Company assigned all of its capital stock to third parties, who surrendered the same to the trustees, and received certificates in lieu thereof. Thereafter the North River Sugar Refining Company was dissolved, and its franchises forfeited by law, on account of its having become a party to an illegal combination, and plaintiff was appointed a receiver, and brought suit, alleging a partnership between the parties to said combination and an accruing of profits, seeking to recover the ratable share of his defunct corporation therein. The court held that the plaintiff could only recover by the enforcement of an illegal agreement and refused the decree.

Where it appeared in a suit to compel the delivery of stock in a national bank that the purpose of the purchase was to gain control of the bank, it was held to be in violation of public policy, and a decree was refused. Foll's Appeal, 91 Pa. St. 434; 36 Am. Rep. 671. Compare Moffatt v. Farquhar, L. R., 7 Ch. Div. 591; Wilson v. Keating, 4 De G. & J. 588.

Breach of Trust.—A trustee's purchase of trust property for his personal gain cannot be enforced in his favor whether the purchase be made directly or otherwise. Saltmarsh v. Beene, 4 Port. (Ala.) 293; 30 Am. Dec. 525.

It has been held by a Georgia court that a contract executed in parol by two children for the division of the estate of their father who was still living, whereby the children sought to avoid the effect of the anticipated disinheritance of one of them by the father was not a proper contract to be specifically enforced, such a contract being against public policy. Mercier v. Mercier, 50 Ga. 546, 15 Am. Rep. 694.

Where the sons-in-law and the only son of a very aged man, without the participation of the wives of the former and without the knowledge of the father, entered into a written agreement that they would divide all the property of the father equally among them, held that on the father's afterwards surrendering the personal property to the sons-in-law, and conveying the land to the son, a specific performance of the agreement against the son would not be decreed. Brewer v. Church, 4 Jones' Eq. (N. Car.) 418.

The cases where contracts which attempt to control the division of an estate have been sustained have rested on special grounds, such as a purpose to avoid or settle controversies; to adjust doubtful rights on the payment of a valuable consideration. They do not warrant sustaining a secret agreement made to enable legatees to thwart the purpose of a testator, by encouraging one of them to do what the testator, by his control over his property, is desirous of preventing. Mercier v. Mercier, 50 Ga. 546; 15 Am. Rep. 694.

In Consideration of Marriage.—Contracts made in contemplation of marriage may be enforced in equity, although incapable of enforcement at law. Haymer v. Haymer, 2 Vent. 343; Holtham v. Ryand, Nels. Ch. 205; Acton v. Acton, 2 Vern. 480; Cannel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243; Miller v. Goodwin, 8 Gray (Mass.) 542.

Unlawful Contracts.—Equity will not enforce a contract that is unlawful unless public interest and public policy demand it. Carrington v. Callar, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 175; Holder v. Meggison, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 175; Saltmarsh v. Beene, 4 Port. (Ala.) 283; 30 Am. Dec. 525; Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 615.

A agreed to sell to B for a gross sum a lot and building and a quantity of liquor. The sale of the liquor would have been illegal. The contract being indivisible, a prayer for specific performance was denied. Gerlach v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 86; 55 Am. Rep. 240.

Specific performance will not be granted where the contract would apply the individual assets of a deceased member of an insolvent firm, whose individual estate was insolvent, to the payment of firm debts. Bagwell v. Bagwell, 72 Ga. 92.

Where a house is rented for use as a brothel, and, to evade the statutes, a contract in writing is entered into for the sale of the house on monthly payments until a certain sum shall have been paid, when the landlord agrees to execute a conveyance and to take a deed of trust for the balance of the purchase money, the agreement is illegal, and will not be specifically enforced after the stipulated monthly payments have been made. Sprague v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 349, overruling Sprague v. Rooney, 82 Mo. 493; 53 Am. Rep. 383.

But one who signs a contract without reading it may be bound by its terms nevertheless. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306.

Where it is evident that owing to the haste with which a contract was signed, and to the inadvertence of both parties, it does not express the intent of the parties interested, a court of equity will not enforce its specific performance. Morganthau v. White, 1 Sweeny (N. Y.) 395.

Specific performance of an agreement to assent to any division of lands held in common, which "the majority of interests shall decide just and equitable," will not be enforced if the agreement is construed to authorize the majority to set off to any owner a certain portion of land without his assent. Harkness v. Remington, 7 R. I. 154.

When equity assists a party in obtaining his right under a contract, it does so on the principle that the very contract, as assented to by the party alleged to be in default, is alone to be enforced. Railey v. Bacon, 26 Miss. 455.

Equity will not enforce a contract to convey real estate proved solely by a deed, when there has never been a legal delivery of the deed. Overman v. Kerr, 17 Iowa 485.

Defendant's ancestor signed and delivered to plaintiff's agent the following memorandum: "I am willing to sell my land, . . . containing 500 acres, more or less, for the price of six dollars and twenty-five cents per acre, cash; and the parties for whom F P H are negotiating for said land shall have the privilege of buying said property at said price, and on said terms, for sixty days from this June 7, 1883." In the following July plaintiff's agent R told the owner that plaintiffs would take the property at the price agreed on. Not later than July 15, 1883, another agent of plaintiffs, M, wrote to the owner that plaintiffs had elected to take the tract at the price and on the terms mentioned, and that they were prepared to pay according to said terms, so soon as he should convey the same to them by proper deed. The owner never executed to plaintiffs any deed, and, in consequence, plaintiffs never paid or tendered the price. On suit against the owner's heirs, for the specific performance, the court held that this proposal to sell did not of itself constitute a valid contract with the plaintiffs for the sale of said land within the time, at the price, and upon the terms therein mentioned. Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 736.

It is no objection to enforcing specific performance, that the contract was made with an agent of plaintiff in the agent's own name, if defendants have subsequently recognized the plaintiff as principal, and have accepted performance on his part, and partly performed on their own part. St. John v. Griffith, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 198; 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 59.

Where it appears that a real-estate dealer and the husband of the owner made the contract with plaintiff, and there is no evidence that the owner authorized or ratified the bargain, and the trial court finds as a fact that she did not do so, specific performance will not be granted. Hadfield v. Skelton, 69 Wis. 460. See Carr v. Callaghan, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 365.

So, where a coparcener signs his cotenant's name to a contract to convey, and such cotenant repudiates the act, specific performance will be denied. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521; Olsen v. Lovell (Cal. 1891), 27 Pac. Rep. 765.

Specific performance of a contract to convey lands will not be decreed where the lands purport to have been sold absolutely by an agent of the defendant, who, in fact, had only authority to sell such lands for a highway. Lawler v. Sloan, 40 N. J. Eq. 489.

Unaccepted Proposition.—A naked proposition to relinquish land to a certain extent, not accepted by the other party, though in writing, cannot be considered as the subject of specific execution. Parker v. Stephens, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 197. See Barker v. Critzer, 35 Kan. 459; Dresel v. Jordan, 104 Mass. 407.

An offer must be accepted in the precise form submitted or there is no valid assent, such as will create a contract. Thus, plaintiff's adoption of the defendant's written offer to sell lands to which plaintiff attaches conditions and qualifications which essentially alter and materially vary the effect thereof, is not such an acceptance as will create a contract that will be specifically enforced. Bentz v. Eubanks, 41 Kan. 28. See Erickson v. Wallace, 45 Kan. 430; Schields v. Horbach, 30 Neb. 536.

Thus an acceptance after the time named in the offer is of no avail. Childs v. Gillespie (Pa. 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 312.

A contract embodied in a letter, will not be enforced against another per-

6. Enforcement Must be Possible.—That is to say, the situation of the parties and the nature of the contract must be such that the agreement may be executed, at least substantially, according to the original design. Equity will not undertake to do a vain thing. A substantial compliance must be practicable as well as possible.¹

son than the signer, without clear proof that the letter was in fact intended as the letter of defendant. Proof that defendant knew of its being written, and assented to it, as the letter of the signer, and not as his own, is not enough. Bickett v. White, 27 Ohio St. 405.

Complainant's agent made an offer to defendant for an exchange of land with complainant. Defendant refused to do so except on terms that the agent had no authority to accept. The latter thereupon telegraphed to complainant for further instructions, and defendant gave a third party written authority to close the contract for him, on the terms he had named. After receiving an answer to his telegram, complainant's agent did not see defendant again, but agreed orally with defendant's agent that they would meet later, and arrange the exchange. Before they did so, defendant revoked his agent's authority and refused to make the exchange. Specific performance denied on the ground that the minds of the parties had never met. Lasher v. Gardner, 124 Ill. 441.

Where the terms of a power of attorney are departed from under circumstances that justify the belief that the departure was made pursuant to the parol assent of the principal, the contract will be enforced, if in other respects there are no obstacles. Webster v. Harris, 16 Ohio 490.

Where the evidence of certain facts constituting an element in the contract is conflicting, and it appears that, after some negotiation, the papers, without being examined or approved by the creditor, were sent to him by mail, and he did not assent to them, specific performance will not be enforced. Spears v. Long, 32 S. Car. 528.

A court of equity will decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, although the price be inadequate, where the vendor has refused to rescind the contract, with a full knowledge of the facts. Galloway v. Barr, 12 Ohio 354.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of land will not be decreed at the instance of the vendee, where the contract is made in disregard of a prior parol sale by the vendor, though the vendee was ignorant of such prior sale, but he will be left to his action for damages. Patterson v. Martz, 8 Watts (Pa.) 374; 34 Am. Dec. 474. See supra, this title, p. 947, n. 1.

A contract to sell a certain number of patented machines each year until the expiration of the patent will not be specifically enforced after fifteen years has elapsed, the patent having only two more to run, as its literal performance would be impossible. Werden v. Graham, 107 Ill. 169.

Under the Alabama statute, if the husband attempts to convey the homestead, without the wife joining, his deed is a nullity. A husband agreed to convey to A a tract of land which embraced the homestead, being worth more than the amount allowed, but not in extent exceeding the statutory limit. The husband refused to convey on the ground that his wife would not join, whereupon A offered to accept the husband's deed of the tract, and brought suit for specific performance. Held, that A could not compel the husband to execute a deed. Moses v. McClain, 82 Ala. 370.

The courts will not compel the issuance of corporate stock where by reason of the shares' having been all issued, enforcement would not be possible. Ferguson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. 77; Danforth v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 12.

Specific performance of an exchange of lands will not be granted where defendant was ready at the time named, but plaintiff was not ready, and never offered to perform, his laches having rendered performance on his part impossible. Alexander v. Wunderlich, 118 Pa. St. 610.

Where the specific performance of a contract to convey a reversionary interest in land was sought after the lapse of nearly ten years, and after the reversion of dower, as it existed at the date of the contract, had been converted, by the untimely death of the widow, into a present estate in fee, and there was no satisfactory explanation of the causes of the delay, relief was refused, and the bill was dismissed. *Pickering v. Where the contract is one creating separate mutual obligations it may be enforced, even though the mutual obligations are not absolutely co-ordinate in time, and it be impossible to enforce the whole contract on both sides at once. Sterling v. Klepsattle, 24 Ind. 94; 87 Am. Dec. 319.

A contract which one party is at liberty to revoke at any time cannot be enforced against the other party. Alworth v. Seymour, 42 Minn. 526.

The rule that equity refuses to enforce the specific execution of contracts where the remedy is not mutual, applies to cases in which there is not such mutuality of remedy at the time the contract is made, not to cases in which the mutuality of remedy is taken away by a subsequent contingent event. Moore v. Fitz Randolph, 6 Leigh (Va.) 175; 29 Am. Dec. 208.

It is a universal rule of equity, that he who asks for a specific performance must be in a condition to perform himself. Therefore, in a contract for the mutual sale of land, a vendor, who cannot give title to his own land, cannot have a decree of specific performance against the vendee. Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 290.

Specific performance will not be granted to compel the defendants to allow plaintiff to share in the benefits

One modification of this rule is, that where the obligation is not a distinct and separate contract, but a part of another, and the principal obligation of which it is a part is enforceable, the lesser covenant will be enforceable also.¹ And another, that the rule governs only such contracts as are executory; for where the

of a purchase made by them, unless there was sufficient mutuality between the parties to enable the defendants to have brought in the plaintiff to bear part of their losses, if any had resulted from the transaction. Porter v. Kinsey, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 233.

In a recent Connecticut case specific performance was refused on the following facts: G and H entered into a written contract by which, for a certain consideration then received by G, they agreed to exchange properties. If G failed to convey to H, he was to forfeit $1,800. If H failed to convey, he was to forfeit certain property described. Held, that there was here no contract of H to convey that could be enforced against him in equity. The provision for a forfeiture if H did not convey had reference only to his refusal to convey after accepting a conveyance from G. It was not in itself sufficient to make an obligation which a court of equity could enforce. Goodale v. Hill, 42 Conn. 311.

A person owning land wrote to his mother, requesting her to make use of the land and sell it for the best advantage to support herself. Held, that this could not be enforced in equity as a conveyance, although it would be supported as an authority to enjoy the profits. Craig v. Craig, 1 Bailey's Eq. (S. Car.) 102.

To the Contrary. — See White v. Schuyler, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 300; 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38; Muller v. Vettel, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 350.

A written agreement concerning lands may be enforced in equity, although binding only on the party to be charged. Rogers v. Saunders, 16 Me. 92; 33 Am. Dec. 635; Miller v. Cameron, 45 N. J. Eq. 95; Ives v. Hazard, 4 R. I. 14; 67 Am. Dec. 500; Garretson v. Vanloon, 3 Greene (Iowa) 128; 54 Am. Dec. 492.

Where A granted to B the privilege of digging ore on his land at 25 cents per ton, held, that B was not entitled in equity to a specific performance, the contract not being mutually binding, and there being no obligation on B to dig ore. Geiger v. Green, 4 Gill (Md.) 472; Tyson v. Watts, 1 Md. Ch. 13.

Where plaintiff contracted to procure a deed to be made to defendant of certain land owned by a third person, in consideration whereof defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff certain other land, the agreement was held to be not mutual so far as the remedy for its enforcement is concerned, and to be incapable of specific enforcement since plaintiff's agreement to convey land of another cannot be compelled, but only subjects plaintiff to an action for breach thereof. Norris v. Fox, 45 Fed. Rep. 406.

A contract not binding on plaintiff because of her coverture cannot be specifically enforced at her instance. Tarr v. Scott, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 49. Even though the disability extend to but a part of the obligation. Ridley v. Ennis, 70 Ala. 463.

A contract to convey a right of way across contiguous tracts of land owned by a husband and wife, respectively, cannot be enforced as against the wife, and hence lacks mutuality, and cannot be enforced at the suit of the husband and wife. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 346.

The boundary between two tracts of land being in dispute, the owners agreed that a certain east and west line was the true one, believing it to be such; but with a proviso that if by subsequent survey it was found to be too far north, then either the southern owner was to buy the part between the temporary and the true line at its value in its then uncleared state, or the northern owner was to pay for the clearing of the strip, at the election of the latter; and if the line was too far south these conditions were to be reversed. Held, that there was no such want of mutuality as would render it incapable of enforcement. Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 249.

1. As where a lease or deed contains covenants binding the grantor alone. Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. St. 112; 53 Am. Dec. 526; Corson v. Mulvany, 49 Pa. St. 100; 88 Am. Dec. 485; Shollenberger v. Brinton, 52 Pa. St. 99.

A one-sided or unilateral contract, by which one party binds himself to convey lands, and the other party is not party who is not bound has performed his part under the contract, even though not legally bound to such performance, the plea of want of mutuality cannot be made.¹ The familiar application of this principle is to contracts in the nature of options and proposals which, ordinarily, do not bind the promisee but are nevertheless to be enforced at his instance, if he has fulfilled his part by accepting the offer or option and acting upon it.² And a contract, the execution of a part of which it would be bound to purchase, is not favored in equity, and will not be enforced if without consideration. But if such contract is a part of a lease, or made at the same time with the lease, and in consideration thereof, it will be enforced. Hawralty v. Warren, 18 N. J. Eq. 124; 90 Am. Dec. 613; In re Hunter, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1.

B took from A a lease of land for a year, with an option therein to buy the land at any time within the year for a certain sum. He erected valuable improvements, and within the year tendered the price named in the lease and demanded a conveyance. Held, that equity would compel a conveyance. (Sharswood, C. J., dissenting.) Newell's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 513.

1. Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. St. 504; Freeman v. Stokes, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 219; 34 Leg. Int. 248.

Defendant sold land to plaintiff on condition that if plaintiff constructed a proposed railroad and had trains running thereon within a year, then defendant should deed said property to plaintiff, at which time the consideration should become due and payable, and plaintiff then agreed to pay said sum. For the purpose of constructing the road plaintiff was authorized to enter and take immediate possession. This plaintiff did, and the road was completed and trains running thereon within a year. Held, that it thereby became a mutual contract, executed in part by plaintiff. Byers v. Denver Circle R. Co., 13 Colo. 552.

An option on land may be specifically enforced at the suit of the proposed vendee, for his election to treat the agreement as binding satisfies the rule requiring mutuality. Moses v. McClain, 82 Ala. 370; Ross v. Parks (Ala. 1890), 8 So. Rep. 368. See Johns-

But the acceptance must be strictly according to the terms of the offer and within the time named. Schields v. Horbach, 30 Neb. 536.

A proposition in writing to sell land at a certain price, if taken within thirty days, is a continuing offer, which may be retracted at any time; but if, not being retracted, it is accepted within the time, such offer and acceptance constitute a valid contract, the specific performance of which may be enforced by a bill in equity. Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 224.

An agreement by which plaintiffs agreed to relieve defendants from furnishing sureties on notes given for land sold at public sale under a decree, and defendants offered plaintiffs the option of buying the land from them at the price bid at any time within two years is not void, on the ground that complainants cannot be compelled to purchase the land, and therefore the vendors ought not to be compelled to sell it. The contract is an offer to sell, standing for a given time, and supported by a consideration. Bradford v. Foster, 3 Pickle (Tenn.) 4.

difficult or impracticable to compel, may be enforced as to the residue if the difficult portion has been already actually executed, but not otherwise.¹

Unilateral contracts in the form of bonds and like obligations are constantly enforced.²

8. Fairness—a. FRAUD.³—The contract must be fair. Any trace of unfairness or fraud will render specific performance impossible.⁴

five hundred dollars, upon the terms specified," though in writing, does not bind the owner of the land, and will not be enforced in equity by a decree for its specific performance; and parol evidence to show the consideration is not admissible. Wright v. Weeks, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 37.

A lease of land reserved to the party of the first part the right of selling the land at any time; but no such sale shall be made without giving the second party the privilege of purchasing upon such terms and at the same price as any other person might have offered therefor. This clause was held not to constitute such a contract for the sale of the land to the lessee as equity would enforce, being neither certain nor mutual. Hayes v. O'Brien (Ill. 1891), 26 N. E. Rep. 601.

A woman with power to act as feme sole contracted in writing that if her husband would pay a certain sum on a mortgage on her land by the time it became due, she would convey to him a part of the land. The agreement was signed by the wife only, and the husband failed to pay the money at the time specified, and died without paying any part thereof. Held, that his administrator was not entitled to specific performance of the agreement against the wife, as the contract was not mutual, and left it optional with the husband to pay the money. Stembridge v. Stembridge, 87 Ky. 91. See also, supra, this title, Options.

Unfairness.—The fact that a contract has been entered into hastily and without due consideration of its terms and effect will justify a refusal to decree its enforcement in equity. Godwin v. Collins, 4 Houst. (Del.) 28.

But a contract was enforced though improvident in Lee v. Kirby, 104 Mass. 420.

The power of a court of equity to enforce the specific performance of a contract should be exercised under the sound discretion of the court, with an eye to the substantial justice of the case; and where a contract is hard, and destitute of all equity, the court will leave the parties to their remedy at law, and if such remedy has been lost by negligence, they must abide the consequences. King v. Hamilton, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 311.

Equity will not decree specific performance of a contract, where it appears not to have been entered into with perfect fairness, though the fraud may not be such as to authorize the court to cancel the agreement. Frisby v. Ballance, 5 Ill. 287; 39 Am. Dec. 409.

Where a contract is fairly made and without mistake, by competent parties, upon good consideration, and unattended with any circumstances which make its enforcement inequitable, a mere naked hardness of bargain is no valid objection to its enforcement in equity. Morrison v. Peay, 21 Ark. 110.

Specific performance was refused for unfairness and inequality in a suit upon a contract for the purchase of land under which half the purchase price was to be paid in cash, and the balance in semi-annual payments extending over several years, no provision being made for securing such deferred payments. Godwin v. Collins, 3 Del. Ch. 189. And the mere equitable vendor's lien would not be an adequate security. Godwin v. Collins, 3 Del. Ch. 189.

A purchaser, at a sale under a decree of court will not be compelled to complete his purchase, if it would be unjust for a private person to insist upon a specific performance in such case. Laight v. Pell, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 577.

Complainant purchased an interest in certain patents at auction, with full notice of certain claims and incumbrances. The incumbrancer's title was, under the patent laws, invalid. On a bill for specific performance, claiming an absolute assignment of entire interest, held, the complainant could not thus demand unconscientious advantages, beyond those he had a right to expect when the sale was made. Eames v. Eames, 16 Mich. 348.

Defendant, who needed $2,000 to complete a purchase made by him, agreed that if plaintiff, his wife, would join him in a mortgage for that amount of his farm of 52 acres, which she had refused to do, he would convey to her 10 acres of the land, including the buildings, which part was worth $7,000. Held, that the agreement was inequitable and would not be enforced. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 647.

Where the conversation of a vendor justifies the belief of the vendee that she will not demand specie for the purchase-money of the land sold, and she refuses, on the day the money is to be paid, to receive bank bills and to give reasonable time to the vendee to obtain the specie, the vendee will not thereby lose his right to claim a specific performance of the contract; especially where the vendee is in possession, and has made improvements. Pickle v. Auble, 4 N. J. Eq. 315.

A promise by the vendee, after such refusal, and under the impression that he had thereby lost the benefit of his contract, to accept a lease of the premises, will not estop him from afterwards enforcing the contract of sale. Pickle v. Auble, 4 N. J. Eq. 315.

An innocent purchaser who has paid the full price of the land according to the terms of his purchase will be allowed to compel the owner to convey title where such owner stood by and permitted the sale to him without claiming any interest. Stone v. Tyree, 30 W. Va. 687.

The decree must operate fairly upon all parties. Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483.

In Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 269, the court by Marshall, C. J., said: "The difference between that degree of unfairness which will induce a court of equity to interfere actively by setting aside a contract and that which will induce a court to withhold its aid, is well settled. It is said that the plaintiff must come into the court with clean hands, and that the defendant may resist a bill for specific performance by showing that under the circumstances the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he asks. Omission or mistake in the agreement; or that it is unconscientious or unreasonable; or that there has been concealment, misrepresentation, or any unfairness are enumerated among the causes which will induce a court to refuse its aid. If to any unfairness a great inequality between price and value be added, a court of chancery will not afford its aid."

Misrepresentations as to a material fact will prevent specific performance. See Mansfield v. Watson, 2 Iowa 111; Best v. Stow, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 298; Jones v. Booth, 38 Ohio St. 405; Race v. Weston, 86 Ill. 91; Wells v. Millet, 23 Wis. 64; Davis v. Read, 37 Fed. Rep. 418; Chandler v. Pomeroy, 46 Fed. Rep. 533.

In an action by the vendor for specific performance of a contract for sale of land, the vendee may defeat a decree by showing that the vendor falsely represented that the property was clear of tax liens, although the contract calls only for a quitclaim deed. Isaacs v. Skrainka, 95 Mo. 517.

Misrepresentations by the vendor, as to size of buildings, or qualities of land, although without fraud, have been held ground for refusing specific performance. Fisher v. Worrall, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 478.

If a vendee fraudulently misrepresents to the vendor the value of wild lands which the vendor, as the vendee well knows, has not seen for many years, the contract so induced is void, and specific performance will not be decreed. Kelley v. Sheldon, 8 Wis. 258.

A contract to purchase property will not be specifically enforced, where the vendor represented that certain store fixtures went with the property, whereas, in fact, such fixtures belonged to another and it was not in the power of the vendor to deliver them. Smith v. Sturgess, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 360.

When a purchaser of lands induces the vendor to sell, by misrepresenting his means of payment, and is guilty of gross negligence, in failing to perform his part of the contract, a court of equity will not decree specific performance in his favor. Fuller v. Perkins, 7 Ohio 196.

Specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land and personally will not be decreed where defendants entered into such contract in reliance on the representations of plaintiffs' agent, many of which were untrue, and the value of the property is much less than defendants represented. Hicks v. Turck, 72 Mich. 311.

In a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract of sale, if the defendant rely on a false representation made to him, he must prove in addition, that he will be damaged by performance. Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 381; Scott v. Shiner, 27 N. J. Eq. 185. But compare Kelly v. Central Pac. R. Co., 74 Cal. 557.

Instances — Misrepresentation Sufficient to Preclude Specific Enforcement.— Defendant who was the owner of vacant land, published a circular inviting settlement, and stating that settlers who in good faith improved the land, would be given the preference in purchasing. To obtain a contract for conveyance, plaintiff falsely represented to defendant that he had settled thereon, and induced him to make the contract. Held, that plaintiff's fraud, without regard to damage resulting from it, was a bar to an action for specific performance. Kelly v. Central Pac. R. Co., 74 Cal. 557.

One who induces another to agree to convey land by fraudulently representing that the parties for whom he acts are very rich and will make large expenditures, cannot compel the enforcement of the contract, even though when reduced to writing it required expenditures much less in amount. Carskaddon v. Kennedy, 40 N. J. Eq. 259.

On a bill by a vendor to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of a certain tract of land, although the quantity of the tract is not stated in the contract, the defendant may show by parol evidence that the complainant, before sale, represented to the defendant that the tract contained nine acres when in fact it contained only about six; and in such case specific execution of the contract will not be enforced. Miller v. Chetwood, 2 N. J. Eq. 199.

And it makes no difference, in such case, that the sale was made by the tract, and not by the acre, and that the vendee lived in the neighborhood of the land, subject daily to his observation; this constitutes no excuse for the misrepresentations of the vendor. Miller v. Chetwood, 2 N. J. Eq. 199.

The defendant entered into and partly executed a contract to convey certain lands to the plaintiff in exchange for certain tenements belonging to the plaintiff, upon the understanding that such tenements rented at certain rates; but upon discovering that the rates were misstated, he refused to complete the execution of the contract. Held, that a bill for specific performance could not be maintained against him, although it appeared that such misrepresentation was not fraudulent, and that the plaintiff had offered compensation for the deficiency in the rent. Boynton v. Hazelboom, 14 Allen (Mass.) 107; 92 Am. Dec. 738.

Fraudulent Concealment.—The concealment by plaintiff of a material fact will defeat his claim for specific performance. Byars v. Stubbs, 85 Ala. 256; Hetfield v. Willey, 105 Ill. 286; King v. Knapp, 59 N. Y. 462.

Where, before receipt of a letter from his principal withdrawing the lands from sale, an agent for the sale of land had sold it, and on his representations that he was acting solely for his principal's interest, and by the withdrawal would be placed in an embarrassing position, the principal consented to affirm the sale and received part of the purchase price, which, however, he at once returned, disaffirming the sale, on discovering that the purchaser was his agent's step-daughter. It was held that there was at least such suppressio veri on the part of the agent that the contract would not be specifically enforced. Morgan v. Hardy, 16 Neb. 427.

The case of Margrave v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155, was one by the vendor to enforce a contract to convey land. The contract was to sell for $800, whereas the lot was worth $2,000, on account of its rise in value. The plaintiff lived near the lot and knew its value. The defendant lived at a distance and did not know its value. While the plaintiff did not make any misrepresentation, he concealed his knowledge of the recent rise in value of the lot, and took advantage of the defendant's ignorance, and thus got from her a contract to convey to him the lot for but little more than one-third of its value. "Such a contract, it is believed, has never yet been enforced in a court of equity in this country. When a contract for the sale of land is fair and just and free from legal objection, it is a matter of course for courts of equity to specifically enforce it; but they will not decree specific performance in cases of fraud or mistake, or of hard and unconscionable bargains, or when the decree would produce injustice, or would be inequitable under all the circumstances." Osgood v. Franklin, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; 7 Am. Dec. 513; Seymour v. Delancy, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 222.

A vendor agreed to sell a certain lot and buildings which he pointed out to his purchaser, but a part of which he fraudulently omitted from his deed, taking advantage of the purchaser's ignorance as to the description. The purchaser was awarded a decree of specific performance to compel the conveyance of the entire lot. Winans v. Huyck, 71 Iowa 459.

If a defendant, at the time of the sale of his lands on execution, represents to the purchaser that certain land is included in the levy, which in fact is not, such land passes in equity by the sale, provided the purchaser acted innocently, and a conveyance will be decreed. Buchanan v. Moore, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 304; 15 Am. Dec. 601.

And the purchaser will not be required to give up the sale on a tender of the whole of the purchase money by the defendant. Buchanan v. Moore, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 304; 15 Am. Dec. 601.

He who sells property on a description given by himself is bound in equity to make good that description; and if it is untrue in a material point, although the variance is caused by a mistake, he is liable for that variance; and when he has sold that which he cannot convey, and cannot therefore execute his contract, he must answer in damages. McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 268.

Misrepresentation Insufficient to Preclude Specific Enforcement.—It has been held that a representation to the purchaser of land to the effect that an alley on the premises was only a private right of way in a few persons, when, in fact the alley was a public one, is not such a misrepresentation as will bar a specific performance, the rights in the property in either case being substantially the same. Wuesthoff v. Seymour, 22 N. J. Eq. 66.

A agreed in writing to purchase "a farm or tract of land, called Mother's Care, containing 173 acres, more or less." The vendor, when questioned as to the number of acres, told the vendee that he had heard his brother say the old plot called for 173; but he did not himself know the quantity, never having seen it surveyed. Held, that this could not, by any fair construction, be considered such a representation as would make it inequitable, though, on measurement, the farm contained only 145 acres, to compel the performance of the contract by the vendee. Stull v. Hurtt, 9 Gill (Md.) 446.

The contract must be considered a sale of land, not by the acre, but for a specified sum, and the words "more or less" as intended to negative any representation of quantity. Stull v. Hurtt, 9 Gill (Md.) 446.

Conveyance to Defraud Others.—The fact that a conveyance was originally made to defraud creditors cannot be set up by the grantee as a defense to a bill by his grantor seeking the specific performance of an agreement to purchase. Lynn v. Lyerle, 113 Ill. 128.

Where it appears that the property in question has been conveyed for the purpose of protecting it from the creditors of the grantor, no obligation to re-convey growing out of the transaction, or forming a part of it, can either be itself enforced, or form the consideration of an enforceable promise or covenant, written or parol. Ford v. Lewis, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 127.

The circumstances of the case indicating that a conveyance was made for the purpose of defrauding the grantor's creditors, and such fraudulent intent appearing from the evidence, the witnesses testifying to an agreement that the property should be re-conveyed to the grantor, when he received a discharge in bankruptcy, such re-conveyance cannot be enforced in equity after the accomplishment of the fraud. Dent v. Ferguson, 132 U. S. 50.

Such conveyances are valid between the parties. But the promise to re-convey is not a proper subject of equitable enforcement. Parrott v. Baker, 82 Ga. 364; Songer v. Partridge, 107 Ill. 529.

The purchaser cannot avail himself of the defense to an action for specific performance of a contract to convey land that the sale was made to prevent the vendor's creditors from collecting a debt. Gentry v. Gentry, 87 Va. 478.

The owner of land lived on it with her married daughter, the plaintiff. The land was subject to a deed of trust to secure a debt to defendant. For the purpose of having the land transferred to plaintiff free from the claims of the mother's creditors, plaintiff's husband proposed to defendant that the latter should have the land sold under the deed of trust, bid it in, and then deed it to plaintiff on her paying interest and taxes and executing another deed of trust for the principal. The court held that the agreement being in fraud of the creditors of the plaintiff's mother, could not be enforced in a court of equity. Taylor v. Von Schroeder (Mo. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 675.

Where there is a conveyance of land, voluntary on its face, made by one who is defendant in a suit just before the rendition of a judgment in a large sum against him, which but for this conveyance would be a lien on the land, and strong proof is not adduced that the conveyance was made in good faith and for value, the specific performance against the vendor of an agreement for the sale of the land will not be enforced. Tillotson v. Gesner, 33 N. J. Eq. 313.

Undue Influence.—Undue influence is a sufficient defense to a petition for specific performance. Brady's Appeal, 66 Pa. St. 277; Miller v. Miller, 68 Pa. St. 486. Compare Christian v. Ransome, 46 Ga. 138. See also UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Duress.—Specific performance of a contract to re-convey to plaintiff land which he had conveyed to defendant as security for a debt will not be decreed where it appears that defendant took the note thus secured in compromise of a much larger indebtedness to him, though barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that this compromise was extorted by plaintiff's threat to prosecute defendant's son for a criminal offense unless the compromise was made. Swint v. Carr, 76 Ga. 322; 2 Am. St. Rep. 44.

A promise to pay the debts of an intended husband given in writing under threats of his imprisonment and the prevention of the marriage, will not be enforced in equity, even though the promisor afterwards pay part, thus appearing to ratify the promise, if it appear that such subsequent payment was made under the influence of fear. Rau v. Von Zedlitz, 132 Mass. 164. See also DURESS, vol. 6, p. 67.

Intoxication.—The intoxication of the purchaser at the time of the sale will not be ground for refusing to enforce specific performance of the contract against him, unless it appears that his intoxication was produced or procured by the vendor, or that undue advantage was taken of it. Pittenger v. Pittinger, 3 N. J. Eq. 156; Rodman v. Zillee, 1 N. J. Eq. 320; Whitesides v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 152.

Compare Brown v. Wheelock, 75 Tex. 385; Watson v. Doyle, 130 Ill. 415; Byrne v. Long (Ky. 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 778.

The mere fact that the contracting party was in the habit of getting drunk will not relieve him from a contract entered into when not intoxicated. Watson v. Doyle, 130 Ill. 415.

And though entered into by one intoxicated if it has been subsequently ratified by him, it is enforceable without regard to the amount of the consideration. Mettert v. Hagan, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 231.

Imbecility.—A court of equity will not enforce a contract to convey land, where there is satisfactory evidence of the imbecility of the party making the contract sought to be enforced. Reinicker v. Smith, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 421. See, also, INTOXICATION AS A DEFENSE TO CONTRACTS, vol. 11, p. 773.

Ignorance.—Where an ignorant woman is induced, without a clear knowledge of what she is doing, to agree to convey the homestead, her promise will not be enforced specifically, although her husband may have bound himself by the contract. Bird v. Logan, 35 Kan. 228.

See McElroy v. Maxwell, 101 Mo. 294; Winans v. Huyck, 71 Iowa 459; Chambers v. Livermore, 15 Mich. 381.

Complainant, an assayer, received from S, an ignorant Mexican who reposed the utmost confidence in him, authority to sell a mine which S had discovered, and a quarter interest therein as commission. Complainant sold to defendants for the minimum price fixed by S, stipulating with them that they should convey to him a quarter interest. S paid him a quarter of the price received, but on learning of the agreement with defendants, which complainant had charged them not to tell S, demanded of them the quarter interest which complainant had bargained for, whose value they paid him. Held, that this gross fraud of the complainant's would defeat complainant's claim to a specific performance and prevent the recovery of even the fourth part last paid to defendant. Barnes, J., dissenting. Jacobs v. George (Arizona, 1889), 20 Pac. Rep. 183.

Failure to Read Contract.—The fact that a vendor in giving a contract for sale, is negligent in not reading the contract, and knowing its contents, does not entitle vendee to a specific performance of it, where he himself is also in the wrong, as the relief within the discretion of the court depends more on the good faith of the party asking it than on the negligence of the party against whom it is sought. Clark v. Maurer, 77 Iowa 717. See also Wickham v. Winchester, 75 Iowa 327; Byars v. Stubbs, 85 Ala. 256.

In the absence of fraud, one who signs a contract without reading it is bound by its terms nevertheless. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306.

Fraud—Instances.—Where plaintiff fraudulently procures from defendant a contract to convey land, wherein another had acquired rights by performing labor and making improvements, the injury to the third person renders the fraud a bar to an action for specific performance. Kelly v. Central Pac. R. Co., 74 Cal. 557.

Plaintiff made a contract with defendant, a widow in feeble health, residing at a distance, through her son-in-law, to exchange two houses, belonging to him for income paying real estate. A real estate broker had informed the son-in-law that one of the houses was well rented, and had procured S, a pretended purchaser, for one of the houses. The broker had gone to the son-in-law in relation to the sale to S, at the suggestion of plaintiff. The houses were not rented but heavily mortgaged. Upon these facts specific performance of the contract was refused. Lennon v. Stiles (Supreme Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 487.

Specific performance will not be decreed to compel a county to perform its contract to convey its swamp lands, where electors were induced to vote for the contract by the purchaser's promise to convey a part of the land to each of them, they to pay in work which never was given them. Palo Alto Co. v. Harrison, 68 Iowa 81.

Equity will not enforce a contract in the form of a letter written by defendant to one whom he believes to be acting as his agent, and without any knowledge that he is also acting as the agent of complainant, that he will purchase certain lands of complainant at a named price. Potter v. Hollister, 45 N. J. Eq. 508. See also Goff v. Jones, 70 Tex. 572; Franco-Texan Land Co. v. Boussetlet, 70 Tex. 422; Marsh v. Buchan, 46 N. J. Eq. 595.

The secretary of a company agreed with a stockholder to buy his stock, and, during the negotiations, represented to the vendor that the stock was not worth par, and that he did not know where he could place it, while in fact he wished it for himself, and from his official position knew the stock to be of much greater value, and when he had made no payment on the stock. The court refused to decree specific performance, leaving vendee to a suit at law to recover damages suffered from the breach of contract. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Todd (Del. 1888), 14 Atl. Rep. 27.*

A remainderman induced the life tenant and her trustee to convey to him, that he might sell a portion of the land to pay taxes thereon by fraudulently promising to then make a declaration of trust for a life-interest in the residue in her favor. This, however, he did not do. Held, that she was entitled to a conveyance of the residue, and that it might be made directly to her instead of in trust. Brophy v. Lawler, 107 Ill. 284.

Defendant sold to plaintiff by a parcel contract, a certain lot, and, with others interested in the title, executed a deed for it, which was subsequently returned to defendant for correction, but which defendant fraudulently retained and finally destroyed. The purchase money was paid on the delivery of the deed, and remained in defendant's hands. Plaintiff took and retained possession of the premises. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a decree in equity directing the execution to him by defendant of as perfect a deed as defendant could give. Graft v. Loucks, 138 Pa. St. 453.

The Illinois act 1857, p. 1203, having limited the power given by that of 1841, p. 65, to the supervisor of Cahokia to lease certain village lots to the highest bidder, for educational purposes, to the average rent of the other lots leased — held, that a proposition voted for to lease to T a portion thereof for 99 years, at an annual ground-rent of 25 cents per acre, and a cash bonus of $10,000, should not be specifically enforced, it appearing that there was a design to divide the bonus amongst the inhabitants and defraud the school fund, and that the average rent of other lots was 60 cents per acre. Tamm v. Lavalle, 92 Ill. 563.

A and others agreed to convey land to B, a part of which B was to reconvey to A. The deed was given to C, a real-estate agent, to record, with a reconveyance which had been executed by B, but instead of recording the deed of reconveyance which had been executed, he had B execute another deed of reconveyance, covering less land, and recorded that. Held, that the execution and delivery of the first deed of reconveyance would be decreed. Leeds v. Penrose (N. J. 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 520.

A party cannot plead his own fraud in defense. Cackler v. Ford, 24 How. (U. S.) 322.

d. CHANGE OF CIRCUMSTANCES.—The element of hardship or injustice sometimes comes about through a change in the circumstances not contemplated when the contract was entered into. Thus, if through any unfair delay or neglect of the promisor, the contract has not been executed until there has been a material rise or fall in the value of the property involved, it may become unconscionable to require a specific performance, and, in such case, equity will not do so; nor where, because of such a change in values, or in the situation of the parties, from whatever cause, equitable relief would work a hardship to either side.¹

Fed. Rep. 635; Perkins v. Wright, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 324; Veth v. Gierth, 92 Mo. 97; Eaton v. Eaton, 64 N. H. 493; Society, etc. v. Butler, 12 N. J. Eq. 498; Chubb v. Peckham, 13 N. J. Where a purchaser of land has been for twenty years without title, through the fault of his vendor, and has for this reason been unable to make any beneficial disposition of the land, and the interest upon his debt has accumulated to a large sum, the court will not compel him to accept a confirmation of title, and pay the remainder of the purchase money, especially if suspicions of fraud on the part of the vendor attach to the transaction. Williams v. Mattocks, 3 Vt. 189.

Where a deed or obligation is sought to be enforced in an event which is unexpected to both parties, and inconsistent with their original intention, a court of equity will not sustain it. Quick v. Stuyvesant, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 84.

A, who owned certain land, agreed to convey for a fixed sum to B, but there being a claim to the land made by C, it was agreed to await the determination of a suit by him, and that if it was in A's favor she would immediately carry out her contract of conveyance. This litigation lasted fifteen years and was settled in A's favor. The land in the meantime had largely appreciated in value. Held, that it would be inequitable to enforce specific performance. Fitzpatrick v. Dorland, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 291.

If a party seeking a specific execution, has been guilty of gross laches, or has been inexcusably negligent in performing the contract on his part; or if, in the immediate period, there has arisen a material change of circumstances, affecting the rights, interests and obligations of the parties, a court of equity will refuse to decree a specific performance. Callen v. Ferguson, 29 Pa. St. 247; Maddox v. McQueen, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 400; Du Bois v. Baum, 46 Pa. St. 537; Miller v. Henlan, 51 Pa. St. 265; Childress v. Holland, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 274.

Where a debt is presently payable in the stock of a corporation, and the payor delays the payment for a long time, and until the stock becomes valueless, it is such a change of the circumstances existing at the time of the contract as will in equity relieve the payee from accepting the stock in payment. Demarest v. McKee, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 248.

Where a part of the vendor's land has, since the contract was made, been carried away by the sea, he cannot compel the specific performance of the purchase. Huguenin v. Courtenay, 21 S. Car. 403; 53 Am. Rep. 688.

The purchaser will not be compelled

9. Consideration.—Equity will not decree specific performance of a contract if the consideration be lacking. A mere voluntary agreement is not to be enforced,¹ unless it be to take a conveyance after the time specified in a contract of which time was not of the essence, where the vendor is at fault for the delay, and where the improvements on the land were burned, before the vendor was ready to convey. Smith v. Cansler, 83 Ky. 367.

Where one who has contracted to sell his land dies before the date at which the deed is to be executed and delivered by him, and his heir-at-law and widow refuse to join in the conveyance, a decree will not be made to compel specific performance by the purchasers at the instance of the administrator, for the benefit of the widow (creditors not being interested in the litigation), after the land has depreciated in value. Reddish v. Miller, 27 N. J. Eq. 514.

After a married woman has for two years repudiated and refused to perform a contract for the sale of land made in her behalf by her husband, she cannot, the property during the meantime having depreciated in value, maintain a bill for a specific performance. Holgate v. Eaton, 116 U. S. 33.

Where a defendant resisted specific performance of a contract to purchase land on the ground of a defect in the title, and subsequently by the act of March 14, 1861, the defect of title was cured, and conveyance was again tendered and refused—held, that after the time for delivery of the deed has passed, the defendant would not be compelled, against his will, to accept a deed which he was ready and willing to accept at the time fixed for the performance of the contract, especially as the value of the real estate was depressed. Young v. Rathbone, 16 N. J. Eq. 224; 84 Am. Dec. 151.

Exceptions.—Though the court will not enforce a hard, unreasonable, or unequal contract, the fluctuations in the value of property, caused by events subsequent to the making of the contract, will not be regarded by the court, if the contract is fairly entered into at the time. Low v. Treadwell, 12 Me. 441; Young v. Wright, 4 Wis. 144; 65 Am. Dec. 303; Falls v. Carpenter, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 237; 28 Am. Dec. 613.

Nor will specific performance be refused as inequitable because of the fluctuation of values, if the court has no means of knowing what bearing the terms of the contract had on the negotiations of the parties. Nims v. Vaughn, 40 Mich. 356.

Ordinarily the parties will be deemed to have taken the risk of fluctuations in value. Nims v. Vaughn, 40 Mich. 356.

"It is by no means clear," says Justice Strong, in Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 339, "that a court of equity will refuse to decree the specific performance of a contract fair when it was made, but which has become a hard one by the force of subsequent circumstances and changing events."

And in Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 557, the court, by Field, J., said: "The question in such cases always is, Was the contract at the time it was made a reasonable and fair one? If such was the fact, the parties are considered as having taken upon themselves the risk of subsequent fluctuations in value, and such fluctuations are not allowed to prevent its specific enforcement. See Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 75.

A voluntary agreement by a man to already executed.¹ Nor will a decree issue if the consideration be illegal.²

The authorities have always given adequacy of consideration a place among the prime requisites of an enforceable contract, the difference between the decisions arising out of the question as to what constitutes adequacy of consideration.³ But, as a general rule, mere inadequacy of price unaccompanied by unfairness of some kind is no defense to a bill for equitable enforcement, and will not stand in the way of a decree,⁴ unless the provide for a relative will not be enforced by a court of equity. Cotton v. Graham, 84 Ky. 672.

A mortgage to secure a specified debt will not be specifically enforced if there was in fact no debt. Roney v. Moss, 74 Ala. 390.

The courts of equity will do nothing towards perfecting a voluntary contract for the creation of a trust, nor regard it as binding, so long as it remains executory. Estate of Webb, 49 Cal. 542.

Failure of Consideration.—Where the principal inducement to a sale of land was a stipulation, by the purchaser, to pay a certain debt which was pressing the vendor, and the vendor was obliged to pay such debt in consequence of the failure of the purchaser to perform his agreement, a bill, subsequently filed by such purchaser for specific performance was dismissed. Deaver v. Parker, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 40.

An agreement to release a judgment for $200 at a future day, in consideration of the payment of $100 and the surrender of all claim to certain land, will not be enforced where the consideration fails, except that of the payment of $100, but the court will credit the judgment with such payment. Davis v. Bowker, 1 Nev. 487.

Where a vendor bound himself to make title to land to the vendee on payment of three notes for $120 each, given in purchase of the land—held, that the vendee was not entitled to demand specific performance, because a third party in whose hands the notes had been placed as collateral security, delivered them as fully satisfied, to the vendee on payment by him of $150. Daniel v. Hill, 23 Tex. 571.

Where land was purchased at a very high price, on the faith of representations by the vendor that permanent improvements were to be made in the immediate vicinity, and a map was shown at the time of the sale, on which such proposed improvements were located—held, that, upon the failure of the vendor to make the promised improvements, he could not be allowed to enforce the payment of the residue of the purchase-money, more than the value of the land, without the improvements, having been already paid; though the vendor, at the time of sale, intended to make the promised improvements. Rogers v. Salmon, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 559; 35 Am. Dec. 725.

To the Contrary.—A suit for specific performance may be brought by a vendor of land against the vendee on a memorandum of the purchase signed by the latter, when the land is described with sufficient accuracy and the amount to be paid and the manner and time of making the payments appear, though no consideration moving from the vendor is expressed in it, and although the latter is not bound by it. *Ivory v. Inadequacy — What Constitutes. — "The inadequacy must not be measured by grains." Gasque v. Small, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 72.

In the following cases the difference in value was deemed insufficient to create a presumption of fraud and defeat specific performance: A difference of 7 or 8 per cent. Bower v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408. 275 pounds where 400 pounds was afterwards offered. Collier v. Brown, 1 Cox 428.

Agreement to pay £5,000 where real value was shown to be £3,500. Abbott v. Sworder, 4 De G. & S. 448.

$1,800 and $4,000. Sarter v. Gordon, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 121.

A sheriff's sale of land valued at $1800 for $400. Brown v. Budd, 2 Ind. 442.

A sale of land worth $1,300 for $900. Conrad v. Schwamb, 53 Wis. 372.

A difference of one-half. White v. McGannon, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 511; Conaway v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 643.

Actual rental value of $600 and agreed price, $800. Buford v. Collins, 41 La. Ann. 642.

Specific performance of an agreement to convey land will not be refused as inequitable, because the rents and profits and proceeds of timber sold by the grantor amounted in six years to more than the stipulated purchase-money. Gentry v. Rogers, 40 Ala. 442.

A bill in equity, setting forth a purchase by the complainant for the sum of $600, at a sheriff's sale, made in due form of law, of certain promissory notes to the amount of $260,000, secured by mortgage, and praying for a specific performance of the contract of sale, will not be dismissed on demurrer, on the ground of inadequacy of price. Erwin v. Parham, 12 How. (U. S.) 197.

1. In Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 246, the court by Lord Eldon, said: "Unless the inadequacy of price is such as shocks the conscience and amounts in itself to conclusive evidence of fraud in the transaction, it is not sufficient ground for refusing a specific performance."

And see Watson v. Doyle, 130 Ill. 415; Viele v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 381; Gasque v. Small, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 72.

It is only upon clear and satisfactory evidence that specific performance of an oral contract will be decreed where the consideration was greatly inadequate. Cole v. Cole, 106 Ill. 482.

In Emery v. Wase, 8 Ves. 518, the court by Lord Eldon, said: "I do not deny that mere difference in value, though considerable, is not of itself a sufficient ground for refusing a specific performance of a contract; but very considerable difference in value is not inconsiderable evidence that it was not made with great care and attention."

Excess of price over value, though considerable, if the contract is free from imposition, is not in itself sufficient to prevent a decree for specific performance; but it is an ingredient which, associated with other circumstances, will contribute to prevent the interference of a court of equity. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 264.

committed himself to the contract that his refusal to perform it is fraudulent in its effect.¹

The rule that a voluntary agreement will not be enforced is subject to the qualification that if the contract has been already executed equity will enforce all rights growing out of it.²

The following circumstances have been held sufficient, when attended with inadequacy of consideration, to justify the refusal of a decree: Mental weakness,³ mental weakness superinduced by drink,⁴ mental weakness from old age, with urgency and haste,⁵ mental weakness accompanied by ignorance of business and of the language,⁶ youth with ignorance and inexperience.⁷

Specific performance of an agreement to convey land will be decreed where a meritorious consideration sustains the agreement.⁸

If specific performance is refused on the ground of inadequacy it is because that element is almost invariably accompanied by other circumstances evincing fraud. Seymour v. Delancy, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 222; Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 75. See Clement v. Reid, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 535.

Where the plaintiff knew the value of the land, by reason of his living near it, and induced defendant to sell for $800 land worth $2,000, he was refused a decree enforcing the purchase. Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155.

Although mere inadequacy of price, independent of other circumstances, is not, of itself, sufficient to set aside a transaction, yet it may induce the court to stay the exercise of its power to enforce the specific performance of a contract to sell and convey land; and if, in connection with such inadequacy, there has been any misrepresentation on the part of the purchaser, as to the condition and value of the land, with which the seller was unacquainted, a bill for specific performance will be dismissed. Powers v. Hale, 25 N. H. 145.

In Osgood v. Franklin, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; 7 Am. Dec. 513, the court by Kent., Ch., said: "Though inadequacy of price is not a ground for decreeing a rescission, yet it may be sufficient for the court to refuse to enforce performance. It is not an uncommon case for the court to refuse to enforce for inadequacy and at the same time refuse to rescind." See Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 292.

In the following cases the difference between value and price was held to be too great to justify a decree:

A sheriff's sale for one twenty-fourth the value. Benton v. Shreeve, 4 Ind. 66.

A sheriff's sale of property worth $105 for $21. Modisett v. Johnson, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 431.

An agreement for double the actual value. White v. McGannon, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 511; Day v. Newman, cited in 10 Ves. Jr. 300.

Thus, in the enforcement of executory contracts, love and affection have been held sufficient to supply any deficiency in the consideration,¹ but not sufficient to sustain a contract, in the absence of all other consideration.²

The compromise of a controversy is of itself an adequate consideration, for law and equity alike favor compromises.³

Bona fide execution of the consideration agreed upon entitles the one who has so fulfilled his part of the agreement to a decree against the other.⁴

A promise to do a thing which the promisor is already legally bound to do is not a sufficient consideration.⁵

Hardy, 6 Md. 435; Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. St. 175; 47 Am. Dec. 505; Halsey v. Peters, 79 Va. 60.

The performing of some act involving trouble and expense may constitute a sufficient consideration upon which to base a claim for specific performance. Law v. Henry, 39 Ind. 414; Lafollett v. Kyle, 51 Ind. 446.

Marriage as Consideration.—A father made a parol promise to convey to a lady who was about to marry his son a lot of ground, she promising to erect a house thereon with her own money. Upon this understanding they were married and the house was built as agreed, possession of the lot having been given by the father. Held, that this was a case for a decree of specific performance of the promise to convey. Neale v. Neals, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 1.

A court of equity will aid in enforcing a written contract made before and in consideration of marriage, to convey property to be acquired after the marriage. Gevers v. Wright, 18 N. J. Eq. 330.

The chancellor will decree specific performance of a voluntary agreement only where possession of land has been given thereunder on a meritorious consideration, and valuable improvements have been made on the faith thereof. Studer v. Seyer, 69 Ga. 125.

Debt of Husband Insufficient.—An antecedent debt of the husband is not a sufficient consideration to support a bill for specific performance of the wife's agreement to convey. Bayler v. Com., 40 Pa. St. 37; 80 Am. Dec. 551.

Existence of a Trust Sufficient.—See Heath's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 1.

The doctrine that equity will not decree specific performance of a contract, where there is great inadequacy of consideration, does not apply to the case where A purchases property of B at a low price, and agrees to give the children of B the benefit of it, on being repaid the purchase money and interest. Sarter v. Gordon, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 121. And the contract may be enforced at the suit of B's children. Sarter v. Gordon, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 121.

Where defendant has agreed to convey land and to pay money if a certain deed can be set aside, in consideration of plaintiff's promise to pay costs and attorney's fees in a suit to be brought to set the deed aside, the plaintiff, if he has performed his part of the contract, is entitled to a decree of specific performance against A, such agreement being upon a sufficient consideration. Dewey v. Life, 60 Iowa 361.

See Weaver's Appeal, 115 Pa. St. 59.

5. Dunckel v. Dunckel, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 25; Keffer v. Grayson, 76 Va. 517; 44 Am. Rep. 171.

Where land has been given, the donee may, by his conduct, on the faith of the gift, create a consideration for it that will establish his title to the land, as where he has entered into possession and made lasting improvements;¹ or the donor may, by a complete execution of the gift, pass the title to the real estate granted.²

Some courts have required evidence of a valuable consideration before granting a decree.³

VIII. DUTY OF COMPLAINANT—1. Tender⁴ and Performance.—He who seeks to compel another to perform must show upon his own part either a substantial performance, or a tender thereof, or that, by reason of his adversary's conduct, both performance and tender have been rendered unavailing.⁵ And if the contract in

A decree of specific performance may be granted where a parent has promised in writing to give a child an estate, declaring the instrument to be founded on valuable consideration, and conditioned on the child entering upon and improving the land, and the child has so done. Hagar v. Hagar, 71 Mo. 610.

2. As where he has delivered a deed, taken a note for the consideration, and voluntarily surrendered the note and receipted it. Ferry v. Stephens, 66 N. Y. 321. See Gray v. Barton, 55 N. Y. 68; 14 Am. Rep. 181.

Special Instances.—Services rendered by an attorney in inducing a testator, by threatening to attack his will, to insert a codicil releasing certain persons from their obligation on a bond, were held in Moon v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79, to be inadequate consideration for a conveyance by the persons to the attorney of a large tract of land with personal property thereon as to authorize a decree of specific performance.

F sold to W a farm of three hundred acres, binding himself to make the deed on receipt of $7,500. W, after taking possession, was offered by C $15 per acre for a parcel separated from the main body by a railroad, if F would give C a deed thereof, which offer W accepted, and F orally promised to give C such deed when C should pay W. Thereupon C surveyed the parcel, found it to contain nearly thirty-two acres, put his son into possession on his behalf, paid all the taxes, and made valuable improvements, paid W the price and demanded of F a deed, which F refused to give. It was held that C's payment of the price to W was a sufficient consideration to support F's agreement to convey to C, and this whether F ever received the money from W or not. Fleming v. Carter, 87 Ill. 565.

Upon a levy of A's execution against B's land, A bought the lots together instead of separately. Under a parol agreement between the two, bidders were kept off by representations that the sale was in B's interest; and B paid part of the costs of sale, A promising that he would convey the lots to B upon a tender of the amount of the judgment within a specified time. Held, that there was a good consideration for A's promise, and that equity would compel him to convey in accordance therewith. Heath's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 1.

3. Morris v. Lewis, 33 Ala. 53; Allen v. Davison, 16 Ind. 416; Cutsinger v. Ballard, 115 Ind. 93; Phillips v. Frye, 14 Allen (Mass.) 36; Weed v. Terry, Walk. (Mich.) 501; 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 344; 45 Am. Dec. 257.

Payment or the promise of payment of a subsisting debt is not a sufficient consideration to authorize a court of equity to grant a decree of specific performance of a contract to convey land. Smith v. Phillips, 77 Va. 548.

4. See generally Tender.

5. See supra, this title, Equitable Maxims—He Who Seeks Equity Must Do Equity.

When equity will enforce specific performance of contracts relating to land, when tender of performance is necessary, and what relief will be granted, determined in cases dependent on particular facts. Turner v. Peck, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 549; Billinger v. Kitts, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 273; Beebe v.

question created no obligation upon plaintiff, as in case of an option, he cannot enforce it against his promisor until he has fulfilled all that could be expected of him, by accepting the defendant's offer and acting upon it. After he has done this in good faith, it would be inequitable to refuse him a decree.¹

"Equity will not require of the plaintiff, as a condition precedent to his bringing suit for a specific performance, that he should have made payments which the principal defendant has placed it out of his power to make with safety and justice to the rights of others."²

The requirements of equity procedure in reference to tender are not so strict nor so technical as are those of the common-law courts. The spirit and intent of the obligation are recognized, but not always its letter. For example, substantial rather than literal performance is demanded of the complainant. If the contract which he seeks to enforce is for the conveyance of land and the obligation upon him is to produce the purchase money, it has been held that he need only evince his willingness and ability to pay the money when he shall have had his decree, and that an unconditional tender and payment into court are not required.³

Dowd, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 255; Lanning v. Tompkins, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 308; Chase v. Hogan, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 57.

1. One who receives from landowners a power of attorney authorizing him to act for them in clearing their titles, and agreeing to allow him a half interest in whatever is recovered, is not entitled, upon subsequent revocation, to a specific performance of the contract unless there has been some performance on his part. Armstrong v. Cashion (Ark. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 666.

"A court of chancery is not bound by any fixed rule in relation to the tender of money in bills for specific performance." Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254; Anderson v. White, 27 Ill. 57.

An averment that plaintiff "is willing to pay if he can get a good title," is a sufficient tender to support the suit when the obligor has sold the land in controversy and has died, and the rights of the plaintiff and the second vendee have not been judicially settled. Laverty v. Hall, 19 Iowa 526.

Tender need not be made before suit. Atkinson v. Hudson, 44 Ark. 192; Boyce v. Francis, 56 Miss. 573.

Substantial Performance.—A tender of an amount due upon a contract for the sale of land will, if not complained of as insufficient at the time, be good, although it may not be adequate to cover taxes or a partnership liability growing out of a nursery concern, these being matters subordinate to the sale. Morgan v. Herrick, 21 Ill. 481.

Defendant's offer to sell land was accepted by plaintiff. One of the conditions of the offer was that plaintiff should assume a mortgage of $300 on the land and give his note for $500, payable in one year, with interest. It having been discovered that the mortgage on the land was for $315, plaintiff executed his note for only $485. As at first executed, the note did not bear interest, but this omission was corrected by a new note. Held, that the contract would be enforced. Adams v. Thompson, 28 Neb. 53.

An agreement was for a conveyance upon payment of the first installment, and for notes and a mortgage to secure the balance. Held, that a tender of the first installment, without a tender of notes and a mortgage, entitle the vendee to the deed. Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 12.

Upon a bill for specific performance of a written agreement for the sale of land, proof of a tender by complainant, unless by the terms of his agreement payment was made a condition precedent.¹

The necessity of a formal tender under these rulings is simply that the defendant may be compelled to pay the costs of the suit.² Some kind of a tender, however, is required.³

without any objection either as to time or amount by the defendant, is sufficient. McDanel v. Kimbrell, 3 Greene (Iowa) 335.

A bill in equity to enforce the specific performance of a written contract to convey land on the payment of the purchase-money, may be maintained without a previous tender of the money or bringing it into court, if the plaintiff has offered the defendant a sum within a trifle of the amount due, which the defendant has refused to accept, and there is an averment of readiness to pay whatever the court shall order. Irvin v. Gregory, 13 Gray (Mass.) 215.

Where the vendee has made the first payment according to contract, and tendered the balance of the purchase-money, and the vendor is in default for not tendering conveyances, the complainant, in a bill for performance, is not bound to bring the money into court; and a motion to that effect was disallowed. Johnson v. Sukeley, 2 McLean (U. S.) 562.

A contract for the conveyance of land provided for the payment of the consideration in three installments, after which the obligee was to receive a deed. Held, that the payment of the two first and the tender of the amount of the last entitled the obligee to specific performance. Rogers v. Taylor, 40 Iowa 193.

1. West v. Chase, 3 Ind. 301; Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa 306; Sanford v. Bartholomew, 33 Kan. 38; Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92.

After default, by the plaintiff, in payments which, by the contract, were a condition precedent to a conveyance, the defendant, having notified the plaintiff of his intention to do so, sold the land to a third person. A bill for specific performance, afterwards brought by the plaintiff, was dismissed with costs. Hatch v. Cobb, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 559.

Where a contract for the sale of land contains a covenant that the payments shall be made by installments at stipulated times, and the conveyance to be executed after all installments and accru-ing interest shall be paid, the vendee cannot maintain a bill for specific performance if he has failed without cause to pay the first installment, and the last one is not due when the bill is brought. Troy v. Clarke, 30 Cal. 419.

A bill in equity brought by a vendee who has been in possession of land for twenty years, against heirs of the vendor, for the specific performance of the following agreement: "Received, 12 Mo., 13th, 1865, of Adam P. Ware, one hundred dollars on acct. of a lot of land sold him; the deed to be hereafter made to him, and, when delivered, he is to give his note for $58 additional"—cannot be maintained until the vendee has tendered his note for the amount due, with interest, or the amount due in cash. Ware v. Lippincott (N. J. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 404.

3. One cannot be compelled to assign property without proof that the sum agreed to be paid therefor has been paid or tendered. National Oleo Meter Co. v. Jackson, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 609.

To support a bill to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, a tender of payment of the purchase money must have been made. Huff v. Jennings, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 454; Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 339; Allison v. Clark, 1 Ill. 348; Doyle v. Teas, 5 Ill. 202; Hills v. Hills, 94 Ind. 436; Wright v. Le Claire, 4 Greene (Iowa) 420; Izard v. Kimmel, 26 Neb. 51; *Northrup v. Complainants will be refused a decree of specific performance of a contract for the sale of land if it appear at the time of filing the bill and at the time of trial that they are indebted to defendant for the balance of purchase money, which they have not offered to pay. Askew v. Carr, 81 Ga. 685.

See, also, Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 4; Willard v. Foster, 24 Neb.

A different practice is maintained in some States, however, where the rule is that a tender of the purchase money, to be effectual, must be kept good by a payment into court and a notice of such payment to the vendor.¹

The defendant may have rendered a strict tender unnecessary by conduct constituting waiver of that right, as where he has been in the habit of allowing time for payment of installments of purchase money.² So circumstances may sometimes intervene

In a contract for the purchase and sale of land, specific performance should not be decreed against the vendor, without first requiring full payment of the purchase money. Jones v. Alley, 4 Greene (Iowa) 181.

When specific performance of a contract is prayed for, money admitted to be due should be tendered and brought into court. Suydam v. Martin, Wright (Ohio) 384.

2. Where, after default, one waives a condition precedent to the performance of a contract, he cannot insist on the forfeiture provided for in the contract as the result of the non-performance. Izard v. Kimmel, 26 Neb. 51.

Specific performance of a contract to convey land may be decreed in favor of a purchaser who has tendered payment of one of the purchase-money notes punctually, where an effort to pay was made, where previous payments had been accepted after the time agreed on, and where, notwithstanding the failure to pay the last note, the vendor did not insist on a forfeiture, but for a year retained other notes. Svabada v. Cheney, 28 Fed. Rep. 500.

Where a vendee tenders the whole amount of the purchase money, and the interest due on the first installment, at the time the second falls due, and the vendor has taken no steps to release the vendee from his liability on the contract, specific performance may be decreed in favor of the vendee. Gibbs v. Champion, 3 Ohio 337.

One who had purchased land for a large sum sought the vendor on the day set for the delivery of the deed and for payment, going both to her place of business and of residence, but failing to find her, and believing that she was evading his tender of payment, and that it was not safe to take such a sum home with him, deposited it in a bank at six P. M. On his way home after dark, she met him, tendered the deed, and made a demand for the purchase money with which he could not then and there comply. Held, that he was entitled to a decree for specific performance. Hall v. Whittier, 10 R. I. 530.

The vendee took possession under a written contract agreeing to pay the price at stated periods, and to construct a building. By the terms of the contract, if payments were not made at the time agreed, nor the building constructed, the vendee should forfeit all right to the property, and the vendor could take possession the same as if no contract had existed. In a suit by the vendee for specific performance, it appeared that the vendee had not complied with the agreement as to time of payment, but it also appeared that, during the existence of the contract, the time for payment had been verbally extended, and the vendee was to pay the whole price instead of partial payments named, and that he had made a tender of the purchase money within the time to which the payment had been extended. Held, that he was entitled to a specific performance of the contract. Izard v. Kimmel, 26 Neb. 51.

A vendor, on Feb. 19, agreed with his purchaser to deliver a deed April 1, on receipt of cash for part payment and a bond and mortgage to secure the unpaid balance. They met April 1, and the vendee handed the vendor the bond and mortgage, and had a certified check for the cash payment called for. Neither party made a tender. The vendor claimed that he was entitled to interest on the whole purchase money from Feb. 19, and after consulting with his counsel, returned and offered to carry out the contract "according to its terms;" he did not withdraw his construction thereof, nor propose to change the date of the deed. Held, to prevent a strict performance or tender by plaintiff where it would be gross injustice to refuse him equitable relief on account of his technical failure of duty.¹ If payment was to be made in a particular way, the tender must conform to the obligation. Thus, where the consideration was to be labor, a tender of money instead was of no effect.² The tender made must accord with the plaintiff's full duty; and the offer by him of a less amount than his contract calls for, or of but a partial performance will not avail him.³

In the same way, one who seeks to compel another to fulfill a contract of purchase is required to plead and prove his ability and willingness to convey by a sufficient title the entire property which he has agreed to convey and a tender of a sufficient deed thereto. And he must put his vendee into

But compare Daughdrill v. Edwards, 59 Ala. 424. The facts of the case appeared to be substantially thus: In Alabama, in 1864, D bought land of E, giving for the balance of the purchase money two notes payable "in Confederate money, if paid at maturity," in 1865; and taking from E his bond for title thereon. E made no title and brought an action in ejectment, whereupon D filed a bill in equity, alleging that he had tendered Confederate money, etc., and that he was ready and willing to comply with the contract, and offering "to do whatever this court may order to be done in the premises respecting said Confederate money." And the court held that this was not equivalent to an offer to pay whatever may be found due; that the value of the land was the value of the property in lawful money at the time of the sale; that the specific performance should not be decreed, nor the action of ejectment enjoined.

A contract for the sale of land at forty per cent. above its costs, with a credit of one year, is not a usurious contract; and a tender of the original price, with six per cent. interest thereon, is not sufficient to sustain an action to enforce a specific performance. Casady v. Scallen, 15 Iowa 93.

A contract to convey land for a sum of money to be paid in thirty days, cannot be specifically performed where $381.50 was tendered, the amount due being $393.10. Sanford v. Bartholomew, 33 Kan. 38.

The vendor of real estate, retaining the legal title, and the purchase money being unpaid, levied his execution for the purchase money, and purchased the vendee's interest in the land at the sale for a sum less than the amount of the purchase money; the vendee then tendered the sum due upon the original contract after deducting the amount ostensibly made by the sheriff's sale, and filed a bill for specific performance. He was refused relief. Huntington v. Rogers, 9 Ohio St. 511.

In a suit to compel the specific performance of a submission to referees, it appeared that the parties were required to deliver to each other deeds to carry out a partition of a barn and certain land; that plaintiff tendered a deed of the land, but not of the portion of the barn set off to defendant, which was on plaintiff's land. It was held that he could not compel the performance of the agreement on defendant's part. Counce v. Studley, 81 Me. 431.

But compare Totty v. Harris (Iowa, 1891), 48 N. W. Rep. 1050, where a substantial performance by complainant who tendered $3,750 instead of $3,784.42 under a misapprehension as to the correct amount due was held sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a decree on payment of the balance due. See possession or offer to do so.¹ The deed must be brought into court and the tender of it kept good until the suit has been determined.²

As we have seen, it has been very generally held by the courts that the vendor may have a decree of specific performance if he demonstrates his ability to convey a good title by the time the decree is rendered, and that the tender of title is not a condition precedent.³ Should it appear, however, that on a fair construction of the agreement, performance is a condition precedent, performance must be averred and proved.⁴

All necessity for a formal tender disappears where the defend-

Dayton, etc., R. Co.*, 13 Oregon 446.

What Constitutes a Sufficient Tender by Vendor.—If the vendor would enforce a contract for the purchase of real estate he must aver a tender of a sufficient warranty deed, and the tender must be kept good by bringing the deed into court, or by averring a readiness and willingness to execute a deed that will vest title in the purchaser. Goodwine v. Morey, 111 Ind. 68.

Complainant, in a bill to compel specific performance of a contract to exchange lands, showed that he notified the other party to meet him and exchange deeds at the place designated for the purpose in their contract; that he himself was there accordingly, and executed a deed of his land, which he left for delivery to the other, who had not appeared. Held, a sufficient tender and request; and that complainant need not tender to defendant a deed to be executed by him. *Daily v. Where a vendor comes into equity to compel his vendee to receive a title, mere neglect to tender a deed, where the vendee is not injured by the delay, will not preclude the vendor from the aid of the chancellor. Woodson v. Scott, 1 Dana (Ky.) 470.

An administrator who seeks to enforce a land contract made by his intestate need not actually tender the deed to the purchaser, it being sufficient if he show that he is able and willing to make the deed upon payment of the purchase money. Faulkner v. Williman (Ky. 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 352.

ant denies or repudiates the contract;¹ so, if it be evident that a tender would be rejected.² In such cases a simple offer to perform will meet the requirements of equity.³

Time of tender is often an important element. The party in search of equitable relief is expected to perform his obligation at the time agreed upon as well as in the manner stipulated. And any neglect or delay upon his part may be construed as a waiver of his right to compel a performance by the other party.⁴

It is not necessary that a vendor should execute and tender a deed to the vendee in order to entitle him to specific performance of the contract, where he is present at the time and place appointed for delivering it, and the vendee then positively declines and refuses to receive a deed. Pittenger v. Pittenger, 3 N. J. Eq. 156.

A purchaser of land, who had paid part of the purchase money, filed his bill for a specific performance, which was resisted by the vendor. Held, that the plaintiff could not be compelled to pay the residue of purchase-money into court, to abide the event of the suit. Birdsall v. Waldron, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 315.

To entitle the purchaser to the specific performance of a contract to convey land, it is not necessary that he tender the consideration or bring it into court, if the vendor has continually denied the binding force of the contract, and if the purchaser has been at all times ready to perform. Hopwood v. Corbin, 63 Iowa 218.

If, when the purchaser offers to pay the last of the purchase money when due, the vendor declines to give a deed as contracted, on the ground that an incumbrance prevents, the purchaser may maintain a bill for specific performance without a formal tender. Mathison v. Wilson, 87 Ill. 51.

A tender of performance need not be made where it would be wholly nugatory. Where a lessee, under a lease giving him the right to purchase, had shown his election to purchase by making permanent improvements on the premises to the value of several thousand dollars, and had provided himself with gold wherewith to make a tender, and there was strong reason to believe that a tender would have been wholly unavailing to induce the heirs of the lessor to execute a deed, one or more of them having previously declared their determination not to execute a deed, and their belief that they were not obliged to execute it, and where the facts further showed that the premises were incumbered by a dower right and by a mortgage. Held, that a strict tender of the purchase-money was unnecessary. Kerr v. Purdy, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 24.

4. See infra, this title, Laches—Time, When Essential.

A contract for the payment of the price of land "by the first day of August," is a contract to pay on or before that day, and therefore a tender on July 31 is good. Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 12.

A tender by a grantee, of the purchase money, and demand of a conveyance, after a bill filed by the grantor for a specific performance, is a nullity. Knickerbacker v. Harris, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 209.

The making of a tender is construed as an admission of liability to the extent legitimately implied by the tender, and no farther, and is in no sense to be taken as a general admission.¹

Tender made to one of two co-obligees is sufficient.

If the purchaser has died, a tender to his executor—who is also a devisee—of a deed to the devisees is sufficient, a tender to all the heirs being unnecessary.² But where the purchaser has assigned his contract for a deed before payment, and the assignee has neglected to make the payments, a tender of conveyance is properly made to the original purchaser.³

2. Demand.—The defendant must be given an opportunity to comply with his contract before suit is brought. Hence it is necessary to show either a demand and refusal,⁴ if a time was not named in the contract, or that a demand would have been vain.⁵

1. Brix v. Ott, 101 Ill. 70.

In Irvin v. Gregory, 13 Gray (Mass.) 215, the court, by Shaw, C. J., said: "When a strict tender of money is required, it must be an unconditional offer of the full amount due, leaving it only at the will of the other to accept it. But when in their nature the stipulations are, the one to pay money and the other to execute a conveyance and no time fixed, and no provision that either is to be done first, the covenants are mutual and dependent. The one is not bound to pay without receiving his conveyance, nor the other to part with his land without receiving his money. The performances must be simultaneous. In such case it is not necessary on the part of the purchaser to make a strict tender, and actually to deliver over the money unconditionally, without his deed; it is sufficient that upon reasonable notice to the owner that he is ready and willing to perform, and when the performance is the payment of money, that he has the money and is able and prepared to pay, and demands the deed, and the other absolutely refuses to receive the money and execute the deed, that is a sufficient tender of performance to warrant the party so offering to maintain his action." A purchaser of land, whose conveyance is to be made upon the payment of notes given for the purchase money cannot maintain a bill to enforce the execution of the deed, filed after all the notes have become due, without showing a payment of all the notes, or a proper offer to pay them, or something equivalent. West v. Chase, 3 Ind. 301.

Pursuant to agreement, A set apart certain ware for the payment of the notes, and subsequently filed his bill to compel B to execute to him a deed, but did not aver or prove a demand of the deed. Held, that by setting apart the ware, it became the property of B, and the notes were thereby paid; and that B's absence from the State was a sufficient excuse for A's not demanding a deed, had the demand been otherwise necessary. West v. Chase, 3 Ind. 301.

In making demand for a deed it is not necessary that the party making the demand prepare and tender the instrument to be executed, although such has been the English practice. *Taylor v. But this is only necessary to guide the court in its award of costs. The requirements are not strictly binding upon courts of equity, the rights of the parties resting with the discretion of the chancellor instead of being governed by the rigid provisions of the common law.¹

IX. LACHES;² TIME, WHEN ESSENTIAL.—Diligence is expected of all who seek equitable relief. One who disregards the rights of others by unnecessary or unreasonable delay in performing his obligation under a contract, thereby loses the right to require performance of the other party. Where time is in any degree an essential element, his laches will render a decree in his favor inequitable. Delay either in performing his duty or in bringing suit to enforce his rights will endanger his case and justify a court of equity in refusing to give him a hearing.

"It may be laid down as an acknowledged rule in courts of equity," says Chancellor Kent³ "that where the party who demand, as the administrator could not have conveyed without the direction of the court, and the demand would have been in vain. Collins v. Vandever, 1 Iowa 573.

A demand is not essential in a suit for specific performance against the administrator and heirs of the vendor, where the administrator has filed a petition to sell the land as the property of his intestate, and the heirs, as such, have been asserting their title thereto, it being clear that the demand would be unavailing. Denlar v. Hile, 123 Ind. 68.

1. Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266; Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 231.

In Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 194, the court by Smith, J., said: "The rules applicable to the making of a demand before the commencement of a suit do not apply to equitable actions. They apply to strict legal rights. In equity the court has a discretion in respect to costs, and if an action is brought to enforce an equitable right unnecessarily and unreasonably and without giving the defendant a fair opportunity, upon request or otherwise, to allow and to satisfy the plaintiff's claim without suit, the relief may be and ordinarily will be granted without costs, and the court, if it thinks proper, may make the plaintiff pay the defendant's costs." Dec. 635, "must show that he has not been in fault, but has taken all proper steps towards a performance on his own part, and has been ready, desirous and prompt to perform." *Milward v. In equity, lapse of time will create a presumption that the parties have waived or settled their rights, and stale claims when brought into a court of chancery are received without favor, and held entitled to but little consideration, unless attended with circumstances that will repel such presumption. De Cordova v. Smith, 9 Tex. 129; 58 Am. Dec. 139.

A vendor having renounced his agreement in April, 1850, gave notice thereof to the vendee at that time. The vendee in July, 1852, brought his bill for specific performance. Held, that he had lost his remedy in equity, by his delay in filing his bill. White v. Bennett, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 260.

In a suit by a married woman for the specific performance of a contract, where it appeared that for seventeen months she had done nothing to perform her part of the contract, although she had previous to that paid money on the contract, and she had not before suit tendered herself ready to perform and demanded performance of the contract—held, that she was not entitled to a decree for specific performance. *Bullock v. Plaintiff for more than a year neglected to complete his contract to purchase real estate, and on two occasions expressly refused to perform, on the ground that there was a defect in the title, which objection was unsubstantial. Held, that specific performance must be denied. Simpson v. Atkinson, 39 Minn. 238.

Where the purchase of land is made upon condition the title is found good, the purchaser may have a reasonable time in which to determine whether he will take the title the vendor has, or reject it. But he cannot keep the contract open indefinitely, so as to have the benefit of a rise in the value of the property, or relieve himself in case of a depreciation. Hoyt v. Tuxbury, 70 Ill. 331.

If one of the parties to a contract for the acquisition of land neglects or refuses to contribute his share of the expense until he discovers that the contract is profitable, he will not be entitled to specific performance of the contract. McClure v. Purcel, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 61. See also Diamond State Iron Co. v. Todd (Del. 1888), 14 Atl. Rep. 27.

Where a grantor had received a draft, drawn by the grantee upon a third person, as a consideration for his agreement to convey, it was held that he could not defend himself against a bill for specific performance, on the ground of want of consideration, unless he had used ordinary diligence to collect the draft. Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 711; 13 Am. Dec. 568.

Where a contract of sale gives the purchaser of land an option to avoid the contract for objections to the title, any delay in deciding whether he will accept the same will defeat his right to a specific performance. Hoyt v. Tuxbury, 70 Ill. 331.

In Northrup v. Stevens, 39 Minn. 105, the court refused to decree specific performance of an alleged verbal agreement to convey land where the proof of the agreement was uncertain, and suit was not brought until the lapse of thirty-two years from the time of the alleged agreement, nor until six years after the death of a party in interest whose land was its subject. Plaintiff was not exonerated from laches by the fact that, during nineteen years of the intervening period, the party to be charged had kept his property out of his hands to avoid the claims of creditors, nor by frequent promises on his part to make the conveyance.

In Cook v. Stafford, 86 Mich. 163, the court refused to grant specific performance, taking the ground that the complainant had been guilty of inexcusable neglect. The evidence showed that thirty-six years before a father had agreed to convey land to his son; it appeared that for thirty-five years, until the father's death, each had at divers times exercised acts of ownership over such land; that the father kept the fences in repair and paid the taxes; that five years after the making of the bond, with his son's knowledge, he mortgaged said land as security for payment for certain property, a part of which, after the discharge of such mortgage, he conveyed to his son. At the time of the trial no competent witness as to the nature of this transaction was living. It did not appear that the son ever requested performance, nor was any sufficient reason shown for the delay.

Delaying for fifteen years to call for the specific performance of a parol contract to convey land, and not attempting to enforce it in the lifetime of the contractor, if it does not of itself bar an action for relief, is a circumstance of great weight against the complainant, and will make the court require more strict and full proof, and closely scrutinize the evidence. Eyre v. Eyre, 19 N. J. Eq. 102.

Without express notice, when the party who applies for a specific performance has omitted to perform his part of the contract by the time appointed for that purpose, without being able to assign sufficient excuse for his delay, and when there is nothing in the conduct of the other party that amounts to an acquiescence in that delay, the court will not compel a specific performance. Kirby v. Harrison, 2 Ohio St. 326; 59 Am. Dec. 677.

Specific performance of a land contract will be denied where complainant has delayed more than thirty-five years after the contract was made, and twenty-eight years after it was destroyed, before making any effort to enforce it, though he knew that it rested altogether in the recollection of defendant and himself, where his statement of the contract is not definite, and some of its essentials are denied by defendant, who testifies that the contract was to be performed within six years, since which time defendant has treated the contract as having no force, and where, meanwhile, the property has greatly increased in value; and it is immaterial that complainant has asserted a claim from time to time. Van Buren v. Stocking, 86 Mich. 246.

Where a contract is binding upon the vendor only, the vendee must be prompt in demanding a performance of it, and a delay of more than thirty years without payment of the purchase money or entry into possession, will be regarded as such gross laches that the court will refuse a decree for a specific performance of the contract. Love v. Welch, 97 N. Car. 200.

Excuses for Delay Held Insufficient.—By the terms of a contract to convey land, the last payment was due in January, 1858, and payment thereof was not offered until in January, 1873. It was held that the great intimacy and friendship between the parties, the civil war, the purchaser being a citizen of Memphis, Tennessee, the death of the purchaser in 1863, and the minority of his heirs were insufficient excuses for the delay, and a decree for specific performance was, under the circumstances, denied. Walker v. Douglas, 70 Ill. 445.

If the purchase money on a contract for the sale of lands falls due in the lifetime of the vendee, the infancy of his heir will not authorize a decree for specific performance after a considerable lapse of time. Henry v. Conn, 12 Ohio 193.

An heir cannot plead his infancy to excuse the non-assertion of his rights under an executory contract made with his ancestor, when the immediate performance of his part of the contract is essential to the interest of the other party. Walker v. Douglas, 70 Ill. 445.

Defendant promptly executed a contract of sale of land, and sent it to plaintiff to sign, but the latter never returned it, giving as an excuse that it had become defaced and blotted with ink. About six months later plaintiff sent defendant what purported to be copies of the original contract, but defendant did not sign them until more than a year later, giving as a reason for the delay that it had no copy of the original by which to determine whether plaintiff's copies were correct. It was held that, as plaintiff had no reason for requiring the execution of these copies, the delay in obtaining them was no excuse for the delay in tendering the deed. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 76 Iowa 615.

Fourteen years' delay in bringing a suit for specific performance is not sufficiently excused by a general averment of ignorance, without distinct allegations of specific facts showing good reasons therefor. Haggerty v. Elyton Land Co., 89 Ala. 428.

Excuses for Delay.—Because there was an unsatisfied record of a judgment against a former owner of the lot sold, although in fact the judgment had been paid, the purchaser refused the deed. Afterwards he sued the vendor for specific performance, and it was held that if the objections to the title were well founded and urged in good faith, the purchaser was excusable for not performing at the time of the tender; but, if otherwise, he could not be excused for the delay occasioned in the performance on his part. Hoyt v. Tuxbury, 70 Ill. 331.

A court of equity will not refuse to decree specific performance in favor of a purchaser who has delayed payment on account of the doubtfulness of the title, while litigation was pending to settle that doubt. Galloway v. Barr, 12 Ohio 354.

In Peters v. Canfield, 74 Mich. 498, the court decided that delay by the assignee of a contract for the sale of land, in tendering payment and bringing suit for specific performance, is excused where he entertained the idea that the vendor's refusal to recognize his rights was done merely to bother him a little (the vendor having stated to others that that was his object), and also where the vendor has refused to render any statement of payments theretofore made, so as to enable the assignee to know how much to tender, and also where it does not appear that the delay has done the vendor any injury.

Two or three years' delay before claiming title to land orally promised to complainant and bringing suit, is excused by a showing that complainant thought her rights unenforceable for want of a written promise. Brown v. Sutton, 129 U. S. 238.

A bill for the specific performance of a parol agreement to convey land cannot be maintained after a lapse of twenty-five years, unless the complainant could not have asserted his claim before; and the neglect of near relations to aid a minor in the assertion of such claims is a circumstance entitled to consideration, when there is no pretense that they were in collusion with the other party. Dragoo v. Dragoo, 50 Mich. 573.

Where a party neglects for a great length of time to assert his right under a contract, specific performance of it will not be decreed in his favor. But where there is sufficient excuse for the delay, lapse of time will not bar relief. And where there was a delay of thirty years, a part by mutual agreement of the parties, and the residue, except three years, during the insanity of the complainant's ancestor, who made the contract—held that the lapse of time constituted no objection to granting specific relief. Craig v. Leiper, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 193; 24 Am. Dec. 479.

A purchaser of land agreed to pay therefor in a week. Upon a showing that he had been unable to have the title examined within that time it was held that he was justified in requiring further delay, and that, a month after the agreement was made he could maintain a suit for specific performance. Willis v. Dawson, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 492.

The owner of a leasehold estate sued the owner of the reversion, twelve years after the expiration of the lease, which was for ninety-nine years, to enforce specific performance of a covenant in the lease, on the part of the lessor, to renew "at any time during the continuance of the existing term." As an excuse for the delay in demanding a renewal it was alleged that the plaintiff derived his title to the lease through a sale of the estate of a deceased person, purporting to be a sale of the fee simple. It appeared, however, that soon after the expiration of the term the owner of the freehold had brought an action of ejectment against plaintiff, thus disclosing to him his real title. Specific performance was refused. (Robinson J., dissenting.) Myers v. Silljacks, 58 Md. 319.

In Taylor v. Longworth, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 172, the court by Story, J., says: "Relief will be given to the party who seeks it if he has not been grossly negligent, and comes within a reasonable time, although he has not complied with the strict terms of the contract; but in all such cases the court expects the party to make out a case free from all doubt, and show that the relief which he seeks is under all circumstances equitable, and to account in a reasonable manner for his delay and apparent omission of his duty." Quoted in Delavan v. Duncan, 49 N. Y. 485.

As to excuses for delay, generally, see Cohn v. Mitchell, 115 Ill. 124;

Logan v. McChord, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 224; Ashmore v. Evans, 11 N. J. Eq. 151; Campbell v. McFadin, 71 Tex. 28.

Laches—Instances.—A made a contract with B under which B became entitled to a number of acres of land out of one of two different tracts, at his option, or to a certain sum of money with interest. A died, and after a delay of eighteen years, B brought his action on the contract. Held, that if it devolved on B to take the initiative in the execution of the contract, he had lost his rights by his laches; if on A, and the contract was not executed within a reasonable time, it became a moneyed demand, and became stale unless prosecuted within four years after the lapse of such reasonable time. Watson v. Inman, 23 Tex. 531.

Where a party, seeking specific performance, had taken no step to enforce it for twenty years, and had sold a portion of the property which was the consideration of the defendant's promise, he was left to his remedy, if any, at law. McGalliard v. Aikin, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 186.

Specific performance of an agreement to convey land will not be enforced if the purchaser has not fulfilled his part of the agreement by an offer of the payment of the purchase-money, and has neglected to seek legal redress until nine months after the time fixed for the payment, notwithstanding that the vendor had declared two years prior to such time that he never would comply with the contract on his part. Gentry v. Rogers, 40 Ala. 442.

In 1839, A agreed in writing to take from C a lot on a ground rent, made improvements thereon, and paid ground rent till 1850, often demanding but being refused a conveyance. In 1851, he notified C that he would not recognize his title, and should claim a return of rents paid on the ground that he had no title, there being an outstanding term of 10,000 years. C rested till 1864, and then filed a bill for specific performance, without a step taken to acquire title himself or to make one to A. Held, that his contract was stale, and his prayer should not be granted. Cadwalader's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 158.

Where a party in possession of land under a written contract of sale makes default in his payments, and thereupon suffers the vendor to recover judgment against him in an ejectment suit, and oust him from the premises, he has no equity to entitle him to claim a specific performance. Tibbs v. Morris, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 138.

Change of Circumstances Meanwhile.

—One who desires to enforce specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of land, must present his claim without any unnecessary delay, and while affairs remain in such a condition that performance can be enforced without injury to others, and must not have done any act that is incompatible with his claim for performance. Porter v. Dougherty, 25 Pa. St. 405.

For if while he is delaying in the fulfillment of his obligation, the value of the property or the circumstances of the parties have changed so that it may prove unfair to others to compel the performance, it will not be enforced. See supra, this title, Fairness—Change of Circumstances. Mundy v. Davis, 20 Fed. Rep. 355; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317; 70 Am. Dec. 725; McKay v. Carrington, 1 McLean (U. S.) 50; Brashier v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 528; Holgate v. Eaton, 116 U. S. 33; Requa v. Snow, 76 Cal. 590; Shortall v. Mitchell, 57 Ill. 161; Young v. Daniels, 2 Iowa 126; 63 Am. Change of Circumstances.—Time is frequently considered not of the essence of an agreement to convey lands; but in all cases where the value of the property has materially changed, or where great financial changes have materially altered the relative value of money and land, time will be considered material, and a party will not be allowed to lie by until the change sets in his favor, and then ask for specific performance. Merritt v. Brown, 19 N. J. Eq. 286.

The court refused to decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of a house, where there had been a delay of eight months in completing the house, which had greatly depreciated in the mean time. Colcock v. Butler, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 307.

In a bill in equity for specific performance, the general offer to do and perform whatever the court shall decree ought to be done on the part of the complainant, is not enough to maintain his case, when it appears that, prior to the bringing of the suit, he never offered or intended to perform the contract, and that the bill is filed a long time after such things should have been performed, and when the condition of the parties has materially changed. Ely v. McKay, 12 Allen (Mass.) 323.

A contract to convey lands will not be specifically enforced when the complainants have unreasonably delayed the filing of their bill, and the defendant has meanwhile made extensive improvements upon the land greatly in excess of its original value. Penrose v. Leeds, 46 N. J. Eq. 294.

Where a landowner contracts with an attorney of the owner of certain mill property for an exchange, the deeds to be exchanged simultaneously, the purchaser of the mill to take it subject to certain incumbrances, and the land to be transferred subject to an incumbrance, and the purchaser of the mill tenders his deed and an abstract of his land, but there is a delay on the part of the mill owners, the mill meantime being burned, the contract will not be enforced. Kinney v. Hickox, 24 Neb. 167.

A purchaser of property understood by both parties to have been bought for immediate use cannot be compelled to perform when seller delays making title so long as to frustrate the object of the purchase. So held upon suit for a specific performance of a receiver's sale. Parsons v. Gilbert, 45 Iowa 33.

Specific performance of an agreement to convey land by warranty deed, will be refused if there has been a delay of six months, when the value was applies for a specific performance has omitted to execute his part of the contract by the time appointed for that purpose, without being able to assign any sufficient justification or excuse for his delay; and where there is nothing in the acts or conduct of the other party that amounts to an acquiescence in that delay the court will not compel a specific performance." If, while he has been sleeping on his rights, the interests of third parties have intervened, he will be estopped from claiming a specific performance as against them. If he has failed to assert his claims and has permitted innocent purchasers to come into possession and make improvements while he has stood by in silence, he will be deemed to have waived and lost his equitable interests.¹

rapidly increasing. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 Fed. Rep. 5.

Specific performance of a contract to convey land will not be granted, where the grantee has delayed for nearly six years in bringing his suit, and meanwhile the grantor has died, the taxes have all been paid by him and his heirs, and the land has increased 20 to 50 fold in value. Combs v. Scott, 76 Wis. 662.

But compare Austin v. Wacks, 30 Minn. 335, where it was held that if time be not essential, and the situation of the parties is unchanged, and the delay is reasonably excused, and the vendee manifests good faith and is reasonably vigilant, the court may relieve him from the consequences of the delay, even though the land has increased in value. Austin v. Wacks, 30 Minn. 335.

Compare Sylvester v. Born, 132 Pa. St. 467. See supra, this title, Fairness—Change of Circumstances.

In Roby v. Cossit, 78 Ill. 638, the contract sought to be enforced had been made for the sale of land in February, 1867, for $52,000, one-third of which was to be paid in cash, and the balance in two equal annual installments, with interest. The purchaser paid only $500 down, and did not offer to make the several payments when due, and did not file his bill for specific performance until July, 1873, when the property had greatly risen in value. It was held in the absence of any excuse being shown, that the delay in offering to perform, and in filing his bill, were such that equity could not aid him.

It was agreed between a judgment creditor and debtor that the latter should pay the judgment in land, at a value to be fixed by persons designated, and the debtor defeated the performance of the agreement until his land had risen in value. Held, that he could not maintain a bill for specific performance of the contract. Pillow v. Pillow, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 644.

Other Interests Intervening.—Where no effort was made by a vendee of land, in his lifetime, to obtain a conveyance of the land, nor by his heirs, after his death, until after the lapse of twenty-nine years from the time when the vendee was entitled to demand a conveyance, the value of the land having, in the meantime, materially increased, and other circumstances having changed—held, on a bill by the heirs for specific execution of the contract of sale, that the lapse of time was conclusive against their claim. Holt v. Rogers, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 420.

Where a contract for the sale of land provides for the payment of the purchase money in installments, the last of which falls due within two years, and the purchaser fails to make any payment for eight years and until after the land has been sold to another, except a small sum at the time of making the contract, he cannot enforce specific performance either against his vendor or the second vendee. Thompson v. Bruen, 46 Ill. 125.

Where a bill was filed for specific performance of a contract, thirty-

It has been held that laches will not be imputed to an infant.¹ But this is denied.²

Laches is no defense to one who, by his own acts, has occasioned the plaintiff's delay or failure to perform; nor to one who has recently recognized the validity of the contract by acting under it or by overlooking the complainant's laches, and has thus waived his right to a rescission; nor to one who fails to show that he has been ready at all times to perform all substantial conditions required of him.³

seven years after it was alleged to have been made, no effort having been made in the meantime to enforce it, and where the rights of subsequent bona fide purchasers, without notice, had intervened, specific performance was refused. Ewing v. Beauchamp, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 422.

After he had warned the purchaser, who was grossly in default, the vendor sold the premises to others who knew the facts, but purchased in good faith, paying a sum which would not exceed the amount remaining due from the former purchaser, and which was all that could have been obtained at a sale on foreclosure. The former purchaser did not warn the later one against proceeding to use the lands. Held, that he had waived his claim and a decree for specific performance in his favor, on a bill against the vendor and the later purchaser, was not equitable and must be denied. Russell v. Nester, 46 Mich. 290.

Against the personal representatives of a decedent specific performance of his written contract to convey land, which was lost during decedent's lifetime, will not be enforced ten years after its execution. Hodge v. Weeks, 31 S. Car. 276.

An agreement to execute a mortgage will not be enforced against creditors of the mortgagor where the complainant has slept upon his rights for three years before the mortgagor's death and for eight years afterward. Nelson v. Hagerstown Bank, 27 Md. 51.

A purchaser at a trustee's sale, the terms of which are cash, who does not tender the money within a reasonable time, cannot afterwards demand a specific performance of the contract against the debtor who has paid the debt and costs, especially if he obtained his purchase through the inadvertence of the debtor. He who wants strict law, in such a case, must strictly comply with the law. Heuer v. Rutkowski, 18 Mo. 216.

On a suit against the heirs of an estate for the specific performance of an oral contract made with their ancestor thirty years before, the delay must be excused by a very satisfactory showing of facts. Ritson v. Dodge, 33 Mich. 463.

Where A, by a valid agreement, was to convey land to B, the fact that, after B's death, his child, during her infancy, lived near the land for many years, and saw A's grantee making improvements, will not prevent such infant from specifically enforcing the contract on her arrival at majority. *Putnam v. In Tilton v. Stein, 87 Ill. 122, a jeweler had sold his stock and good will, binding himself in the sale not to engage in that business in the town, except to finish up the work on hand and make good the warranties on previous work. It was held that a delay of eight years would not defeat a bill by the purchaser, to enforce the contract; the vendor having carried on business in the name of another. Tilton v. Stein, 87 Ill. 122.

Where the vendor has notified his purchaser to surrender possession and has sued him in ejectment before he has had time or opportunity to complete performance of his agreement to erect thereon one residence within four months, and another within a year, the failure on the purchaser's part to build the second house within the year was not the laches of the purchaser, and did not estop him from obtaining equitable relief. Powell v. Higley, 90 Ala. 103.

A vendor delivered to a conveyancer, who had been chosen to draw up a conveyance, the title deed under which he held; the purchaser withdrew this deed, and, by neglecting to return it, embarrassed the preparation of the conveyance. He also neglected other duties devolving on him, incidental to the performance of the contract. On a bill afterwards filed by him for a specific performance he was denied a decree on the ground that his own defaults had prevented performance by the vendor. Kinney v. Redden, 2 Del. Ch. 46.

Where the vendor in a contract for the sale of land, promptly offers to perform on his part, and the purchaser is able to perform on his part but refuses to do so, and is informed that, unless he does so, on or before the day for performance named in the contract, the vendor will not convey, and he still refuses to perform, without any reasonable excuse for so doing, and permits the time named in the contract to expire, before offering to perform, he has no right to a specific performance of the contract. Ditto v. Harding, 73 Ill. 117.

A contract for sale of land acknowledged a payment to bind the bargain and provided that the balance be paid within five days, without naming a place of payment. On the third day the parties met, and agreed to meet that evening and complete the contract. The vendee went to the place where, as he testifies, they agreed to meet, while the vendor remained at his residence, where he and others testify that the meeting was to take place. At this time a lien on the land remained undischarged, so that the vendor could not give title. After the expiration of the five days, the vendee repeatedly tried to find the vendor, but failed, and the evidence tended to show that the latter knew that the vendee had contracted to sell at a profit, and therefore he did not wish to complete the contract. He had stated when making the contract that he was in need of money, but he did not use the check given as part payment. The price was fair and reasonable. The vendee finally tendered the price, and it was refused. Held, that time was not of the essence of the contract, and specific performance would be decreed. Dynan v. McCulloch, 46 N. J. Eq. 11. Eubank v.

Hampton, 1 Dana (Ky.) 343; Lake v. Lewis, 16 Neb. 94.

Where there has been a lapse of twenty-three years from the date of purchase and thirteen years since a payment has been made, but the vendor has preserved the vigor of the contract by the pendency of an action to enforce a lien for the purchase money, and the vendee, answering to that action, offers to perform and asks specific performance against the vendor, the latter cannot be heard to object on account of the delay, because by his own act he has continuously recognized the obligation of the contract. Bennett v. Welch, 25 Ind. 140; 87 Am. Dec. 354.

A delay of two days, in the payment on a contract to convey land, is not material, where the parties had already waived the delay of one day. Durand v. Sage, 11 Wis. 151.

Where a party has accepted a part performance of the contract at several different times after the time limited by the contract for complete performance, and down nearly to the time of filing a bill against him for a specific performance of his part of the contract, he cannot defend on the ground of lapse of time. Voorhees v. DeMeyer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 37.

In a late New Jersey case complainant's husband, who wished to purchase a certain property for business purposes, induced defendant to take the title until the husband could pay him the purchase price, $2,800, which the husband was to raise in two years. On obtaining possession, he made improvements to the building which cost nearly $1,000. The owner made a deed to defendant, and a contract was signed by defendant agreeing to convey to complainant. Under the agreement between the husband and defendant, the former immediately took possession, and paid defendant $168 a year. At the expiration of the two years, the husband, finding himself unable to pay the amount due, requested defendant to extend the agreement for three years, and an extension for two years was granted. At the expiration of the last two years, the husband asked for more time, and was refused. Defendant continued, however, to take the payments from the husband, and until more than a year thereafter gave him no warning that he was no longer under obligations to convey the property. Nor did he ever offer to deliver a deed to complainant or her husband on paying the price agreed. Held, in a suit for specific performance begun shortly after said last notice, that complainant's right to have the contract enforced had not been lost. Schloetter v. Wagner (N. J. 1891), 21 Atl. Rep. 863.

Contracts which fix no imperative day for performance or of which time is not of the essence must be fulfilled within a reason-

One who has acquiesced in the delay cannot be heard to complain. Brown v. Guarantee Trust, etc., Co., 128 U. S. 403; Bass v. Gilliland, 5 Ala. 761; Stewart v. Stokes, 33 Ala. 494; 73 Am. Dec. 429; Barsolou v. Newton, 63 Cal. 223; Moody v. Griffin, 60 Ga. 459; Morgan v. Scott, 26 Pa. St. 51; Collins v. Vandever, 1 Iowa 573; Hutcheson v. McNutt, 1 Ohio 14; Logan v. McChord, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 224; Hull v. Sturdivant, 46 Me. 34; Schroeppel v. Hopper, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 425.

Where one of the parties to a contract for the sale of land notifies the other that he will not perform it, acquiescence in this by the other party (not being in possession) by a comparatively brief delay in enforcing his right by suit will bar an action for specific performance. McDermid v. McGregor, 21 Minn. 111.

In a suit for specific performance, where the evidence shows continued acquiescence on the part of defendant in the conduct of the plaintiff, and no serious harm is done by the delay to seek relief, the defense of laches is of no avail. Welch v. Whelpley, 62 Mich. 15.

A provision in a contract to convey, making time of the essence of the contract is waived by the vendor's insisting on payment after the expiration of the time. Thayer v. Wilmington Star Min. Co., 105 Ill. 540.

In a case where time was not of the essence of the contract, where the vendee met the first payments, and having become insolvent failed to make the later ones as agreed, but was accommodated by the vendor, who allowed him to remain in possession for three or four years, and make valuable improvements, and afterwards tendered to him a deed which was not according to the agreement, because it did not contain full covenants, and without any offer to return the money already paid, with the consideration notes—held, that the vendee was entitled upon payment of the balance of the purchase money to specific performance. Murphy v. Lockwood, 21 Ill. 611.

In a contract for the conveyance of land, where the vendor has shown great indulgence, time not being of the essence of the contract, he may be prevented from suddenly insisting upon a forfeiture. Murphy v. Lockwood, 21 Ill. 611.

Where the purchaser of land took possession and made payments, and continued to pay the interest, notwithstanding the vendor had failed to deliver certain bonds according to the agreement at the time of the sale—held, that the defendant had waived the delivery of the bonds at the day. Ramsay v. Brailsford, 2 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 582; 2 Am. Dec. 698.

If one party sues on the note which, according to the terms of the contract, should have been, but was not, paid at the day, or otherwise treats the contract as valid and subsisting, he will be deemed to have waived the failure to perform at the day. Younger v. Welch, 22 Tex. 417; Minert v. Emerick, 6 Wis. 355.

Where the contract fixes no time for the payment of the purchase money, and imposes no penalty for default of payment, and the purchaser is allowed to enter into possession and improve the property, a subsequent acceptance of the purchase money by the grantor is a waiver of any default in payment, and the purchaser is entitled to a deed. Lake v. Lewis, 16 Nev. 94.

A vendor who contracts for the sale of a parcel of land for the sum of $3,300, and on the same day makes out a deed, properly describing the land, and places it in escrow, and afterwards, at different times, accepts from the purchaser the sum of $3,159.50 on the purchase price, one payment being accepted after the time limited in the contract had expired, cannot avoid specific performance of such contract by mailing to the purchaser a certificate of deposit of a local bank of the amount paid by such purchaser. Wilson v. Emig, 44 Kan. 125.

Acceptance of part payment is a waiver of defaults on the part of purchaser. Paulman v. Cheney, 18 Neb. 392; Brassell v. McLemore, 50 Ala. 476; House v. Beatty, 7 Ohio 84.

able time on the part of the one seeking specific performance or the delay explained consistently with good faith.¹

Mere delay need not prejudice the interests of the one in default, unless the delay be so great as to work an injury to the other, or unless the parties have made time of the essence of the contract; for, ordinarily, a trifling delay may be compensated in the decree by awarding damages or by the allowance of interest. Nor will lapse of time constitute a defense to a bill brought by one upon whom the contract has imposed no condition precedent.² Nor will one who has been diligent outside of court in

Where no time is fixed in the contract for the sale of land, or time is not essential, it will not, however, be permitted to the party who is to make the conveyance to trifle with the interests of the opposite party by unnecessary delay. It is in the power of the party to fix some reasonable time, not capriciously or with intent to surprise, but a reasonable time, according to the circumstances of the case, within which he will expect the title to be made at the peril of rescinding the agreement. Thompson v. Dulles, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 370.

In Haffner v. Dickson, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 46, a conveyance of land was enforced after a lapse of twenty-seven years.

Ordinarily, payment of the price at the day is not necessary where not expressly stipulated for, and where the purchaser can be compelled to make ample compensation for the delay. Reed v. Jones, 8 Wis. 392.

Where an action for specific performance of an agreement to abandon a suit was not begun until about ten years after the execution of the agreement, but it appeared that the loss of the stipulation had not been discovered until about a year before the bringing of the action, and defendant had suffered no harm from the delay, laches was held to be no defense. Deen v. Milne, 113 N. Y. 303.

Specific performance of an intestate's contract to convey was granted in Pritchard v. Todd, 38 Conn. 413, notwithstanding the purchaser was chargeable with delay in paying the balance of price.

Time is not of the essence of every contract, and therefore every failure by the petitioner in a literal performance does not of necessity furnish a sufficient defense against a bill for a specific performance. The provision broken should be of such a character as to constitute a condition precedent to the petitioner's right to enforce the contract, or be such as to invalidate the contract; or in some other manner to make it clearly inequitable, under circumstances indicating fraud, mistake, surprise, unreasonable delay, gross neglect, or bad faith, that the petitioner should have a decree. Quinn v. Roath, 37 Conn. 16.

Where time is not of the essence of the contract, the delinquent party is entitled to relief if the delay is excused, and the situation of the parties is not so altered that injury will result, and the party has shown reasonable vigilance. Hubbell v. Von Schoening, 49 N. Y. 326.

Where time is not of the essence of asserting his rights and attempting to enforce his contract be made to suffer for his delay in commencing suit, even though it be long continued.¹ But where one party has been guilty of negligence and the other has done everything in his power to rescind, equity will give no aid to the one in default.²

It has been said that in equity time is not of the essence of the contract. But this doctrine is to be accepted with caution and the contract, the vendor will be allowed a reasonable time to obtain a perfect title. Rader v. Neal, 13 W. Va. 373.

Where in a contract for the sale of land it does not appear that time is of the essence, the fact that the vendor tenders the deed about a month later than agreed upon does not prejudice his right to a specific performance of the contract. Butler v. Archer, 76 Iowa 551.

And a delay of four months in bringing suit upon such a contract, was held not fatal in Litsey v. Whittemore, 111 Ill. 267.

In Young v. Daniels, 2 Iowa 126; 63 Am. Dec. 477, notes had been given; three months after the last one was due the party sought to pay it; the holder of the notes never demanded payment, nor when the suit was brought, two years after the first and one year after the second note was due, did he offer to return the notes; specific performance was decreed, it not appearing that the respondent was injured by the delay.

A delay of eighteen years to enforce execution of a contract for the purchase of land is not a bar to a suit for the land, where a large part of the price has been paid, and a judgment entered for the residue, the interest on which was more than paid by the rents or profits. McLaughlin v. Shields, 12 Pa. St. 283.

Certain parties who had conveyed land to a county had never obtained a patent therefor. The county took possession, and agreed with a claimant that he was to quitclaim the land, upon a reasonable demand when he should obtain a patent. He obtained the patent the next year. Held, that the right to such deed was not lost by lapse of time. Skipwith v. Martin, 50 Ark. 141.

The parties contracted in June for an exchange of real estate in Missouri and Iowa, respectively; executed their deeds and deposited them, in a bank, together with $500 of defendant's money as part consideration, to be paid when defendant should ascertain that plaintiff had a good title, the parties agreeing to make good any defect in their respective titles. Plaintiff tendered an abstract showing a good title, and his own deed of warranty in September of the same year. Held, that having complied with his contract within a reasonable time, he was entitled to a specific performance. King v. Gsantner, 23 Neb. 795.

Under an agreement between A and B in 1837, B took a transfer of a land certificate to hold one-half in trust for A; the patent was issued in 1847, and B acknowledged the trust in 1848; the first act in the record denoting hostility to A's claim was the sale of the land by B's administrator in September, 1852, and the suit to enforce the trust was brought in December, before the payment of the purchase-money. Held, that the claim could not be regarded as stale. Hodges v. Johnson, 15 Tex. 570; Koen v. White, Meigs (Tenn.) 358.

S entered into a contract to purchase lands and paid a small portion of the price at the time of execution, but did not pay the subsequent installments. Several years afterward the vendor notified him that the contract had long been forfeited, and that he was only hesitating what to do on his part. S took no steps to enforce the sale until three years after such notice, when the land had become valuable, although, in the meantime, the vendor had paid taxes on the land and sold it again. Held, that S was not entitled to specific performance. Smith v. Lawrence, 15 Mich. 499; 99 Am. Dec. 344.

But it is not a sufficient defense to a suit for specific performance to show that when the defendant had the option of rescinding he wrote to plaintiff that he would rescind, without proof that may not be made the excuse or justification of one who has been guilty of gross neglect or unconscionable laches. If the parties have made the time of performance an essential element in the contract, equity will so regard it.¹ Time may be made essential the letter was received. Echols v. Butler, 28 Miss. 114.

Where, by the terms of the contract, time is not made material, either party may enforce performance by executing, or tendering the execution of the contract on his part, and demanding the same of the opposite party. Knott v. Stephens, 5 Oregon 235.

In Barnard v. Lee, 97 Mass. 92, the court by Gray, J., said: "This equitable doctrine" (that time will not be considered to be of the essence) "was formerly carried to an unreasonable extent, and the specific performance of contracts enforced after such a lapse of time and change of circumstances as to produce as much injustice as it avoided. In modern times the doctrine has been more guardedly applied, and it is now held that time, although not ordinarily of the essence of a contract in equity, yet may be made so by clear manifestation of the intent of the parties in the contract itself, by subsequent notice from one party to the other, by laches in the party seeking to enforce it, or by change in the value of the land or other circumstances which would make a decree for specific performance inequitable."

In Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. (U. S.) 94, the court by Campbell, J., said: "But it must affirmatively appear that the parties regarded time as an essential element in their agreement, or a court of equity will not so regard it." And see Brown v. Guarantee Trust, etc., Co., 128 U. S. 403.

For instances where time has been held not essential, see Skipwith v. Martin, 50 Ark. 141; Langan v. Thummel, 24 Neb. 265; Willard v. Foster, 24 Neb. 205; Moote v. Scriven, 33 Mich. 500; De Camp v. Crane, 19 N. J. Eq. 166; Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354; Day v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. 191; Sylvester v. Born, 132 Pa. St. 467.

The earlier rule in Indiana and elsewhere was that courts of equity would not count time as essential unless from the terms of the contract and the conduct of the parties it was evident that it was the intention of the parties to make it so. Brumfield v. Palmer, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 227; Keller v. Fisher, 7 Ind. 718; Day v. Patterson, 18 Ind. 114.

But this has been denied in the later decisions. Says the court by Elliott, C. J., in Cartmel v. Newton, 79 Ind. 1: "It is the general rule in equity that 'time is not, in general, of the essence of the contract, and may, in a court of equity, under certain circumstances be disregarded.' The rule is somewhat differently stated by Judge Story, who says: 'Time is not generally deemed in equity to be of the essence of the contract, unless the parties have expressly so treated it, or it necessarily follows from the nature and circumstances of the contract.' 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 776. This doctrine has received the approval of this court. Brumfield v. Palmer, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 227; Ewing v. Crouse, 6 Ind. 312; Day v. Patterson, 18 Ind. 114. The general rule is, it will be observed, stated in guarded terms. The soundness of the rule itself has been doubted by able lawyers. It is, at all events, a rule to be stated with care and applied with caution. If not, there is danger of courts making rather than enforcing contracts. The reason for the rule shows the necessity of applying it with scrupulous care."

Instances Where Time Has Been Deemed Essential.—A court of equity will not enforce the specific performance of an agreement, by which the defendant was to convey to the plaintiff on a day certain, a farm with growing crops, in the midst of the growing season, and also transfer horses and cattle, and was to vacate his place of residence, remove his family therefrom, and seek another home, where the defendant offered to fulfill his part of the agreement on such a day, but the plaintiff declined at that time to carry out the contract. Gale v. Archer, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 320.

Where a bond is given for title to land, if the price is paid by a day certain, time is of the essence of the contract, and unless the money is paid at that day, the vendee cannot enforce a specific performance, there being no obligation to pay the purchase-money. Shuffleton v. Jenkins, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 427.

Where the payment of the price on a particular day was a condition precedent to the conveyance and surrender of the possession of the land sold, time was held to be of the essence of the contract; and the personal representatives of the purchaser, he having died just before the day to pay arrived, were not allowed to have specific performance, payment not having been tendered on that day. Jones v. Noble, 3 Bush (Ky.) 694.

Where A agreed with B to rent him a store on his procuring C as surety for the rent before a day certain, and B failed to procure C as surety before the time fixed—held, that as time was of the essence of the contract, B was not entitled to a performance of A's contract, nor to the aid of a court of equity by injunction. Mitchell v. Wilson, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 697.

By the provision of a contract for the purchase of land, if the vendor failed to perfect the title within nine months, the purchaser might either perfect it at the vendor's expense, or at his election, reconvey and receive back the consideration. Time was held to be of the essence of this part of the contract, and specific performance against the purchaser refused when the vendor had not perfected his title within the time named, although he did so afterwards. Lowery v. Niccolls, 11 Ill. App. 450.

The manager had the right to purchase his principal's business of manufacturing and trading cloaks, on giving sixty days' notice. Time being of the essence of this contract, the court held that a notice given when the manager was not able to pay the price and unaccompanied by a tender, and not followed up promptly could not be made the foundation of a suit for specific performance. Carter v. Phillips, 114 Mass. 100.

A wife executed an agreement that if her husband would pay a certain sum on a mortgage debt on the day it became due, she would deed a part of the land mortgaged. Held, that time was essential, and the husband by failing to pay the money on the day specified lost the right to enforce it. Stembridge v. Stembridge, 87 Ky. 91.

Time is essential, in a parol contract for the sale of land, in respect to the specific performance of it by a court of equity. Goodwin v. Lyon, 4 Port. (Ala.) 297.

A title bond stipulating that the erection of certain improvements within six months is the principal consideration of sale, and that a failure so to do will work a forfeiture, must be strictly construed, and neglect to make the required improvements for two years without sufficient excuse is a good defense to a bill by the heirs of the purchaser for specific performance. Haggerty v. Elyton Land Co., 89 Ala. 428.

Where the plaintiffs gave their note to the defendants, payable in one year, and bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, at a time when the current rate of interest was ten per cent. per month, in consideration of which he received a covenant from the payees to convey them certain land on the payment of the note at maturity—held, that the low rate of interest raised the presumption that the parties intended that the note should be paid at maturity. Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 566.

A contract for the sale of lands provided that unless two notes were paid at maturity, the time of their payment to be regarded as of the essence of the contract, the agreement should be void. The vendee paid one note at maturity, and tendered payment of the other six days after it fell due. Held, that he was not entitled to a decree of specific performance. Heckard v. Sayre, 34 Ill. 142.

Plaintiff and defendant together bought a lot and erected a dwelling-house on it, and took stock in a building and loan association, and on the loan obtained were required to make monthly payments. They agreed that if at any time either should fail to pay his share of the dues for two months, he should surrender to the other his right to the stock, and convey to him his interest in the premises. Time was held to be of the essence of the contract, and defendant, who had defaulted for two months and a half in the payment of the dues, was decreed to convey his interest. Nageli v. Lenimer (N. J. 1888), 16 Atl. Rep. 205.

Where in a contract of purchase time was made essential, and the agreement provided for a forfeiture of the purchase if payments were not punctually made, and of all rights acquired under it, without any right in the vendee of reclamation or compensation for money paid, etc., and the vendor declared a forfeiture for default in payment of the purchase-money notes, when due, but did not surrender the notes to the purchaser—held that the purchaser was not entitled to a specific performance, and that an offer to return the notes was not necessary before declaring the forfeiture; and that the fact that the vendor had before indulged the purchaser by accepting payments after they were due, furnished no excuse for his not meeting the other payments promptly, and did not operate to prevent the vendor from declaring the forfeiture. Phelps v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 63 Ill. 468.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of land will be refused where the contract is wholly executory and the time when the purchase money is to be paid is particularly set with an express condition of forfeiture if not paid at the time, and where the purchaser has never taken possession or expended anything on the premises, but has waited for several years after the payments were due, and until there has been a rise in value. O'Fallon v. Kennerly, 45 Mo. 124.

In Reed v. Breeden, 61 Pa. St. 460, time was held to be of the essence of the contract in suit, it being an agreement for the sale of land, by which a portion of the purchase-money was to be paid on delivery of the deed. The deed was executed, but the purchaser paid only a portion of the amount agreed to be then paid; and the attorney was instructed that if the remainder of the amount agreed to be paid down was not paid at an appointed time, all negotiations should cease, and he should destroy the deed.

A contract for the purchase of real estate provided that if the vendee should fail to pay any installment of the purchase price at the time specified, or should fail to perform any of the covenants to be performed by him, all moneys already paid should be forfeited, and the vendor should be forever discharged from any liability under the contract, which should become void. The court held that this provision was intended for the benefit of the vendor, who might waive it, and that the vendee was not entitled to avoid the contract for his own default. Dana v. St. Paul Investment Co., 42 Minn. 194.

After a lapse of seven years, the court will not decree a specific performance of a contract in which time is essential, and where the parties cannot be placed in the same situation as though exact punctuality had been observed, and where real fault is imputable to the plaintiff, notwithstanding that in the part execution of the contract large sums of money have been expended by the plaintiff, and the first default was on the part of the defendant, which laches of the defendant caused the fault imputable to the plaintiff. Pratt v. Carroll, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 471.

At a sale on execution, the plaintiff's attorney bought the land sold, and afterwards sold the same to A, who gave his bond to the defendant, to convey to him in consideration of sums paid and to be paid, the bond to be void on failure to pay at a day certain. The defendant failed to obtain the money, when B advanced it for him, took a conveyance to himself, and gave a similar bond to the defendant, who failed to raise the money, and procured B to convey to C, who gave the defendant a written promise to convey to him, on payment of a specified sum, on a day fixed. Held, that, after the lapse of the time specified, neither the defendant nor his creditors had any claim in equity for specific performance of the contract; that, as there was no evidence of fraud on the part of the attorney at the sale, he could not be deemed a trustee for either by the terms of the contract itself, or by the subsequent conduct of the parties in relation thereto.¹

the benefit of the defendant's creditors, and that the purchaser from him took a valid title. Russell v. Geyer, 4 Mo. 384.

The rule that in the case of a contract for the sale of land where time is expressly made of the essence of the contract notwithstanding hardship of forfeiture, equity will enforce it and will not relieve from a forfeiture applied where a railroad company sold to B, "for improvement and cultivation," eighty acres of land in Kansas for $120, whereon was a three-foot vein of coal, which fact B knew, but the company did not, and B was prevented from seasonably making a payment, by reason of having sprained his foot while on a visit to Indiana, B never having entered into possession or made any improvements, and the company tendering back the money it had received. Missouri River, etc., R. Co. v. Brickley, 21 Kan. 275.

July 31, 1886, G purchased from T a city lot, paying fifty dollars upon the price which was $1,800 and took a receipt therefor, the terms being that $1,000 in cash should be paid on delivery of a deed, G to assume a mortgage of $750. The receipt stipulated that "if final payment is not made within twenty days all rights are to be forfeited." Possession was not taken by G. At the end of the 20 days, T tendered G a deed, and demanded payment, which was refused, the reason assigned being that one C had begun suit against T to enforce a contract of sale made August 9, following the date of G's contract, but which sale was shown to have been made by an agent, without authority, as G knew. June 23, 1887, G filed his answer and cross-bill in the suit of C against T, by which he sought specific performance and conveyance. Meantime the property had greatly increased in value. Held, that time was of the essence of the contract, and that G could not enforce it. Canfield v. Tillotson, 25 Neb. 857.

In Kelsey v. Crowther (Utah 1891), 27 Pac. Rep. 695, the vendor contracted to sell land and to furnish an abstract of title, the vendee to have thirty days to examine the title and pay the balance of the price. Held, that a tender of the purchase money by the vendee on the 31st day was too late even though the vendor did not furnish the abstract within the thirty days.

A contract to convey land which provides that the purchase price be paid within sixty days from its date, "otherwise this agreement to be null and void," clearly shows the intention of the parties to make time the essence of the contract; and the failure of the vendees or their assignee to make or tender payment within the specified time precludes them from maintaining an action for the specific performance of the contract. Martin v. Morgan, 87 Cal. 203.

The contract sued upon in Bennett v. Hyde (Cal. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 104 provided that if plaintiff should "fail to comply with any one of the agreements herein specified, then this contract shall immediately become void," and defendant in a letter extending the time for the last payment wrote that "time must be the special and essential ingredient in the extension, as it was intended to be in the original contract." It was held that the evidence proved conclusively that time was of the essence of the contract. See, also, Tiernan v. Roland, 15 Pa. St. 420.

Elements in Determining Whether Time Is Essential—Time may be of the essence of a contract for the sale of land, not only by the express agreement of the parties, but where the circumstances of the case show such must have been their intention. The fact that land is the subject of a contract for sale is not, of itself, sufficient to make time of the essence of such contract; but the fact that land is constantly rising in this State, in value, is a circumstance in favor of the presumption that time is to be, and was regarded by the parties as, material. Where default is made, the payment of interest on the purchase money would be comparatively but a slight compensation to the vendor for the loss in the increased value of the land, and of the use of the money in the purchase of other land or property which is augmenting in value or price. Edwards v. Atkinson, 14 Tex. 373.

The rule that time is not of the essence of the contract governs where the agreement is for the conveyance of real estate and the parties have acted upon the faith of it so far as to suffer a change of possession and the making of improvements.¹

Time Not Essential—Waiver of Promptness.—The fact that neither party performed or offered to perform on the day fixed by the contract, and that the purchaser continued in possession some days after, shows that time was not regarded by them as of the essence of the contract; and continued possession by a party precludes him from rescinding the contract on the ground that the other did not perform on the precise day. If no other time is fixed, by notice, or otherwise, in such a case, a reasonable time is to be allowed for doing so. Benson v. Tilton, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 494.

Neither party to a contract can be in default thereunder until the other party has offered to perform his part of the agreement in full. And where both parties fail to perform their mutual covenants on the day named, they will be held to have waived its strict performance as to time, though it will be unimpaired in its effect. Van Campen v. Knight, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 205.

Although a contract to convey expressly declares prompt payments to be of the essence, yet if the vendor, by his failure to send the notes to the place of payment, and his conduct in other ways, has induced the purchaser to believe the requirement of promptness to be waived, the purchaser may enforce specific performance. Ballard v. Cheney, 19 Feb. 58.

Where a contract to convey real estate, upon the payment of the purchase money in installments, expressly declares time to be of its essence and the vendor retains the right to rescind the contract and to declare payments already made forfeited in case of any payment not being promptly made, the right to rescind and declare a forfeiture may nevertheless be waived, and if the facts show a waiver, the vendee is entitled to specific performance of the contract to convey, notwithstanding he has neglected to make a certain payment promptly. Coles v. Shepard, 30 Minn. 446.

Where the vendee of land is let into possession, it is taken for granted that each party is satisfied, until one or the other moves towards the execution of the contract by demanding a specific performance, and neither party, under such circumstances, has a right to insist on lapse of time as a bar to specific performance. Scarlett v. Hunter, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 84; Miller v. Bear, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 466.

Where an exchange of lands is made, and no money is to be paid, and possession of the several tracts is taken pursuant to the contract, a delay of ten years to proceed to compel execution of deeds is not a bar to an action for specific performance. Stretch v. Schenck, 23 Ind. 77.

A plaintiff who, under a parol agreement to exchange lands, conveys his share as agreed, and enters upon and improves the land to be conveyed to him under a promise of a deed, is not guilty of laches when he sues for specific performance some ten years after.

Hunkins v. Hunkins (N. H. 1889), 18 Atl. Rep. 655.

A agreed to sell land to B for $300, one-third thereof to be paid down, and the residue in two equal annual payments with interest, B to have possession immediately. The agreement contained a provision that, in default of either of the payments, A should be discharged from his contract, and B forfeit the payments already made by him, and deliver up the possession of the premises to A. B made valuable improvements on the land, paid the first two installments of the purchase-money at the time specified in the contract, and assigned his contract to C, who took possession, but did not make payment of the last installment on the day it fell due, nor was he called on for it, nor a deed offered to him of the land. A few days afterwards he tendered the money and demanded a deed, which A refused, and insisted upon a forfeiture. On a bill filed by C against A, held, that time was not of the essence of the contract, and that C was entitled to a specific performance of the contract. Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 352.

By a contract for the sale of land, the vendor was to convey at a time specified, and the vendee was "at the same time," to secure the purchase money. The vendee took possession under the contract; but no conveyance was executed, and the purchase money was not paid for fifteen years. Held, that the lapse of time was no objection to a decree for specific performance, at the suit of the vendee. Waters v. Travis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 450.

Mere lapse of time does not constitute a bar to specific performance of a contract, but it may be explained. And where a turnpike company contracted for the purchase of land, and took possession and occupied the land, for the purposes of the company, twenty-three years, the contract was specifically enforced at the instance of the company. New Barbadoes Toll Bridge v. Vreeling, 4 N. J. Eq. 157.

A purchaser who has gone into possession and cut the timber from the lands, will not be allowed to resist a bill for specific performance on the ground of mere delay in making a conveyance; for the vendor cannot be put in statu quo. Burton v. Adkins, 2 Del. Ch. 125.

Where the owner of land permitted a person to occupy and improve the same for a number of years, under a verbal contract of purchase, and under the impression that he might pay for it when demanded, and the purchaser offered to pay when notified to do so—held, that there was no such laches imputable to the purchaser as should debar him from the specific performance of the contract. Ingersoll v. Horton, 7 Mich. 405.

A notice served by the owner in such a case, requiring the purchaser to pay for the land in a specified time, and take a deed therefor, estops him from taking advantage of laches of the purchaser prior to such notice. Ingersoll v. Horton, 7 Mich. 405.

Where a vendee is in possession of land under a contract of sale, and the vendor afterwards conveys the minerals in the land to third persons, and then dies without having conveyed the land to the vendee, the third persons hold the legal title in trust for the vendee, and the vendee may maintain a bill in equity against them for conveyance thereof, and laches will not be imputed to the vendee for delay in bringing such bill, as his possession is notice of his rights. White v. Patterson, 139 Pa. St. 429.

A contract for the sale of land in California, where the vendor lived, was, thirteen days after its execution by the vendor, mailed by an agent of both parties to the purchasers, who lived in Missouri, but who, as was known by all parties, would not be at home for four days. Seventeen days after writing the agent received from the purchasers an acceptance of the offer, with money, notes, and mortgage, in accordance with the contract. Six days afterwards, it being discovered that the mortgage was not properly acknowledged, at the instance of the vendor's wife, it was returned to Missouri for correction, and twenty-one days thereafter was, with notes and money, tendered to vendor and his wife, and a deed demanded; the purchasers having been given possession of the premises in the meantime by the wife. Held, in a suit for specific performance by the purchasers, that their compliance with the contract was within a reasonable time. Phillips v. Deck, 76 Cal. 384.

In 1848 a vendor, by his attorney in fact, executed his title bond for the conveyance of 150 acres of land at $1 per acre. The attorney marked off the boundaries, and the vendee took possession, and held it, until his death, in

Where the parties have made time a necessary feature of the agreement, neither will be heard to plead, in justification of his delay, that circumstances have changed and the property involved has increased or diminished in value.¹

1865. In 1852, the vendor receipted to the vendee for two notes of a third party, which, when collected, were to be applied upon the payment of the purchase money. The vendor admitted that he had collected the notes, and ratified the title bond. The court held that an action of specific performance, commenced in 1875 by the heirs of the vendee, was not barred by laches or the Statute of Limitations. Norman v. Bennett, 32 W. Va. 614.

In a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty, it appeared that plaintiff, upon the day set for the transfer of the property, had the purchase price therefor in readiness, but that the transfer was not completed on that day, because defendant, by mistake, had neglected to bring with him some necessary papers. Thereafter, relying on defendant's promise to complete the transfer, plaintiff entered into possession. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to support a decree for specific performance against a purchaser from defendant with notice. Hughes v. Reese, 22 Neb. 78.

The vendor, as to the land, is in equity regarded as trustee for the vendee from the time of the contract, and the failure of a railroad company for thirteen years to ask for a deed to its right of way, in pursuance of a contract to that effect executed by the owner of the land, will not bar a bill for specific performance, where the company has performed its part of the agreement, and has been in undisputed possession throughout that time. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hay, 119 Ill. 507.

In a bill by a vendee in possession to compel the conveyance of land pursuant to a title bond, the plea of the Statute of Limitations is bad. Gen. St. Kentucky, ch. 71, art. 4. § 20, excepts cases of continuing and subsisting trust, and actions by a vendee of real property, in the possession thereof, to obtain a conveyance, from the operation of the statute. Hampton v. Bailey (Ky. 1887), 5 S. W. Rep. 383.

Defendant sold land to plaintiff, the condition of the agreement being that if plaintiff constructed a proposed railroad, and had trains running thereon within a year, then defendants should deed the property to plaintiff, at which time the consideration should become due and payable, and plaintiff then agreed to pay said sum. Held, that after plaintiff had taken possession under the option, and performed the conditions precedent, time was no longer of the essence of the contract, and specific performance would be granted, even though the money was not tendered and deed demanded until some months after the expiration of the year; as, the tendering of the deed and payment of the money being, by the contract, concurrent acts, plaintiff was not in default, no deed having been tendered. Byers v. Denver Circle R. Co., 13 Colo. 552.

In Pierce v. Morse (N. J.), 18 Atl. Rep. 792, the evidence showed that the vendee was prevented from a strict compliance with the provisions of the contract by a mistaken interpretation, and the vendor did not insist upon a forfeiture, because of the failure to perform on the day named in the contract, nor give notice of an intention to do so, but was ready to execute a deed on a subsequent day, if the vendee would comply with his demands, many of which were unwarranted, and the vendee in good faith offered to perform his part. The court refused to enforce a forfeiture but decreed specific performance, it not appearing that there had been any increase in the value of the property, or want of diligence in seeking relief.

An answer to a bill in equity admitted that a deed for land, absolute upon its face, had been made as charged in the bill, upon a parol trust that such deed should be a security for payment of a sum of money. But the answer relied upon the lapse of ten years since the execution of such deed as a defense to the enforcement of the contract. Held, that, the complainant having been in possession of the land all the time, the defense was not good. Price v. Gaskins, Phil. Eq. (N. Car.) 224.

1. Losses in business and deprivation of rents, occasioned by burning of buildings, are not legitimate excuses for non-payment of money, where

X. WAIVER AND ABANDONMENT.¹—The right to enforce specific performance may be lost by waiver. Conduct on the part of plaintiff or neglect of his rights which indicates that he has not considered the contract binding upon himself or has failed to enforce it, will prevent his holding others to its performance. A familiar application of this rule occurs where the plaintiff has accepted a modification of the agreement by acquiescing in the defendant's breach of some of its conditions. In such cases he must be content with a substantial compliance with the contract as modified.² But the court will indulge no presumptions in favor of a waiver nor infer it upon slight proof.³ So, too, the right to enforce an agreement in equity is lost where the time is made of the essence of the contract. Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18.

1. As to waiver, see supra, this title, Laches; Time, When Essential.

2. Neither party to a contract for the sale of lands can enforce its specific performance in chancery, after each has tried to establish his own claim to the lands independently of the agreement, and each has assented to the other's acts in repudiation thereof. Walworth v. Miles, 23 Ark. 653.

The plaintiff gave his note, payable four months after date, in consideration of which the defendants executed a contract for a deed of land on payment of the note. Held, that after a tender of the deed, and demand of payment of the note after its maturity, and refusal to pay, the plaintiff had forfeited his right to insist on the performance of the contract. Pearis v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 617; 56 Am. Dec. 543.

Where a vendee under an executory contract abandoned possession of the land, according to a stipulation in the agreement, though the dissolution of the contract was by parol, held to be sufficient to bar his claim to a conveyance in equity. Washington v. M'Gee, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 131.

Defendant's wife having refused her assent to the sale, defendant refused to proceed further. Plaintiff then sued for damages, and, after nearly two years, and after the land had increased in value, and improvements had been made thereon, sued for specific performance, offering to take a deed subject to the contingent dower rights of defendant's wife. Held, that the right to specific performance had been waived. Ford v. Euker, 86 Va. 75.

A granted to B a license to use A's patent, knowing that B believed the patent to cover more than it really did. A took no steps to prosecute persons selling without licenses to the injury of B's business. Held, that A, by his conduct, precluded himself from demanding specific performance in a court of equity. Brewster v. Tuthill Spring Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 760.

Plaintiff contracted with defendant for the purchase from defendant of a certain lot, and afterwards they agreed that the lot and another should be sold by defendant to plaintiff's son at a different price, with the right to a reconveyance to defendant of the second lot, within a given time. Held, that the first contract was waived, and specific performance could not be enforced. Ford v. Euker (Va.), 9 S. E. Rep. 500.

By accepting from the assignee his installments of purchase money, the vendor waives his right to object to the assignment of the contract, even where the contract expressly forbids assignment and may be compelled, at the assignee's instance, to perform specifically. Camp v. Wiggins, 72 Iowa 643.

Where the vendor, under a contract for the sale of land, accepts the purchase price agreed to be paid therefor, and delivers a deed in which a portion of the land is fraudulently omitted, though supposed by the vendee to include the whole, he waives his right to object to a specific performance of the contract on the ground of the inadequacy of the consideration. Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608.

party seeking specific performance has consented to the rescission of the contract or has abandoned it. It requires a new meeting of minds, indeed a new contract, to create any rights that a court of equity will respect.¹

Receiving a deed from the heirs of an ancestor who had contracted to convey is not a waiver of the right to a specific execution of the ancestor's contract. Trabue v. North, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 361.

Refusal of the heir, who had purchased the mortgage, to accept a tender of the amount due, made on condition that he assign the mortgage to the vendee, is not a waiver of his right to insist that the vendee shall pay the mortgage before receiving his deed. *Wheeler v. One in possession of land under an agreement to pay for the same within a fixed time, who surrenders at the expiration of the time named without having paid anything, has no equity of redemption entitling him to enforce specific performance. Givens v. Cobb, 83 Mo. 189.

To sustain the allegation by the vendee that the contract had been abandoned by the vendor, he ought to show that the conduct of the vendor was such as ought to justify a reasonable man in believing that he acquiesced in the decision of the vendee to abandon the contract; such as might reasonably influence the conduct of the vendee, and induce him to regulate his own affairs on the presumption that it was no longer incumbered by his contract. Garnett v. Macon, 2 Brock. (U. S.) 185.

A vendee of land in possession paid part of the purchase money under the contract, but, on being sued for the residue by the vendor, pleaded the Statute of Frauds to the action, and thereby defeated the suit. Held, that this was an abandonment of the contract, and that he was not entitled to a specific execution of it, but that he was entitled to have the money which he had paid refunded to him. Payne v. Graves, 5 Leigh (Va.) 561.

In such case the vendee will be required to account for the rents and profits received by him from the land, the amount to be deducted from the money paid by him; and if it exceeds the sum so paid, he will be decreed to pay the excess to the vendor. Payne v. Graves, 5 Leigh (Va.) 561.

A vendee in possession under a recorded contract, who, intending to have nothing more to do with the land, abandons it after an attempted re-sale to the vendor on execution issued on a judgment against the vendee for a portion of the price, cannot, after a delay of twelve years, specifically enforce the contract of sale as against a bona fide purchaser from the vendor, although such purchaser took the land with constructive notice of the contract. Holden v. Purefoy, 108 N. Car. 163.

The obligor of a bond, to make title to land, cannot insist, in a suit for a specific performance, that the obligee has abandoned the contract, and lost the right to relief, while he himself still holds the bonds given for the purchase money, without having offered to surrender them to the obligee. White v. Butcher, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 231.

Defendant, in order to interest plaintiff in its business, agreed to give him, in addition to his salary, twenty-eight shares of its stock, to be paid for out of the dividends upon the stock given. Subsequently plaintiff, against defendant's wish, severed his connection with defendant and surrendered the contract for the stock. Held, that since he had voluntarily rescinded and surrendered his contract he was not entitled to specific performance. York v. Passaic Rolling Mill Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 471.

In consideration of a contract to convey real estate, complainant had agreed to preserve for defendants a right to certain other lands as a homestead. It appeared on a suit for specific performance that the parties contemplated a

XI. PROCEDURE—1. Generally.—Specific performance may be enforced either directly by a suit for that purpose, or, in some cases, indirectly, by an injunction. Where a person has agreed not to do a certain act, specific performance may be decreed in the form of an injunction.¹ So, where a party agrees to do certain acts and not to do others, he may be enjoined from doing the latter acts, and specific performance of the contract will thus be enforced to that extent, although the court may have no power to decree specific performance of the acts which he agreed to do.² A mandatory injunction may also enforce the affirmative terms of a contract indirectly in some cases in which a direct suit for specific performance would not lie.³

2. Parties.⁴—While, ordinarily, the parties to the contract are the proper parties to a suit to enforce specific performance thereof, yet there may be cases in which others are proper, and, in some instances, necessary parties. Thus, an attachment or execution creditor of the vendor may be a proper party.⁵ So, in a suit by the vendee to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, an infant, to whom a portion of the purchase-money notes were made payable by direction of the vendor, is a proper party.⁶ The personal representative of right of homestead in government lands as secured by United States statutes. Held, that the contract was to procure for defendants the right to occupy the land as claimants of a homestead, and that a tender of performance was not necessary in order to maintain the suit, defendants having abandoned the contract before complainant could have obtained the stipulated right. Dulin v. Prince, 124 Ill. 76.

But in a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land, the title to which is in litigation between the vendor and a third person not a party to the contract, the objection that the latter ought to have been made a party to the suit must be raised by plea or answer in the trial court. Bragg v. Olson, 128 Ill. 540.

Where the purchaser of land assigns his contract to a third party, the assignee will have the option of completing the contract, and thereupon to insist upon a conveyance to himself; but the vendor cannot compel him to perform, even though the assignee may have paid something on the contract, for the reason that there is no contract between them. The vendor should enforce the contract against the original vendee. Corbus v. Teed, 69 Ill. 205.

sary party.¹ A grantor who conveys property in trust for a specific purpose retains such an interest as will entitle him to a specific performance of the trust.² The trustee of an express trust may sue in his own name or join the beneficiary as party.³ But it has been held that an agent cannot enforce a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land made in his name as agent.⁴ And the assignee of a contract to convey who purchased before suit is a necessary party.⁵ Other cases, showing who are proper parties, are cited below.⁶

But heirs who have conveyed their interest need not be joined. Barnard v. Macy, 11 Ind. 536.

6. A entered into a contract with B for the purchase of land owned by the latter, and, before performance of the conditions on either side, contracted to sell the same land to C, and thereafter neglected or refused to complete his contract with B so as to acquire the title. Held, that the contracts were independent, and that an action could not be maintained by C against A and B to compel a specific performance of the first-named contract by A, so that B's title might be acquired and transferred to C. McCarthy v. Couch, 37 Minn. 124.

Under a contract by which the defendant leased to the plaintiffs, co-partners, a newspaper, the contract providing for a renewal for a further term, and that, in case of a termination of the partnership, the partner succeeding to the business might continue by himself alone, or by a new partnership satisfactory to the defendant, a bill in equity may be maintained to enforce a renewal, although the plaintiffs have dissolved their old partnership, and subsequently formed a new one, in which one of them has only a nominal interest. Floyd v. Storrs, 144 Mass. 56.

Where a vendor files his bill to subject land to the payment of the purchase money, and the vendee answers and says that portions of the land are held by others, naming them, by title paramount, and shows, in his answer, that the grounds on which such third persons claim portions of said land are such as will put a reasonable man in just apprehension of losing his land, plaintiff must amend his bill, and set out specifically all the facts within his knowledge as to the claims of such third parties; and if he insists that his own title is good, and the land is his he must make such third parties defendants to the bill, so that a proper decree may be entered, protecting the rights of parties interested. Heavner v. Morgan, 30 W. Va. 335.

Complainant entered into a written contract with four persons conducting hotels in a city, to run impartially a hack line to and from the depot and hotels for five years, in consideration of their refraining from running free hacks or omnibuses. One of the persons assigned his business to his sons; and they, claiming that complainant had discriminated against their hotel, started a line of free omnibuses; whereupon complainant sought to enjoin them from running the free line, and to compel specific performance. It appeared that another one of the hotels had also changed hands. Held that, under the circumstances, and changed relations of the parties, specific performance could not be decreed. Pingle v. Conner, 66 Mich. 187.

The specific performance of an agreement to make and maintain a fence upon each side of its railroad track through a farm, made by a railroad company with parties who had no title to the farm, in consideration of the said parties' obtaining a conveyance of the right of way from the owners to the company without expense to it, cannot be enforced against the successor of the said railroad company by the subsequent owners of the farm, who derived their title subsequent to the date and record of a deed of the right of way to the company, which contained no agreement to fence. Vanderveer v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. (N. J. 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 99.

Mr. Pomeroy says that all parties directly interested in the performance of the contract must be, and all directly and specifically interested in the subject-matter may be joined as parties. Pom. Spec. Perform., § 483. See also Herrington v. Hubbard, 2 Ill. 569; 33 Am. Dec. 426 and note 430.

Thus it has been held that to a bill in equity for specific performance of a contract to convey land, all persons interested in the estate are proper parties, and if minor children are improperly made parties, the rest of the bill will not be impaired thereby. Williams v. Leech, 28 Pa. St. 89.

So to obtain the specific performance of a contract with a corporation for the sale of real estate, the trustee who holds the legal title to the corporation lands should be made a co-defendant with the corporation. Morrow v. Lawrence University, 7 Wis. 574.

The tenant for life, together with the contingent remainderman in fee, may represent the inheritance in a bill for specific performance, though their interests are merely equitable, provided the issue of the remainderman will take, if he fails to do so by reason of the contingency. Sohier v. Williams, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 479.

The party for whose benefit an agreement is to be performed, especially if any valuable portion of the consideration has been rendered by him, has the legal right to enforce it, though the promise to fulfill was not made to him. Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370; Guard v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 600.

A gave a title bond to G, who assigned the bond to W. Thereupon W gave his bond to convey the premises referred to in the first bond to J, and J gave his bond for a conveyance of the same premises to S, by whom a bill for a specific performance was brought against A. Held, that the persons through whom the plaintiff claimed were necessary parties to the suit. Allison v. Shilling, 27 Tex. 450; 86 Am. Dec. 622.

In Tennessee, by the act of 1794, administrators and executors are authorized to convey land of the deceased, according to a bond for title given by him before his decease; but to a bill by the vendee, in such case, to compel a conveyance, the heirs must be made parties. Hale v. Darter, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 79.

Where both the vendor and vendee of real estate are deceased, intestate, upon a proceeding in the orphan's court, by the administrator of the vendor, to enforce the specific execution of the contract, the administrator and heirs of the vendee, and all persons deriving title under them, or interested in the contract, must be made parties, and notice should also be given to the heirs of the deceased vendor. Anshutz's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 375.

The heirs of a vendee who had a contract for the conveyance of land, and had paid the whole price, are necessary parties to a suit by their grantee in fee, against the vendor, for specific performance. Lord v. Underdunk, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 46.

On a bill filed by the heirs at law of a deceased vendee by parol contract against a purchaser claiming by a subsequent deed from the vendor, charging such purchaser with notice of the parol contract of sale, and praying a decree for specific performance against such purchaser—held, that the administrator of the vendee was a necessary party to such a suit where the personal estate was small, the estate still unsettled, and it did not appear that the debts of the deceased vendee have been paid. Downing v. Risley, 15 N. J. Eq. 93.

Where A, B, C, and D make an agreement for a deed, in a suit to enforce the agreement, B and D being dead, their heirs-at-law should be parties, and the party of the second part being dead, his personal representative should be a party. Miller v. Henderson, 10 N. J. L. 320.

An assignee in bankruptcy may be a necessary party. Sweepson v. Rouse, 65 N. Car. 34; 6 Am. Rep. 735.

To a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale under a deed of trust, the grantor should be made a party. White v. Watkins, 23 Mo. 423. Compare Hines v. Baine, 1 Smed. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 530.

In a suit against one for specific performance of his contract to sell land, persons having, or claiming to have, an interest in the land, obtained from the defendant after date of the contract, and with notice thereof, are necessary parties. Morris v. Hoyt, 11 Mich. 9; Seager v. Burns, 4 Minn. 141; Stone v. Buckner, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 73. See also Rochester v. Anderson, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 143; Estill v. Clay, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 497; Crosby v. Davis, 9 Iowa 98; Stansberry v. Pope, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 492; Casady v. Scallen, 15 Iowa 93; Fulleton v. McCurdy, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 132.

A joint owner of property is rightly made a party to a bill in equity seeking to compel a vendee to perform his contract. Lavender v. Thomas, 18 Ga. 668. See also Wilcox v. Pratt, 125 N. Y. 688.

In a bill to compel the execution of securities on specific real estate, alleged to have been promised to secure a loan of money, prior mortgagees of the same real estate are necessary parties; and it is not a sufficient answer to the objection that they are not made parties to such bill, that a decree is asked which will operate only on the interest of the party promising the security in the land. Courts of equity, having the power, should exercise their jurisdiction so as to reduce the rights of all persons, interested in the subject-matter of the suit, to certainty and precision. Caldwell v. Taggart, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 190.

Infant or adult heirs of a vendor are bound to fulfill his contract to convey land, to the extent of the estate that descends to them, and may be compelled so to do, although not named in the contract. Hill v. Ressegieu, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 162.

One who has purchased from a married woman property which had been bought by her during coverture with her paraphernal funds cannot be compelled to accept title until presumption that it is community property, has been overcome by proper proof; and, when it appears that a judicial mortgage is recorded against the husband, the purchaser may require such mortgage creditor to be made a party to a suit by the vendor for specific performance. Duruty v. Musacchia, 42 La. Ann. 357.

One who holds as collateral security by assignment from a contract for the sale of lands, the vendor, has such an interest in the contract as makes him a proper party to an action to enforce it. Butler v. Gage (Colo. 1889), 23 Pac. Rep. 462.

The vendor, after such assignment, is still a proper party to an action for its enforcement; and, after his death, pending such litigation, his executors have the right to be substituted as parties. Butler v. Gage (Colo. 1889), 23 Pac. Rep. 462.

The fact that defendants were prevented from making their proof by making the executors parties to the action, defendants cannot affect the right of the executors to become parties. Butler v. Gage (Colo. 1889), 23 Pac. Rep. 462.

The owner of land agreed to sell it to an attorney in consideration of $200, and that he should clear the title at his own expense from a cloud created by a sale on execution against the owner. The attorney brought ejectment in the name of the owner against the purchaser at the execution sale, and the latter then procured a quitclaim deed from the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the agreement with the attorney. It was held that the attorney could intervene by cross-petition, have specific performance of the agreement and recover possession of the land. Montgomery v. Nulton (Kan. 1891), 26 Pac. Rep. 30.

Who Are Not Necessary Parties.—On the other hand, the following cases will show who have been held not to be necessary parties:

The promisee named in a written contract, who has transferred it by an unconditional verbal assignment, need not be made a party to a suit by his assignee for specific performance of the contract. Currier v. Howard, 14 Gray (Mass.) 511.

Where A makes a contract, and therein names B as his attorney to carry out its provisions, B is not a necessary or proper party in a suit against A for specific performance. Dahoney v. Hall, 20 Ind. 264.

In a suit by the grantee of the equitable title to land, to compel a conveyance of the legal title to him, his grantor need not be made a party. Elliott v. Armstrong, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 198.

3. Pleading.—The general rules of equity pleading have already been stated.¹ It is sufficient, in this place, to call attention to such rules as seem peculiarly appropriate to the pleadings

On a bill filed to enforce the specific performance of a contract, for the conveyance of real estate, it is no defense, to set up that the money paid was a trust fund; or that the purchase was made by one as trustee of another. If a trust exists, the vendee, or, in case of his death, his heirs, will be liable to account to the cestui que trust, and the latter is not a necessary party to a bill to compel a conveyance. Gibbs v. Blackwell, 37 Ill. 191.

Pending a suit for a specific performance of a contract to convey property, in which the purchase money had been paid into court, creditors of the vendor recovered judgments against him, and sold the property in question. Held, that such judgment creditors were not necessary parties to the suit, nor were the purchasers under such judgments. Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. (U. S.) 94.

Where a purchaser of land from the State, having a certificate and possession, but no patent, mortgaged the land, and the mortgagee purchased at the sale, held, that the original purchaser was not a necessary party to an action against the assignee of the original purchaser's certificate, to compel a conveyance of the land. Stewart v. Hutchinson, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 181.

The wife of a surviving partner has no vested interest in real estate held as stock of the partnership, and need not be made a party to a suit to enforce a specific performance of a contract for the sale thereof. Galbraith v. Gedge, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 631.

Several persons in possession of distinct parcels of a tract of land, as purchasers, cannot unite in a bill to compel the specific performance, by the former owner of the tract, of a contract for the sale of the land to a third person, which has been assigned to one of such purchasers, on the ground that it was assigned to him for the benefit of all, especially where there is nothing beyond the allegation in the bill to show that the contract was so assigned. Wood v. Perry, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 114.

The plaintiff had a right to the conveyance of certain land under contract. Held, that he could not bring in as parties to his bill to enforce specific performance of the contract, prior mortgages of this and other land, in order to adjust his equities with reference to the order of sale on a future foreclosure, or to secure the application of the purchase money he was to pay to the payment of the mortgage debt. Chapman v. West, 17 N. Y. 125.

When the obligee of a bond, conditioned for conveyance of land, brings a bill for specific performance, he cannot make a party one who purchased from the obligor after the obligee's note given for the purchase money was overdue. The proper defendants to such a bill are the obligor and his heirs. Harrington v. Pinson, 30 Miss. 30.

A wife cannot, after the death of her husband who has contracted for the sale of her land, describing it as his, enforce specific performance by the purchaser for her own benefit. Hoover v. Calhoun, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 109.

Where the wife was not a party to a contract for the sale of land, she cannot be required to join in the conveyance, and she cannot properly be made a party to a bill by the purchaser for specific performance. Richmond v. Robinson, 12 Mich. 193.

Strangers to the contract are generally not necessary parties. Moulton v. Chaffee, 22 Fed. Rep. 26; Washburn, etc., Mfg. v. Chicago Galvanized Wire Fence Co., 109 Ill. 71; Pennsylvania, etc., Co. v. Ryerson, 36 N. J. Eq. 112; Smith v. Sheldon, 65 Ill. 219; Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 Mich. 22; Bowne v. Ritter, 26 N. J. Eq. 456; Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 557.

Upon a bill by the executor of a deceased vendor for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, notice to his widow and heirs is not necessary, as the contract of sale converts the land into personalty, over which the executor has exclusive control. Simmons' Appeal, 140 Pa. St. 567.

Tenants in common, when not. See Borden v. Curtis, 46 N. J. Eq. 468.

in suits for specific performance, and to cite illustrative cases showing what pleadings are good and what are bad.

The bill or complaint should show that the contract is one that can be enforced; that the plaintiff has performed or offered to perform its conditions on his part;¹ that the defendant has failed to perform;² that a money compensation in damages would not be adequate,³ and that specific performance ought, in equity, to be granted. It is also necessary, in some cases, to aver a demand and refusal.⁴

1. Chess' Appeal, 4 Pa. St. 52; 45 Am. Dec. 668; Wilson v. Lineberger, 92 N. Car. 547; Frixen v. Castro, 58 Cal. 442; McKleroy v. Tulane, 34 Ala. 78; Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ala. 633; Bass v. Gilliland, 5 Ala. 761; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1407. But see Crosby v. Moses, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 146; Hatcher v. Hatcher, 2 McMull. Ch. (S. Car.) 311; Passmore v. Moore, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 591.

A bill for the specific performance of a contract must show that the complainant has done everything on his part necessary to entitle him to performance of the contract by the defendant. Bates v. Wheeler, 2 Ill. 54; Underhill v. Allen, 18 Ark. 466; Doyle v. Teas, 5 Ill. 201.

A general statement that the plaintiff had done "all that he was bound to do," has been held insufficient. The facts should be stated. Davis v. Shreve, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 261; Hart v. McClellan, 41 Ala. 251; Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375. But see St. Paul Division v. Brown, 9 Minn. 157. Under the Code a general averment of performance is usually considered sufficient.

2. A purchaser seeking relief in the nature of a specific performance should aver in his bill that he has requested his vendor to make title in conformity to the terms of the bond for title, or show some excuse for not doing so, and an averment that the vendor was insolvent is not sufficient to excuse the necessity of such request. Carter v. Thompson, 41 Ala. 375. See also Dodge v. Clark, 17 Cal. 586.

In a suit on a bond for title, for specific performance, an averment that the obligee failed and refused, and still fails and refuses, to perform the conditions, is a sufficient statement of a breach. Holman v. Criswell, 15 Tex. 394.

Plaintiff, in her bill must set out her title in such manner as to show her right to convey. Freeman v. Stokes, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 219.

But in a suit brought by a vendor to compel the specific performance of a contract to purchase land, a deed need not be tendered with the bill. Tavenor v. Barrett, 21 W. Va. 656.

3. Angus v. Robinson, 62 Vt. 60.

4. The following cases will show what should be alleged in the bill in particular instances:

The complaint need not allege the plaintiff's citizenship, except in cases where it is necessary to jurisdiction. Moritz v. Lavelle, 77 Cal. 10. Compare Ducie v. Ford, 8 Mont. 233.

A complaint to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate must allege a demand of the conveyance or a sufficient excuse therefor, or an allegation that the other party has repudiated the contract, or refused to perform it. Burns v. Fox, 113 Ind. 205.

The allegation as to performance, that "plaintiff has performed all and singular his agreements and covenants with defendant," is sufficient on demurrer. Moritz v. Lavelle, 77 Cal. 10.

"A complaint to enforce an exchange of lands, which alleges that by reason of an error in the supposed boundaries of defendants' land, discovered by plaintiff since the contract was made, there is a deficiency in quantity, and they are therefore unable to fully carry out the contract, and which prays compensation for such deficiency, states a cause of action, as plaintiff may, at his option, require defendants to execute the contract as far as possible, and make compensation for the residue." Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299.

Where defendant agreed to procure a patent to mining land, and convey a half interest to complainants, in consideration of their relinquishing all claims, a complaint alleging that complainants have paid their share of the purchase money, and also that they are able and willing to pay if defendant will accept and state how much they owe, but not alleging any time or amount of payments, is contradictory and insufficient. Ducie v. Ford, 8 Mont. 233.

Where, upon the face of an agreement to convey land, the description of the land is sufficient, but the fact may be that the defendant or party to convey has more than one tract answering the description, and thus the description may be rendered indefinite and insufficient, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege, in the bill for specific performance, that the defendant has only one tract answering the description, but the burden is upon the defendant to set up in his answer and prove his ownership of two such tracts. Lente v. Clark, 22 Fla. 515.

The Colorado statute provides that "nothing contained in chapter 43 of 'Frauds and Perjuries' shall be construed to abridge the power of courts of equity in cases of part performance to compel specific performance." Defendant made a verbal contract to convey a tract of land to plaintiff's grantor, on condition that she would make certain improvements thereon. A complaint contained averments showing an acceptance of, and compliance with, the terms of the proposition made by defendant. Held, that the averments of the complaint showed a proper case for specific performance. Hayt v. Hunt (Colo. 1887), 15 Pac. Rep. 410. So, it is held, in California, that the complaint need not aver that the contract was in writing. Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427.

"A bill that asks a specific performance against one defendant, and to enjoin a suit for unlawful detainer, brought by other defendants, claiming under title from the former defendant, is not multifarious." Shafer v. O'Brien, 31 W. Va. 601. See also Young v. Young, 45 N. J. Eq. 27; Henry v. McKittrick, 42 Kan. 485.

When the description in a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and the proof are so vague that the court cannot describe the boundaries of the land with certainty, a decree will not be granted." Askew v. Carr, 81 Ga. 185.

A complaint praying specific performance of a contract for the sale of land need not allege that plaintiff has no adequate remedy in damages, nor that defendant is the owner of the land when the action is brought, where it does allege that he was such owner when he made the offer, and the complaint was filed on the day when plaintiff accepted it." Ide v. Leiser, 10 Mont. 5.

C, in consideration of plaintiff's prospective services as attorney for him in litigation then pending concerning land, agreed to convey to plaintiff a certain lot "out of the premises which may be recovered by him." After C's death, and after plaintiff had performed services in the litigation, C's administrator compromised against plaintiff's advice, and conveyed C's interest in the land to B, the other litigant. Held, that a complaint in a suit for specific performance need not allege against C's administrator and B, and purchasers from B that C had any title to the land, as plaintiff was entitled, as against all the defendants, to a convey of C's interest, whatever it may have been. King v. Gildersleeve, 79 Cal. 504.

The complaint was held sufficient in a suit for specific performance of a bond to make "a good and valid deed in common form," which described the bond in accordance with its legal effect as an obligation to convey "in fee-simple by warranty deed." Phillips v. Herndon, 78 Tex. 378.

Under a prayer for general relief, plaintiffs may be entitled to a decree for a specific performance of the stipulations in the deed, although not prayed for specifically. Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 346.

"Equity will not aid in enforcing specific performance of a parol contract for the purchase of land, where the purchaser seeks to take it from the operation of the Statute of Frauds by alleging part payment, unless the contract is definitely alleged, and the proof clearly establishes the particular contract set up in the bill." Allen v. Young, 88 Ala. 338.

In a bill for specific performance of a contract to procure the surrender of a lease held by defendant and his partner, it is not necessary to allege that defendant is able to get his partner to execute such surrender. Borden v. Curtis, 46 N. J. Eq. 468.

The contract must be accurately stated in the bill, and the proof should correspond with the contract thus set up. Carswell v. Walsh, 70 Md. 504.

The courts will not decree specific performance of a contract to sell land, the price of which plaintiff was to pay

In suits for specific performance, it seems, contrary to the general rule, that the defendant may be granted affirmative relief without filing a cross-bill. Thus, where the parties differ as to the terms of the contract, and the matter is decided in favor of the defendant, the court may compel the plaintiff to perform the contract thus established, although no cross-bill has been filed.¹

in work, where the complaint fails to show how much work has been done, how much has been paid in that way, what is the balance due, or that there is any dispute on these points. Wakeham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 46; Mayer v. Cruse, 5 Mont. 485; Powell v. Central Plank Road Co., 24 Ala. 441; Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150; Cameron v. Abbott, 30 Ala. 416; Crocker v. Higgins, 7 Conn. 342; Pitts v. Cable, 44 Ill. 103; Park v. Johnson, 4 Allen (Mass.) 259; Mills v. Metcalf, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 477; Roy v. Willink, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 525; *Mallory v. In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land it should be so described that it can be identified and a conveyance decreed. Gray v. Davis, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 381; Baker v. Hathaway, 5 Allen (Mass.) 103; Allen v. Chambers, 4 Ired. Eq. (N.

The prayer of a bill in equity for relief, on the ground of a promise by the defendant to give a mortgage to secure some notes of his, due to the complainant, is too vague and indefinite to enforce, where there is no specification of the property, whether land or personal estate, which was agreed to be mortgaged. Sanderson v. Stockdale, 11 Md. 563.

The petition must state the terms of the agreement. Ward v. Stuart, 62 Tex. 333. And in some of the States the written contract must be set out in full.

A complaint, in a suit to compel from heirs the specific performance of their ancestor's agreement to convey land, need not allege title in the ancestor. Cottrell v. Cottrell, 81 Ind. 87; Moore v. Burrows, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 173.

It is held in California that if the vendee relies on part performance as a ground for compelling specific performance of an oral agreement to convey land, he must aver in his complaint the acts constituting part performance. An allegation that he entered and made valuable improvements is not enough. Fowler v. Sutherland, 68 Cal. 414.

But it is doubtful if this rule would apply in the code States, and it has been held in Illinois that a cross-bill is necessary if the defendant desires affirmative relief in a suit for specific performance. Hanna v. Ratekin, 43 Ill. 462. And the same has also been held in Tennessee. Bussy v. Gant, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 238.

Where the original bill is fatally defective upon its face, either in form or substance, a demurrer will lie;¹ but defects not appar-

Cross-Bills.—Affirmative relief by way of specific performance may be granted the defendant, where the finding is in his favor, upon a proper cross-bill. Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N. Y. 35; Thompson v. Hawley, 14 Oregon 199; Harshman v. Mitchell, 117 Ind. 312. See also Bliss on Code Pleading, §§ 349-351. See Kelly v. Dee, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 286.

It has been held that a cross-bill may be filed at any time before the final hearing. Neal v. Foster, 34 Fed. Rep. 496; Rogers v. Reissner, 31 Fed. Rep. 592. See as to the requirements of a cross-bill, and the proceedings thereon, Foster's Fed. Prac., §§ 172-173, note to Hurd v. Case, 83 Am. Dec. 251. EQUITY PLEADINGS, vol. 6, pp. 769-771.

In a suit for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land according to the condition of a title-bond which recited payment of the consideration—held, that defendant could, in his cross-complaint, contradict this recital, and demand payment of the purchase money, and that plaintiff could not reply that the Statute of Limitations interposed a bar to defendant's demand for the purchase money. Hamilton v. Plaut, 81 Ind. 417. See also Bennett v. Welch, 25 Ind. 140; 87 Am. Dec. 354.

In a proceeding for partition defendant filed a cross-complaint, alleging that he and plaintiff, as tenants in common, had executed a title-bond for the property to B, the consideration for which was to be paid by procuring and surrendering for cancellation certain notes executed by plaintiff, for which he alone was liable; that the bond had been assigned for value to defendant, and that he had caused the notes to be surrendered to plaintiff; and prayed for specific performance of the obligations of the title-bond. Held, that it was not necessary to allege or show a demand for a deed before filing the cross-complaint, and that defendant was entitled to a decree for specific performance. Harshman v. Mitchell, 117 Ind. 312.

In a suit for specific performance the defendant cannot set up in a cross-bill fraud of the plaintiff in other matters not connected with the contract. May v. Armstrong, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 260; 20 Am. Dec. 137. But see Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 5.

1. Thus where the laches of complainant appears on the face of the bill, advantage may be taken by demurrer. McCabe v. Mathews, 40 Fed. Rep. 338.

So where a bill to enforce the specific performance of a contract shows that such contract is within the Statute of Frauds it is ground of demurrer. Chambers v. Lecompte, 9 Mo. 575.

In Vermont, a bill for specific performance of a contract to deliver bonds is demurrable unless it sets forth such facts as show that a money compensation, to be recovered in a suit at law, will not be adequate. Angus v. Robinson, 62 Vt. 60. See, also, Prewitt v. Jenkins, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 294.

A demurrer lies to a bill for the specific performance of a contract of sale made by an agent, which fails to show that the person executing the same was the agent of the owner, duly authorized, either by any charge, or by the contract so far as it is set out. Roby v. Cossitt, 78 Ill. 638.

When a bill for specific performance and injunction, with several non-resident corporations defendants, does not state definitely when the contract is to be performed, nor where made, nor whether to be performed in or out of the State, and does not give the name of the alleged agent of the non-resident corporations, and the consideration agreed to be paid, a demurrer to the bill should be sustained. Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ala. 498.

A demurrer was held properly sustained to a bill for specific performance which alleged that defendant authorized a firm of brokers to sell his land at $45 net per acre if sold without the growing crops, and for $47.50 net if sold with the growing crops, and that the brokers sold to plaintiff for a lump sum, without showing the number of acres, or whether it was sold with or without the growing crops. Stephens v. Soule, 83 Cal. 438.

So where a complaint for specific performance alleged that, in consideration of benefits to accrue from a steam dummy railroad which plaintiff's assignor agreed to build, defendant made a written contract to execute to him certain notes, and also a deed to five acres of land on the line of the proposed road, and deliver them to a certain bank in escrow, to be delivered to him if he completed the road in a time specified, otherwise to be returned; that said assignor built the road as agreed within the time limited; that afterwards he conveyed to plaintiff all his right to a deed of the land; and that plaintiff had demanded a deed therefor, which defendant refused to make, it was held that a demurrer to the complaint would lie since it did not appear therefrom that defendant had not performed his contract by delivering the note and deed to the bank, or to plaintiff's assignor. Lattin v. Hazard, 85 Cal. 58.

ent upon its face, and special matters of defense, must generally be taken advantage of by plea or answer.¹

But where in an action to reform a deed, and for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, the complaint shows on its face that the purchase price was accepted, and a deed delivered, a demurrer on the ground of inadequacy of consideration will not be sustained. Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608.

And a bill filed by a married woman and her husband, for performance of a contract for the sale of land belonging to the female plaintiff, is not demurrable because it appears on the face of the deed tendered with the bill, that the acknowledgment is dated after the suit had been commenced. Vaught v. Cain, 37 W. Va. 424.

1. See EQUITY PLEADINGS, vol. 6, p. 785; DEMURRER, vol. 5, pp. 550-552.

Thus, where it did not appear on the face of a complaint that the proposition from defendant, specifying the conditions on which he would convey, was not in writing. Held, that the question whether defendant's proposition was in writing could not be raised by demurrer; if raised at all it must be by answer. Hayt v. Hunt (Colo. 1877), 15 Pac. Rep. 410.

So, where the Statute of Limitations or the Statute of Frauds is relied on by the defendant, it must be pleaded unless it appears upon the face of the bill that the contract is within the statute. Frye on Spec. Perform., *156; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, vol. 13, p. 769.

The Answer.—Where, in the answer to a bill for the specific performance of a contract of sale of real estate, the vendor admits his failure to convey on demand, and claims not only the balance of the purchase-money agreed on, but also an old debt of the vendee's father, which is alleged to be a lien on the land, before he is willing to execute a deed, this being new matter, not responsive to the allegations of the bill, and not supported by proof, is no ground for denying the relief prayed for. Smoot v. Rea, 19 Md. 398.

When the vendor, plaintiff, alleges that he is able, ready, and willing to convey the title, and tenders a conveyance, the purchaser must either aver that the vendor has no title; or, if the title is defective, must point out the defects, that they may be remedied or the contract rescinded. Logan v. Bull, 7 Ky. 607.

Where an obligee, in a bond to make title, files a bill for a specific performance of the contract, and claims to have the land conveyed according to certain boundaries, which, he alleges, were meant by the contract, and the defendant, in his answer, denies that such boundaries were meant, and sets out others, which, he alleges, were intended, the plaintiff, not having in the pleadings, averred his willingness to accept a deed according to the lines as set out by the defendant, and not having offered to release him from any farther claim, is not entitled to a decree according to the defendant's allegations. Richardson v. Godwin, 6 Jones' Eq. (N. Car.) 229; Sain v. Dulin, 6 Jones' Eq. (N. Y.) 195. See also Gariss v. Gariss, 13 N. J. Eq. 320.

The answer to a bill for the specific performance of a contract of sale admitted that "the defendant negotiated to and with the plaintiff for a sale of the lot for $700," but denied "that the defendant did sell the same." Held, that the contract was not admitted. Auter v. Miller, 18 Iowa 405.

In a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, the defendant cannot avail himself of the facts that the land is his homestead; that he is a married man, and that his wife did not join in the contract, as a defense to the action, without pleading such facts, unless the plaintiff consents to try that defense without it being pleaded. Such facts cannot be proved under a mere denial of the execution. Brown v. Eaton, 21 Minn. 409.

Where, pending a suit for a specific performance, it becomes, by the act of a third party, impossible for defendant to perform, he should be allowed to set up the facts by supplemental answer.

It has been held, however, that evidence of the illegal purpose for which a house was sold may be introduced under a general denial.¹

An independent claim which the defendant has against the plaintiff cannot be set up by way of defense to a bill for specific performance.² Nor is the insolvency of the plaintiff any defense, where the contract was entered into with a knowledge of such insolvency,³ nor where the plaintiff tenders security.⁴

4. Evidence.—The proof must, in every essential particular, correspond with the contract stated in the bill,⁵ although a slight variance in immaterial matters may not be fatal,⁶ and, in many cases, the pleadings may be amended so as to correspond with the proof.⁷

The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show the making of the contract and its terms,⁸ and to establish his title, if put in Wilbur v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 189.

Where, to a bill for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, the defendant pleads that the contract was not in writing, and is void, and at the same time answers, denying the contract set up in the bill, the answer overrules the plea; and, to entitle the plaintiff to a decree against such an answer, he must show a contract in writing. Wildbahn v. Robidoux, 11 Mo. 659.

Thus, where the bill averred that the contract was made September 30, 1885, while the proof showed that it was made September 30, 1886, the variance was held fatal. Johnston v. Jones, 85 Ala. 286.

So, a bill alleging an agreement to pay the purchase money in seven years, with interest, was held not to be supported by proof, or the admission of a contract to pay in seven years, without

A bill in equity for specific performance of a contract of sale alleged that the whole of the purchase money had been paid, and also offered to pay any sum which might be found to be still due. Held, that the bill might be sustained though the proof showed that a part of the purchase money was still due. Mix v. Beach, 46 Ill. 311.

In a contract for the conveyance of land, the time, place, and mode of payment are not matters of substance, unless made so by the express stipulations of the parties, or unless this is to be inferred from the special nature of the case. Therefore, where on a bill for the specific performance of a parol agreement for the purchase and conveyance of lands, the contract as proved differed in these particulars from that set out in the bill, but corresponded in other respects, it was held that the variance was not material. Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 Mich. 463.

But where the defendant pleads fraud, mistake, rescission by a new con-issue by the answer;¹ and the evidence upon these points must be clear and satisfactory to warrant a decree of specific performance.² The circumstances under which the contract was made may generally be shown.³ The defendant may show by parol evidence that the contract was without consideration;⁴ that his understanding as to the extent of the property included, or the meaning of the contract differed from that of the plaintiff at the time it was executed;⁵ that, through mistake, the writing does not express the real agreement of the parties, or that he was induced to enter

"A court of equity will not enforce a parol contract for the sale or exchange of land, unless the terms of the contract are admitted or clearly proven." Boggs v. Bodkin, 32 W. Va. 566; Ralls v. Ralls, 82 Ill. 243.

Specific performance of an agreement made with the owner's agent for the sale of land will not be decreed unless the evidence clearly shows the terms of the contract and the authority of the agent, or a ratification by the owner. Hadfield v. Skelton, 69 Wis. 460.

Thus, in a recent case, the issue being whether the agent who sold the land to complainants was authorized to sell, one of the respondents and the agent gave nearly all the testimony regarding such authority. Their testimony was directly contradictory, that of the respondent being that the sale was made after the expiration of the time in which the agent was authorized to sell. The evidence showed that respondent had previously put the land in the hands of one agent to sell, and was averse to placing it in the hands of any other. The agent testified that the respondent had previously stated to him substantially the same facts relative to the transaction as the latter had testified to at the trial. Held, that specific performance would not be decreed. Blair v. Sheridan, 50 Va. 527.

The party seeking to enforce performance must prove the contract substantially as pleaded, and by clear, definite, and satisfactory evidence. Cutsinger v. Ballard, 115 Ind. 93.

Thus, where the evidence showed that the plaintiff understood that there was an absolute sale, while the defendant understood that he was taking the land upon condition only that it turned out as represented, with the right to return it, and recover the purchase money, if it did not turn out so, it was held that equity would not decree specific performance. Veth v. Gierth (Mo.), 4 S. W. Rep. 432. And in the same case it was held that the rule as to the admission of such evidence is liberal in favor of the defendant.

into it through mistake, fraud, or surprise.¹ So, under proper pleadings, the defendant may show that the contract relied on by the plaintiff has been rescinded by a parol agreement,² but not that it has been modified by a contemporaneous parol contract.³ The courts are very liberal in admitting evidence in favor of the defendant, and any good reason why the equitable relief demanded should not be granted may be shown by competent parol evidence.⁴ To justify refusing specific performance much less proof is required than to sustain a bill to set aside a contract for fraud or mistake.⁵

Ordinarily presumptions will not be indulged in favor of the contract sought to be enforced but the complainant will be put to full proof of the terms and provisions of the agreement. Thus it has been held that specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands will not be decreed on the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time.¹ But in a case where possession had been taken under a deed and the deed destroyed accidentally, the possession continuing for many years was held to create a presumption in favor of the deed against the grantor's creditors, and specific performance was decreed.²

So, in a case where the evidence tended to show that the oral contract relied upon was never fully understood and unconditionally agreed to between the parties. Held that, as the trial court found this to be true, the decree would not be disturbed. Burr v. Knowles, 72 Iowa 764.

Where the contract sued on is within the Statute of Frauds, the burden of proof is upon the party who seeks to enforce it to show that such things have been done as will take it out of the statute.³

The cases cited below will serve to show what has been held sufficient evidence to justify the specific enforcement of contracts in particular instances.⁴

Where the substance of the contract stated in the bill is proved by two witnesses, it will be carried to execution by the court, unless weighty objections are urged. Trigg v. Robertson, Sneed (Ky.) 194.

Where on a bill for specific performance, complainants attempted to introduce evidence of conversations which they had with a third person, relating to the terms of a contract with him, and which complainants claim was the same as the one in suit, the defendant assuming said third person's place in the contract, the evidence was held properly excluded for irrelevancy. *Askew v. The complainant may be estopped by an admission under oath. Potter v. Hollister, 45 N. J. Eq. 508. But see Alexander's Appeal (Pa. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 83.

It is sufficient if the plaintiff, a vendor, can show a good title at any time before final decree, although he did not have it when the suit was brought. Hobson v. Buchanan, 96 N. Car. 444.

Where the purchaser resists specific performance upon the ground that the title is unmarketable, it is not error to exclude evidence to the effect that attorneys regarded the title insecure. The question is one for the court to answer. Moser v. Cochrane, 107 N.Y. 35.

"Where the evidence as to whether a judgment creditor agreed with his debtor to accept certain notes and securities in satisfaction of his judgment is conflicting, and it appears that, after some negotiation, the papers, without being examined or approved by the creditor, were sent to him by mail, and he objected to them, specific performance will not be enforced." Spear v. Long (S. Car. 1890), 11 S. E. Rep. 332.

Where a father purchased land of his son, paid the purchase money, and took possession of the land, and lived thereon twenty-two years, always refusing to take a deed from his son, and from the children of his son, after the son's death, and declaring that the son or his children should have it, the father being possessed of a large property—held that this was sufficient evidence of the discharge of the contract of sale, on a bill for a specific performance by the heirs of the father. Tolson v. Tolson, 10 Mo. 736.

5. Decree¹—a. SCOPE.—Wide latitude is exercised in the granting of a decree for specific performance. Under the familiar doctrine that equity, having once acquired jurisdiction of a controversy, determines all questions necessary to the accomplishment of complete justice to all parties, it has been the practice to enforce contracts either specifically as demanded by the complaint or in a modified form as prayed in the answer,² or substantially as required by the facts of the particular case.³ In some instances, neither decree is feasible, and the chancellor awards a

"In a suit by vendors of land sold at public auction, to compel the purchaser to complete the contract, parol evidence is admissible to prove that the written memorandum of contract, signed by the auctioneer, did not contain the stipulation relied on as a condition." Averett v. Lipscombe, 76 Va. 404.

On a bill for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, where the evidence showed that the disability to perform the contract was the result of a fraudulent arrangement and conspiracy between W, the vendor, and B, for the purpose of depriving the complainants of the benefit of their contract, it was held: 1. That the decree for compensation should be against B, as well as against W. 2. That the declarations of W, tending to implicate B in the fraudulent transaction, were part of the res gestæ and admissible against B. 3. That the complainants were entitled to the repayment of the purchase money, with interest from the time it was paid. Powell v. Young, 45 Md. 494.

In order to sustain a suit for specific performance to compel a railroad company to construct its line through a certain city, the plaintiff must prove that he had an agreement with it binding it to construct and operate its main line through the city. Crane v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 402; 17 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 174.

B filed a bill for partition against his co-tenant S, and the latter in his answer prayed for the specific performance of a contract whereby B had agreed to sell his half interest for a fixed sum. Held, that the demand for specific performance being an application for equitable relief, the court would not compel S to bring a separate suit, but would terminate the controversy by adjudicating the rights of the parties and administering appropriate relief. Booten v. Scheffer, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 474.

Where one party to a contract in writing, brings a bill in equity for a specific performance thereof, and the defendant in his answer, submitting to a specific performance of the real agreement, alleges that the written contract was entered into by mistake, and under a misapprehension of the facts, and establishes this by evidence, he is entitled to a specific performance of the agreement as proved, even against the claim of the plaintiff to have his bill dismissed. Bradford v. Union Bank, 13 How. (U. S.) 57.

3. Other Relief.—Where, on a bill by a vendor for specific performance of the contract of sale by the vendee in possession, if the decree for specific performance is refused, relief may be granted to the vendor, in respect to the rents and profits, under the general prayer for relief, although the bill contains no specific prayer that they be paid to him. Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 389.

In Ross v. Purse (Colo. 1891), 28 Pac. Rep. 473, the court by Helm, C. J., said: "Under our system of procedure courts award any relief to which plaintiff's pleading and proof entitle him, regardless of the prayer embodied in his complaint."

Where specific performance of an agreement is impracticable, the plaintiff may have approximate relief in some other form, which will secure to money judgment to be paid as in the chancellor's discretion seems equitable, by the delinquent party, even though he be the party originally seeking relief.¹

The decree of specific performance of a contract to convey does not have the effect of a judicial sale,² nor will it pass title to land situated beyond the jurisdiction, although it is in the power of the court to direct the conveyance of such real estate.³

him the substantial advantages of his contract. Bennet v. Abrams, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

Where an agreement contains provisions which, by reason of some technical principle of law, cannot be carried into effect according to its literal import, it is the duty of a court of equity, for the sake of the intent, to give it that construction which the rules of law will tolerate, and the intention of the parties, collected from the whole instrument, will justify. So, where rents arising from real estate were made payable by an agreement to a cestui que trust, her executors and administrators, a court of equity, decreeing specific performance of the agreement, directed them to be paid to the cestui que trust and her heirs. Coale v. Barney, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 324.

Where the contract in suit is alleged to be one by which the defendant was to take a lease of land, and the proof shows that she contracted for the fee, and for no other estate in the property, and authorized no other person to make a different contract for her, she will not be compelled to accept a lease instead of a deed in fee, or give the complainant compensation for the non-performance of the contract. Ellicott v. White, 43 Md. 145.

See, generally, Booten v. Scheffer, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 474.

1. Money Compensation.—Equity will not enforce a voluntary agreement to convey land, although the donee was put in possession and made improvements; but, if the bill is properly drawn, he may obtain compensation for the labor he expended and the improvements he made. Boze v. Davis, 14 Tex. 331.

Where a bill filed against commissioners under the drainage act, to compel specific performance of an agreement in relation to damages, cannot be sustained, the agreement being within the Statute of Frauds, yet the court will retain the bill, and award an issue to assess the damages which the plaintiff has sustained, and for which he has no remedy, or a doubtful and inadequate one, at law. Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 131.

Where a bill for a specific performance contains a prayer for general relief, and the answer admits the payment of a part of the purchase money, and contains an offer to settle, the court, although it cannot decree a specific performance, for want of a sufficient writing within the Statute of Frauds, will, nevertheless, decree an account and repayment. Capps v. Holt, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 153.

Where, after the filing of a bill for specific performance, conveyance to a third party has been made by a defendant who bought the land of the complainant's vendee with notice of his contract of sale, the complainant is entitled to a money decree against him, as holding the proceeds in place of the land, for the purchase money paid on the original contract. Oliver v. Crosswell, 42 Ill. 41.

Where a party who had covenanted to convey a tract of land, and given possession, and taken bonds for the purchase money, got back the possession on a bill for a specific performance—held, that he was liable for profits he had made, or reasonably might have made while in possession. Sugg v. Stowe, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 126.

It has been held that a vendee, who, by reason of his own fraud or default, is denied a decree, may have a return of all moneys paid out by him. Smith v. Lavin, 8 Wis. 265. See also Hess v. Evans (N. J. 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 310.

2. Where a bill is filed for specific performance, by a transfer of land from vendor, to vendee, a decree for that purpose is not a judicial sale, and one purchasing from either party is chargeable with notice of all involved in the suit, as a purchaser pendente lite. Gilman v. Hamilton, 16 Ill. 225.

The Georgia Code gives it this effect, however. See Code 1882, § 4209.

3. See supra, this title, Jurisdiction and Powers of the Court.

While it is not proper for the court to make the contract or alter it for the parties, it will, upon a sufficient showing of mutual mistake and a prayer for reformation, reform the agreement before enforcing it, and where the pleadings are such as to justify reformation and specific performance the court will grant the dual relief.¹

Whatever equity requires shall be done as between the parties, the decree should make provision for.² Thus where specific performance is refused, the court will order such repayment of money and reimbursement of expenses incurred on account of the contract in litigation as appears to be required by the circumstances of the case.³ Where the decree granted contains no provision as to the time of performance the plaintiff may demand its enforcement at any time until barred by the Statute of Limitations.⁴

As to Land Situated Abroad.—Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474; 15 Am. Rep. 621, was a suit for the specific enforcement of a trust in relation to real estate situated abroad. In reference to the effect of the decree in the case, the court by McIlvaine, J., said: "Although the decree or the deed of the master executed in pursuance thereof cannot operate to transfer the title to such lands, yet the decree is binding upon the consciences of the parties and concludes them in respect to all matters and things properly adjudicated and determined by the court."

"When the decree in such case finds and determines the equities of the parties in respect to such land, and directs a conveyance by the parties in accordance with their equities, such decree, although no conveyance has been executed, may be pleaded as a cause of action or as a ground of defense in the courts of the State where the land is situated; and it is entitled in the court where so pleaded to the force and effect of record evidence of the equities therein determined, unless it be impeached for fraud." b. AFFECTS WHOM.—The decree operates primarily upon the conscience of the parties before the court, and is enforced more often against the person of the delinquent party than against the thing in dispute.¹ Its effect, as has been shown, is not confined to the original parties to the contract, but extends to all who claim under them in privity of estate or representation or title.² But the wife of a party is not bound by the decree unless herself actually a party to the proceeding.³ And the public, being in many instances an actual party in interest, is recognized as such and its rights considered in the exercise of this equitable power.⁴

The decree must bind all the parties, for a decree of specific performance against the defendant is erroneous unless it requires of the plaintiff the performance of his share of the obligations.⁵

London etc. R.*, L. R., 16, Eq. 433.

Specific performance will not be decreed where it will result in delay, inconvenience, and loss to the public. Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 422.

And it may be refused where its enforcement might injure persons not parties to the contract and whose interests have vested since the contract was made. Curran v. Holyoke Water Power Co., 116 Mass. 90.

Upon a bill for the specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, part performance sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds being shown, the court should find the balance due on the purchase price, if any, and on payment of the same into court vest the title in the vendee. Webb v. Toms, 86 Mo. 591.

Where a purchaser comes into equity for specific performance, and the whole contract is before the court, and all the money due, it is erroneous to leave the vendee to his legal remedy for the recovery of his money, while the purchaser obtains a decree for rents and costs. Sibert v. Kelley, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 669.

A decree directing one party to pay on a certain day, on condition that the other surrender the land, without ordering a surrender, or reserving to the court to determine on the performance, was held to be erroneous. Jarman v. Davis, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 115.

A decree declaring that a contract for the sale of land ought to be performed, and directing the vendee to execute a mortgage thereof, to secure the purchase money, is to be understood as requiring the vendor first to make title to the vendee. Mayo v. Purcell, 3 Munf. (Va.) 243.

A non-resident purchaser suing for specific performance may be required to pay the purchase money into court, though he was not in possession. Binns v. Mount, 28 N. J. Eq. 24.

It is erroneous to decree specific execution of a contract for conveyance of land, without requiring payment of what is due for the land. Brewer v. Peed, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 230.

On bill by the vendor of land for specific performance, a decree in favor of the vendor, which makes the clerk of the court custodian of the deed tendered by the complainant, to be delivered to the vendee on payment of the purchase money found to be due is proper. The vendor cannot be made to part with his title until the money is paid to him, or until the

c. FORM.—The decree, in its simplest form, directs the defendant to execute the contract according to its terms, as set forth in the complaint.¹ It sometimes runs in the alternative, as for the specific performance of the contract, or, upon failure to perform, for the payment of a money judgment.² Again, it may direct time of redemption has expired, in case of a sale of the vendee's interest. Corbus v. Teed, 69 Ill. 205.

The contract provided for the construction of a wharf on the land by the vendor, within thirty days, under a penalty. There was no evidence showing that the vendee could not have gone on the wharf and transacted his business within the thirty days, though the entire lot had not been graded to the vendee's satisfaction. Held, that the vendee could not complain of a decree which required the vendor, without unnecessary delay, to fill the lot up to grade, while it required the vendee, in conformity with the contract, to execute a ground-rent deed for the premises on its presentation by vendor. McCullough's Appeal, 132 Pa. St. 43.

Vendee, who has taken a bond for title, and given notes for the purchase money, and indirectly purchases them after maturity for a mere trifle at a judicial sale by the vendor's administratrix, will be required to pay the balance due before she can compel a conveyance to her by the vendor's heirs. Burnap v. Sidberry, 108 N. Car. 307.

But it has been held that after a decree, on a bill for specific performance, directing the defendant to convey on the payment of the purchase-money, a decree cannot be made ordering the plaintiff to pay the purchase money, though this might have been done in the first instance; but a cross-bill must be filed to obtain such decree. Etchison v. Dorsey, 1 Bland (Md.) 535.

The plaintiff and defendant had agreed to exchange farms, but the plaintiff was unable to complete the contract, at the time appointed, in consequence of an incumbrance upon his farm. On a bill by him for a specific performance—held, that a receiver of the rents of the defendant's farm could not be appointed before the removal of the incumbrance. Baldwin v. Salter, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 473.

1. Evans v. Miller, 38 Minn. 245.

2. Alternative Relief.—On a bill for the specific performance of a contract, the court ought not to decree the payment of a sum of money absolutely, in lieu thereof, but only conditionally, leaving to the defendant the election to pay such sum, or perform his agreement specifically. Hook v. Ross, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 310.

If the answer in a suit to enforce performance of a parol contract sets up a different contract from that stated in the bill and the evidence sustains the answer, the court may either dismiss the bill or permit the plaintiff to elect whether he will have the contract rescinded or enforced as proved. McComas v. Easley, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 23.

Where a purchaser, who has obtained a decree for the specific performance of the contract, neglects to perform it on his part, on motion by the defendant, the decree will be amended, by directing a sale of the subject of the contract, at the risk of the plaintiff as to the price; or that the right of the plaintiff to a specific performance shall be barred, unless he will accept the conveyance and pay the purchase money within the time prescribed by the order. Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 382.

Where a vendee of land, holding the vendor's bond for a title, files a bill for rescission or specific execution, if the vendor can comply with the contract, the final decree should settle the whole case, and prevent any further litigation of the matter. Pollock v. Wilson, 3 Dana (Ky.) 25.

Where the plaintiffs, instead of a decree for a specific performance, which they were entitled to, elected to take a decree for the payment of money by the defendant instead, it was held that they could not, on an allegation of his subsequent insolvency, afterwards obtain a decree for a specific performance; especially where there was an intervening innocent purchaser. Weber v. Fowler, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 458.

In a suit (on a bond to make title to a league of land) for specific performance, or compensation in damages, the verdict was, "For the plaintiff, one-fourth of the value of the league of land in question valued at one dollar per acre." The court affirmed a judgperformance conditioned upon a compliance by the other party; and it may prescribe any conditions that will be equitable.¹

The court will be guided by the pleadings and evidence in determining the form and extent of the decree. In ordinary cases where the plaintiff is awarded specific performance, the decree must correspond with the bill, and it is error to enforce a different contract than the one therein set out, unless the contract enforced is so enforced upon a cross-bill of the other party.²

ment for the sum of money to which one-fourth of a league of land would amount at $1 per acre. McMullen v. Kelso, 4 Tex. 235.

A built a house for B, receiving therefor his obligation to convey a tract of land. B had no title to the land, except the verbal promise of his father to convey it to him. On a bill to enforce a conveyance, brought by A—held, that a decree against the father for a conveyance was erroneous, but that B should be compelled to procure a conveyance, or pay damages. Hickman v. Grimes, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 86; 10 Am. Dec. 714.

Though a court of equity might make a decree for a conveyance depend upon the payment or refunding of taxes, it will not deny a party his rights altogether. Morgan v. Herlick, 21 Ill. 481.

Where the form of the decree, on a bill for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land, was such as to leave it optional with the defendant to pay the balance of the purchase money or not, but still required this to be done as a condition of the relief decreed—held, that the decree was not, on this account, erroneous. Annan v. Merritt, 13 Conn. 478.

On judgment reversing the judgment below for plaintiff because of false representations that the title to the land contracted for was clear when there were in reality tax liens against it, and holding that plaintiff is not entitled to specific performance so long as the property remains incumbered with the tax liens, the case will be remanded with directions to decree specific performance upon condition the title be perfected before judgment or decree. Isaacs v. Strainka, 95 Mo. 517.

On a bill for specific performance of a contract to convey, brought by the purchaser after the expiration of the stipulated time for payment, the time condition having been waived, the decree should order payment within a certain time, and, on failure to make such payment, that all the purchaser's rights should be extinguished. Thayer v. Wilmington Star Min. Co., 105 Ill. 540.

2. Holman v. Vallejo, 19 Cal. 498; Courcier v. Graham, 2 Ohio 341.

Where a petition to enforce an agreement to convey land alleged that the defendant had agreed to convey it for church purposes, it was fatal error to require him to convey it for church and school purposes. McDaniel v. Watson, 4 Bush (Ky.) 234.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land, the court will not assess complainant's damages, in case the performance cannot be decreed, unless the petition and prayer are adapted for this, and evidence with a view to this issue is given. Yost v. Devault, 9 Iowa 60.

"A, being unable to meet the deferred payments due under his purchase of land, induced B to advance the amount to the vendor, and to take a conveyance from the vendor; it being agreed that, on payment of the amount by A to B, B should convey to A by a deed containing a covenant of general warranty. A, being in default, a judicial sale was ordered, the decree, however, providing that, if A should make payment within a fixed time, B should convey with special warranty." The court held the decree to be erroneous, in that the form of warranty ordered should have been that prescribed by the contract. Adkins v. Edwards, 82 Va. 300.

Forms given of judgments or decrees, to compel the specific performance of an oral agreement to satisfy and discharge a mortgage held by a third person, not a party to the action, which is not yet due, and from which the plaintiff has not, as yet, suffered, although it is a lien upon his land. Bennett v. Abrams, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 619. See supra, this title, Procedure—Pleading.

d. COMPENSATION IN LIEU OF PERFORMANCE.—Where a performance of the whole contract in specie is impossible and a substantial performance is either impracticable or undesirable, the finding will determine what sum of money will compensate the party in search of equitable relief for the failure of performance, and decree its payment.¹ But compensation will not be awarded where the primary relief, specific performance, would be improper, for the same rules govern the two forms of equitable relief.² Thus, compensation is permissible in a decree enforcing

Where it is found that a complainant was originally entitled to a specific performance, but, pending the litigation, the very subject-matter of the agreement, to which the complainant is found to be entitled, is abstracted or destroyed, a court of equity will not turn him over to seek his damages in a court of law, but will afford a remedy by compensation. Chapman v. Mad River, etc., R. Co., 6 Ohio St. 119.

Compare Allen v. Young, 88 Ala. 338.

Where a court of equity has jurisdiction to decree specific performance of a contract in part, it will award damages for the breach of so much of it as cannot be specifically executed, and not turn the party round to his remedy at law. Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. (Va.) 63.

And see Davis v. Parker, 14 Allen (Mass.) 94; Woodbury v. Luddy, 14 Allen (Mass.) 1; 92 Am. Dec. 731; King v. Bardeau, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 38; 10 Am. Dec. 312; Post v. West Shore R. Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 301.

Compensation must be decreed where the deficiency complained of is of such a character that it can be made the subject of compensation, or of consideration as damages, and where the court concludes that the purchaser would not have declined the contract had he known of the defect or matter complained of at the time of the purchase. Beyer v. Marks, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 715.

To a bill by a vendor praying a rescission or specific performance of the contract, the purchaser answered, not objecting to specific execution thereof, but insisting upon being compensated for injuries to which he had been subjected by the vendor's failure to comply, etc., and by the intermeddling of the vendor's agents, etc., it was held that the court might, as ancillary to the decree of specific performance, decree such compensation, to be ascertained either by a commissioner or by an issue of quantum damnificatus. Whenever a court of equity declines, by reason of a default on the part of the plaintiff, to decree a specific performance of a contract in his favor, it will also decline to award him damages for the breach. Chase v. Hogan, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 57.

If a plaintiff, in a suit for specific performance, does not make out a case which entitles him to the decree which he seeks to obtain, no compensation for damages, nor for services performed under the contract, will be decreed him, unless some special equity intervenes. Sims v. McEwen, 27 Ala. 184.

Equity does not entertain jurisdiction to give redress by way of compensation or damages except when such relief is incidental to that sought by the bill and granted by the court; or where there is no adequate remedy at law; or where some peculiar equity intervenes. Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 119.

But it was held in Miles v. Dover Furnace Iron Co., 125 N. Y. 294; 53 Hun (N. Y.) 632, where the enforcement of performance would involve difficulty and trouble, that compensation was proper instead of performance.

the conveyance of land, where the vendor is unable to convey the entire title and the vendee sues for the part which he can convey.¹

The measure of compensation, where the suit is to enforce a contract for the sale of land which cannot be specifically performed, is the value of the land at the time the contract should have been performed with interest from that time,² or if for a deficiency, the value of such deficiency. Thus, in cases where the vendor's wife has refused to execute the deed, the amount of her dower interest is the sum which will be awarded.³ And the measure of damages for delay is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the stipulated time of execution, this rule prevailing whether the property be real or personal.⁴ It is error to award the absolute contract price by way of compensation where there has been unwarrantable default and loss of any kind has resulted therefrom. All elements of loss must be counted in determining the damages.⁵

c. MODE OF ENFORCEMENT.—Where the contract consists in negative covenants, the breach will be enjoined and an infraction

Compare Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40, where under the code compensation was awarded, the complaint seeking for specific performance of a contract to convey land for compensation in damages, but the facts alleged being insufficient foundation for a decree for specific performance. Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40.

1. See supra, this title, Suits by Vendee.

Compensation, When Improper.—

Where a bill asks for rescission or specific performance, to either of which the complainant is entitled, and no special equity exists, it will not be retained for the purpose of decreeing compensation for a deficiency in the quantity of land conveyed to and accepted by the complainant. Harrison v. Deramus, 33 Ala. 463.

Where the plaintiff knew, when he filed his bill for the specific performance of a contract, that the defendant could not perform it—held, that equity would not decree damages for nonperformance, but would leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law. McQueen v. Chouteau, 20 Mo. 222; 64 Am. Dec. 178. See Ellett v. Wade, 47 Ala. 456.

Where a bill is filed to obtain specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land it is erroneous to decree compensation, on the bill being taken for confessed. Davis v. Gleaves, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 142.

2. Rees v. Smith, 1 Ohio 124; Gibbs v. Champion, 3 Ohio 337; Dustin v. Newcomer, 8 Ohio 49; Peabody v. Tarbell, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 226; Woodbury v. Luddy, 14 Allen (Mass.) 1; 92 Am. Dec. 731.

Where the loss of land is not caused by the fraud of the vendor, the measure of damages, on a bill for specific performance by the vendee, is the value of the land at the time of the contract, to be ascertained by the purchase money agreed to be given. Rankin v. Maxwell, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 488; 12 Am. Dec. 431.

3. See supra, this title, Contracts Relating to Land—Suits by the Vendor.

4. King v. Ruckman, 24 N. J. Eq. 298.

5. Penrose v. Leeds, 46 N. J. Eq. 294; Bostwick v. Beach, 103 N. Y. 414; Roberts v. Lovejoy, 28 Tex. 641; Bryan v. Loftus, 1 Rob. (Va.) 12; 39 Am. Dec. 242.

In estimating the compensation to be adjudged to the plaintiff for the loss he has sustained by the delay, it is not proper to consider the depreciation in the value of the lands; but only the value of their use during the period that they have been kept from him. Damages resulting from such depreciation are speculative and not to be considered; except in the case of a leasehold estate, in which case the estate is a term, which wastes by delay. Benson v. Tilton, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 494.

of the injunction punished as contempt of court.¹ If the contract be for the execution of a writing, such as a deed of conveyance, and the delivery of the same, the party may be required to sign and deliver the instrument or be in contempt,² or the court may name a commissioner who on behalf of the party shall execute the will of the court.³ And sometimes the decree itself operates as a conveyance.⁴

In some cases it has been considered permissible, where suit is brought by the vendor of land to compel its purchase, to order the land sold and payment made out of the proceeds.⁵ But this will not always be done.⁶

Where the contract binds a lunatic, it is proper to require the committee of the lunatic to execute the contract in his behalf.⁷ If the party to be bound is a minor, the contract may be decreed to be performed at once, if equity so demands, by his guardian, or by the infant himself upon coming of age, possession of the property in suit, if the contract be one to convey real estate, being meanwhile given to the vendee.⁸ As against a corporation the decree may be enforced by distringas or sequestration.⁹

XII. SPECIAL STATUTORY PROVISIONS.—The statutes of many of the States make provision for suits for specific performance, some conferring simply a general authority upon the courts to enforce the specific execution of contracts, while others contain a complete code of procedure in such suits.¹⁰

On a decree for specific performance of a contract by an ancestor to convey, it is erroneous to postpone a conveyance until the infants become of age; the deed should be executed by commissioners, reserving to the infants the usual time, after coming of age, to show cause against the decree. Hogan v. McMurtry, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 633.

In an interlocutory decree against a purchaser of land to enforce specific performance of the contract, it is not error that it does not direct a deed to be made and tendered to him. Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 102.

Nor, where such a decree directs a sale of the property if a part of the purchase money is not paid by a certain day, is it error to appoint the plaintiff's counsel a commissioner to make the sale, there being no personal objection to him. Goddin v. Vaughn, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 102.

In a decree for specific execution, it is error to appoint a commissioner to convey when the purchase money is paid; the time when the conveyance is to be made is a matter for the court alone. Payne v. Wallace, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 380.

4. See Georgia Code 1882, § 4209.

5. Corbus v. Teed, 69 Ill. 205; Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 382.

A vendee took a title bond and gave notes for the purchase money, and then indirectly purchased them after maturity for a mere trifle at a judicial sale by the vendor's administratrix. In a suit by the vendee for specific performance the court rendered judgment against him for the purchase money, directing a sale of the land if it shall not be paid. Burnap v. Sidberry, 108 N. Car. 387.

10. The following States have statutory authority for the exercise of this equitable function: California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas and Wisconsin. An abstract thereof is given below.

California.—Code, §§ 3384-3402.

The California statutes furnish a complete manual of practice in such suits, defining the jurisdiction in clear terms. Section 3384 is a general authority for specific performance; 3386 makes mutuality essential; 3387 declares that real estate is presumed of such value to the obligee that money compensation therefor will not be adequate; 3388, that a contract need only be signed by the obligor to be enforceable in equity; 3389, that the mere fact that the contract contains a penalty and liquidated damages does not limit the party aggrieved to money compensation; 3390 prohibits the equitable enforcement of obligations to render personal service; to employ another in personal services; to submit to arbitration; to perform an act which the party has no power lawfully to perform when required to do so; to procure the consent of the obligor's wife to the contract or of any third person, and to perform an agreement the terms whereof are uncertain; 3391 excludes contracts upon inadequate consideration, those which are unjust, unreasonable, fraudulently procured, or made through mistake; 3392 forbids specific performance where the complainant has failed to fulfill all conditions precedent except where compensation can be made for the part unfulfilled; 3394 requires the vendor to furnish a "title free from reasonable doubt," and 3395 extends the power of the court in contracts for real estate to all claiming under the obligee by subsequent title except innocent purchasers for value.

Colorado.—Colorado General Statutes, 1883, in the chapter on Statute of Frauds, provide for the specific performance of contracts "in case of part performance," § 1519.

Georgia.—By chapter 12 of the Georgia Code of 1882, §§ 3186-3192, provision is made for specific enforcement where damages would be inadequate; for the enforcement of parol contracts for land under circumstances establishing part performance; for the recovery of chattels "if any good reason in equity or good conscience" requires it; that inadequacy of consideration is no bar to a suit; that the vendor of land must show his ability to fully perform; that a voluntary contract will not be enforced, and that compensation may be awarded where performance is impossible.

By section 4209, a decree for specific performance is given the same force as a deed to convey, and shall be recorded as such in the registry of deeds.

Section 1775 authorizes the equitable enforcement of marriage articles of settlement whether written or oral.

Section 1951 excludes from the operation of the Statute of Frauds cases where the contract has been fully executed, where there has been part performance on one side accepted by the other in accordance with the contract, and where there has been such part performance as would render the refusal of a decree a fraud.

Illinois.—Chapter 29 of the Illinois Revised Statutes of 1889 contains a mode of procedure to enforce contracts in case of the obligor's death or insanity.

Maryland.—By the Maryland Public General Laws, art. 16, § 199 specific performance is not to be refused on the ground of an adequate legal remedy, unless the party resisting shall show that he has property from which such damages may be made or shall give bond to perform or pay damages. Section 76 defines the territorial jurisdiction, and section 85 provides a mode of enforcement against infants and persons of unsound mind.

Massachusetts.—Massachusetts Pub. Statutes, 1882, chapter 142, requires the executor of a decedent to execute decedent's contract upon notice given by the obligee to all persons interested. Chapter 151 confers general equity powers on the supreme judicial court, naming particularly "suits for the specific performance of written contracts." Merrill's Supp. to Pub. Stats., ch. 223, confers like powers on the superior court.

Iowa.—The Iowa Revised Code (1885), § 2487, authorizes specific performance against the personal representatives of the dead obligor, and declares unnecessary the making of others parties to the proceeding while permitting heirs and devisees to be made defendants at any time on their own motion.

Maine.—Maine Revised Statutes, 1893, chap. 77, § 6, confers equity powers upon the Supreme Judicial Court to compel the specific performance of written contracts. Chapter 111, § 8, provides that if a person who has contracted in writing to convey real estate dies before making the conveyance, suit may be brought against his heirs, devisees, executors, or administrators to compel its performance, with certain restrictions as to time and notice, and provides a mode of enforcement by judgment for possession, etc. And chap. 71, §§ 17, and 18, provide for a like proceeding in the probate court.

Michigan.—See Howell's Ann. St. 1882. Sections 6010-6024, authorize decrees against administrators and executors for the execution of decedent's "contract in writing to convey real estate," and prescribe the course of procedure therefor. Section 6183 reserves to chancery courts the right to enforce verbal agreements for the conveyance of land in cases where there has been part performance. Section 6613 expressly confers upon the lessee of mining interests "an absolute right to have the same specifically enforced, if not in default himself." Section 5727 confirms defective deeds in certain cases, and provides that they may be taken as contracts to convey and so enforced in equity.

Nebraska.—Compiled statutes of Nebraska, 1887, p. 377, ch. 23, § 329, make the same provision as those in Illinois and Maine for the enforcement of a decedent's contract to convey. Ch. 32, § 6, which is a part of the Statute of Frauds, reserves the power to enforce contracts in case of part performance. Section 53 of the civil code authorizes the bringing of suits to compel conveyance of land in the county of defendant's residence.

New York.—Bliss's Annotated Code. By § 388, the limitation for specific performance of a contract is ten years.

Birdseye. By § 26 of the chapter on Insane Persons, p. 1498, specific performance may be decreed against infants and insane persons in certain cases.

By § 10 of the Statute of Frauds, p. 1234, part performance is declared sufficient to take a contract out of the statute.

Section 4 of the chapter on Judgment and Decree, p. 1713, specifies the mode of enforcement of decree for the conveyance of land.

Oklahoma Statutes, 1890, § 4329, provides for enforcing a contract to convey in favor of the vendee.

Oregon.—Hill's Ann. Laws, ch. 31, §§ 3211-3216 allows rendition of judgment for the payment in a particular kind of money under certain circumstances.

Tennessee.—By § 3148 of the Tennessee code, the administrator or executor of a deceased obligor may be required to fulfill the decedent's contract.

Wisconsin.—Sanborn & Berryman's Ann. St. 1889, § 2305, contains the authority for specific performance of contracts within the Statute of Frauds in cases of part performance. 3498-3501 empowers the court to enforce contracts made by decedents and by any one incompetent from insanity or drunkenness by a proceeding brought by the executor or administrator of such decedent, by the guardian of such incompetent person or by any one interested in the contract. A copy of the decree in such suit may be placed of record, and has the same force and effect as a deed of conveyance. By sections 3907-3911 authority is given to compel executors or administrators to make conveyance if decedent could be so compelled if living. Section 4253 contains a provision for the survival of actions for specific performance.
